This Taverner represented him very much that he had made songs to Popish Dieties in the time of his blindness.

To these joyn also Taverner of Boston, the good Musician, besides many other called also out of other places, most picked young Men, of grave judgment and sharp wits; who confining together upon the abuses of Religion, being at that time crept into the Church, were therefore accused of Heresie unto the Cardinal, and cast into a Prison, within a deep Cave under the Ground of the same College where their Salt Fish was laid; so that through the filthy stench thereof they were all infected, and certain of them taking their death in the same Prison, shortly upon the same being taken out of the Prison into their Chambers, there deceased.

Persecutors. The troubles and examiners of these good Men, were these: Doctor London, Doctor Hodgson, Dean of the said College, and Doctor Cotterford, Commissary.

M. Clerk, Master Sumner, and Sir Bayly, eating nothing but Salt Fish from February to the midst of August, died all three together within the compass of one week.

Master Bettes a witty Man, having no Books found in his Chamber, through inreary and surety got out of Prison, and so remaining a space in the College, at last slipped away to Cambridge, and after was Chaplain to Queen Ann, and in great favour with her.

Taverner, although he was accused and suspected for hiding of Clarks Books under the Boards in his School; yet the Cardinal for his Mulick excused him; saying, That he was but a Musician: and so he escaped.

After the death of these Men, John Frith with other, by the Cardinals Letter, which sent word that he would not have them so fruitly handled, were dismissed out of Prison, upon condition not to pass above Ten Miles out of Oxford. Which Frith, after hearing of the Examination of Dalaber and Garret, which bear then Fagots, went over the Sea, and after two years he came over for Exhibition of the Prior of Reading (as was thought) and had the Prior over with him.

Being at Reading, it happened that he was there taken for a Vagabond, and brought to Examination: where the simple Man, which could not craftily enough colour himself, was set in the Stocks. Where after he had sitten a long time, and was almost pined with hunger, and desired that for all that declare what he was, at the last he desired that the School-master of the Town might be brought to him, which at that time was Leonard Cox, a Man very well learned. As soon as he came unto him, Frith, by and by began in the Latin Tongue to bewail his Captivity.

The School-master by and by, being overcome with his Eloquence, did not only take pity and compassion upon him, but also began to love and embrace such an excellent wit and disposition unlooked for, especially in such an estate and misery. Afterward, they conferring more together upon many things, as touching the Universities, Schools, and Tongues, fell from the Latin into the Greek: Wherein Frith did so intame the love of that School-master towards him, that he brought him into a marvellous admiration, especially when the School-master heard him so promptly by heart rehearse Homer's Verses out of his first Book of Iliads. Whereupon the School-master went with all speed unto the Magistrates, grievously complaining of the injury which they did shew unto so excellent and innocent a young Man.

Thus Frith, through the help of the School-master, was freely dimitted out of the Stocks, and set at liberty without punishment. Albeit this his safety continued not long, through the great hatred and deadly purfuite of Sir Thomas More, who at that time being Chancellor of England, persecuted him both by Land and Sea, besetting all the Ways and Havens, yea and promising great rewards, if any Man could bring him any news or tydings of him.

Thus Frith being on every part beset with troubles, not knowing which way to run him, seeketh for some place to hide him in. Thus fleeing from one place to another, and often changing both his Garments and Place, yet could he be in safety in no place; no not long amongst his Friends: so that at the last, being traitorously taken (as ye shall after hear) he was sent unto the Tower of London, whereas he had many conflicts with the Bishops, but specially in writing with Sir Thomas More. The first occasion of his writing was this: Upon a time he had communication with a certain old familiar Friend of his, touching the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. The whole effect of which disputation consisted specially in these four points:

1. First, That the matter of the Sacrament is no necessary Article of Faith under pain of damnation.

2. Secondly, That forasmuch as Christ's natural Body in like condition hath all properties of our body, in only except, it cannot be, neither as it agreeable unto reason, that he should be in two places or more at once, contrary to the nature of our body.

3. Moreover, it shall not seem meet or necessary, that we should in this place understand Christ's words according to the literal sense, but rather according to the order and Phrase of speech, comparing Phrase with Phrase, according to the Analogy of the Scripture.

4. Last of all, how that it ought to be received according to the true and right Instruction of Christ, albeit that the order which at this time is crept into the Church, and is used now a days by the Priests, do never so much differ from it.

And forasmuch as the Treatise of this disputation seemed somewhat long, his Friend desired him that such things as he had reasoned upon he would briefly commit unto writings, and give unto him for the help of his memory. Frith, albeit he was unwilling, and not ignorant how dangerous a thing it was to enter into such a contentious matter, at the last notwithstanding, he being overcome by the intreaty of his Friend, rather followed his will, than looked to his own safeguard.

There was at that time in London a Taylor named William Holt, which feigning great friendship toward this party, instantly required of him to give him license to read over that same Writing of Frith. Which when he unadvisedly did, the other by and by carried it unto More, being then Chancellor. Which thing afterward was occasion of great trouble, and also of death unto the said Frith. For More having gotten a Copy of his Book, not only of this Sycophant, but also two other Copies, which at the same time in a manner were sent him by other promoters, he whetted his wits, and called his spirits together as much as he might, meaning to refute his opinion by a contrary Book.

This in a manner was the whole sum of the reasons of Frith's Book; First, to declare the Popes belief of the Sacrament to be no necessary Article of our Faith; that is to say, that it is no Article of our Faith necessary to be believed under pain of damnation; that the Sacrament should be the natural Body of Christ. Which has thus proveh. For many so believe, and yet in so believing the Sacrament to be the natural body are not thereby saved, but receive it to their own damnation.

Again, in believing the Sacrament to be the natural body, yet that natural presence of his Body in the Bread is not that which saveth us, but his presence in our hearts by Faith. And likewise, the not believing of his bodily presence in the Sacrament, is not the thing that shall damn us, but the absence of him out of our heart, through unbelief. And if it be objected, that it is necessary to believe Gods Word under pain of damnation: to that he answereth, That the Word taken in the right sense, as Christ meant, maintaineth no such bodily presence as the Popes Church doth teach, but rather a Sacramental presence. And that, saith he, may be further confirmed thus:

rent. Ergo, None of us are bound to believe this point under pain of damnation.

The first part, saith he, is evident of it self. For how could they believe that which they never heard nor saw?

August. ad
Dardanum.

The second part, saith he, appeareth plainly by Saint Augustine, writing ad Dardanum, and also by an hundred places more. Neither is there any thing that he doth more often inculcate than this, that the same Faith that saved our Fathers, saveth us also. And therefore upon the truth of these two parts thus proved, must the conclusion, saith he, needs follow, Another Argument.

None of the old Fathers before Christs Incarnation did eat Christ corporally in their signs, but only mystically, and spiritually, and were saved.

All we do eat Christ even as they did, and are saved as they were.

Ergo, None of us do eat Christ Corporally, but mystically, and spiritually in our signs as they did.

For the probation of the first part, Frith proceeding in his Discourse declareth how the ancient Fathers before Christs Incarnation did never believe any such point of this gross and carnal eating of Christs body; and yet notwithstanding they did eat him spiritually and were saved: As Adam, Abraham, Moses, Aaron, Phinees, and other godly Israelites besides. All which, saith he, did eat the Body of Christ, and did drink his Blood as we do. But this eating and drinking of theirs was Spiritual, pertaining only to Faith, and not to the Teeth:

For they were all under the cloud, and drank of the rock which followed them; this rock was Christ, which was promised them to come into the World. And this promise was first made unto Adam, when as it was said unto the Serpent; I will put hatred between thee and the woman, between her seed and thy seed, &c. And afterward again unto Abraham: In thy seed shall all people be blessed, &c. Adding also the Sacrament of Circumcision, which was called the Covenant: not because it was so indeed, but because it was a sign and a token of the Covenant made between God and Abraham, admonishing us thereby, how we should judge and think touching the Sacrament of body and blood; to wit, that albeit it be called the body of Christ, yet we should properly understand thereby the fruit of our justification, which plentifully floweth unto all the faithful, by his most healthful body and blood.

Likewise the same promise was made unto Moses the most meek and gentle Captain of the Israelites, which did not only himself believe upon Christ, which was so often promised, but also did prefigure him by divers means, both by the Manna which came down from Heaven, and also by the Water which issued out of the Rock, for the refreshing of the bodies of his people.

Neither is it to be doubted, but that both Manna and this water had a prophetic mystery in them, declaring the very self-same thing then, which the Bread and the Wine do now declare unto us in the Sacrament. For thus saith Saint Augustine, Whosoever did understand by Bread and Wine a Christ in the Manna, did eat the same spiritual food that we do. But they, which by that Manna sought only to fill their Bellies, did eat thereof, and are dead. So likewise faith he of the Drink; For the Rock was Christ. And by and after he inferneth thus: Moses did eat Manna, and Phinees also, and many other also did eat thereof, which pleased God, and are not dead. Why? Because they did understand the visible meat spiritually. They did spiritually hunger, and did spiritually taste of it, that they might be spiritually satisfied. They all did eat the same spiritual meat, and all did drink the same spiritual drink: all one spiritual thing, but not all one Corporal matter (for they did eat Manna, and we another thing) but the self-same spiritual thing that we do, and although they drank the same spiritual drink that we do, yet they drank one thing, and we another: Which nevertheless signified all one thing in spiritual effect. How did they drink all one thing? The Apostle answereth, Of the spiritual Rock which followed them, for the Rock was Christ. And Beda also adding these words saith, Behold the signs are altered, and yet the Faith remaineth one. Thereby a man may perceive that the Manna which came down from Heaven, was the same unto them that our Sacrament is unto us, and that by either of them is signified, that the body of Christ came down from Heaven; and yet notwithstanding never any of them said, that Manna was the very body of Melchisedech, as our Sacramental Bread is not indeed the Body of Christ, but a mystical representation of the same. For like as the Manna which came down from Heaven, and the bread which is received in the supper, doth nourish the body, even so the body of Christ coming down from Heaven, and being given for us, doth quicken up the spirits of the Believers unto life everlasting. Then if the Salvation of both people be like, and their faith also one, there is no cause why we should add Transubstantiation unto our Sacrament, more than they believed their Manna to be altered and changed. Moreover because they are named Sacraments, even by the signification of the name they must needs be signs of things, or else of necessity they can be no Sacraments.

But some may here object and say; If only Faith, both unto them and also unto us, be sufficient for Salvation, what need then any Sacraments to be instituted? He answered, that there are three causes why Sacraments are instituted. The first Saint Austin declareth in these words, Writing against Faustus, Men, faith he, cannot be knit together into one name of Religion, be it true or be it false, except they be knit by the society of signs and visible Sacraments, the power whereof doth wonderfully prevail, in so much that such as contain them are wicked: for that is wickedly concerned without the which godliness cannot be made perfect, &c. Another cause is, that they should be helps to graft and plant Faith in our Hearts, and for the confirmation of Gods promises. But this use of Sacraments many are yet ignorant of, and more there be, which do preposterously judge of the same, taking the signs for the thing it self, and worshipping the same: even by like reason in a manner, as if a man would take the bush that hangeth at the Tavern door, and suck it up the minds and hearts of the faithful to give thanks unto God for his benefits. And these in a manner are the principal points of his Book.

When More (as is aforesaid) had gotten a Copy of this Treatise, he sharpened his Pen all that he might to make answer unto this young man (for so he calleth him throughout his whole Book) but in such sort, that when the Book was once set forth, and shewed unto the World, then he endeavored himself all that he might to keep it from printing, peradventure lest that any Copy thereof should come unto Friths hand, But notwithstanding when at the last Frith had gotten a Copy thereof, by means of his friends, He answered him out of the Prison, counting nothing that any man could desire to the perfect and and absolute handling of the matter. And as it were a great labour, so do I think it not much necessary to repeat all his Reasons and Arguments, or the Testimonies which he had gathered out of the Doctors: specially for-much as the Archbishop of Canterbury Crammer, in his Apology against the Bishop of Winchester, seemed to have collected them abundantly, gathering the principal and chiefest helps from thence that he leaned unto against the other: and I doubt much whether the Archbishop ever gave any more credit unto any Author of that Doctrine, than unto this aforesaid Frith.

What dexterity of Wit was in him, and excellency of Doctrine, it may appear not only by his Books which he wrote of the Sacrament, but also in them which he intitled of Purgatory. In the which quarrel he withstood the violence of three most obdurate enemies: that is to say, of Rochester, More, and Raſſal, whereof the one by the help of the Doctors, the other by wresting of the Scripture, and the third by the help of natural Philosophy had conspired against him. But he, as a Hercules fighting not against two only, but even with them all three at once, did so overthrow and confound them, that he converted Raſſal to his part.

Besides all these Commendations of this young Man, there was also in him a friendly and prudent moderation in uttering of the truth, joyed with a learned godliness. Which virtue hath always so much prevailed in the Church of Christ, that without it, all other good gifts of knowledge, be they never so great, cannot greatly profit, but oftentimes do very much hurt. And would God that all things in all places were so free from all kind of diffenſion, that there were no mention made amongst Christians of Zuinglians and Lutherians, when as neither Zuinglius, neither Luther died for us, but that we might be all one in Christ. Neither do I think that any thing could happen more grievous unto those worthy Men, than their names to be abused to Sects and Factions, which so greatly withstood and strove against all Factions. Neither do I here discourse which part came nearest unto the truth: Neither so rashly intermeddle in this matter, that I will detract any thing from either part, but rather wish of God I might join either part unto other.

But now, inſomuch as we treat of the Story of John Frith, I cannot chooſe, but muſt needs earnestly and heartily embrace the prudent and godly moderation which was in that Man, who maintaining his quarrel of the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, no less godly than learnedly, (and so no Man in a manner had done it more learnedly and pithily) yet he did it so moderately, without any contention, that he would never seem to strive against the Papists, except he had been driven to it even of necessity. In all other matters where necessity did not move him to contend, he was ready to grant all things for quietness sake, as his most modest Reason and answers did declare.

For when as More, disputing in a certain place upon the Sacrament, layed against him the authority of Doctor Barns, for the presence of the Body and Blood in the Sacrament, he answered unto More and his Companions, that he would promise under this condition, That the sentence of Luther and Barns might be holden as ratified, he would never speak more words of it: for in that point they did both agree with him, that the Sacrament was not to be worshipped, and that Idolatry being taken away, he was content to permit every Man to judge of the Sacrament, as God should put into their hearts: for then there remained no more poison, that any Man ought or might be afraid of. Wherefore if they did agree in that which was the chiefest point of the Sacrament, they should easily accord and agree in the remnant.

Thus much he wrote in the Treatise, entituled, The exile of Barns against More. Which words of this most meek Martyr of Christ, if they would take place in the felonious divisions and factions of these our days, with great ease and little labour, Men might be brought to an unity in this controverted, and much more concord and love should be in the Church, and much less offence given abroad than there is.

But to our Story again of John Frith, who after he had now sufficiently contained in his writings with More, Rochester, and Raſſal, Mores Son in Law, he was at the last carried to Lambeth, first before the Bishop of Canterbury, and afterward unto Croïdon, before the Bishop of Winchester, to Plead his Cause. Last of all, he was called before the Bishops in a common Assembly at London, where he constantly defended himself, if he might have been heard.

The Order of his judgment, with the manner of his Examination and Articles which were objected against him, are comprised and set forth by himself in a Letter written and sent unto his Friends, whilst he was prisoner in the Tower.

A Letter of John Frith to his Friends, concerning his troubles: Wherein after he had first with a brief Preface saluted them, entering then into the matter, Thus he writeth.

I Doubt not dear Brethren, but that it doth some deal vex you, to see the one part to have all the words, and freely to speak what they list, and the other to be put to silence, and not be heard indifferently. But refer your matters unto God, which shortly shall judge after another fashion. In the mean time I have written unto you, as briefly as I may, what Articles were objected against me, and what were the principal points of my condemnation, that you might understand the matter certainly.

The whole matter of this my examination was comprehended in two special Articles, that is to say, of Purgatory, and of the substance of the Sacrament.

And first of all, as touching Purgatory, they enquired of me whether I did believe there was any place to purge the spots and filth of the Soul after this life. But I said, that I thought there was no such place: For Man (said I) doth consist and is made only of two parts, that is to say, of the body and the soul, whereof the one is purged here in this World, by the Cross of Christ, which he layeth upon every Child that he receiveth: as affliction, Worldly oppression, persecution, imprisonment, &c. And last of all the reward of sin, which is death, is laid upon us: but the soul is purged with the Word of God, which we receive through Faith, to the salvation both of Body and soul. Now if ye can shew me a third part of Man beside the Body and the Soul, I will also grant unto you the third place, which ye do call Purgatory. But because ye cannot do this, I must also of necessity deny unto you the Bishop of Rome's Purgatory: Nevertheless I count neither part a necessary Article of our Faith, to be believed under pain of damnation, whether there be such a Purgatory or no.

Secondly, They examined me touching the Sacrament of the Altar, whether it was the very Body of Christ, or no.

I answered, that I thought it was both Christ's Body and also our Body, as Saint Paul teacheth us in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and tenth Chapter. For in that it is made one bread of many cornes, it is called our body, which being divers and many members, are associate and gathered together into one fellowship or body. Likewise of the wine, which is gathered of many clusters of Grapes, and is made into one Liquor. But the same bread again, in that it is broken, is the Body of Christ, declaring his Body to be broken and delivered unto death, to redeem us from our iniquities.

Furthermore, in that the Sacrament is distributed, it is Christ's Body, signifying that as verily as the Sacrament is distributed unto us, so verily is Christ's Body and the fruit of his passion distributed unto all faithful people.

In that it is received it is Christ's Body, signifying that as verily as the outward Man received the Sacrament with his Teeth and Mouth, so verily doth the inward Man through Faith receive Christ's Body and fruit of his passion, and is as sure of it as of the Bread which he eateth.

Well (said they) dost thou not think that his very natural Body, Flesh, Blood, and Bone, is really contained under the Sacrament, and there present without all figure or similitude? No, said I—I do not so think: notwithstanding I would not that any should count, that I make my saying (which is the negative) any Article of Faith. For even as I say, that you ought not to make any necessary Article of the Faith of your part (which is an affirmative) so I say again, that we make no necessary Article of the Faith of our part, but leave it indifferent for all Men to judge therein, as God shall open their hearts, and no side to condemn or despise the other, but to nourish in all things brotherly love, and one to bear another's infirmity.

John Frith converted before the Bishop.

This Letter is to be seen in the end of that collection and worthy work which he made in the Tower concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. Purgatory.

After this they alledged the place of Saint Augustine, where he saith; Fructus in manibus propriis, That is to say, He was carried in his own hands.

Whereunto I answered, That Saint Augustine was a plain interpreter of himself; for he hath in another place, Fructus tanquam in manibus suis: That is to say, He was carried as it were in his own hands; which is a phrase of speech not of one that doth simply affirm, but only of one expressing a thing by a similitude. And albeit that Saint Augustine had not thus expounded himself, yet he writing unto Boniface doth plainly admonish all Men, that the Sacraments do represent and signifie those things whereof they are Sacraments, and many times even of the similitudes of the things themselves they do take their names. And therefore according to this rule it may be said, he was born in his own hands, when as he bare in his hands the Sacrament of his Body and Blood.

Then they alledged a place of Chrysostome, which at the first blash may seem to make much for them, who in a certain Homily upon the Supper writeth thus; Doſt thou see Bread and Wine? Do they depart from thee into the draught, as other meats do? No, God forbid; for as in Wax, when it cometh to the fire, nothing of the substance remaineth nor abideth: so likewise think that the mysteries are consumed by the substance of the body, &c.

Theſe words I expounded by the words of the same Doctor, which in another Homily saith in this manner; The inward eyes (saith he) as soon as they see the Bread, they see over all Creatures, and do not think of the Bread that is baked of the Baker, but of the Bread of everlasting life, which is signified by the mystical Bread. Now confer these places together, and you shall perceive that the last expoundeth the first plainly. For he saith, Doſt thou see the Bread and Wine? I answer by the second, Nay, For the inward eyes, as soon as they see the Bread, do pass over all Creatures, and do not any longer think upon the Bread, but upon him which is signified by the Bread. And after this manner he seeth it, and again he seeth it not: For as he seeth it with his outward and carnal eyes, so with his inward eyes he seeth it not, that is to say, regardeth not the Bread, or thinketh not upon it, but is otherwise occupied. Even as when we play or do any thing else negligently, we commonly are wont to say, we see not what we do; not that indeed we do not see that which we go about, but because our mind is fixed on some other thing, and doth not attend unto that which the Eyes do see.

In like manner may it be answered unto that which followeth; Do they avoid from thee (saith he) in the draught as other meats do? I will not so say, for other meats passing thorough the Bowels, after they have of themselves given nourishment unto the Body, be voided into the draught: but this is a spiritual meat, which is received by Faith, and nourisheth both Body and Soul unto everlasting life, neither is it at any time voided as other meats are.

And as before I said that the external Eyes do behold the Bread, which the inward Eyes, being otherwise occupied, do not behold or think upon, even so our outward Man doth digest the Bread, and void it into the draught; but the inward Man doth neither regard nor think upon it, but thinketh upon the thing it self that is signified by that Bread. And therefore Chrysostome, a little before the words which they alledged, saith; Lift up your minds and hearts. Whereby he admonisheth us to look upon and consider those Heavenly things which are represented and signified by the Bread and Wine, and not to mark the Bread and Wine it self.

Here they said, that was not Chrysostome's mind; but that by this example he declared that there remained no Bread nor Wine. I answered; That was false: for the example that he taketh tendeth to no other purpose, but to call away our spiritual Eyes from the beholding of vile things, and to transport them another way, as if the things which are seen were of no force. Therefore he draweth away our mind from the consideration of these things, and fixeth it upon him which is signified unto us by the same. The very words which follow sufficiently declare this to be the true meaning of the Author, whereas he commandeth us to consider all things with our inward eyes; that is to say, spiritually.

But whether Chrysostome's words do tend either to this or that sense, yet do they indifferently make on our part against our adversaries, which way soever we do understand them. For if he thought that the Bread and Wine do remain, we have no further to travel: but if he meant contrariwise, that they do not remain, but that the natures of the Bread and Wine are altered, then are the Bread and Wine falsely named Sacraments and mysteries, which can be said in no place to be in the nature of things: for that which is in no place, how can it be a Sacrament, or supply the room of a mystery? Finally, if he speak only of the outward forms and shapes (as we call them) it is most certain that they do continually remain, and that they by the substance of the body are not consumed in any place; wherefore it must necessarily follow the words of Chrysostome to be understood in such sense as I have declared.

Here peradventure many would marvel, that so much as the matter touching the substance of the Sacrament, being separate from the Articles of Faith, and binding no Man of necessity either unto salvation or damnation, whether he believe it or not, but rather may be left indifferently unto all Men, freely to judge either on the one part or on the other, according to his own mind, so that neither part do contain or despise the other; but that all love and charity be still hidden and kept in this diffinition of opinions: what then is the cause, why I would therefore lo willingly suffer death? The cause why I die is this; For that I cannot agree with the Divines and other head Prelates, that it should be necessarily determined to be an Article of Faith, and that we should believe under pain of Damnation, the substance of the Bread and Wine to be changed into the Body and Blood of our Saviour JESUS CHRIST, the form and shape only not being changed. Which thing if it were most true (as they shall never be able to prove it by any authority of the Scripture or Doctors) yet shall they not be so bold to pass, that that Doctrine, were it never so true, should be holden for a necessary Article of Faith. For there are many things both in the Scriptures and other places, which we are not bound of necessity to believe as an Article of Faith.

So it is true, that I was a prisoner and in bonds when I wrote these things, and yet for all that I will not hold it as an Article of Faith, (a) but that you may without danger of Damnation, either believe it, or think the contrary.

But as touching the cause why I cannot affirm the doctrine of Transubstantiation, divers reasons do lead me thereto.

First, For that I do plainly see it to be false and vain, and not to be grounded upon any reason, either of the Scriptures or of approved Doctors.

Secondly, For that by my example I would not be an Author unto Christians to admit any thing as a matter of Faith, more than the necessary points of their Creed, wherein the whole sum of our salvation doth consist, specially such things, the Belief whereof have no certain argument of authority or reason.

I added moreover, that their Church (as they call it) hath no such power and authority, that it either ought or may bind us under the peril of our souls, to the believing of any such Articles.

Thirdly, Because I will not, for the favour of our Divines or Priests, be prejudicial in this point unto so many Nations, of Germans, Helvetians, and other, which altogether rejecting the Transubstantiation of the Bread and Wine into the Body and Blood of Christ, are all of the same opinion that I am, as well those that take Luther's part, as those that hold with Occolampadius. Which things standing in this case, I [SING] there is no Man of any upright conscience, which will not allow the reason of my death, which I am put unto for this only cause, that I do not think Transubstantiation, although it were true indeed, to be established for an Article of Faith.

And thus much hitherto as touching the Articles and whole disputation of John Frith, which was done with all moderation and uprightnes. But when as no reason would prevail against the force and cruelty of these furious foes, the Twentieth day of June, in the year of our Lord, 1533. he was brought before the Bishops of London, Winchester, and Lincoln, who sitting in Saint Pauls upon Friday, the Twentieth day of June, ministered certain interrogatories upon the Sacrament of the Supper, and Purgatory, unto the said Frith, as is above declared. To the which when he had answered and shewed his mind in form and effect, as by his own words above doth appear, he afterward subscribed to his answers with his own hand, in these words.

The Execution of John Frith.

Ego Frithus ita sentio, et quemadmodum sentio, ita dixi, scripsi, asserui, et affirmavi.

That is to say:

I Frith thus do think, and so I think, so have I said, written, taught, and affirmed, and in my Books have published.

But when as by no means he could be persuaded to recant these Articles aforesaid, neither be brought to believe that the Sacrament is an Article of Faith, but said, Fiat judicium & justicie: he was condemned by the Bishop of London to be burned, and sentence given against him; the Tenor whereof here ensueth.

John Frith condemned

The sentence given against John Frith.

Sentence against John Frith.

(b) Arthey had which executed Frith.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We John by the permission of God, Bishop of London, lawfully and rightly proceeding with all godly favour, by the authority and virtue of our Office, against the John Frith of our jurisdiction, before us personally here present, having accused and detected, and notoriously slandered of Heresie, having heard, seen, and understood, and with diligent deliberation weighed, discussed, and considered the merits of the cause, all things being observed which by us in this behalf by Order of Law ought to be observed, sitting in our Judgment Seat, the Name of Christ being first called upon, and having (b) God only before our eyes, because by the Acts enacted, propounded, and exhibited in this manner, and by thine own confession judicially made before us, we do find, that thou hast taught, holden, and affirmed, and obstinately defended divers Errors and Heresies, and damnable opinions, contrary to the doctrine and determination of the Holy Church, and specially against the Reverend Sacrament; and albeit that we following the example of Christ, which would not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should convert and live, have oftentimes gone about to correct thee, and by all lawful means that we could, and most wholesome admonitions that we did know, to reduce thee again to the true Faith, and the Unity of the Universal Catholick Church, notwithstanding we have found thee obstinate and stiff-necked, willingly continuing in thy damnable opinions and Heresies, and refusing to return again unto the true Faith and Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and as the Child of wickedness and darkness, so to have hardened thy heart, that thou wilt not understand the voice of thy Shepherd, which with a fatherly affection doth seek after thee, nor wilt be allured with his godly and fatherly admonitions: We therefore, John the Bishop aforesaid; not willing that thou which art wicked, shouldst become more wicked, and infect the Lords Flock with thy Heresie, which we are greatly afraid of, do judge thee, and definitively condemn thee the said John Frith, thy demerits and faults being aggravate through thy damnable obstinacy, as guilty of most detestable Heresies, and as an obstinate unrepentent sinner, refusing penitently to return to the lap and Unity of the Holy Mother Church, and that thou hast been, and art by Law excommunicate, and pronounce and declare thee to be an excommunicate person: Also we pronounce and declare thee to be an Heretic, to be cut out from the Church, and left unto the judgment of the Secular Power, and now presently to do leave thee unto the Secular Power, and their judgment: most earnestly requiring them, in the bowels of our Lord Jesus Christ, that this execution and punishment, worthily to be done upon thee, may be so moderate, that the rigour thereof be not too extreme, nor yet the gentleness too much mitigated, but that it may be to the salvation of thy soul, to the extirpation, terror and conversion of Heretics, to the Unity of the Catholick Faith, by this our sentence definitive, or final Decree, which we here promulgate in this form aforesaid.

Moderation pretended, but none showed.

This sentence thus read, the Bishop of London directed his Letter to Sir Stephen Peacock, Mayor of London, and the Sheriffs of the same City, for the receiving of the foresaid John Frith into their charge. Who being so delivered over unto them the fourth day of July, in the year aforesaid, was by them carried into Smithfield to be burned, and when he was tied unto the Stake, there it sufficiently appeared with what constancy and courage he suffered death. For when the Fagots and Fire were put unto him, he willingly embraced the same; thereby declaring with what uprightness of mind he suffered his death for Christs sake, and the true Doctrine, whereof that day he gave with his blood a perfect and firm Testimony. The wind made his death somewhat the longer, which bare away the flame from him unto his fellow that was tied to his back: but he had established his mind with such patience, God giving him strength, that even as though he had felt no pain in that long torment, he seemed rather to rejoyce for his Fellow, than to be careful for himself.

John Frith delivered to the secular hands.

The constant death of John Frith.

This truly is the power and strength of Christ, striving and vanquishing in his Saints: Who sanctifie us together with them, and direct us in all things to the glory of his most holy Name, Amen.

The day before the burning of these worthy Men of God, the Bishop of London certified King Henry the Eighth, of his worthy, yea, rather Woolvish proceeding against these Men: the Tenor whereof, in so much as it proceedeth as the other do before, we therefore omit it, referring the Reader to the same.

Andrew Hewet burned with Master Frith.

Andrew Hewet, born in Feversham, in the County of Kent, a young Man of the age of four and twenty years, was Apprentise with one Master Warren a Tailor, in Watling Street. And as it happened that he went upon a Holy-day into Fleet Street, towards Saint Dunstons, he met with one William Holt, which was fore-man with the Kings Tailor, at that present called Master Malre, and being suspected by the same Holt (which was a dissembling wretch) to be one that favoured the Gospel, after a little talk had with him, he went into an honest house about Fleet Bridge, which was a Booksellers house. Then Holt, thinking he had found good occasion to shew forth some fruit of his wickedness, sent for certain Officers, and searched the house, and finding the same Andrew, apprehended him, and carried him, to the Bishops house, where he was cast into Irons; and being there a good space, by the means of a certain honest Man, he had a File conveyed unto him, wherewith he filed off his Irons, and when he spied his time he got out of the gate. But being a Man unskilful to hide himself, for lack of good acquaintance, he went into Smithfield, and there met with one Withers, which was an Hypocrite, as Holt was. Which Withers understanding how he had escaped, and that he knew not whither to go, pretending a fair countenance unto him, willed him to go with him, promising that he should be provided for; and so kept him in the Country where he had to do, from Low-Sunday till Whitsunday, and then brought him to London to the house of one John Chapman in Hofter Lane beside Smithfield, and there left him by the space of two days.

Then he came to the said Chapmans House again, and brought Holt with him. And when they met with the said Andrew, they seemed as though they meant to do him very much good. And Holt for his part, said, That if he should bring any Man in trouble (as the voice was that he had done the said Andrew) it were pity but that the earth should open and swallow him up. Inasmuch that they would needs Sup there that night, and prepared meat of their own charges. At night they came, and brought certain Guests with them, because they would have the matter to seem as though it had come out by others. When they had supped, they went their way, and Holt took out of his purse two Groats, and gave them to the said Andrew, and embraced him in his arms. As they were gone out, there came in one John Tibauld, which was banished from his own house by an Injunction, for he had been four times in prison for Christs sake. And within an hour after that Holt and Witbers were gone, the Bishops Chancellor and one called Sergeant Weaver came, and brought with them the Watch, and searched the house, where they found the said John Chapman and the forenamed Andrew, and John Tibauld, whom they bound with Ropes, which Sergeant Weaver had brought with him, and so carried them to the Bishops house: but Andrew Hewet they sent unto the Lollards Tower, and kept Chapman and Tibauld asunder, watched with two Priests servants. The next day Bishop Stokesley came from Fulham, and after they were examined with a few threatening words, Chapman was committed to the Stocks, with this threat, That he should tell another Tale, or else he should sit there till his heels did drop from his Arse: and Tibauld was shut up in a close Chamber; but by Gods provision, he was well delivered out of prison, albeit he could not enjoy his House and Land, because of the Bishops Injunction, but was faine to sell all that he had in Essex; for the Tenor of his Injunction was, That he should not come within seven miles of his own house: and the forenamed Chapman, after five weeks imprisonment (whereof three weeks he fate in the Stocks) by much suit made unto the Lord Chancellor, which at that time was Lord Audley, after many threatnings was delivered: But the said Andrew Hewet, after long and cruel imprisonments was condemned to death, and burned with John Frith: Whole examination here followeth.

THe Twentieth day of the Month of April, Andrew Hewet was brought before the Chancellor of the Bishop of London, where was objected against him, that he believed the Sacrament of the Altar, after the consecration, to be but a signification of the Body of Christ, and that the Host consecrated was not the very Body of Christ. Now for so much as this Article seemed hainous unto them, they would do nothing in it without the consent of learned Counsel: whereupon the Bishop of London, associated with the Bishops of Lincoln and Winchester, called him again before them. Where he being demanded what he thought as touching the Sacrament of the Lords Supper; answered; Even as John Frith doth. Then said one of the Bishops unto him; Dost thou not believe that it is really the Body of Christ, born of the Virgin Mary? So (saith he) do not I believe. Why not, said the Bishop? because (saith he) Christ commanded me not to give credit rashly unto all men which say; Behold here is Christ, and there is Christ; for many false Prophets, shall rise up, saith the Lord.

Then certain of the Bishops smiled at him; and Stokesley the Bishop of London said; Why, Frith is an Heretick and already judged to be burned, and except thou revoke thine opinion, thou shalt be burned also with him? Truly (saith he) I am content therewithal. Then the Bishop asked him if he would forsake his opinions. Whereunto he answered, That he would do as Frith did. Whereupon he was sent unto the prison to Frith, and afterward they were carried together to the fire. The Bishops used many persuasions to allure this good Man from the truth, to follow them: but he, manfully persisting in the truth, would not recant. Wherefore, the fourth day of July, at afternoon, he was carried into Smithfield with Frith, and there burned.

When they were at the Stake, one Doctor Cook, a Parson in London, openly admonished all the people, that they should in no wise pray for them, no more than they would do for a Dog. At which words Frith smiling, desired the Lord to forgive them. These words did not a little move the people unto anger, and not without good cause. Thus these two blessed Martyrs committed their Souls into the hands of God.

This Thomas Benet was born in Cambridge, and by order of degree of the University there made M. of Art, and (as some think) was also a Priest, a Man doubtless very well learned, and of a godly disposition, being of the acquaintance and familiarity of Thomas Bulney, the famous and glorious Martyr of Christ. This Man, the more he did grow and increase in the knowledge of God and his holy Word, the more he did dislike and abhor the corrupt state of Religion then used; and therefore thinking his own Country to be no safe place for him to remain in, and being desirous to live in more freedom of conscience, he did forsake the University, and went into Devonshire, in the year of our Lord, 1524, and first dwelled in a Market town, named Torinton, both Town and Country being to him altogether unknown, as he was also unknown to all Men there. Where, for the better maintenance of himself and his Wife, he did practise to teach young Children, and kept a School for the same purpose. But that Town not serving his expectation, after his abode one year there, he came to the City of Exeter, and there hiring a House in a Street called the Butchers-row, did exercise the teaching of Children, and by that means sustained his Wife and Family. He was of a quiet behaviour, of a godly conversation, and of a very courteous nature, humble to all Men, and offensive to no body. His greatest delight was to be at all Sermons and Preachings, whereof he was a diligent and attentive hearer. The time which he had to spare from teaching, he gave wholly to his private Study in the Scriptures, having no dealings nor conferences with any body, saying with such as he could learn and understand to be favourers of the Gospel, and zealous of Gods true Religion: of such he would be inquisitive, and most desirous to join himself unto them. And therefore understanding that one William Stroud of Newnam, in the County of Devonshire Esquire, was committed to the Bishops prison in Exeter upon suspicion of Heresy, although he were never before acquainted with him, yet did he send his Letters of comfort and consolation unto him. Wherein, to avoid all suspicion which might be conceived of him, he did disclose himself, and utter what he was, and the causes of his being in the County: writing among other things these words; Ue ne scortator aut immundus essem, uorem duxi, cum qua hinc sex annis ab istorum Antichristianorum manibus in Devonia latitavi. That is to say, Because I would not be a Whoremonger, or an unclean person, therefore I married a Wife, with whom I have hidden myself in Devonshire, from the Tyranny of the Antichristians these six years.

But as every Tree and Herb hath his due time to bring forth his Fruit, so did it appear by this Man. For he daily feeling the glory of God to be so blasphemed, Idolatrous Religion so imbraced and maintained, and that most false usurped power of the Bishop of Rome so extolled, was so grieved in Conscience, and troubled in Spirit, that he could not be quiet till he did utter his mind therein. Wherefore dealing privately with certain of his Friends, he did plainly open and disclose how blasphemously and abominably God was dishonoured, his Word contemned, and his people, whom he so dearly bought, were by blind Guides carried headlong to everlasting Damnation: and therefore he could no longer endure, but must needs, and would utter their abominations, and for his own part, for the Testimony of his conscience, and for the defence of Gods true Religion, would yield himself most patiently (as near as God would give him grace) to die and to shed his Blood therein; alleging that his death should be more profitable to the Church of God, and for the edifying of his people, than his life should be. To whose persuasions when his Friends had yielded, they promised to pray to God for him, that he might be strong in the Cause, and continue a faithful Soldier to the end. Which done, he gave order for the bettowing of such Books as he had, and very shortly after, in the Month of October, he wrote his mind in certain Scroles of Paper, which in secret manner he set upon the Doors of the Cathedral Church of the City in which was written: The Pope is Antichrist, and we ought to worship God only, and no Saints.

These Bills being found, there was no small ado, and no little search made for the enquiry of the Heretic that should set up these Bills: and the Mayor and his Officers were not so busy to make searches to find out this Heretic, but the Bishop and all his Doctors were as hot as Coals, and inkindled as though they had been stung with a sort of Wasps. Wherefore to keep the people in their former blindness, Order was taken that the Doctors should in haste up to the Pulpit every day, and confute this Heretic. Nevertheless this Thomas Benet, keeping his own doings in secret, went the Sunday following to the Cathedral Church to the Sermon, and by chance fate down by two Men, which were the busiest in all the City in seeking and searching for Heretics; and they beholding this Benet, said the one to the other; Surely this Fellow by all likelihood is the Heretic that hath set up the Bills, and it were good to examine him. Nevertheless when they had well beheld him, and saw the quiet and sober behaviour of the Man, his attentiveness to the Preacher, his godliness in the Church, being always occupied in his Book, which was a Testament in the Latin Tongue, were astonished, and had no power to speak unto him, but departed and left him Reading in his Book. As touching this point of Benet's behaviour in the Church, I find the reports of some other a little to vary, and yet not much contrary one to the other. For in receiving the Letters and Writings of a certain Minister, which at the same time was present at the doing hereof in Exeter; thus I find moreover added concerning the behaviour of this Thomas Benet in the Church.

At that time (saith he) as I remember, Doctor Mores and man, Crispin, Calsey, with such other, bare theiving there. Besides these, were also Preachers there, one Doctor Escauld, an unlearned Doctor, God knoweth, and one Doctor David, as well learned as he, both Gray-Friers, and Doctor I know not who, a Black-Frier, not much inferior unto them. Moreover, there was one Bachelor of Divinity, a Gray-Frier named Gregory Bassett, indeed learned more than they all, but as blind and superstitious as he which was most. Which Gregory not long before was revolted from the way of Righteousness, to the way of Belial: For in Brishow (saith the Author) he lay in prison long, and was almost famished, for having a Book of Martin Luther, called his Questions, which he a long time privily had studied, and for the teaching of Youth a certain Catechism. To be short, the Brains of the Canons and Priests, the Officers and Commons of that City were very earnestly baited, how, or by what means such an enormous Heretic, which had picked up those Bills, might be eluded and known; but it was long first. At last, the Priests found out a toy to Curse him, whatsoever he were, with Book, Bell, and Candle; Which Curse at that day, seemed most fearful and terrible. The manner of the Curse was after this sort.

One of the Priests apparelled all in White, ascended up into the Pulpit. The other Rabblement, with certain of the two Orders of Friars, and certain superstitious Monks of Saint Nicholas House standing round about, and the Crows (as the custom was) being holden up with holy Candles of Wax fixed to the same, he began his Sermon with this Theme of Josua; Est Blasphemia in castris; There is blasphemy in the Army: and so made a long protestation, but not so long as tedious and superstitious: and so concluded, That that foul and abominable Heretic which had put up such blasphemous Bills, was for that his blasphemy damnable Cursed, and befought God, our Lady, Saint Peter, Patron of that Church, with all the holy Company of Martyrs, Confessors, and Virgins, that it might be known what Heretic had put up such blasphemous Bills, that Gods people might avoid the vengeance.

The manner of the Cursing of the said Benet was marvelous to behold, forasmuch as at that time there were few or none, unless a Shereman or two, whose Houses I well remember were searched for Bills at that time, and for Books, that knew any thing of Gods matters, or how God doth bless their Curses in such cases.

cafes. Then said the Prelate, By the Authority of God the Father Almighty, and of the blessed Virgin Mary, of Saint Peter and Paul, and of the holy Saints, we Excommunicate, we utterly Curse and Ban, commit and deliver to the Devil of Hell, him or her, whatsoever he or she be, that have in spite of God and of Saint Peter, whose Church this is, in spite of all holy Saints, and in spite of our most holy Father the Pope, Gods Vicar here on Earth, and in spite of the reverend Father in God, John our Diocesan, and the Worshipful Canons, Masters, and Priests, and Clerks, which serve God daily in this Cathedral Church, fixed up with Wax such cursed and heretical Bills full of Blasphemy, upon the doors of this and other holy Churches within this City. Excommunicate plainly be he or she plenally, or they, and delivered over to the Devil, as perpetual Malefactors and Schismatics. Accursed might they be, and given Body and Soul to the Devil. Cursed be they, be or she, in Cities and Towns, in Fields, in Ways, in Paths, in Houses, out of Houses, and in all other places, standing, lying, or rising, walking, running, waking, sleeping, eating, drinking, and whatsoever thing they do besides. We separate them, him or her, from the participation of the holy Mass, from all Sacraments, Chappels and Altars, from holy Bread, and holy Water, from all the Merits of Gods Priests, and religious men, and from all their Cloysters, from all their Pardons, Privileges, Grants, and Immunities, which all the holy Fathers, Popes of Rome have granted to them: and we give them over utterly to the power of the Fiend, and let us quench their Souls, if they be dead, this night in the pains of Hell fire, as this Candle is now quenched and put out (and with that he put out one of the Candles:) and let us pray to God (if they be alive) that their Eyes may be put out, as this Candle light is (so he put out the other Candle:) and let us pray to God and to our Lady, and to Saint Peter and Paul, and all holy Saints, that all the senses of their Bodies may fail them, and that they may have no feeling, as now the lights of this Candle is gone (and so he put out the third Candle) except they, be or she, come openly now and confess their Blasphemy, and by Repentance (as in them shall lie) make satisfaction unto God, our Lady, St. Peter, and the Worshipful Company of this Cathedral Church: and as this holy Crofs staff now falleth down, so might they, except they repent, and shew themselves: and one first taking away the Crofs, the staff fell down. But Lord, what a shout and noise was there, what terrible fear, what holding up of hands to heaven, that Curse was so terrible?

Now this fond foolish fantastic and mockery being done and played, which was to a Christian heart a thing ridiculous, Benet could no longer forbear, but fell to great laughter, but within himself, and for a great space could not cease, by the which thing the poor man was espied. For those that were next to him, wondering at that great Curse, and believing that it could not but light on one or other, asked good Benet, For what cause he should so laugh. My Friends, said he, who can forbear, seeing such merry conceits and interludes plaied of the Priests? Straight way a noise was made, Here is the Heretick, here is the Heretick, hold him fast, hold him fast, hold him fast. With that, there was a great confusion of Voices, and much clapping of hands, and yet they were uncertain whether he were the Heretick or no. Some say, that upon the same he was taken and apprehended. Other report, that his enemies, being uncertain of him, departed, and so he went home to his house. Where he, being not able to digest the lyes there preached, renewed his former Bills, and caused his Boy early in the morning following, to set the said Bills upon the Gates of the Church-yard. As the Boy was setting one of the said Bills upon a Gate, called The little Style, it chanced that one W. S. going to the Cathedral Church to hear a Mass, called Barions Mass, which was then daily said about five of the Clock in the morning, found the Boy at the Gate and asking him, Whose Boy he was, did charge him to be the Heretick which had set up the Bills upon the Gates: wherefore pulling down the Bill, he brought the same together with the Boy before the Major of the City, and thereupon Benet, being known and taken, was violently committed to Ward.

On the morrow began both the Canons and Heads of the City joyned with them, to fall to examination. With whom for that day he had not much communication, but confessed and said to them, It was even I that put up those Bills, and if it were to do, I would do it again; for in them I have written nothing but that is very truth. Couldst not thou, said they, as well have declared thy mind by mouth, as by putting up Bills of Blasphemy? No, said he, I put up the Bills, that many should read and bear what abominable Blasphemers ye are, and that they might the better know your Antichrist, the Pope to be that Boar out of the Wood, which destroyeth and throweth down the Hedges of Gods Church; for if I had been heard to speak but one word, I should have been clapped fast in prison, and the matter of God hidden. But now I trust more of your blasphemous doings will thereby be opened and come to light: for God will so have it, and no longer will suffer you.

The next day after he was sent unto the Bishop, who first committed him to prison, called The Bishops Prison, where he was kept in stocks and strong Irons, with as much favour as a Dog should find. Then the Bishop associating unto him one Doctor Brewer his Chancellor, and other of his lewd Clergy and Friars, began to examine him and burthen him, that contrary to the Catholick Faith he denied praying to Saints, and also denied the Supremacy of the Pope. Whereunto he answered in such forbearing manner, and so learnedly proved and defended his Assertions, that he did not only confound and put to silence his Adversaries, but also brought them in great admiration of him, the most part having pity and compassion on him. The Friars took great pains with him to persuade him from his erroneous Opinions, to recant and acknowledge his Fault, touching the Bills; but they did but dig after day: for God had appointed him to be a blessed Witness of his holy Name, and to be at defiance with all their Persecutions.

To declare here with what cruelty the Officers searched his house for Bills and Books, how cruelly and shamefully they handled his Wife, charging her with divers Enormities, it were too long to write. But she, like a good Woman took all things patiently that they did unto her: like as in other things she was contented to bear the Crofs with him, as to fare hardly with him at home, and to live with coarse meat and drink, that they might be the more able somewhat to help the Poor, as they did to the uttermost of their power. Amongst all other Priests and Friars, Gregory Bassett was most busie with him. This Gregory Bassett, as is partly touched before, was learned, and had a pleasant Tongue, and not long before was fallen from the Truth, for the which he was prisoned in Brisfow long time, at whose examination was ordained a great Pan of fire, where his holy Brethren (as the report went abroad) menaced him to burn his hands off: whereupon he there before them recanted, and became afterward a mortal Enemy to the Truth all his life. This Gregory, as it is said, was fervent with the poor man, to please the Canons of that Church, and marvelously tormented his brains, how to turn him from his Opinions, yea, and he was so diligent and fervent with him, that he would not depart the prison, but lay there night and day, who notwithstanding lost his labour: for good Benet was at a point not to deny Christ before men. So Gregory, as well as the other holy Fathers, lost his Spurs, inasmuch that he laid in open audience, That there was never so obstinate an Heretick.

The principal Point between Bassett and him was touching the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, whom in his Bills he named Antichrist, the Thief, the Mercenary, and Murdrer of Christs Flock: and these Disputations lasted about eight days, where at sundry times repaired to him both the Black and Gray-Friars, with Priests and Monks of that City. They that had some Learning persuaded him to believe the Church, and shewed by what tokens it is known. The other unlearned railed, and said, That the Devil tempted him, and spit upon him, calling him Heretick: who prayed God to give them a better mind, and to forgive them: For, said he, I will rather die, than Worship such a Beast, the very Whore of Babylon, and a false Usurper, as manifestly doth appear by his doings. KING he did. that he had not Power and Authority to do, being God's Vicar? He doth, quoth he, sell the Sacraments of the Church for money, he selleth remission of Sins daily for money, and so do you likewise: for there is no day but ye say divers Masses for Souls in famed Purgatory: yea, and ye spare not to make lying Sermons to the people, to maintain your false Traditions, and foul Gains. The whole World doth begin now to note your doings, to your utter confusion and shame. The shame, say they, shall be to thee, and such as thou art, thou foul Heretick. Wilt thou allow nothing done in holy Church? What a perverse Heretick art thou? I am, said he, no Heretick, but a Christian man, I thank Christ, and with all my heart will allow all things done and used in the Church to the Glory of God, and edifying of my Soul: but I see nothing in your Church, but that maintaineth the Devil. What is our Church, said they? It is not my Church (quoth Benet) God give me Grace to be of a better Church, for verily your Church is the plain Church of Antichrist, the Malignant Church, the second Church, a Den of Thieves, and Army of Poison, and as far wide from the true Universal and Apostolick Church, as Heaven is distant from the Earth.

Doſt not thou think, said they, that we pertain to the Universal Church? Yes, quoth he, but as dead Members, unto whom the Church is not beneficial: for your works are the Devices of man, and your Church a weak foundation; for ye say and preach, That the Popes word is equal with Gods Word in every degree. Why, said they, did not Christ say to Peter, To thee I will give the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven? He said that, quoth he, to all as well as to Peter, and Peter had no more Authority given him than they, or else the Churches planted in every Kingdom by their preaching are no Churches. Doth not Saint Paul say, Upon the Foundations of the Apostles and Prophets? Therefore I say plainly, That the Church that is built upon a man, is the Devils Church or Congregation, and not Gods. And as every Church this day is appointed to be ruled by a Bishop or Pastor, ordained by the Word of God in preaching and administration of the Sacraments under the Prince the supreme Governor under God: So to say, That all the Churches with their Princes and Governors be subject unto one Bishop is detestable Heresie, and the Pope your God, challenging this Power to himself, is the greatest Schismatick that ever was in the Church, and most foul Whore of whom John in the Revelation speaketh.

O thou blind and unlearned Fool (said they) is not the confession and consent of all the World as we confess and consent: That the Pope Holiness is the supreme Head and Vicar of Christ? That is (said Benet) because they are blinded and know not the Scriptures: but if God would of his mercy open the eyes of Princes to know their Office, his false Supremacy would soon decay. We think (said they) thou art so malicious, that thou wilt confess no Church. Look (said he) where they are that confess the true Name of Jesus Christ, and where only Christ is the Head, and under him the Prince of the Realm, to order all Bishops, Ministers and Preachers, and to see them do their duties in setting forth the only Glory of God by preaching the Word of God, and where it is preached, that Christ is our only Advocate, Mediator, and Patron before God his Father, making Intercession for us, and where the true faith and confidence in Christs Death and Passion, and his only Merits and Deservings are extolled, and our own depressed: where the Sacrament is duly without Superstition or Idolatry administered in remembrance of his blessed Passion, and only Sacrifice upon the Cross once for all, and where no Superstition reigneth, of that Church wilt I be.

Doth not the Pope (said they) confess the true Gospel? do not we all the same? Yes (said he) but ye deny the fruits thereof in every point. Ye build upon the Sands, not upon the Rock. And wilt thou believe indeed (said they) that the Pope is Gods Vicar? No (said he) indeed. And why, said they? Because (quoth he) he to other Apostles a Power not given him of Christ, no more than to other Apostles: and also because he doth by force of that usurped Supremacy blind the whole world, and doth contrary to all that ever Christ ordained or commanded.

What (said they) if he do all things after Gods Ordinance and Commandment should be then be his Vicar? Then (said he) would I believe him to be a good Bishop at Rome over his own Diocese, and to have no further Power. And if it pleased God, I would every Bishop did this in their Dioceses: then should we live a peaceable life in the Church of Christ, and there should be no such Seditions therein. If every Bishop would seek no further power than over his own Diocese, it were a goodly thing. Now because all are subject to One, all must do and consent to all wickedness as he doth, or be none of his. This is the cause of great Superstition in every Kingdom. And what Bishop soever be that preacheth the Gospel, and maintaineth the Truth, is a true Bishop of the Church. And doth not (said they) our holy Father the Pope maintain the Gospel? Yes (said he) I think he doth read it, and peradventure believe it, and so do you also; but neither be nor you do fix the anchor of your Salvation therein. Besides that, ye bear such a good will to it, that ye keep it close, that no man may read it but your selves. And when you preach, God knows how you handle it: inasmuch, that the people of Christ knoweth no Gospel wellnear, but the Popes Gospel: and so the blind lead the blind, and both fall into the pit. In the true Gospel of Christs confidence is none, but only in your Popes Traditions, and phantastical inventions.

Then said a Black-Frier unto him (God knoweth a black-head) Do we not preach the Gospel daily? Yes (said he) but what preaching of the Gospel is that when therewith ye extol superstitious things, and make us believe that we have Redemption through Pardons and Bulls from Rome, a penance & culpa, as ye term it: and by the merits of your Orders ye make many Brethren and Sisters, ye take yearly money of them, ye bury them in your Coats, and in shew ye beguile them: yea, and do a thousand superstitious things more: a man may be weary to speak of them. I see, said the Frier, thou art a damned wretch, I will have no more talk with thee.

Then slept to him a Gray-Frier, a Doctor (God knoweth) of small Intelligence, and laid before him great and many dangers. I take God to record, said Benet, my life is not dear to me, I am content to depart from it, for I am weary of it, seeing your detestable doings, to the utter destruction of Gods flock, and for my part, I can no longer forbear: I had rather by death (which I know is not far off) depart this life, than I may no longer be partaker of your detestable Idolatries and Superstitions, or be subject unto Antichrist your Pope. Our Pope (said the Frier) is the Vicar of God, and our ways are the ways of God. I pray you, said Benet, depart from me, and tell not me of your ways. He is only my way, which faith, I am the way, the truth, and the life. In this way will I walk, his doings shall be my Example, not yours, nor your false Popes. His Truth will I embrace, not the lies and falsehood of you, and your Pope. His everlasting life will I seek, the true Reward of all faithful people. Away from me I pray you. Vex my Soul no longer, ye shall not prevail. There is no good example in you, no truth in you, no life to be hoped for at your hands. Ye are all more vain than vanity it self. If I should bear and follow you this, everlasting death should hang over me, a just Reward for all them that love the life of this world. Away from me, your company liketh me not.

Thus a whole week, night and day, was Benet applied of these and such other Hypocrites. It were an infinite matter to declare all things done and said to him in the time of his Imprisonment, and the hate of the people that time, by means of ignorance, was hot against him: notwithstanding they could never move his patience, he answered to every matter soberly, and that more by the aid of Gods Spirit, than by any worldly study. I think he was at the least fifty years old. Being in prison, his Wife provided sustentance for him, and when she lamented, he comforted her, and gave her many good and godly Exhortations, and prayed her to move him nothing to apply unto his Adversaries.

Thus when these godly Canons and Priests with the Monks and Friars had done what they could, and perceived that he would by no means relent, then they proceeding unto Judgment drew out their bloody Sentence against against him, condemning him, (as the manner is) to be burned. Which being done, and the Writ which they had procured De Comburendo, being brought from London, they delivered him the fifteenth of January, 1531. unto Sir Thomas Denis Knight, then Sheriff of Devonshire to be burned. The mild Martyr rejoicing his end to approach so near, as the sheep before the Shearer, yielded himself with all humbleness to abide and suffer the Crofs of Persecution. And being brought to his Execution, in a place called Livery-dole without Excester, he made his most humble confession and prayer unto Almighty God, and requested all the people to do the like for him, whom he exhorted with such gravity and sobriety, and with such a pithy Oration to seek the true honouring of God, and the true knowledge of him; as also to leave the devils, fantasies, and imaginations of mans inventions, that all the hearers and beholders of him were astonished and in great admiration: Inasmuch that the most part of the people, as also the Scribe who wrote the sentence of condemnation against him, did pronounce and confess that he was Gods Servant, and a good man.

Nevertheless two Esquires, namely, Thomas Carew and John Barnhouse, standing at the stake by him, first with fair promises and goodly words, but at length, through threatnings, led him to revoke his Errors, and to call to our Lady and the Saints, and to say, Precor Sanctam Mariam, & omnes Sanctos Dei, &c. To whom he with all meekness answered, saying, No, no, is God only upon whose Name we must call, and we have no other Advocate unto him, but only Jesus Christ, Who died for us, and now sitteth at the right hand of the Father to be an Advocate for us; and by him must we offer and make our prayers to God, if we will have them to take place and be heard. With which answer the forefaid Barnhouse was so enkindled, that he took a Furze-bush upon a Pike, and being set on fire, thrust it unto his face, saying, Ab Whorison Heretick, pray to our Lady, and say, Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis, or by Gods wounds I will make thee do it.

To whom the said Thomas Benet, with an humble and a meek spirit, most patiently answered, Alas Sir, trouble me not. And holding up his hands, he said, Pater ignosce illis. Whereupon the Gentlemen caused the wood and fuzes to be set on fire, and therewith this godly man lifted up his eyes and hands to Heaven, saying, O Domine, re-ripe spiritum meum. And so continuing in his prayers, did never stir nor strive, but most patiently abode the cruelty of the fire, until his life was ended. For the which the Lord God be praised, and send us his Grace and Blessing, that at the later day we may with him enjoy the bliss and joy provided and prepared for the Elect Children of God.

This Benet was burned in a Jerkin of Neats-Leather; at whose burning (such was the devilish rage of the blind people) that well he was or the that could catch a stick or furze to cast into the fire.

Hitherto we have run over (good Reader) the names, the acts and doings of them which have sustained death and the torment of burning for Christs Cause, through the rigorous Proclamation above specified, set out (as is said) in the Name of King Henry, but indeed procured by the Bishops. Which Proclamation was so straitly looked upon, and executed so to the uttermost, in every point, by the said Popish Prelates, that no good man, Esd. 7. habens spiritum (whereof Esdas speaketh) could peep out with his head never so little, but he was caught by the back, and brought either to the fire, as were these above mentioned, or else compelled to abjure. Whereof there was a great multitude, as well men as women; whose names if they were sought out through all Registers in England, no doubt it would make too long a discourse. Nevertheless, omitting the rest; it shall content us at this present, briefly as in a short Table to insinuate the names, with the special Articles, of such as in the Dioceses of London, under Bishop Stokesley, were molested and vexed, and at last compelled to abjure, as here may appear.

Geffrey Lome, 1528.

His Articles were these, For having and dispersing certain Books of Luther.

Item, For translating certain Chapters of his Book De Bonis Operibus. For holding, That Faith without Works is sufficient to bring us to Heaven. That Christian men ought to worship God only, and no Saints. That Christian men should not offer to Images in Churches, nor set any light before them. That Pardons granted by Pope or Bishop do not profit a man.

Sigar Nicolson, Stationer of Cambridge, 1528.

His Articles were like; and moreover, for having in his house certain Books of Luther, and other prohibited, and not presenting them to the Ordinary. The handling of this man was too too cruel, if the report be true, that he should be hanged up by those parts which nature well suffereth not to be named.

John Rammad a Dutchman, 1528.

For causing fifteen hundred of Tindals new Testaments to be printed at Antwerpe, and for bringing five hundred into England.

Paul Luther, Gray-Friar, and Warden of the House at Wate, 1529.

His Articles, For preaching and saying, That it is pity that there be so many Images suffered in so many places, whereas undidrect and unlearned people be; for they make their Prayers and Oblations so entirely and heartily before the Image, that they believe it to be the very self Saint in Heaven.

Item, That if he knew his Father and Mother were in Heaven, he would count them as good as St. Peter and Paul, but for the pain they suffered for Christs sake.

Item, That there is no need to go on Pilgrimage. Item, That if a man were at the point of drowning, or any other danger, he should call only upon God, and no Saint; for Saints in Heaven cannot help us, neither know any more what men do here in this World, than a man in the North Country knoweth what is done in the South Country.

Roger Whaplod, Merchant-Taylor, 1529.

Roger Whaplod, sent by one Tho. Norfolk unto Doctor Goderidge this Bill following to be read at his Sermon in the Spittel.

If there be any well disposed person willing to do any cost upon the reparation of the Conduit in Fleetstreet, let him or them resort unto the Administrators of the Goods and Cattel of one Richard Hunne late Merchant-Taylor of London, which died intestate, or else to me, and they shall have toward the same six pound thirteen shillings four pence, and a better penny, of the Goods of the said Richard Hunne; upon whose Soul, and all Christian Souls, Jesus have mercy.

For the which Bill, both Whaplod and Norfolk were brought and troubled before the Bishop; and also Doctor Goderidge, which took a great for reading the said Bill, was suspended for a time from saying Mass, and also was forced to revoke the same at Pauls Crofs; reading this Bill as followeth.

Thomas Philip, 1530.

Thomas Philip was delivered by Sir Thomas More, to Bishop Stokesly by Indenture. Besides other Articles of Purgatory, Images, the Sacrament of the Altar, Holy-days, keeping of Books, and such like, it was objected unto him, that he, being searched in the Tower, had found about him Tracies Testament, and in his Chamber in the Tower was found Cheese and Butter in Lent-time. Also, that he had a Letter delivered unto him going unto the Tower. Which Letter, with the Testament also of Tracy, because they are both worthy to be seen, we mind (God willing) to annex also unto the story of this Thomas Philip. As he was oftentimes examined before Master More and the Bishop, he always stood to his denial, neither could there any thing be proved clearly against him, but only Tracies Testament, and his Butter in Lent. One Tracy first bare witness against him, but after in the Court openly he protested that he did it for fear. The Bishop then willing him to furnish himself, and to swear never to hold any opinion contrary to the determination of holy Church; he said, He would: and when the form of his Abjuration was given him to read, he read it: but the Bishop, not content with that, would have him to read it openly. But that he would not: and said, He would Appeal to the King as Supreme Head of the Church, and so did. Still the Bishop called upon him to abjure. He answered, That he would be obedient as a Christian man should, and that he would swear never to hold any Heresie during his life, nor favour any Hereticks.

But the Bishop not yet content, would have him to read the Abjuration after the form of the Church conceived, as it was given him. He answered again, That he would forswear all Heresies; and that he would maintain no Heresies, nor favour any Hereticks. The Bishop with this would not be answered, but needs would drive him to the Abjuration formed after the Popes Church. To whom he said, If it were the same Abjuration that he read, he would not read it, but stand to his Appeal made to the King, the Supreme Head of the Church under God. Again the Bishop asked him, If he would abjure or not. Except, said he, you will show me the cause why I should abjure, I will not say yea nor nay to it, but will stand to my Appeal, and required the Bishop to obey the same. Then the Bishop reading openly the Bill of Excommunication against him, denounced him for Contumacious, and an excommunicate person, charging all men to have no company, or any thing to do with him. After this Excommunication, what became of him, whether he was holpen by his Appeal, or whether he was burned, or whether he died in the Tower, or whether he abjured, I find no mention made in the Registers.

A Letter directed to Thomas Philip in the name of the Brethren, and given him by the way going to the Tower.

A Letter first by the Congregation to Thomas Philip.

The favour of him that is able to keep you that you fall not, and to confess your name in the Kingdom of Glory, and to give you strength by his Spirit to confess him before all his Adversaries, be with you ever. Amen. Sir, the Brethren think that there be divers false Brethren craftily crept in among them, to seek out their freedom in the Lords, that they may accuse them to the Lords Adversaries, as they suppose they have done you. Wherefore if so it be, that the Spirit of God move you thereunto, they as Counsellors desire you above all things to be steadfast in the Lords verity without fear: for he shall and will be your help, according to his Promise, so that they shall not mislead the least hair of your head without his will: unto the which will submit yourself and rejoice: For the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and how to reserve the unjust unto the day of Judgment to be punished: and therefore cast all your care on him, for he careth for you. And in that you suffer as a Christian man, be not ashamed, but rather glorify God on that behalf. Looking upon Christ the Author and Finisher of our Faith, which for the joy that was set before him abode the Cross and despised the shame. Notwithstanding though we suffer the wrong, after the example of our Master Christ, yet we be not bound to suffer the wrong cause, for Christ himself suffered it not, but proved him that smote him wrongfully. And so likewise saith Saint Paul also. So that we must not suffer the wrong, but boldly reprove them that sit as righteous Judges, and do contrary to righteousness. Therefore according both to Gods Law and man, ye be not bound to make answer in any cause, till your Accusers come before you. Which if you require, and thereon do stick, the false Brethren shall be known, to the great comfort of those that now stand in doubt whom they may trust: and also it shall be a means that they shall not craftily by questions take you in snare. And that you may thus do lawfully, in the twentieth Acts 20. Chapter of the Acts it is written, It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man that he should perish, before that he which is accused have his Accusers before him, and have licence to answer for himself, as pertaining to the Crime whereof he is accused. And also Christ will that in the mouth of two or three Witnesses all things shall stand. And in the fifth Chapter to Timothy the first Epistle it is written, Against a Senior receive none Accusation, 3 Tim. 5. but under two or three Witnesses. A Senior in this place is any man that hath an Honour to govern. And also their own Law is agreeable to this. Wherefore seeing it is agreeable to the Word of God, that in Accusations such Witnesses should be, you may with good conscience require it. And thus the God of Grace, which hath called you unto his eternal Glory by Christ Jesus, shall his own self after a little affliction make you perfect, shall settle, strengthen and establish you, that to him may be Glory and Praise for ever. Amen.

Thus ye have heard the Letter delivered to Thomas Philip. Now followeth the Testament of William Tracy.

Tracy his Testament.

A Little before this time, William Tracy, a worshipful Esquire in Gloucestershire, then dwelling at Todington, made in his Will, that he would have no funeral Pomp at his burying, neither passed he upon Mass; and he farther said, That he trusted in God only, and hoped by him to be saved, and not by any Saint. This Gentleman died, and his Son as Executor brought the Will to the Bishop of Canterbury to prove: which he shewed to the Convocation, and there most cruelly they judged that he should be taken out of the ground, and be burnt as an Heretic, Anno 1532. This Commission was sent to Doctor Parker, Chancellor of the Diocels of Worcester, to execute their wicked Sentence; which accomplished the same. The King hearing his Subject to be taken out of the ground and burnt, without his knowledge or order of his Law, sent for the Chancellor, and laid high Offence to his Charge, who excused himself by the Archbishop of Canterbury which was late dead; but in conclusion it cost him 300 pound to have his Pardon. The Will and Testament of this Gentleman, thus condemned by the Clergy, was as hereunder followeth:

In the Name of God, Amen. I William Tracy of Todington in the County of Gloucester, Esquire, make my Testament and last Will as hereafter followeth: First and before all other things, I commit my self to God and to his Mercy, believing without any doubt or mistrust, that by his Grace and the Merits of Jesus Christ, and by the Vertue of his Passion and of his Resurrection, I have and shall have remission of all my sins, and redemption of Body and Soul, according as it is written, I believe that my Redeemer liveth, and that in the last day I shall rise out of the Earth, and in my flesh shall see my Saviour: this my hope is laid up in my bosom.

And touching the wealth of my Soul, the Faith that I have taken and rehearsed is sufficient (as I suppose) without any other means Works or Merits. My ground

KING 16. and belief is, That there is but one God and one Mediator between God and man, which is Jesus Christ; so that I accept none in Heaven nor in Earth to be Mediator between me and God, but only Jesus Christ: all other to be but as Petitioners in receiving of Grace: but none able to give influence of Grace; and therefore will I bestow no part of my goods for that intent that any man should say or do to help my Soul; for therein I trust only to the Promises of Christ; He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned.

As touching the burying of my body, it availeth me not whatsoever be done thereto; For Saint Augustine saith, De cura agenda pro mortuis, that the funeral pomps are rather the solace of them that live, than the wealth and comfort of them that are dead, and therefore I remit it only to the discretion of mine Executors.

And touching the distribution of my Temporal Goods, my purpose is by the Grace of God to bestow them to be accepted as the fruits of Faith; so that I do not suppose that my merit shall be by the good bestowing of them, but my merit is the Faith of Jesus Christ only, by whom such works are good, according to the words of our Lord, I was hungry, and thou gavest me to eat, &c. And it followeth, That ye have done to the least of my Brethren, ye have done it to me, &c. And ever we should consider that true saying, That a good work maketh not a good man, but a good man maketh a good work; for Faith maketh a man both good and righteous: For a righteous man liveth by Faith, and whatsoever springeth not of Faith is sin, &c.

And all my Temporal Goods that I have not given or delivered, or not given by writing of mine own hand, bearing the date of this present writing, I do leave and give to Margaret my Wife, and Richard my Son, whom I make mine Executors. Witnesses hereof mine own hand the tenth of October, in the 22th year of the Reign of King Henry the Eighth.

Tho. Patmore, Draper, 1531.

This Patmore was Brother to Master Patmore, Parson of Hadham, who was prisoned in the Bollards Tower for marrying a Priest, and in the same prison continued three years.

This Patmore was accused by divers Witneses, upon these Articles:

That he had as leve pray to yonder Hunter, pointing to a man painted there in a stained-cloth, for a piece of flesh, as to pray to Stocks that stand in Walls, meaning Images.

Item, That men should not pray to Saints, but to God only; For why should we pray to Saints (said he) they are but blocks and stocks.

Item, That the truth of Scripture hath been kept from us a long time, and hath not appeared till now.

Item, Coming by a Tree wherein stood an Image, he took away the Wax which hanged there offered.

Item, That he regarded not the place whether it was hallowed or no, where he should be buried after he was dead.

Also in talk with the Curate of St. Peters, he defended that Priests might marry.

This Patmore had long held with the Bishop of London. First, he would not swear, infamia non procedente. Then he would Appeal to the King; but all would not serve. He was so wrapt in the Bishops Nets, that he could not get out; but at last he was forced to abjure, and was fined to the King an hundred pounds.

Note in the Communication between this Patmore and the Priest of Saint Peters, That whereas the Priest objected against him (as is in the Register) that Priests have lived unmarried, and without Wives these 1500 years in the Church: he and all other such Priests therein say falsely, and deceive the people, as by story is proved in this Volume, that Priests here in England had Wives by the Law within these five hundred years and less.

For the which Marriage both the said Simon and Benor his Wife were called to Examination before the Bishop, and he caused to make the whole Discourse of all his doings, how and where he married. Then after his marriage, how long he tarried, whether he went beyond Sea, where he was, and with whom. After his return, whether he resorted, how he lived, what Mercery-Ware he occupied, what Fairs he frequented, where he left his Wife, how he carried her over, and brought her home again, and how he was found, &c. All this they made him confess, and put it in their Register. And though they could fatten no other Crime of Heresie upon him, but only his marriage; yet calling both him and her, being great with child, to Examination, they caused them both to abjure and suffer Penance.

Thomas Patmore, Parson of Hadham, 1530.

This Thomas Patmore, being learned and godly, was preferred to the Parsonage of Hadham in Hertfordshire, by Richard Fitz-James Bishop of London, and there continued instructing and teaching his flock, during the time of the said Fitz-James, and also of Toussal his successor, by the space of sixteen years or more, behaving himself in life and conversation, without any publick blame or reproach, until that John Stokesley was preferred unto the said Bishoprick: Who not very long after his installing, either for malice, not greatly liking of the said Patmore, or else desirous to prefer some other unto the Benefice (as it is supposed and alleged by his brethren in sundry supplications exhibited unto the King, as also unto Ann, then Marchioness of Pembroke) caused him to be attached and brought before him, and then keeping him Prisoner in his own Palace, a certain time afterward committed him to Lollards Tower, where he kept him most extremely above two years without fire or Candle, or any other relief, but such as his friends sent him, not suffering any of them notwithstanding to come unto him, no not in his sickness. Howbeit, sundry times in the mean while he called him judicially, either before himself or else his Vicar General Foxford, that great Persecuter, charging him with these sundry Articles, viz. as first, whether he had been at Wittenberg; secondly, and had seen or talked with Luther; thirdly, or with any Englishman, abiding there; fourthly, who went with him, or attended upon him thither; fifthly, also what Books he bought there, either Latine or English; sixthly, and whether he had read or studied any works of Luther, Oecolampadius, Pomerane or Melancthon. Besides these, he ministered also other Articles unto him, touching the Marriage of Master Simon Smith (before mentioned) with one Jean Bensor, charging him that he both knew of and also consented unto their Marriage, the one being a Priest and his Curate, and the other his Maid-servant, and that he had persuaded his said Maid-servant to marry with his said Curate, alledging unto her, that though it were not lawful in England for Priests to marry, yet it was in other Countries beyond Seas. And that after their said Marriage, he (knowing the same) did yet suffer the said Smith to minister in his Cure all Easter time, and fifteen days after; and that at their departure out of England, he shipped with them at the Bell in New-Fishstreet, and again, at their return into England, did meet them at the said Bell, and there lent unto the said Smith a Priests Gown.

He objected moreover against him in the said Articles; that he had affirmed at Cambridge, first, that he did not set a Bottle of Hay by the Popes or Bishops Curse; secondly, and that God bindeth us to impossible things, that he may save us only by his mercy; thirdly also, that though young Children be baptised, yet they cannot be saved except they had faith; fourthly and lastly, that it was against Gods law to burn Heretics.

Unto these Articles, after long imprisonment and great threats of the Bishop and his Vicar, he at the last answered, making first his Appeal unto the King. Wherein he shewed, that forasmuch as the Bishop had most unjustly and contrary to all due order of Law, and the equity thereof, proceeded against him, as well in falsely defaming him with the crime of Heresie, without having any just proof or publick defamation thereof, as also contrary to all justice, keeping him in most strait Prison to long time (both to the great danger of his life by grievous sickness taken thereby, as especially to his no small grief, that through his absence, his flock, whereof he had charge, were not fed with the Word of God and his Sacraments as he would) and then to minister unto him such Articles, mingled with Interrogatories, as neither touched any Heresie nor transgression of any Law, but rather threw-ing a mind to pick quarrels against him and other innocent people; he therefore, for the causes alledged, was compelled and did appeal from him and all his Officers unto the Kings Majesty, whom under God he had for his most just and lawful refuge, and defender against all injuries. From which Appeal although he minded not at any time to depart, yet because he would not shew himself obstinate against the Bishop being his Ordinary (although he had most just cause to suspect his unjust proceedings against him) he was nevertheless content to exhibit unto him this his answer. First, that howsoever the Bishop was privately informed, yet because he was not Publice diffamatus apud bonos & graves, according to law, he was not by the law bound to answer to any of those Articles.

And as touching the first six Articles (as whether he was at Wittenberg, and spake with Luther or any other, or bought or read any of their Books, &c.) because none of those things were forbidden him by any law, neither was he publickly accused of them (for that it was permitted to many good men to have them) he was not bound to answer, neither was he to be examined of them. But as touching the Marriage of Master Simon Smith with Jean Bensor, he granted that he knew thereof by the declaration of Master Smith; but that he gave his Maid-cousin thereunto be utterly denied. And as concerning the contracting of the Marriage between them, he thought it not at all against Gods Law, who at the first Creation made Marriage lawful for all men: Neither thought he it unlawful for him, after their Marriage, either to keep him as his Curate, or else to lend or give him any thing needful (wherein he said he had shewed more charity than the Bishop, who had taken all gifts from them) and therefore he desired to have it proved by the Scriptures, that Priests Marriages were not lawful. Against whom, Foxford the Bishops Vicar often alledged General Councils, and Determinations of the Church, but no Scriptures, still urging him to abjure his Articles; which Patmore long time refused, and sticking a great while to his former answers, at last was threatened by Foxford, to have definitive sentence read against him. Whereupon he answered, That he believed the holy Church as a Christian man ought to do, and because it passed his capacity, he desired to be instructed, and if the Scriptures did teach it, he would believe it; for he knew not the contrary by the Scriptures, but that a Priest might marry a Wife, howbeit by the laws of the Church he thought that a Priest might not marry. But the Chancellor still urged him to shew whether a Priest might marry without offence to God, that at length he granted that Priests might not marry without offence to God, because the Church had forbidden it, and therefore a Priest could not marry without deadly sin. Now as touching the four last Articles, he denied that he spake them as they were put against him; but he granted that he might, perhaps; jestingly say, That a bottle of Hay were more profitable to him than the Popes curse, which he thought true. Also to the second he affirmed, That God had set before us by his Precepts and Commandments the way to justice; which way was not in mans power to go and keep; therefore Paul saith, ad Galatas 3. Quod lex erat ordinata per Angelos; but yet to fulfil it, it was in manu (id est, in potestate) intercessoris: That none that shall be saved shall account their salvation unto their own deeds, or thank their own justice in observing the Law; for it was in no mans power to observe it; but shall give all thanks to the mercies and goodnes of God; according to the Psalm, Laudate Dominum omnes gentes, and according to the saying of Paul, Ut qui glorietur, in Domino glorietur; Which hath sent his Son to do for us that which was not in our own power to do. For if it had been in our power to fulfil the Law, Christ had been sent to us without cause, to do for us that thing which we our selves could could have done, that is to say, fulfil the Law. As for the third he spake not, for he did never know that any may be baptised without Faith; which Faith, inasmuch as it is the gift of God, why may it not be given parvulis? To the last he said, That if he spake it, he meant it not of those that Saint Bernard called Hereticks, with more Adulterers, Thieves, Murders and other open sinners, which blaspheme God by their mouths, calling good evil, and evil good, making light darkness, and darkness light. But he meant it of such as men call Hereticks according to the testimony of St. Paul, Act. 24. I live after the way (saith he) that men call Heresie, whom Christ doth foretell that ye shall burn and persecute to death.

After these answers thus made, the Bishop with his persecuting Foxford, dealt so hardly with this good man, partly by strait imprisonment, and partly by threats to proceed against him, that in the end he was slain through humane infirmity to submit himself, and was abjured and condemned to perpetual prison; with loss, both of his Benefice, as also of all his goods. Howbeit one of his Brethren afterwards made such suit unto the King (by means of the Queen) that after three years imprisonment, he was both released out of Prison, and also obtained of the King a Commission to the Lord Awdeley, then being L. Chancellor, and to Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, and to Cromwel, then Secretary, with others, to inquire of the injurious and unjust dealings of the Bishop and his Chancellor against the said Patmore, notwithstanding his appeal unto the King, and to determine thereof according to true equity and justice, and to restore the said Patmore again unto his said Benefice. But what was the end and issue of this Commission, we find not as yet.

Her Heresies were these, being asked if she would go on Pilgrimage, she said, I believe in God, and be can do me more good than our Lady, or any other Saint; and as for them, they shall come to me, if they will, &c. Then Richard Sharple, Patron of Millend by Colchester, asked her, if she said her Ave Maria. I say, said she, Hail Mary, but I will say no further. Then said he, if she left not those opinions, she would bear a Fagot. If I do, said she, better than I shall: adding moreover, that she would not go from that to die therefore; to whom the Priest answered said, she would be burned. Hereunto Margaret again replying, asked the Priest, Who made Martyrs? Tyrants (quoth she) they shall, or may we, quoth Margaret. At length with much ado, and great persuasions, she gave over to Foxford the Chancellor, and submitted her self.

His Articles were these, That the Sacrament of the Altar was not the body of Christ, but only a Cake of Bread. Furthermore, the occasion being asked, how he fell into that Heresie, he answered said, that about three Weeks before Midsummer last, he heard Mr. Hugh Latimer preach at Saint Mary Abchurch, that men should leave going on Pilgrimage abroad, and do their Pilgrimage to their poor neighbours. Also the said Mr. Latimer in his Sermon did set the Sacrament of the Altar at nillie.

lar Priest. Whereupon he was espied, and brought to Cuthbert, Bishop of London, Anno 1528, before whom this Confession he made as followeth.

The Recantation of Thomas Topley.

ALL Christian men beware of consenting to Erasmus Fables, for by consenting to them they have caused me to shrink in my Faith, that I promised to God at my Christening by my Wines. First, as touching these Fables, I read in Colloquium, by the instruction of Sir Richard Fox, of certain Pilgrims, which (as the Book doth say) made a Vow to go to Saint James, and as they went, one of them died, and he desired his fellows to salute Saint James in his name; and another died homeward, and he desired that they would salute his Wife and Children; and the third died at Florence, and his fellow said, he supposed he was in Heaven, and yet he said that he was a great Iyer. Thus I mused of these Opinions so greatly, that my mind was almost withdrawn from Devotion to Saints. Notwithstanding, I consented that the divine Service of them was very good, and is, though I have not had such sweetness in it as I should have had, because of such Fables; and also because of other foolish Pastimes; as dauncing, Tennis, and such other, which I think have been great occasions that the goodness of God hath been void in me, and vice in strength.

Moreover, it fortuned thus, about half a year ago, that the said Sir Richard went forth, and desired me to serve his Cure for him; and as I was in his Chamber, I found a certain Book called Wickliff's Wicket, whereby I felt in my Conscience a great wavering for the time that I did read upon it, and afterward also when I remembered it, it wounded my Conscience very fore. Nevertheless I consented not to it, until I had heard him preach, and that was upon Saint Anthonies day. Yet my mind was still much troubled with the said Book (which did make the Sacrament of Christs body, in form of bread, but a remembrance of Christs Passion) till I heard Sir Myles Coverdale preach, and then my mind was fore withdrawn from that blessed Sacrament, inasmuch that I took it then but for the remembrance of Christ his body. Thus I have wretchedly wrapped my soul with sin, because I have not been steadfast in that holy Order that God hath called me unto by Baptism, neither in the holy Order that God and St. Augustine hath called me to by my Religion, &c.

Furthermore, he said and confessed, That in the Lent last past, as he was walking in the field at Bumstead, with Sir Myles Coverdale, late Frier of the same Order, going in the Habit of a secular Priest, which had preached the fourth Sunday in Lent at Bumstead, they did commune together of Erasmus Works, and also upon Confession. The which Sir Myles said and did hold, that it was sufficient for a man to be contrite for his sins betwixt God and his Conscience, without Confession made to a Priest; which Opinion this Respondent thought to be true, and did affirm and hold the same at that time. Also he said, that at the said Sermon made by the said Sir Myles Coverdale at Bumstead, he heard him preach against worshipping of Images in the Church, saying and preaching, That men in no wise should honour or worship them; which likewise he thought to be true, because he had no learning to defend it.

With this Topley I may also join William Gardiner, one of the same Order and House of Clare, who likewise by the motion of the said Richard Fox, Curate of Bumstead, and by shewing him certain Richard Johnson of Bockfeed, and Alice his Wife.

This Richard and his Wife were favourers of Gods Word, and had been troubled for the same of long time. They came from Salisbury to Bockfeed, by reason of Persecution, where they continued a good space. At length by resort of good men, they began to be suspected; and specially for a Book of Wickliff's Wicker which was in their house, they were converted before Stokeley Bishop of London, and there abjured.

¶ So great was the trouble of those times, that it would overcharge any story to recite the names of all them which during those bitter days, before the coming of Queen Ann, either were driven out of the Realm, or were cast out from their Goods and Houses, or brought to open shame by Abjuration. Such Decrees and Injunctions then were set forth by the Bishops, such Laws and Proclamations were provided, such watch and narrow search was used, such ways were taken by force of the Oath, to make one dead; another so feebly, that uneth any good man could, or did escape their hands, but either his name was known, or else his person was taken. Yet nevertheless to mightily the power of Gods Gospel did work in the hearts of good men, that the number of them did nothing lessen for all this violence or policy of the adversaries, but rather increased in such sort, as our story almost suffereth not to recite the particular names of all and singular such as then groined under the same cross of affliction and persecution of those days; of which number were these.

¶ Touching this Richard Chapman, this by the way is to be noted, that as he was in his Coat and Shirt enjoined, bare-head, bare-foot, and bare-legged, to go before the Procdion, and to kneel upon the cold steps in the Church all the Sermon time a little Lad seeing him kneel upon the cold stone with his bare knees, and having pity on him, came to him, and having nothing else to give him, brought him his Cap to kneel upon. Also another time, upon St. Peter's Even, as Katharine Wily did ly in Child-bed, the other Wives, with the two Girls, were found eating all together of a Broth made with the fore-part of a rack of Mutton.

Item, The foresaid John Wily the elder, had a Primer in English in his house, and other Books.

Also he had a young Daughter of ten years old, which could render by heart the most part of the 24th Chapter of Saint Matthew. Also could rehearse without Book, The disputation between the Clerk and the Friar.

Item, The said John Wily had in his house a Treatise of William Thorpe, and Sir John Oldcastle.

A Note of Richard Bayfield above mentioned.

MENTION was made before of Richard Bayfield Monk of Bury, who in these perilous days, amongst other good Saints of God, suffered death, as ye have heard, but how, and by whom he was detected, hath not been shewed; which now in searching out of Registers, as we have found, so we thought good here to adjoin the same with the words and confession of the same Edmund Peerson, which detected him in manner as followeth.

The Accusation of Edmund Peerson against Bayfield.

THE thirteenth day of September, at four of the clock at afternoon, the year of our Lord 1537. Sir Richard Bayfield said, That my Lord of London's Commissary was a plain Pharisee, wherefore he would speak with him, and by his wholesome Doctrine, be trusted in God, he should make him a perfect Christian man, and me also, for I was a Pharisee as yet, he said.

Also he said, That he cared not if the Commissary and the Chancellor heard him both; for the Chancellor, he said, was also a Pharisee, and he trusted to make him a Christian man.

Also he said, He was intreated by his friends, and in manner constrained to abide in the City against his will, to make the Chancellor, and many more, perfect Christian men, for as yet many were Pharisees, and knew not the perfect declaration of the Scripture.

Also he said, That Master Arthur and Bilney were, and he more pure and more perfect in their loving to God, than was, or is, the Commissary, the Chancellor, my Lord of London, or my Lord Cardinal.

Also he said, That if Arthur and Bilney suffer death in the quarrels and opinions that they be in, or hold, they shall be Martyrs before God in Heaven.

Also he said, After Arthur and Bilney were put cruelly to death, yet should there be hundreds of men that should preach the same that they have preached.

Also he said, That he would favour Arthur and Bilney, he knew their living to be so good, for they did wear no Shirts of linnen cloth, but Shirts of hair, and ever were fasting, praying, or doing some other good deeds. And as for one of them, whatsoever he have of money in his Purse, he will distribute it, for the love of God, to poor people.

Also he said, That no man should give laud or praise in any manner of wife, to any creature, or to any Saint in Heaven, but only to God. Soli Deo honor & gloria, that is To God alone be all honour and glory.

Also he said, Ah, good Sir Edmund, ye be far from the knowledge and understanding of the Scripture, for as yet ye be a Pharisee, with many other of your company; but I trust in God, I shall make you, and many other more, good and perfect Christian men, ere I depart from the City, for I purpose to read a common Lecture every day at St. Fosters Church, which Lecture shall be to the edifying of your souls: that be false Pharisees.

Also he said, That Bilney preached nothing at Wileford, but what was true.

Also he said, That Bilney preached true at Wileford, if he said that our Lady's Crown of Wileford, her Rings and Beads that were offered to her, were bestowed amongst Harlots, by the Ministers of Christ's Church; for that I have seen my self, he said, here in London, and that I will abide by.

Also he said, He did not fear to commune and argue in Arthur's and Bilney's Opinions and Articles, and if it were with my Lord Cardinal.

Also he said, That he would hold Arthur's and Bilney's Opinions and Articles, and abide by them, that they were true Opinions, to suffer death therefore; I know them (said he) for so noble and excellent men in learning.

Also he said, If he were before my Lord Cardinal, he would not let to speak to him, and tell him, that he hath done naught in imprisoning Arthur and Bilney, which were better disposed in their livings to God, than my Lord Cardinal, or my Lord of London, as holy as they make themselves.

Also he said, My Lord Cardinal is no perfect nor good man to God, for he keepeth not the commandments of God, for Christ (he said) never taught him to follow riches, nor to seek for promotions nor dignities of this world, nor did Christ ever teach him to wear shoes of silver and gilt, set with pearl and precious stones; nor had Christ ever two Crosses of silver, two Axes, nor pillar of silver and gilt.

Also he said, That every Priest might preach the Gospel without licence of the Pope, my Lord Cardinal, my Lord of London, or any other man; and that he would abide by, and thus be verified it, as it is written, Mark 16. Euntes in mundum universum, predicate Evangelium omni creature. Christ commanded every Priest to go forth throughout all the world, and preach the Word of God by the authority of this Gospel; and not to run to the Pope, nor to any other man for licence: And that he would abide by, he said.

Also he said, Well, Sir Edmund, say you what you will, and every man, and my Lord Cardinal also, and yet will I say, and abide by it, my Lord Cardinal doth punish Arthur and Bilney unjustly, for there be no truer Christian men in all the world living than they two be, and that punishment that my Lord Cardinal doth to them, he doth it by might and power, as who would say, This may I do, and this will I do, who shall say nay? but he doth it of no justice.

Also about the fourteenth day of October last past, at three of the clock at afternoon, Sir Richard Bayfield came to St. Edmunds in Lombard Street, where he found me Sir Edmund Peerson, Sir James Smith, and Sir Miles Garner, standing at the uttermost Gate of the Parsonage, and Sir Edmund said to Sir Richard Bayfield, How many Christian men have ye made since ye came to the City? Quoth Sir Richard Bayfield, I came even now to make thee a Christian man, and these two other Gentlemen with thee; for well I know ye be all three Pharisees as yet.

Also he said to Sir Edmund, That Arthur and Bilney were better Christian men than he was, or any of them that did punish Arthur and Bilney.

Per me Edmundum Peerson.

AND thus we have, as in a gross summi compiled together the names and causes, though not of all, yet of a great, and too great a number of good men and good women, which in those sorrowful days (from the year of our Lord 1527, to this present year 1533, that is, till the coming in of Queen Anne) were manifold ways vexed and persecuted under the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome.

Rome. Where again we have to note, That from this present year of our Lord 1533, during the time of the said Queen Ann, we read of no great persecution, nor any Abjuration to have been in the Church of England, save only that the Registers of London make mention of certain Dutchmen counted for Anabaptists, of whom ten were put to death in sundry places of the Realm, Anno 1535, other ten repented and were saved. Where note again, that two also of the said company, albeit the definitive sentence was read, yet notwithstanding were pardoned by the King; which was contrary to the Popes law.

mons against the Clergy.
In Rd. Head.
A Parlia-
Anno 1534

Cruelty of the Clergy

Now to proceed forth in our matter; After that the Bishops and Heads of the Clergy had thus a long time taken their pleasure, exercising their cruel authority against the poor wretched flock of the Lord, and began furthermore to stretch forth their rigour and austerity, to attach and molest also other great persons of the Temporality; so it fell, that in the beginning of the next or second year following, which was Anno 1534, a Parliament was called by the King about the fifteenth day of January. In the which Parliament the Commons renewing their old griefs, complained of the cruelty of the Prelates and Ordinaries, for calling men before them Ex Officio. For such was then the usage of the Ordinaries and their Officials, that they would lend for men, and lay accusations to them of Heresie, only declaring to them that they were accused; and would minister Articles to them, but no accuser should be brought forth. Whereby the Commons were grievously annoyed and oppressed; for the party so accused must either abjure or do worse; for purgation he might none make.

As these matters were long debating in the Common-House, at last it was agreed, That the temporal men should put their griefs in writing, and deliver them to the King. Whereupon the eighteenth day of March, the Common Speaker, accompanied with certain Knights and Burgesses of the Common-House, came to the Kings presence, and there declared how the temporal men of his Realm were sore agrieved with the cruel demeanor of the Prelates and Ordinaries, which touched their bodies and goods so near, that they of necessity were enforced to make their humble suit by their Speaker, unto his Grace, to take such order and redress in the case as to his high wisdom might seem most convenient, &c.

Unto this request of the Commons, although the King at that time gave no present grant, but suspended them with a delay; yet notwithstanding, this sufficiently declared the grudging minds of the Temporal men against the Spirituality, lacking nothing but Gods helping hand to work in the Kings heart for Reformation of such things which all they did see to be out of frame. Neither did the Lords Divine Providence fail in time of need, but effusions ministered a ready remedy in time expedient. He saw the pride and cruelty of the spiritual Clergy grown to such an height as was intolerable. He saw again and heard the grudging hearts, the bitter afflictions of his oppressed flock, his truth decayed, his Religion prophaned, the glory of his Son defaced, his Church lamentably wasted. Wherefore it was high time for his high Majesty to look upon the matter (as he did indeed) by a strange and wondrous means, which was through the Kings Divorcement from Lady Katharine Dowager, and marrying with Lady Ann Bullen, in this present year: Which was the first occasion and beginning of all this publick Reformation, which hath followed since in this Church of England to this present day, according as ye shall hear.

Queen Ann

divorced.

The Marriage between King Henry and Queen Ann Bullen; and Queen Katharine Divorced.

K. Henry married his Brothers Wife.

IN the first entry of the Kings Reign, ye heard before, how after the death of Prince Arthur, the Lady Katharine, Princess Dowager, and Wife to Prince Arthur, by the consent both of her Father and his, and also by the advice of the Nobles of this Realm, to the end her Dowry might remain still within the Realm, was espoused after the decease of her Husband, to his next Brother, which was this King Henry.

This Marriage seemed very strange and hard, for one Brother to marry the Wife of another. But what can be in this earth so hard or difficult, wherewith the Pope, the omnipotent Vicar of Christ, cannot by favour dispence, if it please him? The Pope which then ruled at Rome, was Pope Julius the second, by whose dispensation this Marriage, which neither sense of nature would admit, nor Gods Law would bear, was concluded, approved and ratified, and so continued as lawful, without any doubt or scruple, the space near of twenty years, till about the time that a certain doubt began first to be moved by the Spaniards themselves of the Emperors Council, Anno 1523. At what time Charles the Emperor being here in the Spaniards, promised to marry the Lady Mary, Daughter to the King of England. With the which promise, the Spaniards themselves were not well contented, objecting this among many other causes, that the said Lady Mary was begotten of the King of England by his Brothers Wife.

ards first doubted of the Kings
Marriage

Whereupon the Emperor, forsaking that Marriage, did couple himself with Lady Isabel, Daughter to King Emanuel of Portugal. Which Marriage was done in the year of our Lord 1526. After this Marriage of the Emperor, the next year following, King Henry, being disappointed thus of the Emperor, entered talk, or rather was laboured to by the French Embassadors, for the said Lady Mary to be married to the French Kings Son, Duke of Orleans. Upon the talk whereof, after long debating, at length the matter was put off by a certain doubt of the President of Paris, casting the like objection as the Spaniards had done before, that was, whether the Marriage between the King and the Mother of this Lady Mary, which had been his Brothers Wife before, were good or no. And so the Marriage, twice unluckily attempted, in like sort brake off again, and was rejected; which happened in the year of our Lord 1527.

doubt, whether the Lady Mary was nighly born,

The King upon the occasion hereof casting many things in his mind, began to consider the cause more deeply, first, with himself, after, with certain of his nearest Council; wherein two things there were which chiefly pricked his mind, whereof the one touched his Conscience, the other concerned the state of his Realm. For if that Marriage with his Brothers Wife stood unlawful by the law of God, then neither was his Conscience clear in retaining the Mother, nor yet the state of the Realm firm by succession of the Daughter. It happened the same time that the Cardinal, which was then nearest about the King, had fallen out with the Emperor, for not helping him to the Papacy, as ye before heard; for the which cause he helped to let the matter forward by all practice he might. Thus the King perplexed in his Conscience, and careful for the Commonwealth, and partly also incited by the Cardinal, could not so rest, but enquired further to feel what the Word of God and learning would say unto it. Neither was the cause hated, after it began once to come in publick question, but that by the Word of God, and the judgments of the best learned Clerks, and also by the censure of the chief Universities of all Christendom, to the number of ten and more, it was soon discussed to be unlawful.

Divorce.

All these Censures, Books and Writings of so many Doctors, Clerks and Universities, sent from all Quarters of Christendom to the Kings, albeit they might suffice to have full resolved, and did indeed resolve the Kings Conscience touching this scruple of his Marriage; yet would he not straightway use that advantage which learning did give him, unless he had withal the assent as well of the Pope, as also the Emperor; wherein he perceived no little difficulty. For the Pope, he thought, seeing the Marriage was authorized before by the Dispensation of his Predecessor, would hardly turn his Keys about to undo that which the Pope before him had locked; and much less would he suffer those Keys to be soyled, or to come in any doubt, which was like to come, if that Marriage were proved undispensable by Gods Word, which his predecessor through his plenary power had licensed before. Again, the Emperor he thought would be no less hard for his part, on the other side, forasmuch as the said Lady Katharine was the Emperors near Aunt, and a Spaniard born. Yet nevertheless, his purpose was to prove and feel what they both would say unto it, and therefore

THE KING therefore sent Stephen Gardiner to Rome to weigh with Pope Clement. To the Emperor was sent Sir Nicholas Harvey Knight, Embassador in the Court of Gaunt. Furi, Pope Clement, not weighing belike the full importance and frquol of the matter, sent Cardinal Campeius (as is said) into England, joyned with the Cardinal of York.

Campeius the Popes Legat.

The Kings perswasion to the Legats.

At the coming of which Legates, the King, first opening unto them the grief of his Conscience, seemed with great reasons and perswasions sufficiently to have drawn the good will of those two Legates to his side. Who also of their own accord pretended no less but to shew a willing inclination to further the Kings cause. But yet the mouths of the common people, and in especial of women, and such other as favoured the Queen, and talked their pleasures, were not stopp'd. Wherefore to satisfie the blind fumes, and foolish communication of these alio, who, seeing the coming of the Cardinals, call out such lewd words, That the King would for his complaisance have another Wife, with like unbecoming talk; he therefore, willing that all men should know the truth of his proceedings, caused all his Nobility, Judges and Councillors, with divers other persons, to resort to his Palace of Bridewel, the 8th day of November, Anno 1529, where he openly speaking in his great Chamber, had these words in effect, as followeth.

The Kings Oration to his Subjects.

OUR trusty and welbelov'd Subjects, both you of the Nobility, and you of the meaner sort, it is not unknown unto you, how that We both by Gods provision, and true and lawful inheritance, have reigned over this Realm of England almost the term of twenty years. During which time, We have so ordered Us (blessed be God) that no outward enemy hath oppressed you, nor taken any thing from us, nor have We invaded any Realm, but We have had victory and honour so that We think that you nor none of your predecessors ever lived more quietly, more wealthily, nor in more estimation under any of Our noble Progenitors. But when We remember Our mortality, and that We must die, then We think that all Our doings in Our life time are clearly defaced, and worthy of no memory, if We leave you in trouble at the time of Our death; for if Our true Heir be not known at the time of Our death, see what mischief and trouble shall succeed to you and to your Children. The experience thereof some of you have seen after the death of Our noble Grandfather, King Edward the fourth, and some have heard what mischief and manslaughter continued in this Realm between the houses of York and Lancaster, by the which dissention this Realm was like to have been clearly destroyed.

And although it hath pleased Almighty God to send Us a fair Daughter of a noble Woman, and of Me begotten, to Our great comfort and joy, yet it hath been told Us by divers great Clerks, that neither she is Our lawful Daughter, nor her Mother Our lawful Wife, but that we live together abominably and detestably in open adultery; inasmuch that when our Embassador was last in France and motion was made that the Duke of Orleans should marry Our said Daughter, one of the chief Counsellors to the French King, said, It were well done, to know whether she be the King of England's lawful Daughter or not; for well known it is, that he begot her on his Brothers Wife, which is directly against Gods Law and his Precepts. Think you, my Lords, that these words touch not My Body and Soul? Think you that these things do not daily and hourly trouble my Conscience, and vex my Spirits? Yes, We doubt not but if it were your cause, every man would seek remedy, when the peril of your soul, and the loss of your inheritance is openly laid unto you. For this only cause I protest before God, and in the word of a Prince, I have asked counsel of the greatest Clerks in Christendom, and for this cause I have sent for this Legate, as a man indifferent, only to know the truth, and so to settle my Conscience, and for none other cause, as God can judge. And as touching the Queen, if it be adjudged by the Law of God that she is my lawful Wife, there was never thing more pleasant nor more acceptable to me in My life, both for the discharge and clearing of my Conscience, and also for the good qualities and conditions the which I know to be in her. For I assure you all, that beside her noble Parentage of the which she is descended (as you well know) she is a Woman of most gentleness, of most humility and buxomness, yea, and of all good qualities appertaining to Nobility, she is without comparison, as I these twenty years almost have had the true experiment; so that if I were to marry again, if the Marriage might be good, I would surely chuse her above all other Women. But if it be determined by judgment, that Our Marriage was against Gods Law, and clearly void, then shall I not only sorrow the departing from so good a Lady and loving companion, but much more lament and bewail my unfortunate chance, that I have so long lived in Adultery to Gods great displeasure, and have no true Heir of My body to inherit this Realm. These be the sorres that vex my mind, these be the pangs that trouble my Conscience, and for these griefs I seek remedy. Therefore I require you all, as our trust and confidence is in you, to declare to Our Subjects: Our mind and intent, according to Our true meaning, and desire them to pray with Us that the very truth may be known, for the discharge of Our Conscience, and saving of Our Soul, and for the declaration hereof I have assembled you together, and now you may depart.

Shortly after this Oration of the King, wherewith he stirred the hearts of a number, then the two Legates, being requested of the King, for discharge of his Conscience, to judge and determine upon the cause, went to the Queen lying then in the place of Bridewel, and declared to her, how they were deputed Judges indifferent, between the King and her, to hear and determine, whether the Marriage between them stood with Gods Law or not. When the understood the cause of their coming, being therat something aliened at the first, after a little pausing with her self, thus she began, answering for her self.

Q. Katharine answers to the Cardinals.

Alas, my Lords, said she, is it now a question whether I be the Kings lawful Wife or no, when I have been married to him almost twenty years, and in the mean season never question was made before? Divers Prelates yet being alive, and Lords also, and Privy Counsellors with the King at that time, then adjudged our Marriage lawful and honest, and now to say it is detestable and abominable, I think it great marvel; and in especial when I consider what a wife Prince the Kings Father was, and also the love and natural affection that King Ferdinando my Father bare unto me, I think in my self, that neither of Our Fathers were so uncircumpect, so unwise, and of so small imagination, but they forelaw what might follow of Our Marriage; and in especial the King my Father sent to the Court of Rome, and there after long suit, with great cost and charge, obtained a Licence and Dispensation, that I being the one Brothers Wife, and peradventure carnally known, might without scruple of Conscience, marry with the other Brother lawfully, which Licence under Lead I have yet to shew; which things make me to say, and surely believe, that our Marriage was both lawful, good and godly. But of this trouble I may only thank you, my Lord Cardinal of York. For because I have wondered at your high pride and vain glory, and abhorred your voluptuous life and abominable Lechery, and little regarded your presumptuous power and tyranny, therefore of malice you have kindled this fire, and set this matter abroad, and in especial for the great malice that you bear to my Nephew the Emperor, whom I perfectly know you hate worse than a Scorpion, because he would not satisfie your ambition, and make you Pope by force; and therefore you have said more than once, that you would trouble him and his friends, and you have kept him true promise; for all his wars and vexations he may thank you only. And as for me his poor Aunt and Kinswoman, what trouble you have put me to by this new found doubt, God knoweth, to whom I commit my cause according to the truth.

The Cardinal of York excused himself, saying, that he was not the beginner nor the mover of the doubt, and that it was fore against his will that ever the Marriage should come in question, but he said that by his superior the Bishop of Rome he was deputed as a Judge to hear the cause: which he swore on his profession to hear indifferently. But whatsoever was said, he believed him not; and so the Legates took their leave of her, and departed.

These words were spoken in French, and written by Cardinal Campeius Secretary, which was present; and afterwards by Edward Hall translated into English.

In the next year ensuing 1530, at the Black-Friers of London was prepared a solemn place for the two Legates: who coming with their Crozies, Pillars, Axes, and all other Romish Ceremonies accordingly, were set in two Chairs covered with cloth of Gold, and Cushions of the same. When all things were ready, then the King and the Queen were seated by Dr. Sampson to appear before the said Legates the twenty eighth day of May; where the Communion of the Cardinals first being read, wherein it was appointed by the Court of Rome, That they should be the hearers and judges in the cause between them both) the King was called by name; who appeared by two Proctors: Then the Queen was called, who being accompanied with four Bishops, and other of her Council, and a great company of Ladies, came personally herself before the Legates: who there after her obsequence, with a sad gravity of countenance, having not many words with them, appeared from the Legates, as Judges not competent, to the Court of Rome, and so departed. Notwithstanding this Appeal, the Cardinals sat weekly, and every day arguments on both sides were brought, but nothing definitively was determined.

As the time passed on, in the month of June, the King being desirous to see an end, came to the Court, and the Queen also, where he standing under his cloth of estate, uttered these or like words in effect as followeth.

The Kings
Oration to the Legates.

MY Lords, Legates of the See Apostolick, which be deputed Judges in this great and weighty matter, I most heartily beseech you to ponder my mind and intent, which only is to have a final end for the discharge of my conscience. For every good Christian man knoweth, what pain and what uneasiness he suffereth which hath his conscience grieved. For I assure you on my honour; that this matter hath so vexed my mind, and troubled my spirits, that I can scarcely find any thing which should be profitable for my Realm and people: and to have a quietness in body and soul is my desire and request, and not for any grade that I bear to her that I have married; for I dare say, That for her womanhood, wisdom, Nobility, and gentleness, never Prince had such another: and therefore if I would willingly change I were not wise. Wherefore my suit is to you my Lords at this time, to have a speedy end, according to right, for the quietness of my mind and conscience only, and for no other cause, as God knoweth.

The Queen

When the King had said, the Queen departed without any thing saying. Then she was called to know whether she would abide by her Appeal, or answer there before the Legates. Her Proctor answered, That she would abide by her Appeal. That notwithstanding, the Counsellors on both sides, every day almost met, and debated this matter substantially, so that at the last the Divines were all of opinion, that the Marriage was against the Law of God, if he were carnally known by the first Brother. Which thing she clearly denied. But to that was answered, That Prince Arthur her Husband confessed the act done, by certain words spoken: which being recorded in other Chronicles, I had rather should there be read, than by me here uttered. Furthermore, at the time of the death of Prince Arthur, she thought and judged that she was with child, and for that cause the King was deposed from the Title and Creation of the Prince of Wales almost half a year: which thing could not have been judged, if he had not been carnally known.

Also he herself caused a Bull to be purchased, in the which were these words: Vel forsam cognitam, which is as much to say as, peradventure carnally known. Which words were not in the first Bull granted by July at her second Marriage to the King, Which second Bull with that clause was only purchased, to dispense with the second Matrimony, although there were carnal copulation before: which Bull needed not to have been purchased, if there had been no carnal copulation, for then the first Bull had been sufficient.

Moreover, for the more clear evidence of this matter, that Prince Arthur had carnal knowledge of the said Lady Katharine his wife, it appeareth in a certain Book of Records which we have to shew touching this Marriage: That the same time when Prince Arthur was first married with this Lady Katharine, Daughter to King Ferdinand, certain Embassadors of Ferdinand his Council were then sent hither into England for the said purpose, to see and testify concerning the full consummation of the said Matrimonial conjunction. Which Counsellors here resident, being solemnly sworn, not only did affirm to both their Parents, that the Matrimony was consummate by that act, but also did send over to Spain to her Father such demonstrations of their mutual conjunction, as here I will not name, sparing the reverence of chaste ears. Which demonstrations otherwise, in those Records being named and testified, do sufficiently put the matter out of all doubt and question.

Besides that, in the same Records appeareth that both he and she not only were of such years as were meet and able to expiete the consummation hereof, but also they were and did ly together both here and in Wales by the space of three quarters of a year.

Out of a written Book of Records, containing certain Conferences between the Cardinal and Queen Katharine Amner about this matter, remaining in our custody to be seen.

Thus when the Divines on her side were beaten from the ground, then they fell to persuasions of natural reasons, how this should not be undone for three causes. One was, because if it should be broken, the only child of the King should be a Bastard, which were a great mischief to the Realm. Secondly, the separation should be cause of great unkindness between her kindred and this Realm. And the third cause was, That the continuance of so long space had made the Marriage honest. These persuasions, with many other, were set forth by the Queens Council, and in especial by the Bishop of Rochester, which stood stiff in her cause. But yet Gods precept was not answered; wherefore they left that ground, and fell to pleading, That the Court of Rome had dispensed with this Marriage. To this some Lawyers said, That no earthly person is able to dispense with the positive Law of God.

When the Legates heard the opinions of the Divines, and saw whereunto the end of this question would tend, forasmuch as men began so to dispute of the authority of the Court of Rome, and especially because the Cardinal of York perceived the King to cast favour to the Lady Anne, whom he knew to be a Lutheran, they thought best to wind themselves out of that brake betime; and so Cardinal Campeius, dissembling the matter, conveyed himself home to Rome again; as is partly above touched. The King seeing himself thus to be deferred and deluded by the Cardinals, took it to no little grief; whereupon the fall of the Cardinal of York followed not long after.

This was in the year of our Lord 1530. Shortly after it happened the same year, that the King by his Embassadors was advertised, that the Emperor and the Pope were both together at Bonony. Wherefore he directed Sir Thomas Bullen late created Earl of Wiltshire, and Doctor Stokesley (afterward Bishop of London) and Doctor Lee (afterward Bishop of York) with his message to the Popes Court, where also the Emperor was. Pope Clement understanding the Kings case and request, and fearing what might follow after, if Learning and Scripture here should take place against the authority of their Dispensations, and moreover doubting the Emperors displeasure, bare himself strange off from the matter, answering the Embassadors with this delay, that he presently would not define in the case, but would hear the full matter disputed, when he came to Rome, and according to right he would do justice.

 stand to his arbitrement either in this case, or in any other, having both the Scripture to lead him, and his Law in his own hands to warrant him, yet for quietness sake, and for that he would not rashly break order (which rather was a disorder indeed) he bare so long as conveniently he might.
 At length after long delays and much dissembling, when he saw no hope of redress, he began somewhat to quicken and to look about him, what was best both for his own conscience, and the establishment of his Realm to do.

Gods Pro- No man here doubteth, but that all this was wrought not by mans device, but by the secret purpose of the Lord himself, to bring to pass further things, as afterward followed, which his Divine Providence was disposed to work.
 For else as touching the Kings intent and purpose, he never meant nor minded any such thing as to seek the ruin of the Pope, but rather sought all means contrary, how both to establish the See of Rome, and also to obtain the good will of the same See and Court of Rome, if it might have been gotten. And therefore intending to sue his divorce from Rome, at the first beginning: his device was by Stephen Gardiner his Ambassador at Rome to exalt the Cardinal of York, as is before shewed, to be made Pope and Universal Bishop, to the end that he ruling that Apostolical See, the matter of his unlawful Marriage, which so troubled his conscience, might come to a quiet conclusion, without any further rumor of the world. Which purpose of his, if it had taken effect as he had devised it, and the English Cardinal had once been made Pope, no doubt but the authority of that See had never been exterminate out of England. But God being more merciful unto us, took a better way than so. For both without, and contrary to the Kings expectation, he so brought to pass, that neither the Cardinal of York was Pope (which should have been an infinite cost to the King) and yet nevertheless the King sped of his purpose too, and that much better than he looked for. For he was rid by lawful divorcement, not only from that unlawful Marriage which clogged his conscience, but also from the miserable yoke of the Popes usurped dominion, which clogged the whole realm, & all at one time.

Thus Gods holy Providence ruling the matter, as I said, when the King could get no favourable grant of the Pope touching his cause, being so good and honest, he was enforced to take the redress of his right into his own hands, and seeing this Gordian knot would not be loosed at Rome, he was driven against his will, as God would, to play the Noble Alexander himself, and with the sword of his Princely authority knave the knot at one stroke clean asunder, looking as it were with one solution infinite questions. For where the Doctors and Canonists had long disputed, and yet could never thoroughly discuss the largeness and ful-ness of the Popes two Swords both Temporal and Spiritual, the King with one sword did so cut off both his Swords, that he dispatched them both clean out of England, as ye shall see more anon. But first the King like a prudent Prince, before he would come to the head of the sore, thought best to pare away such rank flesh and putrid places as were about it, and therefore following his own Proverb, like as one, going about to cast down an old rotten wall, will not begin with the foundation first, but with the stones that lie in the top, so he, to prepare his way better unto the Pope, first began with the Cardinal, casting him by the Law of Præmunire, out of his Goods and Possessions, and so at length by poisoning himself he procured his own death; which was in the year 1530.
 This done, shortly after about the year 1532, the King to provide betimes against mischief that might come from Rome, gave forth efficacious this Proclamation, as followeth.

A restit- THE Kings Higheenes fraitly chargeth and commends, that no manner of person, what estate, degree, or condition forever he or they be of, do purchase or attempt to purchase from the Court of Rome, or elsewhere, nor use and put in execution, divulge or publish any thing heretofore, within this year passed, purchased, or to be purchased hereafter, containing matter prejudicial to the high authority, jurisdiction, and Prerogative Royal of this his said Realm, or to the let, hinderance, or impeachment of his Graces noble and vertuous, intended purposes in the Premises, upon pain of incurring his Higheenes indignation, and imprisonment and further punishment of their bodies for their so doing, at his Graces pleasure, to the dreadful example of all others.

After this was done, the King then proceeding further, caused the rest of the Spiritual Lords to be called by process into the Kings Bench to make their appearance, forsomuch as the whole Clergy of England, in supporting and maintaining the power Legantine of the Cardinal, by the reason thereof were all intangled likewise in the Præmunire, and therefore were called into the Kings Bench to answer.
 But before the day of their appearance, the Prelates together in their Convocation concluded among themselves an humble submission in writing, and offered the King for a Subsidy or contribution, that he would be their good Lord, and release them of the Præmunire by Act of Parliament, first to be gathered in the Province of Canterbury an hundred thousand pounds. And in the Province of York, eight-teen thousand eight hundred forty pound and ten pence.
 The which offer with much labour was accepted, and their pardon promised. In this submission the Clergy called the King suprem Head of the Church of England, which thing they never confessed before. Whereupon many things followed, as after (God willing) ye shall hear.

But first, forasmuch as we are in hand now with the matter, we will borrow by the way, a few words of the Reader, to speak of this Clergy-money, of 1535, 40 pounds, and ten pence, to be levied to the King, as is above touched. For the levying of which sum an order was taken among the Prelates, that every Bishop in his Dioceses should call before him all the Priests, Parsons and Vicars, among whom Dr. Stokesley Bishop of London, a man then considered to be of some wit and learnings, but of little discretion and humanity (which caused him to be out of the favour of the common people) called before him all the Priests within the City of London, whether they were Curates or Stipendiaries, the first day of September being Friday, in the Chapter-house of Saint Paul. At which day the Priests appeared, and the Bishops policy was to have only six or eight Priests together, and by persuasions to have caused them to grant some portion toward the payment of the foresaid hundred thousand pound. But the number of the Priests was so great (for they were six hundred at the least, and with them came many temporal men to hear the matter) that the Bishop was disappointed of his purpose. For when the Bishops Officers called in certain Priests by name into the Chapter-house; with that a great number entered, for they put the Bishops Officers that kept the door aside.

After this, the Officers got the door shut again. Then the Priests without said, We will not be kept without, and our fellows be within: we know not what the Bishop will do with them. The temporal men being present comforted and encouraged the Priests to enter, so that by force they opened the door, and one struck the Bishops Officer over the face, and entered the Chapter-house, and many temporal men with them, and long it was ere any silence could be made. At last when they were appeased, the Bishop stood up and said, Brethren I marvel not a little why you be so heady, and know not what shall be said to you:
 therefore I pray you to keep silence, and to hear me patently.

My friends all, you know well that we be men frail of condition, and no Angels, and by frailty and lack of wisdom we have misdeigned our selves toward the King our Sovereign Lord and his Laws, so that all we of the Clergy were in the Præmunire; by reason whereof, all our promotions, lands, goods, and catells, were to him forfeit, and our bodies ready to be imprisoned; yet his Grace, moved with pity and compassion, demanded of us what we could say, why he should not extend his Laws upon us.
 Then the Fathers of the Clergy humbly besought his Grace of mercy. To whom he answered, That he was ever inclined to mercy. Then for all our great offences we had little penance: for where he might by the rigor of his Law have taken all our livelode, goods, and catells, he was contented with one hundred thousand pounds, to be paid in five years. And although that this sum be more than we may easily bear, yet by the rigor of his Laws we should have born the whole burden. Wherefore my Brethren, I charitably exhort you to bear your parts of your livelode and salary, toward the payment of this sum granted.

Then it was shortly said to the Bishop, My Lord, twenty Nobles a year is but bare living for a Priest; for how victual and every thing is so dear, that poverty in a manner enforceth us to say nay. Beside that, my Lord we never offended in the Premunire: for we medled never with the Cardinals faculties: let the Bishops and Abbots which have offended pay.

Then the Bishops Officers gave to the Priests high words, which caused them to be the more obstinate. Also divers temporal men which were present comforted the Priests, and bad them agree to no payment. In this rumor divers of the Bishops servants were buffeted and stricken, so that the Bishop began to be afraid, and with fair words appeased the noise, and for all things which were done or said there he pardoned them, and gave to them his Blessing, and pray'd them to depart in charity. Then they departed, thinking to hear no more of the matter, but they were deceived: for the Bishop went to Sir Th. More, then being Lord Chancellor (which greatly favoured the Bishop and the Clergy) and to him made a grievous complaint, and declared the fact very grievously. Whereupon commandment was sent to Sir Thomas Pargitor, Mayor of the City, to attach certain Priests and temporal men: and so fifteen Priests, and five temporal men were arrested; of the which some were sent to the Tower, some to the Fleet, and other Prisons, where they remained long after.

This being done in the year of our Lord 1532, it followeth moreover the same year, that divers Preachings were in the Realm, one contrary to another, concerning the Kings Marriage: and in especial one Thomas Abel Clerk, which was the Queens Chaplain, to please her withal, both preached and also wrote a Book in defence of the said Marriage; whereby divers simple men were perfwaded. Wherefore the King caused to be compiled and reduced into a Book the determination of the Universities, with the judgments of great Clerks: which Book being printed and set abroad did again falsifie all indifferent and reasonable persons, which were not too much wedded to their wills.

Mention was made a little before, of a Parliament begun the 15th day of January, Anno 1533, in the which Parliament the Commons had put up a supplication, complaining of the strait dealing of the Clergy in their proceeding Ex Officio. This complaint although at the first it seemed not to be greatly tendered of the King, yet in Prorogation of the Parliament the time so wrought withal, that the King having more clear understanding of the abuses and enormities of the Clergy, and in especial of the corrupt authority of the See of Rome, provided certain Acts against the same. First, as concerning the Laws, Decrees, Ordinances and Constitutions made and established by the pretended authority of the Bishops of Rome, to the advancement of their worldly glory, that who do did or spake any thing either against their usurped power, or against the said Laws, Decrees, or Constitutions of theirs, not approved nor grounded upon Holy Scripture, or else being repugnant to the Kings Prerogative Royal, should therefore stand in no danger, nor be impeachable of Heresie. And likewise touching such Constitutions, Ordinances, and Canons Provincial or Synodical, which were made in this Realm in the Convocation of Bishops being either prejudicial to the Kings Prerogative, or not ratified before by the Kings assent, or being otherwise onerous to the King and his subjects, or in any wise repugnant to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, they were committed to the judgment of two and thirty persons chosen by the King out of the higher and lower Houle, to be determined either to stand in strength, or to be abrogate at their discretions: and further, that all the Clergy of this Realm submitting themselves to the Kings, should and did promise in verbo Sacerdotii, never hereafter to presume to assemble in their Convocations without the Kings writ, or to Enact or execute such Constitutions without his Royal assent, &c. Ex Stat. Hen. 8.

Further, in the same Parliament was Enacted and Decreed, that in causes and matters happening in contention no person should appeal, provoke, or sue out of the Kings Dominions to the Court of Rome, under pain of provisors, provision, or Premunire.

Item, In the same Parliament was defined and concluded, that all exportation of Annates and first-fruits of Archbishopsricks and Bishopsricks out of this Realm to the See of Rome for any Bulls, Breves or Palls, or expedition of any such thing, should utterly cease.

Also for the invelling of Archbishops, Bishops, or other of any Ecclesiastical dignity, such order in the said Parliament was taken that the King should send a license under the great Seal, with a Letter Mittive to the Prior and Convent, or to the Dean and Chapter of those Cathedral Churches where the See was vacant: by the vertue of which License or Letters Mittive, they within twelve days should choose the said person nominated by the King, and none other, and that Election to stand effectual to all intents. Which Election being done, then the party elect making first his Oath and fealty to the King, if it were a Bishop that was elect, then the King by his Letters Patents to signifye the said Election to the Archbishop of that Province, and two other Bishops, or else to four Bishops within this Realm to be assigned to that office, without any other suing, procuring, or obtaining any Bulls, Breves, or other things from the See of Rome.

Moreover, against all other whatsoever intolerable exactions and great sums of money used to be paid out of this Realm to the Bishop of Rome, in Penions, Censures, Peter-pence, Procurations, Fruits, suits for provisions, and expeditions of Bulls for Archbishops and Bishops, for Delegacies and Rescripts in causes of contentions and Appeals, Jurisdiccions Legative; also for Dispensations, Licenses, Faculties, Grants, Relaxations, Writs called Perinde valere, Rehabilitations, Abolutions, Canonizations, and other infinite sorts of Bulls, Breves, and Instruments of sundry natures, the number whereof were tedious particularly to be recited: in the said Parliament it was ordained That all such uncharitable Usurations, Exactions, Penions, Censures, Portions, and Peter-pence used to be paid to the See of Rome, should utterly furcease, and never more be levied: so that the King with his Honourable Council should have power and authority from time to time, for the ordering, redress, and reformation of all manner of Indulgences, Priviledges, &c. within this Realm.

¶ Where is to be noted by the way, as touching these Peter-pence afore said, that the same were first brought in and imposed by King Iva, about the year of our Lord 720. Which Iva King of the West-Saxons caused through all his Dominion, in every house having a Chimney, a penny to be collected and paid to the Bishop of Rome in the name of Saint Peter, and thereof were they called Peter-pence. Vide supra. The same likewise did Ofa King of Mercians after him, about the year of our Lord 794. And these Peter-pence ever since, or for the most part, have used of a long custom to be gathered and summoned by the Popes Collectors here in England, from the time of Iva afore said, to this Parliament, Anno 1533. Vide supra.

Finally, by the authority of the Parliament it was consulted and considered, concerning the Legality of the lawful succession unto the Crown, in ratifying and enabling the Heirs of the Kings Body, and Queen Anne. In the which Parliament moreover the degrees of Marriage plainly and clearly were explained and set forth, such as be expressly prohibited by Gods Laws, as in this Table may appear.

A Table of Degrees prohibited by Gods Law to marry.

The Son not to marry the Mother, nor Step-mother.
The Brother not to marry the Sister.

KING All these things thus being defined and determined in this forefaid Parliament, and alfo being in the fame Parliament concluded, That no man of what eftate, degree, or condition foever, hath any power to difpence with Gods Laws, it was therefore by the authority aforefaid, agreeing with the authority of Gods Word, affented, That the Marriage aforetime folemnized between the King and the Lady Katharine, being before wife to Prince Arthur the Kings Brother, and carnally known by him (as is above proved) fhould be abfolutely deemed and adjudged to be unlawful and againft the Law of God, and alfo reputed and taken to be of no value nor effect; and that the feparation thereof by Thomas Cranmer Archbifhop of Canterbury, fhould ftand good and effectfull to all intents: and alfo that the lawful Matrimony between the King and the Lady Anne his wife, fhould be eftablifhed, approved and ratified for good and confonant to the Laws of Almighty God. And further alfo, for the eftablifhing of this Kings lawful fucceffion, it was fully by the faid Parliament adjudged, That the inheritance of the Crown fhould remain to the heirs of their two bodies, that is, of the King and Queen Anne his wife.

THE During the time of this Parliament, before the Marriage of Queen Anne, there was one Temf in the Common-Houle, which moved the Commons to fue to the King to take the Queen again into his company; declaring certain great miſchiefs like to enſue thereof, as in Baſtardizing the Lady Mary the Kings only child, and divers other inconveniences. Which being reported to the Kings ears, he ſent immediately to Sir Thomas Audley, Speaker then of the Parliament, expreſſing unto him amongst other matters, that he marvelled much why one of the Parliament did fo openly ſpeak of the abſence of the Queen from him, (which matter was not to be determined there, for it touched (ſaid he) his foul, and witheld the Matrimony were good, for then had he never been fo vexed in conſcience. But the Doctors of Univerſities (ſaid he) have determined the Marriage to be void, and detestable before God; which grudge of conſcience (he ſaid) cauſed him to abſtain from her company, and no fooliſh nor wanton appetite. For I am (ſaid he) forty one years old, at which age the lult of man is not fo quick as it is in youth. And faving in Spain and Portugal it hath not been ſeen, that one man hath married two Siſters, the one being carnally known before: but the Brother to marry the Brothers wife, was fo abhorred amongst all Nations, that I never heard it, That any Chriſtian man fo did but my ſelf. Wherefore you fee my conſcience troubled, and fo I pray you report. And fo the Speaker departing, declared to the Commons the Kings faying.

THE Not long after that, the King, belike perceiving the minds of the Clergy not much favouring his Cauſe, ſent for the Speaker again, and twelve of the Common-houle, having with him eight Lords, and ſaid to them, Welbeloved Subjects, We had thought the Clergy of our Realm had been our Subjects wholly, but now we have well perceived that they be but half our Subjects, yea and ſcarce our Subjects. For all the Prelates at their Conſecration make an Oath to the Pope, clean contrary to the Oath that they make unto us, fo that they ſeem to be his Subjects, and not ours: and fo the King, delivering to them the Copy of both the Oaths, required them to invent ſome order that he might not thus be deluded of his Spiritual ſubjects. The Speaker thus departed, and cauſed the Oaths to be read in the Common-houle, the very tenor whereof here enſueth.

The Oath of the Clergy to the Pope.

I ſhall come to the Synod when I am called, except I be letted by a Canonical impediment. The lights of the Apoſtles I ſhall viſit perſonally, or by my Deputy. I ſhall not alim or ſell my poſſeſſions without the Popes Council. So God me help, and the holy Evangelifts.

¶ This Oath of the Clergy-men, which they were wont to make to the Biſhop of Rome (now Pope quondam) was aboliſhed and made void by Statute, and a new Oath miniſtered and confirmed for the ſame, wherein they acknowledged the King to be the Supreme Head under Chriſt in this Church of England, as by tenour thereof may appear hereunder enſuing.

The Oath of the Clergy to the King.

I John B. of A. utterly renounce and clearly forſake all ſuch clauſes, words, ſentences and grants which I have or ſhall have hereafter of the Popes Holineſs, of and for the Biſhoprick of A. that in any wiſe hath been, is, or hereafter may be hurtful or prejudicial to your Highneſs, your heirs, ſucceſſors, dignity, privilege or eſtate royal: and alſo I do ſwear that I ſhall be faithful and true, and faith and truth I ſhall bear to you my Sovereign Lord, and to your heirs Kings of the ſame, of life and limb, and earthly worſhip above all creatures, to live and die with you and yours againſt all people's, and diligently I ſhall be attendant to all your needs and buſineſs, after my wit and power: and your counſel I ſhall keep and hold: knowledging my ſelf to hold my Biſhoprick of you only; beſeeching you of reſtitution of the Temporalities of the ſame: promiſing (as before) that I ſhall be faithful, true, and obediently ſubject unto your ſaid Highneſs, heirs, and ſucceſſors, during my life, and the ſervices and other things due to your Highneſs, for the reſtitution of the Temporalities of ſame Biſhoprick, I ſhall truly do, and obediently perform. So God me help and all Saints.

Theſe Oaths thus being recited and opened to the people, were the occaſion that the Pope loſt all his intereſt and juriſdiction here in England within ſhort while after. Upon the occaſion and reaſon whereof, the matter falling out more and more againſt the Pope, Sir Thomas More, of whom mention is made before, being a great maintainer of the Pope, and a heavy troubler of Chriſts people, and now not liking well of this Oath, by Gods good work was enforced to reſign up his Chanceryſhip, and to deliver up the Great Seal of England into the Kings hands. After whom ſucceeded Sir Thomas Audley, Keeper of the Great Seal, a man in eloquence and gifts of tongue no leſs incomparable, than alſo for his godly diſpoſed mind, and favourable inclination to Chriſts Religion, worthy of much commendation.

Theſe things being done in the Parliament, the King within ſhort time after proceeded to the Marriage of the foreſaid Lady Anne Bullen, Mother to our moſt noble Queen now, who without all controverſie was a ſpecial comforter and aider of all the Profeſſors of Chriſts Goſpel, as well of the learned as the unlearned; her life being alſo directed according to the ſame; ſhe weekly alms did manifeſtly declare; who beſides the ordinary of a hundred Crowns, and other apparel that ſhe gave weekly; a year before

The Marriage of Q. Anne

before she was Crowned, both to men and women, gave also wonderful much privy alms to widows and other poor householders continually till she was apprehended, and she ever gave three or four pound at a time to the poor people, to buy them kine withal, and sent her Subarmer to the Towns about where she lay, that the Parishioners should make a Bill of all the poor householders in their Parish, and some Towns received seven, eight, or ten pound to buy kine withal, according as the number of the poor in the Towns were. She also maintained many learned men in Cambridge. Likewise did the Earl of Wiltshire her Father, and the Lord Rockford her Brother, and by them these men were brought in favour with the King: of whom some are yet alive and can testify the same; which would to God they were now as great professors of the Gospel of Christ, as then they appeared to be: which were Doctor Heath, and Doctor Thirley; with whom was joined the Lord Peget, who at that present was an earnest Protestant, and gave unto one Reynold West Luthers Books, and other Books of the Germans, as Francis Lambert, de Sectis, and at that time he read Melancthon Rhetorick openly in Trinity-Hall in Cambridge, and was with his Master Gardiner a maintainer of Doctor Barnes, and all the Protestants that were then in Cambridge, and help many Religious persons out of their Cowles.

It hath been reported unto us by divers credible persons which were about this Queen, and daily acquainted with her doings, concerning her liberal and bountiful distribution to the poor, how her Grace carried ever about her a certain little purse out of the which she was wont daily to scatter abroad some alms to the needy, thinking no day well spent wherein some man had not fared the better by some benefit at her hands. And this I write by the relation of certain noble Personages which were the chief and principal of her waiting Maids about her, specially the Dutches of Richmond by name.

Also concerning the order of her Ladies and Gentlewomen about her, one that was her Silkwoman, a Gentlewoman not now alive, but of great credit and also of fame for her worthy doings, did credibly report, that in all her time she never saw better order among the Ladies and Gentlewomen of the Court, than was in this good Queens days, who kept her Maids and such as were about her so occupied in sowing and working of shirts and smocks for the poor, that neither was there seen any idleness then among them, nor any leisure to follow such pastimes as daily are seen now adays to reign in Princes Courts.

Thus the King being divorced from the Lady Dowager his Brothers wife, married this gracious Lady, making a prosperous and happy change for us, being divorced from the foresaid Princess, and also from the Pope, both at one time. Notwithstanding, as good and godly purposes are never without some incommmodity or trouble following, so it happened in this divorcement, that the said Princess procuring from Rome the Popes Curse, caused both the King and the Realm to be Interdicted: whereof more is hereafter to be spoken.

In the mean time Queen Anne shortly after her Marriage being great with child, the next year following, which was 1533, after the first divorcement publicly proclaimed, was Crowned with high solemnity at Westminster: and not long after her Coronation, the seventh day of September, she was brought to Bed, and delivered of a fair Lady: for whose good deliverance Te Deum was sung in all places, and great preparation made for the Christening.

The Mayor and his Brethren with forty of the chief Citizens were commanded to be present, with all the Nobles and Gentlemen. The Kings Palace, and all the walls between that and the Friers Church, was hanged with Arras, and the Friers Church. Also the Font was of Silver, and stood in the middle of the Church, three steps high, which was covered with a fine cloth, and divers Gentlemen, with Aprons and Towels about their necks, gave attendance about it. Over the Font hung a fair Canopy of Crimfon Satten fringed with Gold. About it was a Rail covered with Say. Between the Quire and the Body of the Church was a close place with a pan of fire to make the child ready in. These things thus ordered, the child was brought into the Hall, and then every man set forward.

First the Citizens, two and two: then the Gentlemen, Elquires, and Chaplains. Next after followed the Aldermen, and the Mayor alone. Next the Mayor followed the Kings Council. Then the Kings Chappel. Then Barons, Bishops, and Earls. Then came the Earl of Essex, bearing the covered Basons gilt. After him the Marques of Essex, with the Taper of Virgin-wax. Next him the Marques of Dorset, bearing the Salt. Behind him the Lady Mary of Norfolk, bearing the Chrysome, which was very rich of Pearl and Stone. The old Dutches of Norfolk bear the child in a Mantle of purple Velvet, with a long Train furred with Ermin. The Duke of Norfolk with his Marshal-Rod, went on the right hand of the said Dutches, and the Duke of Suffolk on the left hand. Before them went the Officers of Armes. The Countess of Kent bear the long Train of the Childs Mantle. Between the Countess and the child, went the Earl of Wiltshire on the right hand, and the Earl of Dorby on the left hand, supporting the said Train. In the midst over the Child, was borne a Canopy by the Lord Rockford, the Lord Hulsey, the Lord William Howard, and the Lord Thomas Howard the Elder. In this order they came unto the Church-door, where the Bishop of London met it, with divers Abbots and Bishops, and began the observances of the Sacrament. The Archbishop of Canterbury was Godfather, and the old Dutches of Norfolk, and the old Marchioness of Dorset, Widows, were Godmothers, and the Child was named Elizabeth.

After all things were done at the Church-door, the Child was brought to the Font and Christened. This done, Garter, the chief King at Armes, cried aloud, God of his infinite goodness, send prosperous life and long, to the High and Mighty Princess of England, ELIZABETH. Then the Trumpets blew, and the Child was brought up to the Altar, and immediately confirmed by the Archbishop, the Marchioness of Essex being Godmother. Then the Archbishop of Canterbury gave the Princess a standing Cup of Gold. The Dutches of Norfolk gave her a standing Cup of Gold, fretted with Pearl. The Marchioness of Dorset, three gilt Bowls pounced, with a Cover. The Marchioness of Essex three standing Bowls gilt and graven, with a Cover. And so after a solemn Banquet ended with Hypocras, Waters, and such like in great plenty, they returned in like order again unto the Court with the Princess, and so departed.

At the Marriage of this Noble Lady, as there was no small joy unto all good and godly men, and no less hope of prosperous success to Gods true Religion: so in like manner, on the contrary part, the Papists wanted not their malicious and secret attempts, as by the false hypocrite and feigned holiness of a false feigned hypocrite, this year being espied and found out, may sufficiently appear what their Devilish devices and purposes were. For certain Monks, Friars, and other evil disposed persons, of a Devilish intent, had put into the heads of many of the Kings subjects, That they had a revelation of God and his Saints, that he was highly displeased with King Henry for the Divorcement of the Lady Katharine: and furnished among other things, That God had revealed to a Nun, named Elizabeth Barton, whom they called the holy Maid of Kent, That in case the King proceeded in the said Divorce, he should not be King of this Realm one month after, and in the reputation of God not one day nor hour. This Elizabeth Barton by false dissimulation practised and shewed to the people marvelous alteration of her visage, and other parts of her body, as if she had been wrapt or in a trance, and in those feigned trances, by false hypocrite (as though she had been inspired of God) she spake many words in rebuking of him, and reproving the Gospel, which she called Heresie; and among them uttered divers things to the great reproach of the King and Queen, and to the establishing of Idolatry, Pilgrimage, and the derogation of Gods glory. Which her naughtiness being espied out by the great labour and diligence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Cromwel, and Master Hugh Latimer, she was condemned and put to death, with certain of her affinity and counsel, in the month of April, Anno 1539. The names of which Conspirators with her were these, Edward Becking, Monk of Canterbury, Richard Malfers, Parson

Edward Hall, a Writer of our English Stories, making mention of this Elizabeth Barton aforesaid, adjoineth next in his Book the narration of one Pavier, or Pavy, a notorious enemy (no doubt) to Gods Truth. This Pavier being the Town-Clerk of the City of London, was a man (saith he) that in no case could abide to hear that the Gospel should be in English: inasmuch that the said Hall himself heard him once say unto him, and to other by swearing a great Oath, that if he thought the Kings Highness would set forth the Scripture in English, and let it be read of the people by his Authority, rather than he would so long live, he would cut his own Throat; but he broke promise, saith Hall, for he did not cut his Throat with a Knife, but with a Halter did hang himself. Of what mind, and intent he so did, God judge.

My information further addeth this, touching the said Pavier or Pavy, that he was a bitter enemy, very busy at the burning of Richard Bainham above mentioned. Who hearing the said Bainham at the stake speaking against Purgatory and Transubstantiation; set here, saith he, to this Heretic, and burn him. And as the Train of Gunpowder came toward the Martyr, he lifted up his Eyes and Hands to Heaven, saying to Pavier, God forgive thee, and shew thee more mercy than thou doest to me. The Lord forgive Sir Thomas More, and pray for me all good people, and so continued he praying, till the Fire took his Bowels and his Head, &c.

After whose Martyrdom, the next year following, this Pavier the Town-Clerk of the City, went and bought Ropes. Which done, he went up to an high Garret in his house to Pray, as he was wont to do, to a Rood which he had there, before whom he bitterly wept: and as his own Maid coming up found him so doing, he had her take the rusty Sword and go make it clean, and trouble him no more, and immediately he tied up the Rope, and hung himself. The Maids heart still throbb'd, and so came up, and found him but newly hanged. Then she having no power to help him, ran crying to the Church to her Mistis to fetch her home. His Servants and Clerks he had sent out before to Finsbury, and to Master Edney, Sergeant to the Lord Mayor, dwelling over Bishops-Gate, to tarry for him at Finsbury Court till he came: But he had dispatched himself before, so that they might long look for him before he could come. Which was, Anno 1533.

To this Story of Pavier, may also be added the like terrible example of Doctor Foxford, Chancellor to the Bishop of London, a cruel Persecutor, and a common Butcher of the good Saints of God: who was the condemnor of all those aforesaid, which were put to death, troubled or abjured under Bishop Stokesley through all the Dioceses of London. This Foxford dyed about this present year and time: Of whose terrible end it was then certainly reported and affirmed, by such as were of right good credit, unto certain persons, of whom some be yet alive, that he dyed suddenly sitting in his Chair, his belly being burst, and his Guts falling out before him.

About the same time dyed also William Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury: In whose Room succeeded Thomas Crommer, which was the Kings Chaplain, and a great disputer against the unlawful Marriage of Lady Katherine, Princes Dowager, being then so called by Act of Parliament.

Ye head before, how the Parliament had enacted that no person after a certain day, should appeal to Rome for any cause. Notwithstanding which Act, the Queen, now called Princes Dowager, had appealed to the Court of Rome before that Act made: So that it was doubted, whether that Appeal was good or not. This question was well handled in the Parliament House, but much better in the Convocation House, and yet in both Houses it was alledged, yea, and by Books shewed, that in the Councils of Chalcedon, Africk, Toletane, and divers other famous Councils in the Primitive Church, yea, in the time of St. Augustine, it was affirmed, declared, and determined, that a cause arising in one Province, should be determined in the same, and that neither the Patriarch of Constantinople should meddle in causes moved in the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Antioch, nor any Bishop should intermeddle within anothers Province or County: Which things were so Clerically opened, and so cunningly let forth to all intents, that every man that had wit, and was determined to follow the Truth, and not wilfully wedded to his own mind, might plainly see, that all Appeals made to Rome were clearly void, and of none effect. Which Doctrines and Councils were shewed to the Lady Katherine Princes Dowager: but the (as women love to lose no dignity) ever continued in her old Song, trusting more to the Popes partiality, than to the determination of Christs verity.

Whereupon the Archbishop of Canterbury, Cranner above named, accompanied with the Bishops of London, Winchester, Bath, Lincoln, and divers other great Clerks in a great number rode to Dunstable, which is fix miles from Ampthill, where the Princes Dowager lay: And thereby a Doctor, called Dr. Lee, she was aiged to appear before the said Archbishop, in cause of Matrimony, in the said Town of Dunstable: And at the day of appearance she would not appear, but made default, and so was called peremptorily, every day Fifteen days together, and at the last, for lack of appearance, and for contumacy, by the assent of all the learned men there being present, the Lady Katherine was divorced from the King, and their Marriage declared to be void and of none effect: Which sentence given, the Archbishop, and all the other returned back again.

Where note, that although their divorce following after the new Marriage needed not at all to be made, the first Marriage being no Marriage at all before God, yet to satisfy the voice of the people, more than for any necessity, the King was contented, through the persuasions of some, so to do. For else as touching God and Conscience, what great need was there of any divorce, where before God no Marriage was to be accounted, but rather an incestuous and detestable Adultery, as the Act of Parliament doth term it? But to our matter again.

After the dissolution of this first Marriage made between the King and the Lady Princes Dowager, the nevertheless bearing a stout mind, would not yet relent, neither to the determination of the Universities, nor to the sentence of the Clergy, nor of the whole Realm; but following the Counsel rather of a few Spaniards, to molest the King and the Realm by force, and means made to the Pope, procured certain Writings, first of monition and aggravation, then of Excommunication and Interdiction to be sent down from Rome, wherein the Pope had Interdicted both the King and the whole Realm. But the Popes Curser being not the hardest man, belike, that ever shewed his Head, thought it much more sure for him to discharge his Popish carriage without the Kings reach, and so keeping himself a loof (like a prey man) let up his writings in the Town of Dunkirk in Flanders. In the which Town, first upon the North door of the Church was set up a monition, that the King of England should forsake the state of Divorce; the which John Butler, Clerk, then Commissary of Calice, by Commandment, took down in a Night.

After that, before Whitsunweek, there was set up in the same place an Excommunication, Aggravation, Re-agggravation, and Interdiction. For the which also, the said Butler by commandment was sent to Dunkirk to take it down. And because the Council of Calice would be certified of his diligence therein, they sent a Servant of the Queen Katherine, who, by Councils of the primitive Church, that none should Appeal out of their Province.

This being known and certified to the King, he was motioned by his Council, That such as were about her, and moved her thereto, should be put from her. And therefore the Duke of Suffolk was sent to Dogden, beside Huntingdon, where the said Lady Katherine lay: who perceiving he stomach to continue froward still, in answering him with high words, and suddenly so in a fury to part from him into her privy Chamber, and shut the door, brake up the order of her Court, and discharged a great sort of her household Servants, and yet left her a convenient number to serve her like a Princess. They that remained still were sworn to serve her as Princess only, and not as Queen: of whom some said, they were once sworn to serve her as Queen, and otherwise would not serve, and so were dismissed. The other which were sworn to serve her as Princess, the utterly refused for her Servants, and so the remained with the fewer, living after this about the space of two years.

The abolishing of the Pope out of England.

These things thus finished and dispatched concerning the Marriage of Queen Ann, and Divorce of Lady Katherine Dowager, next followeth the year, 1534. In the which was assembled the high Court of Parliament again, after many Prorogations, Upon the third day of February; wherein was made an Act of Succession, for the more surety of the Crown; to the which every person being of lawful age should be sworn. During this Parliament time, every Sunday preached at Pauls Cross a Bishop, which declared the Pope not to be head of the Church.

After this, Communion was sent over all England, to take the Oath of all men and women to the Act of Succession. At which few repined, except Doctor John Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, Sir Thomas More, late Lord Chancellor, and Doctor Nicholas Wilson, Parson of Saint Thomas Apostles in London. Wherefore these three Persons, after long exhortation to them made by the Bishop of Cambridge at Lambeth, refusing to be sworn, were sent to the Tower, where they remained, and were oftentimes motioned to be sworn: But the Bishop and Sir Thomas More excused them by their Writings, in which they said, That they had written before the said Lady Katherine to be Queen, and therefore could not well go from that which they had written. Likewise the Doctor excused, that he in preaching had called her Queen, and therefore now could not well unlay it again. Howbeit at length he was well contented to dissemble the matter, and so escaped: but the other two stood against all the Realm in their opinion.

Act concerning the the Kings Highness to be the supreme head of the Church of England, and to have authority to reform and redress all Errors, Heresies and abuses in the same. Cap. 1.

KING,
H. 8.

Albeit the Kings Majesty justly and rightly is and ought to be the supreme head of the Church of England, and so is recognized by the Clergy of this Realm in their Convocations, yet nevertheless for corroboration and confirmation thereof, and for increase of vertue in Christs Religion within this Realm of England, and to repress and extirp all Errors, Heresies, and other enormities and abuses heretofore used in the same: be it enacted by authority of this present Parliament, that the King our Sovereign Lord, his Heirs and Successors, Kings of this Realm, shall be taken, accepted, and reputed the only supreme head in Earth of the Church of England, called Anglicana Ecclesia, and shall have and enjoy annexed and united to the Imperial Crown of this Realm, as well the title and stile thereof, as all honours, dignities, prebeminences, jurisdictions, privileges, authorities, immunities, profits and commodities to the said dignity of supreme Head of the same Church belonging and appertaining. And that our said Sovereign Lord, his Heirs and Successors, Kings of this Realm, shall have full power and authority from time to time, to visit, repress, redress, reform, order, correct, restrain, and amend all such errors, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities, whatsoever they be; which by any manner of Spiritual authority or jurisdiction ought or may lawfully be reformed, repressed, ordered, redressed, corrected, restrained, or amended, most to the pleasure of Almighty God, the increase of vertue in Christs Religion, and for the conservation of the peace, unity, and tranquillity of this Realm; any usage, custom, foreign law, foreign authority, prescription, or any thing or things, to the contrary hereof notwithstanding.

Trusty and Wellbelovéd, we Greet you well. And whereas not only upon good and just and vertuous grounds and respects, edited upon the Laws of holy Scripture, by due consultation, deliberation, advisement, and consent, as well of all other our Nobles and Commons Temporal, as also Spiritual, assembled in our High Court of Parliament, and by authority of the same, we have by good and wholesome Laws and Statutes, made for this purpose, extirped, abolished, separated, and secluded out of this our Realm, the abuses of the Bishop of Rome, his authority and jurisdiction of long time usurped, as well upon us and our Realm, as upon all other Kings and Princes and their Realms (like as they themselves have confessed and affirmed) but also so much as our said Nobles and Commons, both Spiritual and Temporal, assembled in our high Court of Parliament, have upon good, lawful and vertuous grounds, and for the publick weal of this our Realm, by one whole assent, granted, annexed, knit, and united to the Crown Imperial of the same, the title, dignity, and stile of supreme Head or Governour in Earth, immediately under God, of the Church of England, as we be, and undoubtedly have hitherto been: Which title and stile both the Bishops and Clergy of this Realm have no only in Convocation Assembled, Consented, Recognized, and approved lawfully and justly to appertain unto us, but also by Word, Oath, Profession, and writing under their Signs and Seals, have confessed, Ratified, Corroborated and confirmed the same, utterly renouncing all other Oaths and Obedience to any other foreign Potentates, and all foreign jurisdictions and powers, as well of the said Bishop of Rome, as of all other whatsoever they be, as by their said professions and writings Corroborated with the subscription of their names, and appention of their Seals more plainly appeareth: we let you to wit, that calling to our remembrance the power, charge, and commission given unto us of Almighty God, and upon

KING upon a vehement love and affection toward our loving and faithful Subjects, perceiving right well what great rest, quietness, and tranquillity of Conscience, and manifold other commodities might infuse and arise unto them, if that the said Bishops and other of the Clergy of this our Realm should set forth, declare and preach to them the true and sincere Word of God, and without all manner of colour, diffimulation, and hypocritie, manifest and publish the great and innumerable enormities, and abuses which the said Bishop of Rome, as well in the title and stile, as also in authority and jurisdiction of long time unlawfully and unjustly hath usurped upon us and our Progenitors, and also other Christian Princes; have therefore addressed our Letters unto the Bishop of the Diocess, straightly charging and commanding him in the same, that not only he in his own proper person, shall declare, teach and preach unto the people forthwith upon the receipt of our said Letters unto him directed, every Sunday and other high Feasts through the year, the true, meet and sincere Word of God; and that the same title, stile, and jurisdiction of supreme head appertaineth only to our Crown and dignity Royal, likewise, as the said Bishop and all other the Bishops of our Realm have by Oath affirmed and confirmed by subscription of their names, and setting to their Seals, but also gave warning, monition, and charge, to all manner Abbats, Priors, Deans, Archdeacons, Provosts, Parsons, Vicars, Curats, and all other Ecclesiastical persons, within his said Diocess, as well to teach, preach, publish, and declare in all manner Churches our aforesaid just title, stile, and jurisdiction, every Sunday and high Feast through the year, and further to monition and command all other Schoolmasters within his said Diocess, to instruct and teach the same unto the Children committed unto them, as also to cause all manner Prayers, Orisons, Rubricks, Canons of Mass Books, and all other Books in the Churches, wherein the said Bishop of Rome is named, or his presumptuous and proud pomp and authority preferred, utterly to be abolished, eradicate and rased out, and his name and memory to be never more (except to his contumely and reproach) remembered, but perpetually suppressed and obscured: and finally, to desist and leave out all such Articles as be in the general sentence, which is usually accustomed to be read four times in the year, and do tend to the glory and advancement of the Bishop of Rome, his name, title, and jurisdiction.

Whereupon we see esteeming and reputing you to be of such singular and vehement zeal and affection toward the Glory of Almighty God, and of so faithful, loving and obedient heart towards us, as you will not only do and accomplish with all Power, Wisdom, Diligence, and labour, whatsoever should or might be to the preferment and setting forward of Gods Word, but also practise, study, and endeavour your self, with all your policy, wit, power, and good will, to amplify, defend, and maintain all such interest, right, title, stile, jurisdiction, and authority, as is in any wise appertaining unto us, our dignity and prerogative, and Crown Imperial of this our Realm: have thought good and expedient, not only to signify unto you by these our Letters the particulars of the charge, monition, and commandment given by us unto the said Bishop, as before is specified, but also to require, and straightly charge and command you, upon pain of your Allegiance, and as ye shall avoid our high indignation and displeasure at your uttermost peril, laying apart all vain affections, respects, or other carnal considerations, and setting only before your eyes the mirror of truth, the glory of God, the dignity of your Sovereign Lord and King, and the great concord and unity, and inestimable profit and utility, that shall by the due execution of the premises issue to your self and all other faithful and loving Subjects, ye make or cause to be made diligent search and wait, and especially in every place of your Shirewicks, whether the said Bishop do truly, and sincerely, and without all manner colour, colour, or diffimulation, execute, and accomplish Our Will and Commandment, as is aforesaid. And in case ye shall hear, perceive, and approvingly understand, and know that the said Bishop, or any other Ecclesiastical person within his Diocess, do omit and leave undone any part or parcel of the Premises, or else in the execution and setting forth of the same, do coldly and feignedly use any manner of sinister addition, wrong interpretation, or painted colour: then we straightly charge and command you, that forthwith upon any such default, negligence, or diffimulation of the said Bishop, or any other Ecclesiastical person of his Diocess, contrary to the true tenour, meaning and effect of the said charge by us to him appointed aforesaid, ye do make immediately, and with all speed and diligence, declaration and advertisement to us and our Council, of the said default, and of the behaviour, manner, and fashion of the same.

And forasmuch as we upon singular trust, and assured confidence which we have in you, and for the special love and zeal we suppose and think ye bear toward us and the publick and Commonwealth, unity and tranquillity of this our Realm, have specially elected and chosen you among so many, for this purpose, have repaid you such men, as unto whose wisdom, discretion, truth and fidelity, we might commit a matter of such great weight, moment, and importance as whereupon the unity and tranquillity of our Realm doth consist: If ye should contrary to our expectation and trust which we have in you, and against your Duty and Allegiance towards us, neglect or omit to do with all your diligence and wisdom, whatsoever shall be in your power for the due performance of our mind and pleasure to you before declared in this behalf, or halt, or flumble at any part or speciality of the same, be ye assured that we like a Prince of justice will so extremely punish you for the same, that all the World besides shall take by you example, and beware, contrary to their Allegiance, to disobey the Lawful commandment of their Sovereign Lord and Prince in such things, as by the faithful execution whereof, ye shall not only advance the honour of Almighty God, and set forth the Majesty and Imperial dignity of your Sovereign Lord, but also bring an inestimable Weal, Profit, and Commodity, Unity and Tranquillity to all the Common State of this our Realm, whereunto both by the Laws of God, Nature, and Man, ye be utterly bound.

Furthermore, That no man shall Cavil or Surmise this fatal fall and ruine of the Pope to have come rashly upon the Kings own partial affection, or by any sensual temerity of a few, and not by the grave and advised judgment, approbation, and consent, generally and publickly, as well of the Nobles and Commons Temporal, as also upon substantial grounds, and the very strength of truth, by the Discussion and Consultation of the Spiritual and most learned persons in this Realm: it shall be requisite moreover to these Premises to adjoin the Words and Testimonies also of the Bishops own Oaths and Profession made to the King, yielding and rendering unto him only the stile of Supreme head next under Christ of the Church of England, all other service, subjection, and obedience to be given to any other foreign Potentate, which should be prejudicial to the Kings Highness in this behalf, being excluded, and that both Frankly and Freely, of their own voluntary motion, and also upon the Faith and Fidelity of their Priesthood, as by their own words and hand-writing may appear, in form as hereunder followeth.

I Stephen Bishop of Winchester do purely of mine own voluntary accord, and absolutely, in the word of a Bishop, profess and promise to your Princely Majesty, my singular and chief Lord and Patron, Henry the Eighth by the grace of God, King of England and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in Earth of the Church of England supreme Head immediately under Christ, that from this day forward I shall Swear, Promise, Give, or cause to be Given to no foreign Potentate, Emperor, King, Prince, or Prelat, nor yet to the Bishop of Rome, whom they call Pope, any Oath or Fealty, directly or indirectly, either by word or writing; but at all times, and in every case and condition I shall Observe, Hold, and Maintain, to all effects and intents, the quarrel and cause of your Royal Majesty and your Successors, and to the uttermost of my power shall defend the same against all manner of persons whomsoever I shall know or suspect to be adversaries to your Majesty, or to your Successors; and shall give my Faith, Truth, and Obedience, Sincerely, and with my very heart, only to your Royal Majesty, as to my supreme Prince. I profess the Papacy of Rome not to be ordained of God by holy Scripture, but constantly do affirm, and openly declare, and shall declare it, to be set up only by man, and shall cause diligently other men likewise to publish the same. Neither shall I enter any Treaty with any person or persons either privily or apertly, or shall consent thereto, that the Bishop of Rome shall have or exercise here any authority or jurisdiction, or is to be restored to any jurisdiction hereafter.

Furthermore, that the said Bishop of Rome now being, or any that shall succeed him hereafter in the said See is not to be called Pope nor Supreme Bishop or Universal Bishop, nor most holy Lord, but only ought to be called Bishop of Rome, and fellow Brother (as the old manner of the most ancient Bishops hath been;) this I shall to my power openly maintain and defend.

And I shall firmly Observe and cause to be Observed of other, to the uttermost of my cunning, wit, and power, all such Laws and Acts of this Realm, how and whatsoever, as have been enacted and established for the extirpation and suppression of the Papacy, and of the authority and jurisdiction of the said Bishop of Rome. Neither shall I appeal hereafter to the said Bishop of Rome, nor ever content to any person that shall appeal to him; neither shall I attempt, prosecute, or follow any suite in the Court of Rome, for any cause of right or justice to be had, or shall make answer to any Plea or Action, nor shall take upon me the person and office either of the Plaintiff or Defendant in the said Court. And if the said Bishop by his Messenger or by his Letters shall make any means or signification unto me, of any matter whatsoever it be, I shall with all speed and diligence make declaration and advertisement thereof, or cause the same to be signified either to your Princely Majesty, or to some of your secret Council, or to your Successors, or any of their Privy Council. Neither shall I send or cause to be sent at any time any writing, nor Messenger to the said Bishop or to his Court, without the knowledge and consent of your Majesty or your Successors willing me to send writing or Messenger unto him. Neither shall I procure, or give Counsel to any person to procure Bulls, Briefs, or Rescripts whatsoever, either for me or any other, from the said Bishop of Rome or his Court. And if any such shall be procured against my will and knowledge, either in general or in special, or else howsoever they shall be granted unto them, I shall utter and disclose the same, and not consent therunto, nor use them in any case, and shall cause them to be brought to your Majesty, or your Successors.

Furthermore, for the confirmation hereof I give my Faith and Truth by firm promise, and in the Faith of a Bishop, that against this my foresaid profession and promise made, I shall defend my self by no dispensation, exemption, nor any remedy or caveat of Law or example, during this my natural life. And if heretofore I have done or made any profession in prejudice of this my profession and promise here made; the same I do revoke at this present, and for ever hereafter, and here utterly do renounce, by these presents. Whereunto I have subscribed and underwritten the name both of my self and of my Bishoprick, with my proper Hand, and thereto also have put my Seal, in perpetual and undoubted testimony of the Premises.

A Letter of the University of Cambridge.

Whereas

[KING.] Whereas now of late it hath risen up in question among us, concerning the power of the Bishop of Rome, which he doth both claim to himself by the holy Scripture over all Provinces and Nations in Christendom, and hath now of long time exercised in this Realm of England: and forasmuch as our censure concerning the cause is required, to wit, Whether the Bishop of Rome hath any power or authority in this Kingdom of England allotted to him by God in the Scripture, more than any other foreign Bishop, or no: We thought it therefore good reason, and our duty for the searching out of the verity of the said question, that we should employ therein our whole endeavour and study, whereby we might render and publish to the world, what our reason and censure is touching the premises. For therefore we suppose, that Universities were first provided and instituted of Princes, to the end that both the people of Christ might in the Law of God be instructed, and also that false errors, if any did rise, might through the vigilant care and industry of learned Divines be diffused, extinguished, and utterly rooted out. For the which cause we in our assemblies and Convocations (after our accustomed manner) resorting and conferring together upon the question aforesaid, and studiously debating and deliberating with our selves how and by what order we might best proceed for the finding out of the truth of the matter; and at length chusing out certain of the best learned Doctors and Bachelors of Divinity, and other Masters, have committed to them in charge, studiously to inquire and peruse the places of holy Scripture, by the viewing and conferring of which places together, they might certify us what is to be said to the question propounded.

The censure of the University of Cambridge against the Popes supremacy.

Forasmuch therefore, as we having heard, and well advised, and thoroughly discussed in open disputations, what may be said on both parts of the foresaid question, those reasons and arguments do appear to us more probable, stronger, truer, and more certain, and founding much more near to the pure and native sense of Scriptures, which do deny the Bishop of Rome to have any such power given him of God in the Scripture. By reason and force of which arguments we being persuaded, and conjoyning thereto in one opinion, have with our selves thus decreed to answer unto the question aforesaid, and in these writings thus resolutely do answer in the name of the whole University, and for a conclusion undoubted do affirm, approve, and pronounce, that the Bishop of Rome hath no more State, authority, and jurisdiction given him of God in the Scriptures, over this Realm of England, than any other extem Bishop hath. And in testimony and credence of this our answer and affirmation, we have caused our common Seal to be put to these our foresaid Letters accordingly.

YOU have heard before of Stephen Gardener, of Lee, of Tonstai, and of Stokesley, how of their voluntary mind they made their profession unto the King, every one severally, taking and accepting a corporal Oath, utterly and for ever to renounce and reject the usurped superiority of the Bishop of Rome. Now for a further testimony and declaration of their judgments and opinions which then they were of, following the force both of truth and of time then present, ye shall hear over and beside their Oaths, what the foresaid Bishops in their own Books, Prologues, and Sermons do write, and publish abroad in Print, touching the said cause of the Popes Supremacy.

And first, God willing, to begin with Stephen Gardener's Book De vera obedientia, we will briefly note out a few of his own words, wherein with great Scriptures and good deliberation he not only confuteth the Popes usurped authority, but also proveth the Marriage between the King and Queen Katherine his Brothers Wife not to be good nor lawful, in these words.

Of the which moral precepts in the old Law, to speak of some (for to rehearse all it needs not) the Levitical precepts touching forbidden and incestuous Marriages, as far as they concern chaste and pure wedlock, wherein original of mans increase consisteth, are always to be reputed of such sort, that although they were first given to the Jews, yet because they appertain to the Law of Nature, and expound the same more plainly to us, therefore they belong as well to all manner of people of the whole world for evermore. In which doubtless, both the voice of nature and Gods Commandment agreeing in one, have forbidden that which is contrary and divers from the one and from the other. And amongst these, such there is commandment that a man shall not marry his Brothers Wife, what could the Kings excellent Majesty do otherwise, than he did by the whole consent of the people, and judgment of his Church, that is, to be divorced from unlawful Marriage, and use lawful and permitted copulation and obeying (as meet it was) conformably unto the commandment, call off her, whom neither Law nor right permitted him to retain, and take him to chaste and lawful Marriage? Wherein although the sentence of Gods word (whereunto all things ought to stoop) might have sufficed; yet his Majesty was content to have the assisting consents of the most notable grave men, and the censures of the most famous Universities of the whole world; and all to the intent that men should see he did both that he might do, and ought to do uprightly, seeing the best learned and most worthy men have subscribed unto; shewing therein such obedience as Gods Word requireth of every good and godly man; so as it may be said, that both he obeyed God, and obeyed him truly. Of which obedience, forasmuch as I am purposed to speak, I could not pass this thing over with silence, whereof occasion so commodiously was offered me to speak.

Winchesters Reasons against the Popes Supremacy.

MOREOVER, the said Gardener in the forenamed Book De vera obedientia, what constancy he pretendeth, what arguments he inferreth, how earnestly and pitifully he disputeth on the Kings side against the usurped state of the Bishop of Rome's authority, by the words of his Book it may appear: whereof a brief Collection here followeth.

IN the procees of his foresaid Book, he alledging the old distinction of the Papists, wherein they give to the Prince the regiment of things temporal and to the Church of things spiritual, comparing the one to the greater Light, the other to the lesser light, he confuteth and derideth the same distinction, declaring the sword of the Church to extend no farther, than to teaching and Excommunication, and referreth all preeminence to the sword of the Prince: alledging for this the second Psalm; And now you Kings be wise, and be learned ye that judge the Earth, &c.

The Sword of the Church how far it extendeth.

Also the example of Solomon, who being a King, according to his Fathers appointment ordained the Officers of the Priests in their ministeries, and Levites in their order, that they might give thanks, and minister before the Priests, after the order of every-day, and Porters in their divisions gate by gate.

And speaking more of the said Solomon, he saith: Exodus For so commanded the man of God, neither did the Priests nor Levites omit any thing of all that he had commanded, &c.

Beside this, he alledgeth also the Example of King Ezechi, 1 Reges chiar, 2 Paralip. 28. He alledgeth moreover the example and fact of Jusufin, which made laws touching the Faith, Bishops, Clerks, Heretics and such other.

Adam (saith he) obeyed Moses. Solomon gave sentence upon Abiathar the High Priest.

Alexander the King, in the first of Machabees writeth thus to Jonathan; Now we have made thee this day the High-priest of thy people, &c. So did Demetrius to Simon.

Then coming to the words of Christ spoken to Peter, Mat. 16. Matthew 16, upon which words the Pope pretendeth to build all his authority: To this he answereth, That if Christ by those words had limited to Peter any such special state or preeminency above all Princes, then were it not true that is written; Capit. Jesus docere & facere: forasmuch as the words of Christ should then be contrary to his own facts and example, who in all his life never usurped either to himself any such domination above Princes, shewing himself rather subject unto Princes: nor yet did ever permit in his Apostles any such example of ambition to be seen; but rather rebuked them for seeking any manner of majority amongst them.

And where he reasoneth of the Kings stile and title, being called King of England and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and supreme head in Earth of the Church of England immediately under Christ, &c. Thus he addeth his mind and censure, saying, that he seeth no cause in this Title, why any man should be offended, that the King is called head of the Church of England, rather than of the Realm of England; and addeth his reason thereto saying, If the Prince and King of England be the head of his Kingdom, that is, of all English men that be his Subjects, is there any cause why the same English Subjects should not be subject to the same head likewise in this respect because they are Christians, that is to say, for the title of godliness, as though that God, which is the cause of all obedience, should now be the cause of Rebellion?

At length thus he concludeth with an exclamation saying; To lay (saith he) that a King is the head of the Kingdom, and not of the Church, what an absurd and a foolish saying is this?

And further, adding for example the subjection of the Servant and Wife: If the Servant (saith he) be subject to his Master, or Wife to her Husband, being Infidels, doth their conversion afterward, or name of Christians, make them less Subjects than they were before? As Religion therefore doth not alter the authority of the Master over the Servant, nor of the Husband over the Wife; no more (saith he) doth it between the Prince and Subject.

Paul making no exception nor distinction of subjection, save only of that which belongeth to God, willett all men to obey their Princes; And what Princes? Those Princes which bear the Sword. And although we are bound by the Scripture to obey our Bishops and spiritual Pastors of the Church, yet that obedience diminisheth nothing, the chief and head authority that ought to be given to the Prince, no more than the obedience of the Servant to his Master, or of the Wife to her Husband exempteth them from subjection due to their superior powers.

And herewithal he inferreth a principle of the Law: Divers jurisdictions (saith he) proceeding from one person do not mar nor hinder themselves, but rather do confirm and fortifie one another.

Again, whereas the Bishop of Rome under the name of Peter doth appropriate to himself the highest place in the Church, for that he is the Successor of Peter: thereunto he answereth in one word, but in that one word he answereth enough, and to the full: I would (saith he) he were; for so in very deed he might well exceed and pass all Kings and Princes, if not in preeminency of Dignity, yet in admiration and excellency of Vertue. In which kind of superiority the Lord Christ would his Apostles and Ministers to go before all Kings and Emperors in the whole world.

After this, in prosecuting the argument of Peters confession, he argueth thus and saith; That as flesh and blood did not reveal to Peter that confession, so neither was that Prerogative given to the flesh and blood of Peter, but to the better part, that is, to the spirit of Peter, which is to mean, in respect of the spiritual confession of Peter, and not in respect of any carnal place or person, &c.

Item, If the Scholer ought not to be above the Master, how then could either Peter take that upon him, which Christ his Master so constantly did refuse; or how can the Bishop of Rome now claim that by Succession, whereof no example is to be found either in the head, or his Predecessor before him? for so we read in Exe. 36, both of Peter, James, and John, that they did arrogate no such primacy unto them, but were content that James, furnished Justus, should be the Bishop of the Apostles.

And as for the name and signification of the word Primatus, i. Primacy, if it be taken for the first nomination, or the first place given, so he granteth that Peter had the preferment of the first name and place in the order of the Apostles. But it followeth not, that with this primacy he had also a Kingdom given. And though he were bid of the Lord to confirm his brethren, yet was he not bid to exercise an impery upon his brethren; for so were they not his brethren, but his Subjects.

That Peter was Primus, that is, first or chief in the number of them which confessed Christ, it is not to be denied. For first he confessed, first he taught the Jews, first he stood in defence of the verity, and was the first and chief prolocutor among them; but yet that maketh not, that he should therefore vindicate a general primacy and rule over all other states, and potentates of the World, no more than Apelles, because he is noted the first and chief of all Painters, therefore ought to bear rule over all Painters; or because the University of Paris is nominate for the first and chief of other Universities, shall therefore the French King, and all other Princes in their public administration, wherein they are set of God, become subjects and underlings to that University?

Thus after many other reasons and persuasions contained in said Book De Obedientia (for I do but superficially skim over the top only of his probations and arguments) Finally in the end, of his probation, he concludeth the whole summe of his mind, in this effect; first, denying that the Bishop of Rome had ever any such extern jurisdiction assigned to him absolutely from God, to reign over Kings and Princes. For the probation whereof he hath alleged sufficiently, as he saith, the examples and doings of Christ himself, which ought to be to us all a sufficient document.

And as concerning the term of Primacy, albeit it is used sometime of the Fathers, yet the matter being well considered and rightly expounded, maketh nothing for the large dominion of the Bishop of Rome, which now he doth usurpe.

Also as for the Prerogatives granted unto Peter, by the which Prerogatives, our Saviour would Crown his own gifts given unto him, crowning not the flesh and blood of Peter, but the marvellous testimony of his confession, all this maketh nothing for the Popes purpose.

Likewise as concerning the local succession of Peter, the Pope hath nothing thereby to claim. If he will be Successor of Peter, he must succeed him in Faith, Doctrine, and conditions; and in so doing, he neither will, neither yet shall need to seek for honour, but shall be honoured of all good men, according as a good man should be; and that much more than he being a good man would require.

And thus Stephen Winchester taking his leave and bidding the Pope farewell, endeth with a friendly exhortation, willing him to be wise and circumspect, and not to strive stubbornly against the truth. The light of the Gospel, saith he, so spreadeth his beams in all mens eyes, that the works of the Gospel be known, the mysteries of Christs Doctrine are opened; both learned and unlearned, men and women being Englishmen born, do see and perceive, that they have nothing to do with Rome, nor with the Bishop of Rome, but that every Prince in his own dominion is to be taken and accepted as a Vicar of God, and Vicegerent of Christ in his own bounds. And therefore seeing this order is taken of God, and one in the Church should bear the Office of teaching, another should bear the Office of ruling (which Office is only limited to Princes) he exhorteth him to consider the truth, and to follow the same, wherein consisteth our true and special obedience, &c.

To this Book of Stephen Winchester De Obedientia we will adjoin for good fellowship the Preface also of Edm. Bonner, Archdeacon then of Leicester, prefixed before the same, to the intent that the Reader seeing the judgments of these men as they were then, and again the sudden mutation afterward of the said parties of the contrary opinion, may learn thereby what vain glory and pompe of this world can work in the frail nature of man, where Gods grace lacketh to sustain. KING'S Bonner, before the said Book of Winchester, De obedientia, proceedeth thus in effect, as followeth:

The Preface of Edmund Bonner, Arch-deacon of Launcester, prefixed before Stephen Gardners Book, De vera obedientia.

Bonner's Preface before Winchester's Book of Obedience.
Quoniam Jam
FOrasmuch as some there be no doubt (as the judgments of Men be always variable) which think the controversy which is between the Kings Royal Majesty, and the Bishop of Rome, consisteth in this point, for that his Majesty hath taken the most excellent and most vertuous Lady Ann to Wife, which in very deed is far otherwise, and nothing so: to the intent therefore that all true hearty favourers of the Gospel of Christ, which hate not, but love the Truth, may the more fully understand the chief point of the controversy, and because they shall not be ignorant what is the whole voice and resolute determination of the best and greatest learned Bishops, with all the Nobles and Commons of England, not only in that cause of Matrimony, but also in defending the Doctrine of the Gospel: here shall be published the Oration of the Bishop of Winchester (a Man excellently learned in all kind of Learning) entitled De vera obedientia; that is, concerning true obedience. But as touching this Bishops worthy praises, there shall be nothing spoken of me at this time, not only because they are truth and in infinite, but because they are far better known to all Christians, then becometh me here to make rehearsal. And as for the Oration it self (which as it is most learned, so it is most elegant) to what purpose should I make any words of it, seeing it traileth it self enough, and seeing good Wine needeth no Taverner-Bush to utter it? But yet in this Oration, whosoever thou art, most gentle Reader, thou shalt beside other matters see it notably and learnedly handled, of what importance, and how invincible the power and excellency of Gods Truth is, which as it may now and then be pressed of the Enemies, so it cannot possibly be oppressed and darkened after such sort, but it sheweth it self again at length more glorious and more welcome. Thou shalt see also touching Obedience, that it is subject to truth, and what is to be judged true obedience. Besides this, of Mens traditions, which for the most part be most repugnant against the truth of Gods Law. And there by the way, he speaketh of the Kings said Highness Marriage, which by the ripe Judgment, Authority, and Priviledge of the most and principal Universities of the World, and then with the consent of the whole Church of England, be contracted with the most Excellent, and most Noble Lady Queen Ann. After that, touching the Kings Majesties Title, as pertaining to the Supreme head of the Church of England. Last of all, of the false pretended Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome in the Realm of England most justly abrogated: and how all other Bishops being fellow-like to him in their function, yea and in some points above him within their own Provinces, were before-time bound to the King by their Oath.

But be thou most surely persuaded of this, good Reader, That the Bishop of Rome, if there were no cause else but only this Marriage, would easily content himself, specially having some good morsel or other given him to chew upon. But when he seeth so mighty a King, being a right vertuous and a great learned Prince, so sincerely and so heartily favour the Gospel of Christ, and perceiving the yearly and great prey (yea so large a prey, that it came to as much almost as all the Kings Revenues) snatched out of his hands, and that he can no longer exercise his Tyranny in the Kings Majesties Realm (as alas heretofore too cruel and bitter) nor make Laws, as he hath done many, to the contumely and reproach of the Majesty of God, which is evident that he hath done in time past; under the title of the Catholick Church, and the Authority of Peter and Paul (when notwithstanding he was a very ravening Wolf, dressed in Sheeps clothing, calling himself the Servant of Servants) to the great damage of the Christian Common-wealth: here, here began all the mischief, thereof rose these discords, these diadly malices, and so great and terrible brawling: For if it were not thus, could any Man believe that this Jupiter of Olympus, (which falsely hath arrogated unto himself an absolute power without controulment) would have wrought so diligently by all means possible, to stir up all other Kings and Princes so traiterously against this so good and godly and so true Gospel-like Prince, as he hath done? Neither let it move thee (gentle Reader) that Winchester did not before now apply to this Opinion: for he himself in this Oration sheweth the cause why he did it not. And if he had said never a word, yet thou knowest well what a witty part it is for a Man to suspend his judgment, and not to be too rash in giving of Sentence. It is an old said saw; Mary Magdalen profited us less in her quick belief that Christ was risen, than Thomas that was longer in doubt. A Man may rightly call him Fabius, that with his advised taking of leisure restored the matter. Albeit I speak not thus as if Winchester had not looked out this matter secretly with himself before hand (for he without doubt tried it out long ago) but that running fast and lightly he would first with his painful study pluck the matter out of the dark, although of it self it was clear enough, but by reason of sundry Opinions it was lapped up in darkness, and then did he debate it wittily to and fro: and so at last after long and great deliberation had in the matter, because there is no better counsellor than leisure and time, he would resolutely with his learned and confirmed judgment confirm it.

Thou shouldest, gentle Reader, esteem his censure and authority to be of more weighty credence, inasmuch as the matter was not rashly and at all adventures, but with judgment (as thou seest) and with wisdom examined and discussed. And this is no new example, to be against the tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, seeing that not only this Man, but many Men oftentimes, yea and right great learned Men afore now, have done the same even in writing, whereby they both painted him out in his right colours, and made his sleights, falsehood, frauds and deceitful wyles openly known to the World. Therefore if thou at any time heretofore have doubted either of true obedience, or of the Kings Majesties Marriage, or Title, or else of the Bishop of Rome: false pretended Supremacy, as if thou hadst a good smelling Nose, and a sound Judgment, I think thou didst not: yet having read this Oration, (which, if thou favour the Truth, and hate the Tyranny of the Bishop of Rome, and his fanatical fraudulent falsehood, shall doubtless wonderfully content thee) forsake thine Error, and acknowledge the Truth now freely offered thee at length, confiding with thy self, that it is better late for to do so, than never to repent. Fare thou heartily well, most gentle Reader, and not only love this most valiant King of England and of France, who undoubtedly was by the Providence of God born to defend the Gospel, but also honour him and serve him most obediently. As for this Winchester, who was long ago without doubt reputed among the greatest learned Men, give him thy good word, with highest commendation.

The end of Bishop Bonner's Prologue

What Man reading and advising this Book of Winchester, De vera Obedientia, with Bonners Preface before the same, would ever have thought any alteration could so work in Mans heart, to make these Men thus to turn the Cat (as they say) in the Pan, and to start so suddenly from the Truth so manifestly known, so pithily proved, so vehemently defended, and (as it seemed) so faithfully subscribed? If they dissembled all this that they wrote, subscribed, and swore unto: what perjury most execrable was it before God and Man? If they meant good Faith, and spake then as they thought, what pestilent blindness is this so suddenly fallen upon them, to make that false now, which was true before, or that to be now true, which before was false? Thus to fay and unfay, and then to fay again, to do and undo, and as a Man would say to play fast or loose with truth, truly a Man may say is not the doing of a Man which is in any case to be trusted, whatsoever he doth or saith. But here a Man may see what Man is of himself, when Gods good humble Spirit lacketh to be his guide.

The Sermon of Tonsal before the King, made on Palm-Sunday.

Furthermore, to add unto them the judgment also and argument of Tonsal Bishop of Duresme, let us see how he agreeth with them, or rather much exceedeth them, in his Sermon made before King Henry upon Palm-Sunday, remaining yet in Print: in the which Sermon disputing against the wrongful Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, he proves by manifest grounds most effectually, both out of the Scripture, ancient Doctors, and of Councils, not only that the Bishop of Rome hath no such Authority by the Word of God committed to him, as he doth challenge; but also in requiring and challenging the same he reproveth and condemneth him with great zeal and ardent spirit, to be a proud Lucifer, disobedient to the ordinary powers of God set over him, contrary to Christ and Peter: and finally, in raising up War against us for the same, he therefore rebuketh and defeth him, as a most detestable fower of discord, and a murderer of Christian Men.

That Popes and Bishops ought to be subject to their Sovereigns.

First by the Scripture he reasoneth thus, and proveth, That all good Men ought to obey the Potestates and Governors of the World, as Emperors, Kings, and Princes of all sorts, what name soever the said supreme powers do bear or use for their Countries in which they be; for so 1 Pet. 2. doth plainly teach us, 1 Pet. 2. saying, Be ye subject to every human creature for Gods cause, whether it be King, as chief head, or Dukes or Governors, &c. So that St. Peter in his Epistle commandeth all worldly Princes in their office to be obeyed as the Ministers of God, by all Christian Men: and according unto the same, St. Paul, Rom. 13. saith, Let every living man be subject to the high powers; for the high powers be of God, and whosoever resisteth the high powers, resisteth the ordinance of God, and purchaseth thereby to himself damnation.

And in the same place of Tonsal it followeth. And lest Men should forget their duty of obedience to their Princes, it is thrice repeated, That they be the Ministers of God, whose place in their governance they represent: to that unto them all Men must obey, Apostles, Patriarchs, Primates, Archbishops, Bishops, Priests, and all of the Clergy, &c. And therefore, saith he, the Bishop of Rome, oweth to his Sovereign and Superior like subjection by the Word of God, taught unto us by Peter and Paul, as other Bishops do to their Princes, under whom they be, &c.

Also, an other expresse Commandment we have of Christ, Luke 22. who upon the occasion of his Disciples striving for superiority, discuteth the matter, saying on this Luke 22. wife, The Kings of the people and Nations have dominion over them, and those that have power over them be called gracious Lords; but so it shall not be amongst you: but whosoever amongst you is the greater, shall be as the younger; and whosoever amongst you shall be chief, shall be as a servant and a Minister, &c.

And again, Christ speaking to Pilate of his Kingdom, John 18. declareth that his Kingdom is not of this World, and therefore saith Tonsal, those that go about to make of Christs Spiritual Kingdom a Wordly Kingdom, do fall into the Error of some Hereticks that look that Christ, after the Day of Judgment, shall reign with all his Saints here in the Earth carnally in Jerusalem; the Jews do believe that Messiah is yet to come, and when he shall come, he shall Reign worldly in Jerusalem.

By these and such other places it may well appear, That Christ neither before his Incarnation, (as Tonsal saith) nor after his Incarnation, did ever alter the Authority of Wordly Kings and Princes, but by his own Word commanded them still to be obeyed of their subjects, as they had been in the ancient time before, &c. and for example of the same he alledgeth first the example of Christ himself, Matth. 22. who being asked of the Jews, Whether they should give tribute to Caesar or no, he bade them give to Caesar those things that be his, and to God those things that be his: signifying, that Tribute was due to Caesar, and that their Souls were due to God, &c.

Mat. 22. Examples of Christs humble subjection.

Also in the seventeenth of Matthew it appeareth that Christ bade Peter pay tribute for him and his Disciples, when it was demanded of him. And why? Because he would not change the order of obedience to Wordly Princes due by their Subjects, &c.

Another example of Christ he citeth out of the 6th of John 6. John, where after Christ had fed five thousand and more, with a few Loaves, and fewer Fishes, and that the Jews would have taken him and made him their King, he fled from them, and would not consent unto them: For the Kingdom, saith he, that he came to set here in Earth, was not a Wordly and Temporal Kingdom, but an Heavenly and Spiritual Kingdom; that is, to reign Spiritually by Grace and Faith in the hearts of all Christian and Faithful people, of what degree, or of what nature soever they be, and to turn all People and Nations, which at his coming were carnal and lived after the lusts of the Flesh, to be Spiritual, and to live after the lusts of the Spirit, that Christ with his Father of Heaven might reign in the hearts of all Men, &c.

And here in these examples of Christs humility farther is to be noted, how Christ the Son of God did submit himself not only to the rulers and powers of this World, but also dejected himself, and in a manner became servant to his own Apostles: so far off was he from all ambitious and pompous seeking of Wordly honour: for so it appeared in him, not only by walking the Feet of his Apostles, but also the same time a little before his Passion, when the Apostles fell at contention among themselves, who among them should be superior, he setting before them the example of his own subjection asketh this question: Who is superior; he that sitteth at the Table, or he that serveth at the Table? Is not he Superior that sitteth? but I am amongst you, as he that minstreth, and serveth, &c.

The like examples Tonsal also inferreth of Peter's Humility. For where we read in the Acts, how the Centurion, a Noble Man of great Age, did prostrate himself upon the ground at the feet of Peter; then Peter, not suffering that, eschewed him up and bade him rise, saying, I am also a man as thou art.

So likewise did the Angel, Apocalypse 19. and the 22d, Apoc. to whom when John would have fallen down to have adored him which shewed him those Visions, the Angel said unto him: See thou do not so; for I am the servant of God, as thou art, &c.

Again, in the foresaid Peter, what an example of reverent Humility is to be seen in this, that notwithstanding he with other Apostles having his Commission to go over all the World, yet nevertheless he being at Joppa, and sent for by Cornelius, durst not go unto him, without the Vision of a Sheet let down from Heaven, by the which Vision he was admonished not to refuse the Gentiles: or else he knew in himself no such Primacy over all people and places given unto him, nor no such Commission so large above the other, &c.

Furthermore, the said Peter, being rebuked of Paul his fellow Brother, took no scorn thereof, but was content, submitting himself to due correction.

But here saith Tonsal, steppeth in the Bishop of Rome and saith, That Peter had Authority given him above all the residue of the Apostles, and alledgeth the words of Christ spoken to him, Matth. the 16th. Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church, and will give to thee the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind upon Earth, shall be bound in Heaven. This said Christ, saith the Pope, and St. Peter is buried at Rome, whose successor I am, and ought to rule the Church, as Peter did, and to be Porter of Heavengates, as Peter was, &c.

And Christ said also to Peter after his Resurrection, John 21. Feed my sheep; which he sake to him only, so that thereby he had Authority over all that be of Christs flock; and I, as his successor have the same. And therefore who so will not obey me, King or Prince, I will curse him, and deprive him of his Kingdom of Signiory: for all power is given to me that Christ hath, and I am his Vicar-General as Peter was here in Earth over all, and none but I, as Christ is in Heaven.

KING 1. This ambitious and pompous objection, faith Tonsil, of the Pope and his adherents, hath of late years much troubled the World, and made dissension, debate, and open War in all parts of Christendom, and all by a wrong interpretation of the Scripture. Who if he would take those places after the right sense of them, as both the Apostles themselves taught us, and all the ancient best learned Interpreters do expound them, the matter were soon at a point. But otherwise, sith they pervert the Scripture, and preach another Gospel in that point to us, than ever the Apostles preached, we have therein a general rule to follow: That though an Angel came from Heaven, and would tell us such new expositions of those places, as are now made, to turn the words, which were spoken for Spiritual authority of preaching the Word of God and ministring of the Sacraments, to a worldly authority, we ought to reject him: as St. Paul willeth us, Galat. 1.

What is the Primacy of Peter, and how it cometh.

The honourable names of Peter in the old Doctors, how and wherefore they be given.

First, St. Paul, Gal. 2. plainly declareth the same, saying, That as the Apostleship of the Circumcision, that is, of the Jews, was given by Christ to Peter, so was the Apostleship of the Gentiles given to me among the Gentiles. Herby it appeareth that Paul knew no Primacy of Peter concerning people and places, but among the Jews. And thereof St. Ambrose, expounding that place faith thus: The Primacy of the Jews was given chiefly to Peter, albeit James and John were joyned with him; as the Primacy of the Gentiles was given to Paul, albeit Barnabas was joyned with him: so that Peter had no rule over all.

And Peter himself likewise, 1 Peter chapter 5, faith, Ye that be Priests feed the flock of God among you, &c.

So that by these Scriptures conferred together, it may appear, that neither the sixteenth Chapter of Matthew, nor the one and twentieth of John, do prove that Peter had power, authority, or dignity given him of Christ over all the other, that they should be under him: And yet notwithstanding his Primacy, in that he hath called the Apostles confessed Christ to be the Son of the living God (with the which confession all the other Apostles did consent,

Alfo in the Acts 10. when Peter was sent for to Corneilius a Gentile, he durst not go to him without a special Vision given him from Heaven by the Lord.

Item, That all the Apostles had like Dignity and Authority, it appeareth by St. Paul, Ephes. 2. where he faith, Now ye are not strangers nor Foreigners, but ye be Citizens with the Saints, and of the household of Almighty God, builded (faith he) upon the foundations of the Apostles and the Prophets, Christ being the corner-stone upon whom every edifice being builded, groweth up to an Holy Temple in our Lord, &c. Here he faith that they be builded not upon the Foundation of Peter only, but upon the Foundation of the Apostles, so that all they be in the Foundation set upon Christ the very Rock, whereupon standeth the whole Church.

In the 21st Chapter also of the Apocalypse, the new City, and the Heavenly Jerusalem of Almighty God is described of the Holy Ghost, not with one Foundation only of Peter, but with twelve foundations, after the number of the Apostles.

S. Cyprian, lib. de simplici Preslat. giveth Record likewise to the same, that the Apostles had equal Power and Dignity given to them by Christ: and because all should preach one thing, therefore the beginning thereof first came by one, which was Peter, who confessed for them all, That Christ was the Son of the living God. Saying further, That in the Church there is one office of all the Bishops, whereof every Man hath a part allowed wholly unto him. Now, if the Bishop of Rome may meddle over all, where he will, then every Man hath not wholly his part, for the Bishop of Rome may also meddle in his part jointly with him; so that now he hath it not wholly: which is against Cyprian.

S. Austen likewise expounding the Gospel of John, in the fiftieth Treaty, speaketh there of the Keys of Peter, which he faith were given of Christ to Peter, not for himself alone, but for the whole Church.

Cyrillus expounding the last Chapter of John, and there Cyprian in speaking of the Words of Christ spoken unto Peter, Feed my sheep, &c. thus understandeth the same: That because Peter had Thrice denied Christ, whereby he thought himself he had lost his Apostleship, Christ to comfort him again, and to restore him to his Office that he had lost, asked him thrice whether he loved him, and he restored him again to his Office, which else he durst not have presumed unto; saying unto him, Feed my sheep, &c. With which exposition the ancient Holy Expositors of that place do likewise agree. So that by these words of feeding Christs Sheep, the Bishop of Rome can take no advantage to maintain his Universal Pastoralty over all Christian Dominions.

Again, whereas the Bishop of Rome faith, that Peter by these words of Christ spoken to him hath a preeminency above the other, S. Paul, Acts 20. proveth the contrary, where he, speaking to the Bishops assembled at Milete, faith to them, Take heed to your selves, and to the flock, in which the Holy-Ghost hath put you to be governors, &c.

And Peter himself likewise, 1 Peter chapter 5, faith, Ye that be Priests feed the flock of God among you, &c.

So that by these Scriptures conferred together, it may appear, that neither the sixteenth Chapter of Matthew, nor the one and twentieth of John, do prove that Peter had power, authority, or dignity given him of Christ over all the other, that they should be under him: And yet notwithstanding his Primacy, in that he hath called the Apostles confessed Christ to be the Son of the living God (with the which confession all the other Apostles did consent, and also preached the same) standeth still. Which confession first by Peter made, all other that will be saved must follow also, and be taught to confess the same. And thus the Bishops of Rome power over all, which he would prove by those places wrongfully alledged for his purpose, utterly quailth, and is not proved. And thus much for the Scriptures and Doctors.

Now further proceeding in this matter, the said Tonsal cometh to Councils, and Examples of the Primitive Church, as followeth:

Examples of the Primitive Church against the Popes Supremacy.

The Supremacy of Rome reproved by the Council of Nice.

The Council of Nice testified by Paulinus the Pope's Legate.

The sixth Article of Nice's Council. The four chief Patriarchs equal in power.

Pope Vitalianus subscribed to the Emperor. 62. Dis. Agatho. 62. Dis. cum longo.

Fausinus, Legate to the Bishop of Rome, in the sixth Council of Carthage, alledged that the Bishop of Rome ought to have the ordering of all great matters in all places by his Supreme Authority, bringing no Scripture for him (for at that time no Scripture was thought to make for it) but alledged for him, and that truly, the first Council of Nice to make for his purpose. After this, when the Book was brought forth, and no such Article found in it, but the contrary, yet the Council at that time sent to Constantinople, Alexandria, and Antioch, where the Patriarchal Sees were, to have the true Copy of the Council of Nice, which was sent unto them. And another Copy also was sent from Rome, whither also they sent for the same purpose.

After that the Copy was brought to them, and no such Article found in it, but in the fifth Chapter thereof the contrary, that all causes Ecclesiastical should either be determined within the Diocess, or else, if any were grieved, then to appeal to the Council provincial, and there the matter to take full end, so that for no such causes Men should go out of their Provinces; the whole Council of Carthage wrote to Celestine, at that time being Bishop of Rome, That since the Council of Nice had no such Article in it, as was truly alledged by Fausinus, but the contrary, they desired him to obtain hereafter to make any more such demand, denouncing unto him that they would not suffer any cause great or small, to be brought by Appeal out of their Country; and thereupon made a Law, That no Man should Appeal out of the Country of Africa, upon pain to be denounced accursed. Where-with the Bishop of Rome ever after held him content, and made no more business with them, seeing he had nought to say for himself to the contrary. And at this Council St. Augustine was present, and subscribed his hand. Read more hereof before.

It was determined also in the sixth Article of the said Council of Nice, That in the Orient the Bishop of Antioch should be chief; in Egypt the Bishop of Alexandria; about Rome the Bishop of Rome; and likewise in other Countries the Metropolitan should have their prebeminence: so that the Bishop of Rome never had meddling in those Countries.

And in the next Article following, the Bishop of Jerusalem (which City before had been destroyed, and almost desolate) was restored to his old Prerogative, to be the chief in Palestine and in the Country of Jury.

By this ye see how the Patriarch of Rome, during all this time of the Primitive Church, had no such Primacy prebeminence above other Patriarchs, much less over Kings and Emperors, as may appear by Agatho Bishop of Rome long after that, in whole time was the sixth Council General. Which Agatho after his Election sent to the Emperor, then being at Constantinople, to have his Election allowed, before he would be Consecrate, after the old custom at the time used.

In like sort, another Bishop of Rome called Vitalianus did the same, as it is written in the Decrees, Distin. 63.

Cap. Agatho.

The like did St. Ambrose and St. Gregory before them, as it is written in the Chapter cum longo, in the same Distinction. During all which time the Bishops of Rome followed well the Doctrine of Saint Peter and St. Paul, left unto them, to be subjects, and to obey their Princes.

Thus after that Bishop Tonsal, playing the earnest Lutheran, both by Scriptures and ancient Doctors, also by examples sufficient of the Primitive Church, hath proved and declared, how the Bishops of Rome ought to submit themselves to the higher powers whom God hath appointed every Creature in this World to obey; now let us likewise see how the said Bishop Ton-sal describeth unto us his Disobedience intolerable, his Pride incomparable, and his malignant Malice most execrable.

And first speaking of the Disobedience of Adam and Eve, then of the Pride of Nabuchodonosor, and of Lucifer, at length he compareth the Bishops of Rome to them all. Who first for Disobedience refuse to obey Gods Commandment, and contrary to his Word will be above their Governours, in refusing to obey them.

Secondly, Besides this rebellious Disobedience in these Bishops of Rome, not sufferable, their Pride moreover so far exceedeth all measure, that they will have their Princes, to whom they owe subjection, prostrate upon the ground, to adore them by godly honour upon the Earth; and to kiss their Feet, as if they were God, whereas they be but wretched Men, and yet they look that their Princes should do it unto them, and also all other Christian-men, owing them no subjection, should do the same.

And who be these I pray you, that Men may know them? Surely (saith he) the Bishops of Rome be these whom I do mean, who following the Pride of Lucifer their Father, make themselves fellows to God, and do exalt their Seat above the Stars of God, and do ascend above the Clouds, and will be like to Almighty God. By the Stars of God be meant the Angels of Heaven; for as Stars do shew unto us in part the light of Heaven, so do Angels shew unto Men, shew the Heavenly Light of the grace of God to those to whom they be sent. And the Clouds signified in the Old Testament the Prophets, and in the New do signify the Apostles and Preachers of the Word of God. For as the Clouds do connect and gather in the Sky moisture, which they after pour down upon the Ground to make it thereby more fruitful; so the Prophets in the Old Testament, and the Apostles and Preachers in the New, do pour into our Ears the moisture of the Heavenly Doctrine of the Word of God, to make therewith by Grace our Souls, being fear and dry, to bring forth fruit of the Spirit. Thus do all ancient Expolitors, and amongst them St. Augustine, interpret to be meant in Scripture, Stars and Clouds, in the Expolition of the Five and fortieth Psalm.

But St. John the Evangelist writeth in the Nineteenth Chapter of the Apocalypse, and in the Two and twentieth also, that when he would have fallen down at the Angels Feet, that did shew him those Visions there written, to have adored him with godly worship, the Angel said unto him: See thou do not so, for I am the servant of God, as thou art: give adoration and godly worship to God, and not to me. Here it appeareth, that the Bishops of Rome suffering all Men prostrate before them to kiss their Feet (yea the same Princes, to whom they owe subjection) do climb up above the Stars and Angels too, offering their Feet to be kissed, with Shoes and all. For so I saw my self being present Four and thirty years ago, when Julius, then Bishop of Rome stood on his Feet, and one of his Chamberlains held up his skirt, because it stood not (as he thought) with his Dignity, that he should do it himself, that his Shoe might appear, whilst a Noble Man of great Age, did prostrate himself upon the Ground, and kissed his Shoe: which he faintly suffered to be done, as of duty. Where me think I saw Cornelius the Centurion, Captain of the Italian Band, spoken of in the Tenth Chapter of the Acts, submitting himself to Peter, and much honouring him: but I saw not Peter there to take him up, and to bid him rise, saying, I am a man as thou art, as St. Peter did say to Cornelius: so that the Bishops of Rome, admitting such adoration due unto God, do climb above the Heavenly Clouds; that is to say, above the Apostles sent into the World by Christ, to Water the Earthly and Carnal hearts of Men, by their Heavenly Doctrine of the Word of God.

Thus Bishop Tonsal having described the passing Pride of the Pope, surmounting like Lucifer above Bishops, Apostles, Angels and Stars of Heaven, proceeding then further, to the later end of his Sermon, cometh to speak of his rage and malice most furious and pefilant, in that he being justly put from his Kingdom here to wreak his spiteful malice, stirreth up War against us, and bloweth the Horn of mischief in giving our Land for a spoil and prey to all, whosoever at his setting

The Pope climbeth above the Apostles.

The Pope stirreth up War against England.

KING ou will come and invade us. But let us hear his own words preaching to the King and all Englishmen, touching both the Popes Malice, and the Treason of Cardinal Pool.

Now, faith he, because he can no longer in this Realm wrongfully use his Usurped power in all things (as he was wont to do) and suck out of this Realm by avarice insatiable, innumerable sums of Money yearly, to the great exhausting of the fame: he therefore, moved and repleat with furious ire and pestilent malice, goeth about to stir all Christian Nations, that will give ears to his Devilish enchantments, to move War against this Realm of England, giving it in prey to all those, that by his instigation will invade it.

giveth England away for a prey.

And here Expounding these foresaid words (To give in prey) he declareth what great mischief they contain, and willett every true Englishman well to mark the same. First to make this Realm, faith he, a prey to all venturers, all spoilers, all unspaurious, all scorn hopes, all cornorants, all ravengers of the World, that will invade this Realm, is to say, Thou possessor of any Lands of this Realm, of what degree soever thou be, from the highest to the lowest, shalt be slain and destroyed, and thy Lands taken from thee by those that will have all for themselves: and thou shalt be sure to be slain, for they will not suffer thee, nor none of thy progeny to live to make any claim afterward, or to be revenged, for that were their unfeigny. Thy Wife shall be abused before thy face: thy Daughter likewise defoured before thee: thy Children slain before thine eyes: thy House spoiled: thy Cartel driven away and fold before thy visage: Thy Plate, thy Money by force taken from thee; all thy Goods, wherein thou hast any delight, or hast gathered for thy Children, ravens, broken and distributed in thy presence, that every ravener may have his share. Thou Merchant art sure to be slain, for thou hast either Money or Ware, or both, which they search for. Thou Bishop or Priest, whatsoever thou be, shalt never escape, because thou wouldst not take the Bishop of Rome part, and rebel against God and thy Prince, as he doth. If thou shalt flee and escape for a season, whatsoever thou be, thou shalt see and hear of so much misery and abomination, that thou shalt judge them happy that be dead before: for sure it is, thou shalt not finally escape: for, to take the whole Realm in prey, is to kill the whole People, and to take the place for themselves, as they will do if they can.

Cardinal
to England.

And the Bishop of Rome now of late, to set forth his pestilent malice the more, hath allured to his purpose a subject of this Realm, Reginald Pool, comen of a Noble blood, and thereby the more errant Traitor, to go about from Prince to Prince, and from Country to Country, to stir them to War against this Realm, and to destroy the same, being his Native Country: whose pestilent purpose, the Princes that he breaketh it unto have in much abomination, both for that the Bishop of Rome, (who being a Bishop should procure Peace) is a stirrer of War, and because this most errant and unkind Traitor is his minister to so devilish a purpose, to destroy the Country that he was born in, which any Heathen Man would abhor to do.

name and
abolished.

And so continuing in his Discourse against Cardinal Pool and the Bishop of Rome for stirring the People to War and Mischief, he further faith, and faith truly, That for these many years past, little War hath been in these parts of Christendom, but the Bishop of Rome either hath been a stirrer of it, or a nourisher of it, and seldom any compounder of it, unless it were for his ambition or profit. Wherefore since, as St. Paul faith, That God is not the God of dissension, but of peace, who commandeth by his Word, Peace alway to be kept; we are sure that all those that go about to break Peace between Realms, and to bring them to War, are the Children of the Devil, what holy names soever they pretend to cloak their pestilent malice withal; which cloaking under Hypocrisy is double devilishness, and of Christ most detested, because under his blessed name they do play the Devils part.

And in the later end of his Sermon, concluding with the thirty ninth Chapter of Ezekiel, where the Prophet speaketh against Gog and Magog, going about to destroy the People of God, and prophesieth against them, That the People of God shall vanquish and overthrow them on the Mountains of Israel, that none of them shall escape, but their Carcasses shall there be devoured of Wolves and Crows, and Birds of the Air; so likewise faith he of these our Enemies, wilhing, that if they shall persist in their pestilent malice to make Invasion into this Realm, then their great Captain Gog (the Bishop of Rome he meaneth) may come with them to drink with them of the same Cup, which he maliciously goeth about to prepare for us, that the People of God might after live quietly in Peace.

The Pope
compared to Gog.

We have heard hitherto the Oaths, Censures, and Judgments of certain particular Bishops, of Tork, of Winchester, of London: of Durresme, and also of Edmund Bonner, Archdeacon then of Leicester, against the Popes unlawful Usurpation. Now for the more fortification of the matter, and satisfying of the Reader, it shall not be much out of purpose, besides the content and approbation of these aforesaid, to inter also the publick and general agreement of the whole Clergy of England, as in a total sum together, confirmed and ratified in their own publick Book, made and set forth by them about the same time, called then The Bishops Book. In the which Book, although many things were very slender and imperfect, yet as touching this cause of the Bishop of Romes Regality, we will hear (God willing) what their whole Opinion and Provincial determination did conclude, according as by their own words in the same Book is to be seen word for word, as followeth, subscribed also with their own names; the Catalogue of whom, under their own confession, shall appear.

WE think it convenient, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach the people committed unto their spiritual charge, that whereas certain Men do imagine and affirm, That Christ should give unto the Bishop of Rome Power and Authority, not only to be Head and Governor of all Priests and Bishops in Christs Church, but also to have and occupy the whole Monarchy of the World in his hands, and that he may thereby Lawfully Depose Kings and Princes from their Realms, Dominions and Seigniories, and to transfer and give the same to such persons as him liketh, That is utterly false and untrue; for Christ never gave unto St. Peter, or unto any of the Apostles, or their successors, any such Authority. And the Apostles, St. Peter and St. Paul, do teach and command, That all Christian people, as well Priests and Bishops, as others, should be obedient and subject unto the Princes and Potentates of the World, although they were Infidels.

And as for the Bishop of Rome, it was many hundred years after Christ, before he could acquire or get any Primacy or Governance above any other Bishops, out of his Province in Italy: since the which time he hath ever Usurped more and more. And though some part of his power was given to him by the consent of the Emperors, Kings and Princes, and by the consent also of the Clergy in General Councils assembled: yet surely he attained the most part thereof by marvelous subtilty and craft, and especially by colluding with great Kings and Princes, sometime training them into his Devotion by pretence and colour of Holiness and Sanctimony, and sometime constraining them by force and tyranny. Whereby the said Bishops of Rome aspired and rose at length unto such greatness in strength and authority, that they presumed and took upon them to be Heads, and to put Laws by their own Authority, not only unto all other Bishops within Christendom, but also unto the Emperors, Kings, and other the Princes and Lords of the World, and that under the pretence of the Authority committed unto them by the Gospel. Wherein the said Bishops of Rome do not only abuse and pervert the true sense and meaning of Christs Word; but they do also clean contrary to the use and custom of the Primitive Church; and so do manifestly violate, as well the Holy Canons made in the Church immediately after the time of the Apostles,

First the General Council of Nice Decreed, That the Patriarchs of Alexandria, and Antiochia, should have like power over the countries as about those Cities, as the Bishops of Rome had over the Countries about Rome.

In the Council of Milev: taken, it was Decreed, That if a clerk of Africa would Appeal out of Africa unto any Bishop beyond the Sea, he should be taken as a person Excommunicate.

as also the Decrees and Constitutions made in that behalf by the Holy Fathers of the Catholick Church, assembled in the first General Councils. And finally, they do transgress their own profession, made in their Creation. For all the Bishops of Rome always, when they be Consecrated and made Bishops of that See, do make a solemn Profession and Vow, That they shall inviolably observe and keep all the Ordinances made in the eight first General Councils: among the which it is specially provided and enacted, That all Causes shall be finished and determined within the Province where the same begun, and that by the Bishops of the same Province, and that no Bishop shall exercise any Jurisdiction out of his own Diocess or Province; and divers such other Canons were then made and confirmed by the said Councils to repress and take away out of the Church all such Primacy and Jurisdiction over Kings and Bishops, as the Bishops of Rome pretend now to have over the same. And we find that divers good Fathers, Bishops of Rome, did greatly reprove, yea, and abhor (as a thing cleau contrary to the Gospel, and the Decrees of the Church) that any Bishop of Rome, or elsewhere, should presume, usurp, or take upon him the title and name of the Universal Bishop, or of the Head of all Priests, or of the Highest Priest, or any such like title. For confirmation whereof, it is out of all doubt, that there is no mention made, neither in Scripture, nor in the Writings of any Autherical Doctor or Author of the Church, being within the time of the Apostles, that Christ did ever make or institute any distinction or difference to be in the pre-eminence of Power, Order, or Jurisdiction, between the Apostles themselves, or between the Bishops themselves, but that they were all equal in Power, Order, Authority and Jurisdiction. And that there is now, and since the time of the Apostles, any such diversity, or difference among the Bishops, it was devised by the ancient Fathers of the Primitive Church for the conservation of good Order and Unity of the Catholick Church, and that either by the consent and authority, or else at the least by the permission and sufferance of the Princes, and Civil Powers for the time Ruling, &c.

And shortly after followeth; And for the better confirmation of this part, we think it also convenient, that all Bishops and Preachers shall instruct and teach the people committed unto their Spiritual charge, that Christ did by express words prohibit, that none of his Apostles, nor any of their Successors should, under the pretence of the Authority given unto them by Christ, take upon them the Authority of the Sword; that is to say, the Authority of Kings, or of any Civil Power in this World, yea, or any Authority to make Laws or Ordinances in Causes appertaining unto Civil Powers. Truth it is, the Priests and Bishops may execute all such Temporal Power and Jurisdiction, as is committed unto them by the Ordinance and Authority of Kings, or other Civil Powers, and by the consent of the people (as Officers and Ministers under the said Kings and Powers) so long as it shall please the said Kings and People to permit and suffer them so to use and execute the same. Notwithstanding, if any Bishop of what Estate or Dignity soever he be, be he Bishop of Rome, or of any other City, Province, or Diocess, do presume to take upon him Authority or Jurisdiction in Causes or Matters which appertain unto Kings, and the Civil Powers and their Courts, and will maintain or think that he may so do by the Authority of Christ and his Gospel, although the Kings and Princes would not permit and suffer him so to do; no doubt, that Bishop is not worthy to be called a Bishop, but rather a Tyrant, and an Usurper of other Mens rights, contrary to the Laws of God, and is worthy to be reputed none otherwise, than he that goeth about to subvert the Kingdom of Christ. For the Kingdom of Christ in his Church is a Spiritual, and not a Carnal Kingdom of the World; that is to say, the very Kingdom that Christ by himself, or by his Apostles and Disciples sought here in this World, was to bring all Nations from the Carnal Kingdom of the Prince of Darkness unto the Light of his Spiritual Kingdom, and so himself to reign in the hearts of the People, by Grace, Faith, Hope, and Charity. And therefore, such Christ did never seek nor exercise any Worldly Kingdom or Dominion in this World, but rather, refusing and flying from the same, did leave the said Worldly governance of Kingdoms, Realms, and Nations, to be governed by Princes and Potentates, (in like manner as he did find them) and commanded also his Apostles and Disciples to do the semblable, as it was said before; whatsoever Priest, or Bishop will arrogate or presume to take upon him any such Authority, and will pretend the Authority of the Gospel for his defence therein, he doth nothing else but (in a manner as you would say) Crowne Christ again with a Crown of Thorns, and traducheth and bringeth him forth again with his Mantle of Purple upon his Back, to be mocked and scorned of the World, as the Jews did to their own damnation.

This Doctrine was subscribed and allowed by the Witnesses and Testimony of these Bishops and other learned Men, whose names hereunder follow, as appeareth in the Bishops Book before named.

Judge

In the General Council of Constantinople the first, it was likewise decreed, That every cause between any persons, should be determined within the Provinces where the matters did lie: and that no Bishop should exercise any power out of his own Diocess or Province, and this was also the mind of Holy S. Cyprian, and of other holy Men of Africa.

To conclude therefore, the Pope hath no such Primacy given him, either by the words of Scripture, or by any General Council, or by common consent of the holy Catholick Church.

KING
Hen. 8.The Bishops of England then good Lutherans

Judge now thy self, loving Reader, per confessata & allegata; that is, by these things heretofore confessed, alledged, allowed, proved and confirmed, by Pen set forth, by Words defended, and by Oath subscribed by these Bishops and Doctors, if either Martin Luther himself, or any Lutheran else could or did ever say more against the proud usurpation of the Bishop of Rome, than these Men have done. If they dissembled otherwise than they meant, who could ever dissemble so deeply, speaking so pithily? If they meant as they spake, who could ever turn head to tail so suddenly and so thorowly as these Men did? But because these things we write for edification of other, rather then for commendation of them, let us mark therefore their reasons, and let the persons go.

The Epistle of Tonstal
to Peter.

And although the said proofs and arguments heretofore alledged, might suffice to the full discution of this matter against the Popes usurped Primacy; yet because many do yet remain, which will not be satisfied, to refel therefore and confute this Popish Article of the Popes vain and proud Primacy, with as much matter and furniture of reasons and allegations, as the writings and testimonies of these Bishops and others do minister unto us; we mind (the Lord willing) to annex to these former confirmations of the Bishops aforesaid, another supplement also of a certain Epistle sent by Bishop Tonsal, and by John Stokely Bishop of London, to Cardinal Pool, for a more ample confutation of the usurped Power. Concerning the argument of which Epistle, here is first to be understood, that about this time, or not much after, Cardinal Pool, Brother to the Lord Mounague, was attained of high Treason, and fled away unto Rome, where, within a short time after, he was made Cardinal of Saint Mary Cosmedin: Of whom more is to be spoken hereafter, the Lord so permitting, when we come to the time of Queen Mary. In the mean time he remaining at Rome, there was directed unto him a certain Epistle exhortatory by Stokely, Bishop of London, and Tonsal, Bishop of Duresme, perswading him to relinquish and abandon the Supremacy of the Pope, and to conform himself to the Religion of his King. The Copy of which Epistle, for the reasons and arguments therein contained about the same matter, we thought here not unworthy to be put in, or unprofitable to be read. The Tenor whereof here followeth.

¶ The true Copy of a certain Letter written by Cuthbert Tonsal Bishop of Duresme, and John Stokely Bishop of London, to Cardinal Pool; proving the Bishop of Rome to have no special superiority over other Bishops.

For the good will that we have born unto you in times past, as long as you continued the Kings true Subject, we cannot a little lament and mourn, that you neither regarding the Inestimable kindnes of the Kings Highnes heretofore shewed unto you in your bringing up, nor the honour of the House that you be come of, nor the wealth of the Countrey that you were born in, should so decline from your Duty to your Prince, that you should be seduced by fair words and vain promises of the Bishop of Rome, to wind with him, going about by all means to him possible, to pull down and put under Foot your natural Prince and Master, to the destruction of the Countrey that hath brought you up, and for a Vain-glory of a red Hat to make your self an Instrument to fortenth his Malice, who hath stirred up, by all means that he could, all figh Christian Princes as would give ears unto him, to depose the Kings Highnes from his Kingdom, and to offer it as a prey for them that should execute his malice, and to stir, if he could, his Subjects against him, in stirring and nourishing Rebellions in his Realm, where the Office and Duty of all good Christian Men, and namely of us that be Priests, should be to bring all commotion to tranquillity, all trouble to quiemes, all discord to concord; and in doing contrary, we do shew our selves to be but the Ministers of Satan, and not of Christ, who ordained all us that be Priests to use in all places the Legation of Peace, and not of discord. But since that cannot be undone that is done, second it is to make amends, and to follow the doing of the prodigal Son spoken of in the Gospel, who returned home to his Father, and was well accepted; as no doubt you might be, if you will say as he said in acknowledging your folly, and do as he did, in returning home again from your wandering abroad in service of them, who little care what come of you, so that their purpose by you be served. And if you be moved by your conscience, that you cannot take the King your Master as Supreme head of the Church of England, because the Bishop Rome hath heretofore many years usurped that name Universally over all the Church, under pretence of the Gospel of Saint Matthew, saying, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock I will build my Church: Surely that Text many of the most holy and ancient Expositors wholly do take to be meant of the Faith, then first confessed by the mouth of Peter; upon which Faith, confessing Christ to be the Son of God, the Church is builded, Christ being the very lowest foundation Stone, whereupon both the Apostles themselves, and also the whole Faith of the Church of Christ, by them preached through the World, is founded and builded; and other foundation none can be, but that only, as Saint Paul saith, No other foundation can any Man lay beside that which is laid, which is Christ Jesus.

And where you think that the Gospel of Luke proveth the same authority of the Bishop of Rome, saying: Peter, I have prayed for thee, that thy Faith shall not fail: and thou being once converted, confirm thy Brethren. Surely that speaketh only of the fall of Peter, known to Christ by his godly preience, wherof he gave an inkling, that after the time of his fall, he should not despair, but return again, and confirm his Brethren, as he ever being most fervent of them, was wont to do. The place doth plainly open it self that it cannot be otherwise taken, but this to be the very meaning of it, and not to be spoken but to Peter: for else his successors must first fail in the Faith, and then convert, and so confirm their Brethren. And whereas you think that this place of the Gospel of John, Feed my Sheep, was spoken only to Peter, and that those words make him Shepherd over all, and above all; Saint Peter himself testifieth the contrary in his Canonical Epistle, where he saith to all Priests, Feed the flock of Christ which is among you, which he had them do by the authority that Christ had put them in as followeth: And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive the incorruptible Crown of eternal glory. The same likewise Saint Paul in the Acts testifieth, saying, Give heed to your selves and to the whole flock, wherein the Holy Ghost hath set you to govern the Church of God. Where, in the original Text, the word signifying Regere, to govern, νομαζειν is the same that was spoken to Peter, Πασκ, Feed; for it signifieth both in the Scripture. And that by these words he was not continue a Shepherd over all, it is very plain by the Fact of Saint Peter, which durst not enterprise much conversation among the Gentiles, but eschewed it as a thing unlawful, and much rather prohibited than commanded by Gods Law, until he was admonished by the revelation of the Sheet full of divers Vians, mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles; where if Christ by these words, Feed my Sheep, had given such an universal Governance to Peter, then Peter, being more fervent than other of the Apostles to execute Christs commandment, would of his own courage have gone, without any such new admonition, to Cornelius: except peradventure you would say, that Peter did not understand the said words of Christ, for lack of the Light which the later Men have obtained to perceive, and thereby understand the words of Christ to Peter, better than Peter himself did. And strange also it were to condemn Peter as an high Traitor to his Master after his Ascension: as he indeed were worthy, if his Master had signified unto him, that the Bishops of Rome, by his dying there, should be heads of all the Church; and he knowing the same by these words Feed my sheep, yet notwithstanding his Masters high legacy and commandment, would flee as he did from Rome, until his Master, encountering him by the way, with terrible words caused him to return.

And because this History peradventure cannot weigh against an obdurate mind to the contrary; What shall we say to the words of Saint Ambrose, declaring and affirming that as great and as ample Primacy was given to Paul, as to Peter? Upon these words of Paul, He that wrought by Peter, &c. thus he writeth; Petrus solum nominat & sibi comparat, quia primum ipse acceperat ad fundandam Ecclesiam; se quoque pari modo electum ut primum habeat in fundandis Ecclesiis Gentium, &c. That is to say, He nameth Peter only, and compareth him to himself, because he received a Primacy to build a Church; and that he in like sort was chosen himself to have a Primacy in building the Churches of the Gentiles. And shortly after it followeth; Of those (that is to say of the Apostles) which were the chiefest, his gift, he saith, was allowed, which he had received of God; so that he was found worthy to have the Primacy of preaching to the Gentiles, as Peter had in preaching to the Jews. And as he assigned to Peter for his companions those which were of the chiefest Men amongst the Apostles, even so also did he take to himself Barnabas, who was joynt unto him by Gods judgment; and yet did he challenge to himself alone the Prerogative or Primacy which God had given him, as to Peter alone it was granted among the other Apostles. So that the Apostles of the circumcision gave their Hands to the Apostles of the Gentiles; to declare their concord in fellowship, that either of them should know that they had received the perfection of the Spirit in the preaching of the Gospel, and so should not need either other in any matter. And shortly after saith S. Ambrose, who durst resist Peter the chief Apostle? But another such a one, which by the confidence of his election might know himself to be no less, and so might reprove boldly that thing which he confidently had done.

This equality of dignity which Saint Ambrose affirmeth by Scripture to be equally given to Peter and Paul, Saint Cyprian and Saint Hierom do extend to all the Apostles. Cyprian saying thus; Hec erant utique & ceteri Apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio pradii, & honoris & potestatis; all the rest of the Apostles were the same, that Peter was, being ended with like equality of honour and power. And Saint Hierom thus, Concili Apostoli claves regni calorum acceperunt & ex aequo super eos Ecclesie fortitudo fundatur: All the Apostles received the Keys of the Kingdom of Heaven, and upon them, as indifferently and equally, is the strength of the Church grounded and established. Which Saint Hierom also, as in his Epistle to Euagrius, sheweth that these Primacies long after Christs Ascension were made by the devise of Men, whereas before by the common agreement and consent of the Clergy every of the Churches were governed, yea the Patriarchal Churches.

The words of Saint Jerom be these; Sciant ergo Episcopi se magis ex consuetudine, quam dispensationis Dominica veritate, presbyteris esse majores: Let the Bishops understand, that they be greater than other Priests, rather of custom, than by the virtue and verity of the Lords Ordinance. And in his said Epistle to Euagrius he hath the like sentence, and addeth thereunto, Ubiqueque fuerit Episcopus, sive Roma, sive Eugubii, sive Constantinopoli, &c. Wheresoever a Bishop be, either at Rome, or at Eugubium, or at Constantinople, he is of all one worthiness, and of all one Priesthood. And that one was elected which should be preferred before other, it was devised for the Redress of Schisms, lest any one, challenging too much to himself, should rent the Church of Christ. These words only of Saint Jerom be sufficient to prove that Christ by none of these three Texts (which be all that you and others do alledge for your opinion) gave to Peter any such superiority, as the Bishop of Rome by them usurpeth, and that Peter, nor no other of the chief Apostles, did vindicate such Primacy or superiority, but utterly refused it, and therefore gave Preheminence above themselves to one, that thought he be sometimes called an Apostle, yet he was none of the Twelve, as Eusebius in the beginning of his second Book, called Historia Ecclesiastica, doth testify, alledging for him the great and ancient Clerk Clement Alexandrinus, saying thus, Petrus, Jacobus, ac Johannes, post assumptionem Salvatoris, quamvis ab ipso fuerant omnibus pene Prælati, tamen non sibi vindicant gloriam, sed Jacobum, qui dicebatur Justus, Apostolorum Episcopum statuum. Peter, James, and John, after Christs Ascension into Heaven, although they were by him preferred almost before all other, yet they challenged not that glory to themselves, but decreed that James, who was called Justus should be chief Bishop of the Apostles. By these words it is clear, that James was the Bishop of the Apostles, not because, as some Men do glofe, he was elected by the Apostles, but because he had thereby the Primacy and Honour of a Bishop in Jerusalem, above the rest of the Apostles.

And one thing is especially to be noted, and also marvelled at, that the Bishops of Rome do challenge this Primacy only by Peter, and yet Saint Paul, who was his equal, or rather superior by Scripture in his Apostleship amongst the Gentiles, wherof Rome was the principal, suffered at Rome where Peter died, and is commonly in all the Roman Church joynted with Peter in all appellations and titles of Preheminence, and both be called Principes Apostolorum, The chief of the Apostles. Upon both is equally founded the Church of Rome. The accounting of the Bishops of Rome many years agreeeth thereto. For Eusebius saith, that Clement tertius post Paulum & Petrum pontificatum tenebat, Clement was the third Bishop after Saint Paul and Peter, reckoning them both as Bishops of Rome, and yet therein preferring Saint Paul's with like words, saying of Alexander Bishop of Rome, that Quinto successione post Petrum atque Paulum plebis gubernaculo sortitus est. Alexander obtained the governance of the people by succession, the fifth Bishop after Peter and Paul. Trenus also saith, as Eusebius reciteth, that Fundata & edificata Ecclesia, beati Apostoli Linus officium Episcopatus in- Epsebid. 1. cap. 24.

jungunt. After the Church was once founded and builded, the holy Apostles charged Linus with the Bishoprick. Whereby appeareth, that they both joyntly constituted him Bishop of Rome, and received only their Apostleship injoynted to them by Christ. And therefore if the Bishops of Rome challenge any Preheminence of authority by Peter, they should as well, or rather challenge the same by Paul, because they both founded it, and both there preached, and both there suffered, resigning first that Bishoprick to Linus and all at once.

And if you will peradventure lean to the former preaching there by Peter, which by Scripture cannot be proved, yet then at least Saint Paul and his successors in Ephesus, should have like Primacy, because he founded first that Church, though Saint John after that, did build it, as witnesseth Eusebius, saying, Ecclesia quæ est apud Ephesum, a Paulo quidem fundata est, a Joanne vero edificata. The Church which is at Ephesus, was founded of Paul, but it was built of Saint John. And so Peter should have no other Primacy in Rome, but as Paul had in Ephesus; that is to say, to be counted as the first Preacher and converter of the people there to the Faith of Christ; and as well might all the Bishops of Ephesus challenge Primacy of all Nations, both Gentiles and Jews, by Saint Paul the Apostle of the Gentiles their Founder, as the Bishop of Rome by Saint Peter the Apostle only of the circumcision, in case he were the first Founder, challenging Primacy over all. But undoubtedly, this Primacy over all, that the Bishops of Rome of late do challenge, was not allowed, nor yet known nor heard of amongst the ancient Fathers, though they had their Church of Rome in high estimation, as well for the notable virtuous deeds that the Clergy did there shew and exercise abundantly to their Neighbours (as witnesseth the said Eusebius, alledging there the Epistle that Dionysius Alexandrinus wrote to Soter, Bishop of Rome, testifying the same) as for that the City of Rome was the most ample and chief City of the World, witnesseth Saint Cyprian, saying, Plane, quoniam pro magnitudine sua antebeat Carthaginem Roma præcedere, illic majora & graviora commisit: Certainly, because that Rome ought for the greatness thereof to excel Carthage, there Novatus committed the greater and more grievous offences. Which Saint Cyprian also, when he had ordained and appointed certain Decrees and Statutes unto the Bishop of Rome, he did not submit them to his reformation or judgment, but only signified his own sentence to like him also; and yet adding thereunto, that if any Bishops (meaning as well of Rome as of others) which were of the contrary opinions to him, would otherwise think or do, he would not then that his sentence should be to them prejudicial, neither would he thereby compel them to any thing, but would that they should follow their own minds and customs: partly for that every one of the Bishops hath liberty of his own will, and partly for that every Governor shall make an account to God of his own deed, as it appeareth plainly in his Epistle to Stephanus and Tulianus. And in the third Epistle to Cornelius, towards the end, speaking of the appeal that one Felicissimus a Novatian, after his condemnation in Africa, made to Rome, he impugneth such appeals, saying; Quia singulis pastoribus portio gregis est ascripta, quam regat unusquisque & gubernet, rationem sui actus Domino redditurus, &c. For as much as every Pastor hath his own flock committed unto him, which every one ought to rule and govern, and must give account to the Lord of his administration, it is decreed of us all, and we think it both meet and just, that every Mans cause and plea should there be heard, where the crime is committed. This holy and excellent Clerk and Martyr Saint Cyprian would never either have impugned their appeal to Rome from their own Primacies, or so earnestly having maintained his determinations in the Councils of Africa contrary to the opinion of the Bishops of Rome and to their customs, without any submision by word or writing, if the Primacy over all, which the Bishops of Rome do challenge and usurp, had been grounded upon the plain Scriptures, as you with some others do think: And it is to be supposed also, that he would in all his Epistles have called them Patres, or Dominos, Fathers or Lords, as superiors, and not always Frates & Collegas, Brothers and Fellows in office, as but only his equals.

first Mother City of our Faith, and where Christ himself first founded the Faith; and also Alexandria, being recited to the third, fourth and fifth places, because at that time they were not in so high estimation in the World, though in the Faith of Christ all they were Antients, and some of them Mothers to Rome.

Truth it is, that the Bishops of the Orient, for debates in matters of the Faith amongst themselves, made sutes to the Bishop of Rome; but that was not for the superiority of jurisdiction over them, but because they were greatly divided, and those Countries, as well Bishops as others, much infected with the Heresies of the Arrians, whereof the West was in a manner clear; and among them of the Orient, none were counted indifferent to decide those matters, but were all suspected of affection for one cause or other. Wherefore they desired the opinions of the Bishops of the West, as indifferent, and not intangled with affections of any of those parts, neither corrupted with any of the Arrians, as appeareth by the Epistles of Saint Basil, written in all their names for the said purpose. In the which also it is especially to be noted, that their sute was not made to the Bishop of Rome singularly, or by name, but (as the Titles do shew) to the whole Congregation of the Bishops of Italy and France, or of the whole West, and sometime preferring the French and Italian Bishops, saying, Gallis & Italici, and never naming the Romans. And for a clear proof that the ancient Fathers knew not this Primacy of one above all, we need none other testimony but their determination in the Council of Nice, that Alexandria, and Antiochia, and Universally all other Primates, should have the whole governance of their confine Countries, like as the Bishop of Rome had of those that Inhabited within his Suburbs. This determination proveth also, that your three Scriptures meant nothing less than this Primacy over all. For God forbid that we should suspect that Council as ignorant of those plain Scriptures, to which since that time all Christendom hath leaned, as the Anchor of our Faith. And if you like to read the ancient Ecclesiastical Histories, there you may see, that Arbanasius, and other Patriarchs did execute that Primacy, as in making, consecrating, and ordering of Churches, Bishops and Clerks, in their Countries East and South, as the Bishops of Rome in that time did in the West and North.

And if you would yet any thing object against any of these witnesses, then to chafe contention, and for a final Conclusion, let the Bishop of Rome stand to his own confession made many years past by his Predecessor Agatho, to the Emperors, Constantine, Heraclius, and Tiberius, in his Epistle written to them in his name, and in the name of all the Synod which he thought to be under the See Apostolick: wherein, soon after the beginning of the Epistle, he comprehendeth them all under the name of the Bishops dwelling in the North and West parts of their Empire; so that there in his own Epistle he confesseth all his subjects and obedientiaries to be only of the North and West. And so it appeareth evidently by his own confession, that neither by Gods Law nor Mans Law he had to do with any person of the East or South. And this his high Sovereignty over all, challenged (as you and others lay) by Scripture, as by his own confession doth appear is brought, into a little and straight Angle. And this Agatho was not a Man unlearned, as appeareth by the Acts of the sixth Synod of Constantinople, in the fourth Act, wherein is written at large and expressed the said Epistle and Confession. And the Primacy of Peter, which ancient Doctors speak of, which was only in preaching and teaching the Faith of Christ, which he first among all the Apostles, and first of all mortal Men, did express with his mouth, did after so adhere to his own person, that it was never derived either to any successor, or to any other Apostle, but chiefly to himself; for all other afterwards professing the same, spake it according unto him who had professed it before. Moreover, all the Apostles (as Saint John saith) be foundations in the Heavenly Jerusalem, and not Peter only. Also Cyprian affirmeth, (as is aforesaid) that all the Apostles were of equal Dignity and Power; which all ancient Authors likewise do affirm. For Christ gave the Apostles like power in the Gospel, saying; Go, and teach all nations, baptizing them, &c. And Saint Paul (as is said before) knew no other Primacy given to Peter to preach in any place but among the Jews, as he himself had amongst the Gentiles, as he writeth to the Galathians. Whereupon Saint Ambrose writing (as is aforesaid) affirmeth the same. And that the Mother of all Churches is Jerusalem (as is aforesaid) and not Rome, the Scripture is plain, both in the Prophet Isay; Out of Sion shall the Law proceed, and the Word of the Lord out of Jerusalem: Upon the which place Saint Jerome faith; In Hierusalem primum fundata Ecclesia totius orbis Ecclesiarum seminavit: Out of the Church being first founded in Jerusalem, sprung all other Churches of the whole World: and also in the Gospel which Christ before his Ascension commanded his Apostles to preach throughout all the World, beginning first at Jerusalem; so that the Bishop of Rome Universal power by him claimed over all cannot by any Scripture be justified: as if you have read the ancient Fathers explications of the said Scriptures (as we suppose you have, since your Letters sent hither concerning this matter) and would give more credence to their humble and plain speaking, than to the later contentious and ambitious Writers of that high, and above the Ideas of *Plato*s subtilty (which passeth, as you write, the Lawyers learning and capacity) we doubt not but that you perceive and think the same.

And where you think that the King cannot be taken as supreme head of the Church, because he cannot exercise the chief Office of the Church in preaching and ministering of the Sacraments; it is not requisite in every Body natural, that the Head should exercise either all manner of Offices of the Body, or the chief Office of the same. For albeit the Head is the highest and chief Member of the natural Body, yet the distribution of life to all the Members of the Body, as well to the Head as to other Members, cometh from the Heart, and it is the Minister of life to the whole Body, as the chief act of the Body.

Neither yet hath this similitude his full place in a mystical Body, that a King should have the chief Office of Administration in the same: and yet notwithstanding, the Scripture speaking of King Saul, faith, I made thee head amongst the Tribes of Israel. And if a King amongst the Jews were the head in the Tribes of Israel, in the time of the Law, much more is a Christian King head in the Tribes of spiritual Israel, that is, of such as by true Faith see Christ who is the end of the Law. The Office deputed to the Bishops in the mystical Body, is to be as eyes to the whole Body, as Almighty God faith to the Prophet Ezekiel; *I have made thee an overseer over the house of *Israel. And what Bishop soever refuseth to use the Office of an eye in the mystical Body, to shew unto the Body the right way of believing and living, which appertaineth to the spiritual eye to do, shall shew himself to be a blind eye; and if he shall take any other Office in hand, than appertaineth to the right eye, he shall make a confusion in the Body, taking upon him an other Office than is given him of God. Wherefore if the eye will not take upon him the Office of the whole head, it may be answered, it cannot so do, for it lacketh brain. And Examples shew likewise that it is not necessary alway that the head should have the faculty or chief Office of Administration, as you may see in a Navy by Sea; where the Admiral, who is a Captain over all, doth not meddle with steering or governing of every Ship, but every particular Master must direct the Ship to pass the Sea in breaking the Waves by his steering and governance, which the Admiral the head of all doth not himself, nor yet hath the faculty to do, but commandeth the Masters of the Ship to do it. And likewise many a Captain of great Armies, which is not able, nor never could peradventure shoot, or break a Spear by his own strength, yet by his wisdom and commandment only achieveth the Wars, and attaineth the Victory.

And where you think that Unity standeth not only in the agreeing in one Faith and Doctrine of the Church, but also in agreeing in one head; if you mean the very and only head over all the Church our Saviour Christ, whom the Father hath set over all the Church, which is his Body, wherein all good Christian Men do agree, therein you say truth. But if you mean of any one mortal Man to be the head over all the Church, and that to be the Bishop of Rome, we do not agree with you. For you do there err in the true understanding of the Scripture; or else you must say that the said Council of Nice, and other most ancient did err, which divided the Administration of Churches, the Orient from the Occident, and the South from the North, as is before expressed; and that Christ the Universal head is present in every Church, the Gospel sheweth, Where two or three be gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them. And in another place, Behold, I am with you until the end of the world. By which it may appear Christ the Universal head every where to be with his mystical Body the Church; who by his Spirit worketh in all places (how far soever they be distant) the unity and concord of the same. And as for any other Universal head to be over all, than Christ himself, Scripture proveth not, as it is shewed before. And yet for a further proof, to take away the scruples that peradventure do to your appearance rise of certain words in some ancient Authors, and specially in Saint Cyprian's Epistles, as that the Unity of the Church stood in the Unity with the Bishop of Rome, though they never call him supreme head; if you will weigh and consider all their sayings together, you shall perceive that they (neither spake nor meant otherwise; but when the Bishop of Rome was once lawfully elected and enthroned, if then any other would by faction, might, force, or otherwise (the other living and doing his Office) enterprise to put him down, and usurp the same Bishoprick, or exercise the others Office himself, as Novatians did attempt in the time of Cornelius; then the said Fathers reckoned them Catholics that did Communicate with him that was so lawfully elected: and the custom was, one Primacy to have to do with another, by congratulatory Letters, soon after the certainty of their Election was known, to keep the Unity of the Church; and all they that did take part with, or maintain the Usurper, to be Schismatics, because that Usurper was a Schismatick: Quia non sit fas in eadem Ecclesia, duas simul Episcopos esse, nec priorem legitimum Episcopum sine sua culpa deponi: Because it was not lawful for two Bishops to be at once together in one Church, neither the former Bishop being lawful, to be deposed without his fault were proved. And this is not a Privilege of the Church of Rome, more than of any other Cathedral, special, Patriarchal, or Metropolitan Church, as appeareth in the third Epistle of the first Book, and in the eighth of the second, and of the fourth Book of Saint Cyprian to Cornelius. Whole words and reasons, although peradventure they might seem to include the Unity of the Church in the Unity of the Bishop of Rome, because they were all written to him in his own case, may as well be written unto any other Bishop lawfully chosen, who percase should be likewise disturbed as the Bishops of Rome then were by any Factions of ambitious Hereticks.

And where you think the name of supreme head under Christ, given and attributed to the Kings Majesty, maketh an innovation in the Church, and perturbation of the Order of the same: it cannot be any innovation or trouble to the Church to use the room that God hath called him to, which good Christian Princes did use in the beginning, when Faith was most pure, as Saint Augustine, Ad Gloriam & Eleusum faith; Sic enim quidam, non debuit Episcopus pro consulari iudicio purgari, &c. One there is which faith, that a Bishop ought not to have been put to his purgation before the Judgment Seat of the Deputy, as though he himself procured it, and not rather the Emperor himself caused this inquiry to be made, to whole jurisdiction (for the which he must answer to God) that cause did specially pertain. Chrysostome writeth of that Imperial authority thus: Lacus est qui non habet parem ullam super terram: He is offended that hath no Peer at all upon the Earth, for he is the highest Potentate, and the head of all Men upon Earth. And Tertullian ad Scapulam faith, Colimus ergo & Imperatorem sic, quomodo & nobis licet: & ipsi expedit, ut hominem a Deo secundum, &c. We honour and reverence the Emperor in such wise, as is lawful to us and expedient to him, that is to say, as a Man next

The Church of Rome hath no more prerogative than any other Church.

The Unity of the Church standeth not on the Unity of the Bishop of Rome.

August. Epist. 162.

The Imperial authority is next under God.

KING and the second to God, from whom he hath received all the power he hath, and also inferior to God alone, whose pleasure it is to have it : for thus he is greater than all Men, whilst he is inferior but to God alone.

Tertul. in Apologet. And the said Tertullian in his Book Apologetical speaking of the Emperors, saith, Sciatis quis illis dederit imperium, &c. They know who hath given to them their government ; they know that God is he alone, under whose only power they be, and take themselves as second to God, after whom they be chief above all other.

Theophil. in Rom. Theophilact also to the Romans upon this place, Omnis anima potestatis sublimioribus subdita sit, saith, The Apostle there teacheth every Man, Sicce Sacerdos ille sit, five Monachus, five Apostolus, ut se Principibus subdat: That whether he be a Priest, or a Monk, or an Apostle, he should subject himself to Princes : That is, although thou be an Apostle, an Evangelist, a Prophet, or whatsoever thou art, be subject. Non enim, faith he, subvertit pietatem hæc subjectio ; For this subjection overthrows not godliness : And the Apostle saith not only, Let him obey, but let him be subject.

And if the Apostles be subject to Princes, much more all Bishops and Patriarchs, yea the Bishops of Rome and all other.

It is written also in the Chronicles, David said to Salomon, behold the Priests and Levites divided in Companies, to do all manner of service that pertaineth to the House of God. Also David did appoint chiefly to thank the Lord, Asaph and his Brethren, &c. and Jehosaphat the King did constitute Levites and Priests, and the ancient Families of Israel for the judgment and cause of the Lord towards all the Inhabitants of the Earth ; and he charged them saying, Thus shall ye do in the fear of the Lord, faithfully and in a perfect heart.

Furthermore Ezechias appointed the Priests and the Levites in their Order, to wait by course every Man according to his Office. And it followeth, Ezechias gave commandment to the people dwelling in Jerusalem, that they should give their portions unto their Priests and Levites, that they might attend to the Law of the Lord. Where it followeth also, that by the Precept of Ezechias the King, and of Asarias the Bishop of the House of the Lord, all things were done, to whom pertained all the dispensation of the House of the Lord. And in the end it is said, Ezechias did these things in all Jury ; he wrought that which was good, right and true before his Lord God in all the furniture of the ministry of the House of the Lord, according to the Law and Ceremonies, delicious to feed his Lord God with all his heart, as he did and prospered therein. Jofias also did ordain Priests in their Offices, and commanded many things.

By all which it may appear, that Christian Kings be Sovereigns over the Priests, as over all other their Subjects, and may command the Priests to do their Offices, as well as they do others ; and ought by their supreme Office to see that all Men of all degrees do the Duties, whereunto they be called either by God or by the King ; and those Kings that so do chiefly do execute well their Office. So that the Kings Highness taken upon him, as Supreme head of the Church of England, to see that as well spiritual Men as temporal do their Duties, doth neither make innovation in the Church, nor yet trouble the Order thereof ; but doth as the chief and best of the Kings of Israel did, and as all good Christian Kings ought to do. Which Office good Christian Emperors always took upon them, in calling the Universal Councils of all Countries in one place and at one time, to assemble together, to the intent that all Heresies troubling the Church might there be extirped ; calling and commanding as well the Bishop Rome, as other Patriarchs and all Primates, as well of the East as of the West, of the South as of the North, to come to the said Councils. As Martianus the Emperor did in calling the great Council of Chalcedon, one of the four chief and first general Councils, commanding Leo then Bishop of Rome to come unto the same. And albeit Leo neither liked the time, which he would for a season should have been deferred ; nor yet the place, for he would have had it in Italy, whereas the Emperor by his own commandment had called it to Chalcedon in Asia : yet he answered the Emperor, that he would gladly obey his commandment, and sent thither his Agents to appear there for him, as doth appear in the Epistles of Leo to Martian then Emperor ; Forty first, Forty seventh, Forty eighth, and in the Forty ninth Epistle to Pulcheria the Emperess. And likewise directeth Theodosius the Emperor to command a Council of Bishops to be called in Italy, for taking away such contentions and troubles, as at that time troubled the quietness of the Churches. And in many more Epistles of the same Leo it doth manifestly appear, That the Emperors always assembled general Councils by their commandments : And in the Sixth general Council it appeareth very plainly, that at that time the Bishops of Rome made no claim nor used any title to call themselves heads Universal over all the Catholic Church, as it doth appear in the superscription or salutation of the foresaid Synodical Preamble, which is this, word for word.

To the most godly Lords and most noble Victors and Conquerors, the welbeloved Children of God and our Lord Jesus Christ, Constantine the great Emperor, and Heraclius and Ishyrius, Cæsars : Bishop Agatho the Servant of the Servants of God, with all the convocations subject to the Council of the See Apostolick, sendeth greeting. And he expresseth what Countries he reckoned and comprehended in that superscription or salutation ; for it followeth, that those were under his assembly, which were in the North and East parts, so that at that time the Bishop of Rome made no such pretence to be over and above all, as he now doth by usurpation, vindicating to himself the spiritual Kingdom of Christ, by which he reigneth in the hearts of all faithful People, and then chaungeth it to a temporal Kingdom over and above all Kings, to depose them for his pleasure, preaching thereby the Fleish for the Spirit, and an Earthly Kingdom for an Heavenly, to his own Damnation, if he repent not : whereas he ought to obey his Prince by the Doctrine of Saint Peter in his first Epistle, saying, Be ye subject to every ordinance of Man, for the Lords sake, whether it be to the King as to the chief, or unto Governours, as sent of him to the punishment of the evil doers, and to the praise of the good. Again, Saint Paul, Let every soul be subject to the higher powers. With other things before alledged. So that this his pretended usurpation to be above all Kings is directly against the Scriptures, given to the Church by the Apostles, whose Doctrine whatsoever overturneth, can be neither the Head, nor yet the least Member of the Church.

Wherefore, albeit ye have hitherto sticked to the said wrongfully usurped Power, moved thereto, as ye write, by your conscience ; yet thence now ye see further, if ye list to regard the meer truth, and such ancient Authors as have been written to you of in times past, we would exhort you, for the wealth of your soul, to surrender in to the Bishop of Rome hands your red Hat, by which he seduced you, trusting so to make you, being come of a Noble Blood, an instrument to advance his Vain-glory ; whereof by the said Hat he made you participant, to allure you thereby the more to his purpose.

In which doing ye shall return to the truth from which ye have erred, do your duty to your Sovereign Lord from whom ye have declined, and please thereby Almighty God, whose Laws ye have transgressed : and in not so doing ye shall remain in error, offending both Almighty God, and your natural Sovereign Lord, whom chiefly ye ought to seek to please. Which thing, for the good mind that we heretofore have born you, We pray Almighty God of his infinite mercy that you do not.

Amen.

When all other the Kings Subjects, and the learned of the Realm had taken and accepted the Oath of the Kings Supremacy, only Fisher the Bishop of Rockester and Sir Thomas More refused (as is aforesaid) to be sworn : who therefore falling into the danger of the Law, were committed into the Tower, and executed for the same, An. 1535. This John Fisher aforesaid had written before against Oecolampadius whose Book is yet extant, and afterward against Luiter.

Also amongst other his Acts he had been a great enemy and persecutor of John Priib, the godly and learned Martyr of Jesus Christ, whom he and Sir Thomas More caused to be burned a year and half before: and shortly after the said Fisher, to his confusion, was charged with Elizabeth Barton (called the holy Maid of Kent) and found guilty by Act of Parliament, as is above recorded. For his learning and other vertues of life this Bishop was, well reputed and reported of by many, and also much lamented of some. But whatsoever his learning was pity it was that he, being endued with that knowledge, should be so far drowned in such superstition; more pity that he was so obstinate in his ignorance; but most pity of all, that he so abused the learning he had to such cruelty as he did. But this commonly we see come to pass, as the Lord saith, That who so striketh with the sword shall perish with the sword, and they that stain their hands with blood seldom do bring their bodies dry to the grave; as commonly appeareth by the end of bloody Tyrants, and especially such as be persecutors of Christs poor Members. In the number of whom was this Bishop and Sir Thomas More, by whom good John Frith, Tewkesbury, Thomas Hytten, Bayfield, with divers other good Saints of God were brought to their death. It was said, That the Pope, to recompence Bishop Fisher for his faithful service, had elected him Cardinal, and sent him a Cardinals Hat as far as Calice; but the head that it should stand upon was as high as London Bridge, ere ever the Popes Hat could come to him. Thus Bishop Fisher and Sir Thomas More, which were before had put John Frith to death for Heresie against the Pope, were themselves executed and beheaded for Treason against the King, the one the 22d of June, the other the 6th of July Anno 1535.

Of Sir Thomas More something hath been touched before, who was also recounted a Man both witty and learned: but whatsoever he was beside, a bitter Persecutor he was of good Men, and a wretched enemy against the truth of the Gospel, as by his Books left behind him may appear, wherein most slanderously and contumeliously he writeth against Luther, Zuinglius, Tindal, Frith, Barnes, Bayfield, Bainham, Tewkesbury, falsly belying their Articles and Doctrine, as (God granting me life) I have sufficient matter to prove against him.

Briefly, as he was a fore Persecutor of them that stood in defence of the Gospel, so again on the other side such a blind devotion he bare to the Pope-holy See of Rome, and so wilfully stood in the Popes quarrel against his own Prince, that he would not give over till he had brought the Scaffold of the Tower-Hill, with the Axe and all upon his own neck.

Edward Hall in his Chronicle, writing of the death and manners of this Sir Thomas More, seemeth to stand in doubt whether to call him a foolish wife Man, or a wife foolish Man. For as by nature he was endued with a great Wit, so the same again was so mingled (saith he) with taunting and mockings, that it seemed to them that best knew him, that he thought nothing to be well spoken, except he had mingled some mock in the Communication; in so much as at his coming to the Tower, one of the Officers demanding his upper Garment for his Fee, meaning his Gown, he answered that he should have it, and took him his Cap, saying it was the uppermost Garment that he had. Likewise even going to his death, at the Tower Gate, a poor Woman called unto him, and besought him to declare that he had certain Evidences of hers in the time that he was in Office (which after he was apprehended he could not come by) and that he would intreat that the might have them again, or else she was undone. He answered; Good Woman, have patience a little while, for the King is so good to me, that even within this half hour he will discharge me of all businesses, and help thee himself. Also when he went up the Stairs of the Scaffold, he desired one of the Sheriffs Officers to give him his hand to help him up, and said, When I come down again, let me shift for my self so well as I can. Also the Hang-man kneeled down to him, asking him forgiveness of his death, as the manner is. To whom he answered, I forgive thee; but I promise thee that thou shalt never have honour of the striking off my Head, my neck is so short. Also even when he should lay down his neck on the block, he having a great gray Beard, striked out his Beard, and said to the Hang-man, I pray you let me lay my Beard over the block, lest you should cut it; thus with a mock he ended his life.

There is no doubt but that the Popes Holynes hath hallowed and dignified these two persons long since for Catholick Martyrs. Neither is it to be doubted, but after an hundred years expired, they shall be also shrined and portified, dying as they did in the quarrel of the Church of Rome, that is, in taking the Bishop of *Rome*s part, against their own ordinary and natural Prince. Whereunto (because the matter asketh a long Discourse, and a peculiar Tractation) I have not in this place much to contend with Cope my Friend. This briefly for a Memorandum may suffice; That if the causes of true Martyrdom ought to be pondered, and not to be numbered, and if the end of Martyrs is to be weighed by judgment, and not by affection; then the cause and quarrel of these Men standing as it doth, and being tried by Gods Word, perhaps in the Popes Kingdom they may go for Martyrs, in whose Cause they died; but Certes in Christs Kingdom their Cause will not stand, howsoever they stand themselves.

The like also is to be said of the three Monks of the Charter-house, Ermen, Middlemore, and Nadigate, who the same year in the month of June were likewise attached and arraigned at Westminster, for speaking certain Traiterous words against the Kings Crown and Dignity; for the which they were Hanged, drawn, and Quartered at Tiburn: whom also, because Cope my good Friend doth repute and accept in the number of holy Catholick Martyrs, here would be asked of him a Question; What Martyrs be they, which standing before the Judge, deny their own words and sayings, and plead not guilty, so as these Carthusians did? Whereby it appeareth, that they would neither have flood nor have died in that Cause, as they did, if they might otherwise have escaped by denying. Wherefore if my Friend Cope had been so well advised in setting out his Martyrs, as God might have made him, he would first have seen the true records, and been sure of the ground of such matters, whereupon he so confidently pronounceth, and so censoriously controll-eth others.

In the same cause and quarrel of Treason also, the same year, a little before these aforesaid, in the month of May were executed with the like punishment John Houghton, Prior of the Charter-house in London, Robert Laurence, Prior of the Charter-house of Beke, Anthon Webster, Prior of the Charter-house of Exham.

Beside and with these Priors suffered likewise the same time, two other Priests, one called Regnold, Brother of Sion, the other named John Haile Vicar of Thistleworth.

Divers other Charter-house Monks also of London were then put in prison, to the number of Nine or ten, and in the same prison died, for whom we will, the Kings Lord willing, reserve another place hereafter to intreat of more at large.

In the mean time, for so much as the foresaid Cope in his doctryne Dialogues, speaking of these nine Worthies, doth commend them so highly, and especially the three Priors above rected, here by the way I would desire Master Cope simply and directly to answer me to a thing or two that I would put to him, and first of this John Houghton that angelical Prior of the Charterhouse, his old companion and acquaintance, of whom thus he writeth; Atqui cum Johanne illum Houghtonem cepito, non tam hominem quam Angelum in humana forme intrinseco videro, cujus eminentes virtutes, divinas dotes, & hereticam animi magnitudinem, nemo unquam poterit satis pro dignitate explicare, &c. By these his own words it must needs be confessed, that the Author of these Dialogues, whosoever he was, had well seen and considered the form and personable stature, proportion and shape of his excellent Body, with such admiration of his personage, that, as he saith, as oft as he calleth the said John Houghton to mind, it seemeth to him even as though he saw an Angel in the shape and form of a Man. Whole eminent vertues moreover, whose divine gifts, and heretical celsitude of mind, no Man saith he, may sufficiently expresse, &c. And how old was this Master Cope then would I know, when he saw and discerned all this? For as I understand, Master Cope being yet at this present

p. 242. 255.

THE KING sent scarce come to the age of Forty years, he could not then be above Nine years old (the other suffering Anno 1535) ha the which age in my mind, Master Cope had small discretion to judge either of any such angelical proportion of this Mans personage, or of his Divine qualities, and Heroical celtitude of his mind, and yet he remembereth him in his Dialogues. Which thing, among many other probabilities, maketh me vehemently to suspect that these Dialogues Printed in Amurper, Anno 1564, were brought over by Master Cope thence to be Printed, but were penned and framed by another Pseudocopus, whatsoever, or in what Fleet forever he was, unless my marks do greatly fail me. But as the case is of no great weight, lo I let it pass; returning to other matters of more importance.

Cope Dialogues failed not to be his own.

Shortly after the overthrow of the Pope, consequently began by little and little to follow the ruine of Abbies and religious Houses in England, in a right order and method by Gods divine Providence. For neither could the fall of Monasteries have followed after, unless that suppression of the Pope had gone before; neither could any true reformation of the Church have been attempted, unless the subversion of those superstitious Houses had been joyned withal.

Whereupon, the same year in the Month of October, the King having then Thomas Cromwel of his Council, sent Doctor Lee to visit the Abbies, Priors, and Nunneries in all England, and to set at liberty all such religious Persons desired to be free, and all other that were under the age of four and twenty years; providing withal, that such Monks, Canons, and Friars, as were disinclined, should have given them by the Abbot or Prior, in stead of their habite, a Secular Priests Gown, and forty Shillings of Money. And likewise the Nuns to have such apparel as Secular Women did then commonly use, and suffered to go where they would. At which time also from the said Abbies and Monasteries were taken their chief Jewels and Reliques.

Suppression of Abbies first begun in England. Religious men under age let out of Monasteries.

The King first beginneth with the Jewels of Abbies.

ANNO 1536. When the King had thus established his supremacy, and all things were quiet within the Realm, he like a wise Prince, and having wise Counsel about him, forescaking with himself what foreign dangers might fall unto him by other Countries about, which all were yet in subjection to the Bishop of Rome, save only a few German Princes, and murthering the malice of the Pope, to provide therefore betime for perils that might ensue, thought good to keep in by all means possible with other Princes.

And first to entertain the favour of the French King, who had been sick a little before, and now was lately recovered to health, in signification of publick joy and friendship, the King commanded a solemn and famous Procession to be ordained through the City of London, with the Waits and Children of the Grammar Schools, with the Masters and Ullers in their Array: then followed the Orders of the Friars and Canons, and the Priors with their pomp of Copes, Crosses, Candlesticks, and Vergers before them. After these, followed the next Pageant of Clerks and Priests of London, all in Copes likewise. Then the Monks of Westminster and other Abbies, with their glorious gardevance of Crosses, Candlesticks, and Vergers before them in like sort. Last of all came the Quire of Pauls with their Residentiaries, the Bishop of London and the Abbots following after in their Pontificalibus. After these courses of the Clergy went the Companies of the City, with the Lord Maior and Aldermen in their best Apparel, after their degrees. And let it might be thought this Procession of the Church of London to make but a small or beggerly shew, the furniture of the grey Copes there worn, was counted to the number of seven hundred and fourteen. Moreover, to fill up the joy of this Procession, and for the more high service to Almighty God, besides the singing Quires, and chanting of the Priests, there lacked no Musick withall, to pipe at the Processions. Briefly here lacked nothing else but only the Ordinance to shoot off also. But because that is used in the Processions at Rome, therefore for difference-like the same is reserved only for the Popes own Processions, and for none other in the month of October.

A piping Procession.

This grand Procession was appointed for a triumph or a thanksgiving for the late recovery of the French Kings health, as is aforesaid.

Over and besides this, the Kings, to nourish and retain Amity with Kings and Princes, left the Pope, being exiled now out of England, should incite them to War against him, directed sundry Embassadors and Messengers with Letters and Instructions. To the Emperor was sent Sir Thomas Wyatt, to the French King Sir Francis Brian, and Doctor Edward Fox, who was also sent to the Princes of Germany; to the Scottish King was sent Sir Ralph Sadler, Gentleman of the Privy-Chamber.

Embassadors to divers Christian Kings.

In Scotland the same time were cast abroad divers railing Ballets and slanderous Rimes against the King of England, for calling of the Lady Dowager, and for abolishing the Pope: for the which cause the foresaid Sir Ralph Sadler being sent into Scotland, with Letters and Instructions how to address himself accordingly, after he had obtained access unto the King, and audience to be heard, thrust declareth the effectuous and hearty commendations from the Kings Majesty his Graces Uncle, and withall delivered his Letters of Credence. Which done, after a few words of Courtly entertainment, as occasion served him to speak, the said Sir Ralph Sadler obtaining audience, thus began in the King his Masters behalf to declare, as followeth.

Sir Ralph Sadler Ambassador to the Scottish King.

The Oration of the Kings Ambassador.

Whereas there is nothing after the glory of Almighty God in this World so much to be tendered by Kings, Princes, or any honest persons, or so highly to be regarded and defended, as their Honour, Estimation, good Fame and Name, which whatsoever neglecteth is to be esteemed unnatural: and unless a man labour to avoid and extinguish the false Reports, Slander, and Diffamations made of him by malicious persons, he may well be suspected in conscience to condemn himself: the King your Uncle considering the same, and hearing of sundry Ballets, Criminations, and infamous Labels made and untruly forged and devised in Scotland against his Grace, by your Graces Subjects, not only upon trust to find with your Grace such natural Affection, Friendship, and Amity, as the nearness of blood between Uncle and Nephew, necessitude of Reverence, promiscuity both of kin and dominions together doth require; but also upon assurance that your Grace and Wisdom will consider how these Slanders and Diffamations, although they were but against a private person, whatsoever he were, most commonly rebound and are imputed to the whole degree and estate: as the diffamation of Kings toucheth Kings, and so of other Degrees and Dignities: doth send at this time to your Grace, his Nephew (other he might have sent more worthy, but me at this time, for lack of a better, hath he sent) to desire, pray, and require your Grace, according as the nearness of Blood, connexion of Estate, and other things before expressed, of right and justice do require: beseeching your Grace, gently to weigh and balance, and well to ponder the malice of these said Slanders, and to call in again all the said diffamatory Ballets, Labels, and other Writings, punishing the Authors and Setters forth thereof according to their demerits. And furthermore, to cause open Proclamations to be made through your Realm, that none of your Inhabitants there shall in any manner wise so misuse himself hereafter upon such great pain and punishment as to your Grace and your Council shall be thought convenient for the transgression thereof: so that other by their correction, and by the fearful example of the penalty, may beware how to commit the like offence in time coming.

The Oration of Sir Ralph Sadler to the Scottish King.

The example of such Slanders is very pernicious to all Kings: for by such Slanders of other Princes, the Slanders take boldness; so to deal afterward with their own King as they have done with other, and the next step from such slanderous words is to attempt deeds, and so to fall to Sedition: of the importance and danger whereof no man is ignorant.

Evil example a pernicious thing in a common wealth.

Wherefore your Grace, at the contemplation of your dear Uncle, in tendering his proceedings, shall do well to follow therein the loving steps of his good Brother and Alley the French King, who hath already at Rome and sundry places else, caused certain Slanderous Preachers to be fore punished; and further directed Commissions through his Realm for repressing the same. As also other Princes shall shall be ready (his Majesty trusteth) to do the like in their Dominions, if like occasion shall be given to require the same of them. In which so doing, your Grace may be assured in this your gentle dealing in that part, to win your Uncles most sincere and kind hearts, to the increase of your Amity and Alliance, which as to you shall be most honourable, so shall it be no less profitable unto him.

The second point.

And thus to conclude with the first part of my Narration, concerning the slanderous and diffamatory Libels, lest I should seem with proximity of matter more than needs to abuse your Graces silence; I will now descend to the other point of that which I have to utter unto your Grace, as touching the Popes Nuncio or Messenger. Of whose late arrival the Kings Majesty your Uncle having partly Intelligence, but not certainly knowing the special cause of his coming from Rome, and yet hearing by the common Brui and talk of your Subjects, what his Errand should be, that is to practise some annoyance by his pretended Censures against the Kings Majesty your Uncle: he therefore remonishing your Grace before, as fearing the worst, most justly maketh his complaint thereof unto your Grace his Nephew, requiring you, that forasmuch as the foresaid Brui and Reports are slanderous to his Majesty, and seeing that neither the Emperor nor the French King, nor any other Princes have consented thereto, or understood thereof, the Kings Majesty therefore your Uncle, willing to stop those Brui and talks, desireth and most heartily prayeth your Grace, at his instant request to vouchsafe to consider and weigh,

Supremacy of Princes.

First, The Supremacy of Princes by the holy Scripture granted unto him and other Princes in Earth under Christ upon their Churches.

Secondly, To weigh what the Gospel and Gods Word calleth a Church.

Also what Superstitions, Idolatries, and blind abuses have crept into all Realms, to the high displeasure of Almighty God by reason thereof.

Fourthly, What is to be understood by the true Censure or Excommunication of the Church, and how no such can be in the power of the Bishop of Rome, or of any other man, against his Majesty or any other Prince, having so just ground to avoid from the root, and to abolish that execrable authority, which the Bishop of Rome hath usurped and doth usurp upon all Princes, to their great detriment and damage.

As touching the consideration of which four Points, although the Kings Majesty your Uncle doubteth not your Grace to be furnished and provided with sufficient knowledge, rightly to discern and judge upon the same; yet if it shall so please your Grace further to know your Uncles mind touching the said Points, I assure your Highness in the behalf of your foresaid Uncle his Majesty, that he will not stick to send unto you such learned, wise, and discreet men, as shall amply inform you thereof, and of such other things at your Grace having once a smack thereof, shall think most worthy for a Prince to know.

His request therefore to your Highness is, that you will consider of what moment and importance it shall be unto your Grace (having the Scots your Subjects so evilly instructed in the premisses) for you to assent and agree to any such Censure, and so by such example to give such an upper-hand over your self and other Princes to that Usurper of Rome, as is very like hereafter to happen in other places of Christendom, whereever the true declaration of the Truth and Word of God shall have free course, to scourge them, unless they will adore, worship, and kiss the Feet of that corrupt Holiness, which desireth nothing else but pride and the universal thrall of Christendom under Romes Yoke.

Remedyes

But because the Censures of that Nuncio be not yet opened, but lie secret and uncertain under muttering, I shall cease further to proceed therein, till further occasion shall minister to me more certain matter to say and to judge. In the mean time for so much as it is most certainly come to the Intelligence of the Kings Majesty, that the Abbot of Artois should be chosen of late and elected to be a Cardinal in this your Realm of Scotland, his Majesty therefore for the good love and hearty good will be beareth unto your Grace, as the Uncle is bound unto the Nephew, knowing that you as yet perceive not so well the hypocrite and deceitful guile and malice of the Romans and their practises, as he himself doth by his long experience; could not but hearing thereof advertise your Grace, that his advice is, you should not suffer any of your Subjects to take upon him that red Hat of pride, whereby he shall incontinently, the same being received (unless he be of a contrary nature to any man that ever was yet of that sort) not only be in manner discharged of his Obedience, and become the Bishop of Romes true lieg-man; but also shall presume of his Cardinalship to be your Fellow, and to have the rule as well as you. Then should the Bishop of Rome creep into your own very bosom, know all your secrets, and at last, unless you will be yoked and serve their pleasure in all points, your Grace is like to smart for it. The thing perchance in the beginning shall seem to your Grace very honourable and pleasant; but wisdom it is to beware of the snail, which is very black and bitter.

His Majesties Father, and Grandfather to your Grace, had a Cardinal, whereof he was weary, and never admitted other after his decease, knowing the importable pride of them. In like manner also his Highness by the experience of one, hath utterly determined to avoid all the sort: so well his Grace hath known and experienced their mischief, joke, and thralldom that thereby is laid upon Princes. By reason whereof, as his Highness is the more able by his own experience to inform your Grace, so of good will and meer propinquity of heart, caused partly by nature and kin; partly by conjunction and vicinity of Dominions adjoining so near together, he is no less ready to forswear your Grace before, wishing that God will so work in your Princely heart and noble stomach, that his Majesties monition and friendly warning, as it proceedeth from a sincere affection and tender care of his part unto his Nephew, so it may prevail and take place in your mind, that your Grace wisely inweighing with your self, what supreme Right Princes have and ought to have upon their Churches and Lands where they govern, and what little cause the Bishop of Rome hath thereto, to proceed by unjust Censures against them: your Grace may therein not only stand to the just defence of your dear Uncle, but also may endeavour to follow his steps therein, and to take his counsel, which be doubteth not, but shall redound not only to your Graces honour, to the benefit, weal, and profit of your Realm and Subjects, but especially to the Glory of Almighty God, and advancement of his true Religion.

And thus have I expounded unto your Grace, the sum of my Errand and Message from the Kings Majesty your Uncle, who as he would be glad to be advertised by answer, of your Graces purpose, mind, and intention in this behalf, so for my part, according to my charge and duty, I shall be preit and ready with all diligence to give mine attendance upon your pleasure for the same accordingly.

The sum and effect of the Kings Message sent to the French King in defence of his proceedings.

The King considering the present state of his Marriage, which was not yet well digested nor accepted in the Courts of other Princes; and also having Intelligence of the straight Amity intended by the marriages between the Emperor and the French King, and also of the Popes inclination to pleasure the Emperor, and further understanding of the order and meaning of the French Kings Counsel, not greatly favouring his Purposes, sent therefore into France for his Ambassador Edward Fox Doctor of Divinity, his Chaplain and Councillor, with Instructions and Admonitions how to frame and attemper himself in those the Kings Affairs. The contents of which his Instructions came to this effect: That the said Edward Fox, first declaring to the French King the most affectuous Commendations made on the Kings behalf, with Declaration of the Kings most intire and hearty good will to understand of his Prosperity, and the good success of his Affairs, which his Majesty {KING} no less desired than his own: and also after the Kings Letters being delivered to him and to other Personages of his Council, then, after his access made unto the King, he should utter and inimate unto the King his Matters mind and intent in these three special Points following.

Three cases to be declared in the Kings defence.

The first was, to declare the justness of the Kings cause concerning the late marriage with Queen Anne, and divorcement of the King from his Brothers Wife.

The second to signify and expresse the injuries done by the Pope, as afterward shall be declared.

The third was, to win and allure to the Kings devotion the Chancellor of France.

And as touching the Declaration of the justness of the Kings cause, first he taking with him certain Books printed, containing the determinations of Universities in that behalf, with reasons and authorities confirming the same, should distribute the said Books to the Bishop of Saint Line, and to other Bishops, to Monsieur de Langey, and other of the Kings Council more, and to prove after the best fashion, to obtain their approbations of the same Books, and with dexterity to assay whether he could induce them of the University of Paris, and other learned men, to send forth this Book with their authorities and approbations. That done, then he being acquainted with all those Points and Articles of the Kings Cause, in communicating and conference (as the cause required) should not only make answer to such things as should be objected, but also furnish and maintain the justness of that Opinion, with his Learning, in such sort as he could best invent and cogitate.

The Popes injuries done to the King of England.

As touching the second part which contained the Injuries done by the Pope against the King, the said Embassador in that behalf being a man no less acquainted, than also well beaten and ripe in the manifold misbehaviours of the Pope, from the beginning of the cause, should declare and expresse to the French King, how injuriously the said Pope had demeaned himself towards the Kings Highness: first, in sending a Commission decretal, and then commanding it to be burnt as also in promulging by Schedule of his own hand, not to call the cause out of England; and moreover, approving first the justness of the Kings cause, yet notwithstanding afterward went from the fame and did contrary.

The Pope inconsistent in his deeds and contrary to himself.

Touching all which Injuries received at the Popes hand, though the King had great cause justly to complain, yet other Injuries there were beside these wherewith the King most especially was moved.

The Pope calleth and citheth the King to Rome.

The one was for calling and citing the Kings Highness to appear at Rome.

Two special Injuries of the Pope against the King.

The other was for rejecting the Person of the Kings trusty Subject and Chaplain Master Kerne his Embassador, from making such Allegations as to the King in that case appertained; beside sundry other no small griefs and inconveniences, which here might be shewed and alledged: but in these two especial Injuries the King thought himself most chiefly touched and agrieved. In opening and nipping up of which Injuries, and first in the said injurious calling of the King to Rome, Instructions were given to the said Embassador to explicate the open violation therein of the most ancient and general Councils, the Council of Nice, the Council of Africk, and the Council of Milver. In which Councils the contrary was, for quietness of the World, provided and ordered: Declaring withall, how agreeable the same is to all Laws, Reason and Equity, that Princes should not be compelled to repair to Rome at the Popes calling, not be bound in a matter of such weight and moment to send out of their Realms and Dominions, the Writings, Instruments, and Monuments containing the secrets of their affairs, or to make and trust a Proctor, being in so far distant parts in a matter of such importance, to abide and fulfil that which the said Proctor should agree unto there. The matter and cause whereof did not so much concern the state of any one Prince alone, as it touched the dignity of all other Christian Kings so near, that unless they would suffer themselves to be yoked with the Popes Authority, it was time (in as much as the Pope now made this enterprise on them) to search and know the bottom and ground both of his and of their Authority; and if any thing by negligence or misuse had been lost, to recover the same, rather than to suffer it to decay any more. As touching all which griefs, hurts, inconveniences, prejudice, and evil example which might thereof ensue, the Kings Highness doubted not but that his good Brother the French King, would assist and concur with his Highness for maintenance and defence of the same.

The second Point to be declared.

For declaration of the second notable grief and injury done by the Pope to the Kings Highness, thus furthermore he was willed to inimate to the French King, what injury, or rather contumely the Kings Highness received at the Popes hand, in not suffering the Kings Subject and Embassador to alledge such matter in defence of his Prince, as by Law, Reason and Equity was to be heard and admitted, for as much as the said Embassador, Doctor Kerne, the Kings Chaplain being at Rome, at such time as Citations were there published against the Kings Highness, and understanding his Grace by them to be called before one Capasuccha, Dean of the Rota, was there ready to make answer to the Queens Agents complaint, and had by the advice of other great learned men conceived a certain matter containing causes reasonable and lawful, why the Kings Highness should not be bound to appear there either by himself, or by his Proctor. Which matter also he did exhibit on the Kings behalf, as a true Subject by Law of nature is bound to maintain and alledge in defence of his Prince that is absent, and ought by equity to preserve him from condemnation. And yet this notwithstanding, the said Capasuccha, not regarding nor considering the matter alledged, demanded, whether the said Doctor had any Proxy from the King, or no, for such purpose, and upon default and lack of the said Proxy (which was not necessary in this case) proceeded in the principal cause. By reason whereof the said Doctor Kerne appealed to the Pope, alledging injury to be done not only to the Kings Highness, but also to himself, for that such matter as he did alledge, was not considered nor regarded, but process made. To the which Appellation notwithstanding the said Capasuccha gave an ambiguous and a doubtful answer; which was, that as much as Doctor Kerne was by the Law a lawful person, so much he would give place, & deferre appellations, and otherwise not.

Thus, upon declaration of this doubtful answer passed certain days, the said Capasuccha promising always to open the said answer and sentence more plainly, and to give a determinate resolution. Which he nevertheless did not, albeit he was divers times urged thereunto; but so passed the time, and suddenly returned to Process. Whereupon the said Doctor Kerne appealed six/cons again, and put up a Supplication to the Pope, for admission of the said Appeal. By reason whereof the matter was reasoned in the signature. In which signature by no Law it could be shewed why the said Doctor Kerne should not be admitted to alledge in defence of the Kings Highness, but only that they there among themselves being the greater number, which were of the Emperors Dominions, and feed of him (among which was also the said Capasuccha) gave their Voices as the Pope said, that Doctor Kerne should not be heard, Sine mandato Regie Majestatis. Whereunto when Doctor Kerne replied, saying, Whatsoever they decreed or said, there was no Law to maintain and bear it: It was said again by Cardinal Anconitate, That the Pope might judge after his Conscience. And upon this resolution, they determined there to proceed in the principal cause: unless the King would send a Proxy, intending by this injury and wrong, to enforce his Highness to the exhibition of a Proxy there, to his Highness high prejudice, to the pernicious example of the like to be done to other Princes, and also to the derogation of the Liberties and Prerogatives of his gracious Realm. Unto the observation whereof his Highness is bound to recover and restore such Liberties and Priviledges as by any of his Predecessors have been lost, diminished or decayed in time past.

The Pope would have the King to appear by Proxy at Rome.

These, with other like injuries and wrongs of the Pope done to the King, the foresaid Embassador Mr. Fox, according as he had in charge and Commission, did declare, open, and shew unto the French King, to the intent to sollicite the said King, to do by his mediation for the remedy and redressing of those foresaid injuries and wrongful dealings of the Pope in this behalf.

The third part or purpose of this Message.

Further-

Furthermore, for the third purpose touching the Chancellor of France, inasmuch as he was one of the chief Personages whom the French King most trusted in his great Affairs (by whose advice all matters of Learning were then conducted and trained) the King thought it not unprofitable by all ways and means to win and allure his Friendship and Amity also unto his devotion, either that by his means and dexterity the Kings Purposes might be advanced the better, or at least for a No nocet; that is, to mitigate and diminish such favour as he by the Admiral or otherwise was moved to shew to the Imperials. For the which cause the King committing in Charge to his Ambassador aforesaid, willed and instructed him how and what to do, and after what manner to attemperate himself to all occasions and times of opportunity; as first to deliver to him from the King his Letters of Credence, and withall to declare and extend the Kings most efficacious Commendations, with the hearty good will and sincere affections which his Highness bare to the said Cardinal, Chancellor of France, with no less desire also most gladly to do that thing which might be to his commodity and benefit, according as the manifold Pleasures, Gratitudes, and kindness done on his part for the Kings Highness did worthily deserve. Then after such words of mollification, to enter into further Communication with him, in such sort as might best serve his honour.

The vain-glory and avarice of the Cardinal.

The favour of Princes Counts to be noted.

And for as much as the Cardinal was then noted much to be moved with the affections of vain-glory and covetise; therefore amongst other Communication, it was devised to inter mention of the Papality, noting what ways and means might be used to attain unto that dignity. Wherein if the Kings Highness could stand him in any stead, as he thought the person of the said Chancellor most meet for the same, so he would not fail to move and to procure it to the best furtherance of his advancement. And finally, to declare how desirous the Kings Highness was to retain and make sure unto him the amity and friendship of the said Chancellor, and that his Highness devising by what means and ways he might do the same (albeit his Grace knew well, that the Faith and Sincerity of the said Chancellor towards his Master was such, as no Gift, Pension, or other offer could advance or increase that good will which for his Masters sake he would employ in the Kings Highness affairs) thought, that for declaration of his hearty good will towards the said Chancellor, it were convenient to offer unto him some yearly remembrance, &c.

This was the sum and effect of the Message which the King sent unto the French King, and to other of his Council, by his Ambassador, Master Edward Fox, which was especially to signify and make manifest to the said French King, the unjust dealings and prejudicial proceedings of the Pope, in calling up the King of England to appear at Rome by Proxy, which was derogatory to the Kings Dignity and Crown, and also prejudicial both to General-Councils of the Primitive-time, and to the ancient Laws and Statutes of this Realm (as is afore declared) and no less hurtful for example to all other Princes and Kings likewise, &c.

Stephen Gardener Ambassador to the French King. The French Kings saying against the Kings Resolutions.

This Message so done, shortly after was sent to the said French King, Stephen Gardener, Bishop of Winchester, with the Kings Answer and Message again on this manner: That inasmuch as the saying of the French King to the Ambassadors was this, That notwithstanding all the Kings Realm should agree and condescend never so much to the Right and Tide which the Succession procured of this his lawful Matrimony hath in this his Realm; yet when outward Parties shall conceive any other or contrary opinion thereof, great trouble and vexation might issue. Whereunto the King made answer again, declaring that he could not but greatly marvel, that the King his Brother, being so wise a Prince, and thereto well expert and learned in Chronicles and Histories, not only of his own Realm, but also of all others, or any of his Council, being men of such experience as they were taken to be, would think that the opinion and consent of other outward Realms was so highly to be considered and regarded of any Prince or King, in establishing or in executing things which might be lawfully done, and which touched the preservation of the Rights,

The Kings answer to the French King.

Preeminences, Dignity and State of his Realm, and did also notably confer unto the singular benefit and tranquillity of the same, so as the words both of the said King his Brother, and of the great Master did pretend. Who furthermore were not ignorant themselves, that many things have been by his noble Progenitors Kings of France attempted and done, as well in cases of Matrimony, as otherwise, which in some part in the opinion of the Popes of Rome then being, and in some part in the opinion of divers other outward Princes, States, Seigniories, and common people, have been thought not perfectly good, nor yet much acceptable unto them; and yet that notwithstanding his said Progenitors knowing themselves the prosecuting of those causes to be beneficial to them and to the Realm, have not therefore desisted from their said purposes, but diligently employing their own strength and powers with the Succours of their Friends, have finally achieved their said enterprises, without requiring or greatly regarding the opinion or agreement thereunto of outward Princes.

Kings in the right of their Realm are not bound to the agreement of outward Realm.

Again, whereas the Chancellor of France made this Overture to the said Bishop of Winchester. Whether the King would be contented to have indifferent Judges to be appointed by the Authority of the Pope, to determine his Cause, with a Commission decretal from the same, declaring, Quid juris, &c. The King, by his Ambassador therunto answering, declared, That the Pope having done unto him so notable and evident Injuries as he had done, it were his office and duty now to labour himself to end this matter, and to study how to make due satisfaction to God, and his Justice, which he hath, tam indignis modis, offended and violated, and to deliver himself out of the danger, and the perpetual infamy of the World, which he hath incurred by reason of these his most ungodly doings, and not to look that the King should make any request or suit unto him therefore, or recompence for the same, &c.

The Overture of the Chancellor of France, to the King, to take indifferent Judges by the Popes authority. The Kings answer to the Overture.

Furthermore, whereas the Pope, at the request of the French King, had in open Consistory prorogued execution of his Censures and Excommunication against the King unto the first day of November, and word thereof was sent to the King by his Ambassadors, from the great Master of France, that the King might have the said Prorogation made authentically in writing, if he would: The King answering thereto, thought it not unprofitable, that his Ambassadors resident in France should receive into their hands the possession of the said new Prorogation, conceived and written in authentick form and manner, according to the order of the Laws.

After this again came other Letters to the King from France, namely, from the great Master of France, tending to this end; That if the King would do nothing for the Pope (meaning by the revocation of such Acts of Parliaments as were made in the Realm of England, to the Popes prejudice) it were no reason, neither should it be possible for the French King to induce the Pope to any gratuity or pleasure for the King in his affairs.

Whereunto the King answering again, sendeth word to the French King, trusting and hoping well of the perfect Friendship of the French King his good Brother, that he will never suffer any such Perswasion to enter into his breaht, whatsoever the great Master, or any other shall say to the contrary thereof, nor that he will require any thing more of him to do for the Pope, Chancellor, or other, than his Council hath already devised to be done in this behalf, especially, considering the words of the said French Kings promise made before, as well to the Duke of Norfolk, as to the other Ambassadors, promising his Friendship to the King simply, without requiring him to revoke or infringe any such act or constitution made by the Realm and Parliament to the contrary. Persuading moreover, and laying before the eyes as well of the Pope, as of the French King, how much it should redound to the Popes dishonour and infamy, and to the slander also of his cause, if he should be seen so to pact and covenant with the King upon such conditions, for the administration of that thing which he in his own Conscience hath reputed and adjudged to be most right and agreeable to justice and equity, and ought of his office and duty to do in this matter simpliciter & gratis, and without all worldly respects, either for the advancement ment of his private lucre and commodity, or for the preservation of his pretended power and authority. For surely it is not to be doubted, but that the Pope, being minded and determined to give Sentence for the invalidity and nullity of the Kings first pretended Matrimony, hath conceived and established in his own conscience a firm and certain opinion and persuasion, that he ought of justice and equity to do.

Then to see the Pope to have this opinion indeed, and yet refuse this to do for the King, unless he shall be content for his benefit and pleasure, Cedere juri suo, and to do some things prejudicial unto his Subjects contrary to his honour: it is easie to be foreseen, what the World and the Posterity shall judge De tam turpi nundinatione iustitiae, & illius tam fadae & sordidae lucri & honoris ambitione. And as for the Kings part, if he shall not attain now justice at the mediation of his good Brother, knowing the Pope to be of this disposition and determination in his heart, to satisfy all his desires, being moved thereunto by justice, and that the let thereof is no default of justice in the cause, but only for that the King would not condescend to his request: it is to the King matter sufficient enough for discharge of his conscience to God and to the World, although he never did execute indeed his said determination. For lish his corrupt affection is the only impediment thereof, what need either the King to require him any further to do in the cause, or else his Subjects to doubt any further in the justness of the same?

Albeit if respects to benefits and favours done towards the Pope and See of Rome, should be regarded in the attaining of justice in a cause of so high consequence as this is, reason would, that if it would please the Pope to consider the former kindness of the King shewed unto him in time past, (whereof he is very loth to enter the rehearsal, Ne videatur velle exprimerare quae de aliis fecerit bene) he should not now require of him any new benefit or gratuity to be shewed unto him, but rather study to recompence him for the old graces, merits, pleasures and benefits before received. For surely he thinketh that the Pope cannot forget, how that for the conservation of his Person, his Estate and Dignity, the King hath not heretofore spared for any respect, in using the office of a most perfect and steadfast Friend, so relinquish the long continued good will established between him and the Emperor, and to declare openly to all the World, that for the Popes sake, and in default of his deliverance, he would become enemy to the said Emperor, and to make against him actual War.

Beside this, the King hath not failed him with right large and ample subventions of money, for the better supporting of his charges against the enterprises of the said Emperor, combining and knitting himself with the French King, to procure the advancement of the said French Kings Army into Italy, to the Charges whereof the King did bear little less than the one half: Besides notable losses sustained as well in his Customs, Subsidies, and other Duties, as also to the no little hindrance and damage of his Subjects and Merchants, occasioned by discontinuance of the Traffick and intercourse heretofore used with the Emperors Subjects. In doing of all which things, the King hath not been thus respectful, as the Pope now sheweth himself towards him, but like a perfect Friend hath been always contented frankly, liberally, and openly to expose all his study, labour, travel, treasure, puissance, Realm and divers Subjects for the Popes aid, and maintenance of the State and Dignity of the Church and See of Rome. Which things although he doth not here rehearse animo exprobrandi, yet he doubteth not but the same, weighed in the ballance of any indifferent mans judgement, shall be thought to be of that weight and value, as that he hath justly deserved to have some mutual correspondency of kindness to be shewed unto him at the Popes hands; especially in the ministrature of Justice, and in so reasonable and just cause as this is, and not thus to have his most rightful Petition rejected and denied, because he will not follow his desire and appetite in revoking of such Acts, as be here made and passed for the weal and commodity of his Realm and Subjects.

All he loth

¶ Thus ye have heard how infinitely the King had laboured by the means of the French King, to the Pope being then in France, for Right and Justice to be done for the dissolution and nullity of his first pretended Matrimony with his Brothers wife. Which when it could not be attained at the Popes hands, unless the King would recompence and requite the same, by revoking of such Statutes as were made and enacted here in the High Court of Parliament, for the surety of Succession and establishment of the Realm; what the King thereunto answered again, ye heard, declaring that to be a far unequal recompence and satisfaction for a thing which ought of right and justice to be ministrated unto him, that a King therefore should revoke and undo the Acts and Statutes passed by a whole Realm contrary to his own honour and weal of his Subjects, &c.

Where is moreover to be understood, how that the Pope with all his Papists, and the French King also, and peradventure Stephen Gardener too, the Kings own Ambassador, had ever a special eye to disprove and disappoint the Kings Succession by Queen Anne, whom they knew all to be a great enemy unto the Pope, thinking thereby that if that succession were diminished, the Popes Kingdom might soon be restored again in England. But yet for all their unjust and crafty packing, they were through Gods Providence frustrate of their desired purpose. For although they so brought to pass the next year following, to adnull the Order of that Succession by a contrary Parliament, yet neither did they so annihilate it, but that both King Edward followed, yea, and also the same Succession afterward by the said King and other Parliaments was restored again, and yet, God be praised, hath hitherto reigned, and doth yet flourish in the Realm of England.

the Papists.

Now, as we have declared the Kings doings in the Realm of Scotland and of France proceeding further in the Kings proceedings with other Princes, let us see how the King defended himself and his cause before the Emperor, sending his Ambassador unto him, using these words before his Majesty, as here followeth.

The Papists

The Oration of the Kings Ambassador before the Emperor in Defence of his Cause.

Sir, the King my Master, taking and requiring you as his perfect Friend, Confederate and Allye, and not doubting, but you remembering the mutual kindness between you in times past, will shew your self in all occurrences to be of such mind and disposition, as Justice, Truth, and Equity doth require, hath willed me by his Letters, to open and to declare unto you, what he hath done, and in what wise he hath proceeded concerning such Marriage as by many years was supposed to have been between your Ant and his Grace. In which matter there being two principal Points specially to be regarded and considered: that is to say, the justice of the Cause, and the order of the Process therein, his Highness hath so used him in both, as no man may right-wisely complain of the same.

of the Ambassador to the Emperor.

For as touching the justness of the Cause, that is to say, of that marriage between him and your said Ant to be naught, and of no moment, no effect, but against the Law of God, Nature, and Man, and indispenable by the Pope, and in no wise available; his Highness hath done therein as much as becometh him for discharge of his Conscience, and hath found so certain, so evident, so manifest, so open and approved truth, as whereunto his Majesty ought of good congruence to give place, and which by all other ought to be allowed and received, not as a matter doubtful, disputable, or depending in question and ambiguity; but as a plain determined and discussed verity of the true understanding of Gods Word and Law, which all Christian men must follow and obey, and before all other worldly Respects prefer and execute. In attaining the knowledge whereof, if his Highness had used only his own particular judgement and sentence, or the mind only and opinion of his own natural Subjects; (although the same might in his Conscience have sufficed) it would not much have repugned, if some other had made difficulty to assent to him in the same, still further discussion had been made thereupon. But now, for as much as besides his own certain understanding, and the agreement of his whole Clergy to the same in both both Provinces of this Realm, his Majesty hath also for him the determination of the most famous Universities of Christendom, and most indifferent to pronouncement and give judgment in this case, and among them, the University of Bononi, (all fear of the Pope [set apart] concluding against his Power, and also Padua (the Venetians threat not regarded) giving their Sentence for the truth and evident words of Gods Law; there should no man, as seemeth to him, gain-say or withstand, either in word or deed, the truth thus opened, but for his honour and duty to the observation of Gods Law, willingly embrace and receive the same.

According whereunto his Grace perceiveth also as well in his Realm, as elsewhere, as a notable consent and agreement amongst all Divines, and such as have studied for knowledge of Gods Law without contradiction of any number, unless it be such as applying their mind to the maintenance of worldly affections, do either in defence of such Laws as they have studied, or for satisfaction of their private appetites, forbear to agree unto the same. The number of whom is so small, as in the discerning of truth it ought not to be regarded in a case so plainly described and determined by Gods Word, as this is.

number and matter

And if perchance your Majesty here not regarding the number, but the matter, shall seem to consider in this case, not so much who speaketh, as what is spoken; to answer thereunto, I say, Sir, the King my Master is of the same mind, for his own satisfaction, and taketh himself to be in the right, not because so many say it, but because he being learned, knoweth the matter to be right. Nevertheless reason would, and enforce also, that strangers to the cause, and not parties therein, should be induced to believe that to be truth that such a number of Clerks do so constantly affirm; especially not being otherwise learned to be Judges of their sayings, as your Majesty is not. And if you were, then could your Highness shew such Reasons, Authorities and Grounds as cannot be taken away, and be so firm and stable, as they ought not of Christian men in any part to be impugned, like as hath been partly heretofore shewed by his sundry Embassadors to your Imperial Majesty, and should effects be done, were it not too great an injury to that which is already passed in the Realm, to dispute the same again in any other Country: which being contrariety to the Laws and Ordinances of his Realm, be trusted your prudence will not require, but take that which is past for a thing done, and justly done; and as for Gods part, to leave his Conscience to himself, Qui Domino suo stat aut cadit; and for the World, to pass over as a Friend that which nothing toucheth you, and not to marvel though the said King my Master, regarding the wealth of his Soul principally, with the commodity of his person, and so great benefit and quiet of his Realm, have perchance done that which he for his private phantastie would had not chanced; like as his Highness also would wish it had not hapned that such cause had been given unto him to compel him so to do.

part of his Oration touching the manner of the Kings proceedings

But these things in their outward visage be but worldly, and inwardly touch and concern the Soul. Quid autem prodest homini si universum mundum lucretur, animæ vero sue detrimentum patiat? Primum quærit Regnum Dei, &c. And yet neither is his Highness ignorant what respect it is to be had unto the World, and how much he hath laboured and travelled therein, he hath sufficiently declared and shewed to the World in his Acts and proceedings. For if he had utterly contemned the order and process of the World, or the Friendship and Amity of your Majesty, he needed not to have sent so often and sundry Embassadors to the Pope, and to you both, nor continued and spent his time in delays, as he hath done hitherto, but might many years past have done that he hath done now, if it had so liked him, and with as little difficulty then as now, if he would have without such respect followed his pleasure in that behalf. But now I doubt not, your Majesty doth well remember how often the King my Master hath sent unto your Highness, and that your Majesty hath heard also what just he hath made to the Pope, and how the said Pope hath handled him again, only in delay and dalliance, with open Commission given to his Legates to determine and give Sentence for him by a Commission decretal, and secretly secretly to give him Instructions to suspend and put over the same. By which means, and other semblable, he perceived plainly himself to be brought into such a Labyrinth, as going forward that way he were like to come to no end, and was therefore compelled to step right forth at once to the mazes end, there to quit and repose himself at the last.

And is it not time to have an end in seven years, or else to seek for it another way? The Pope hath shewed himself both unwilling to have an end, and also ready and prone to do him injury, as well in citing him to Rome, as also sending forth certain Briefs to his Grace slanderous, and for the injustice and iniquity of them, to himself dishonourable; and he gave his Highness good and just cause to suspect, whether any end to be made at his hand (if any he would make) might be in his Conscience received and followed. For the Pope doing injury in some point, why should he be thought a convenient Judge, not using himself indifferently in this matter (as many more particularities may be shewed and declared) considering there is a general Council, willing all matters to be determined where they first began, and that the whole body of our Realm hath, for the wealth of the same, by a Law established the determination of such Causes? By reason whereof the Bishop of Canterbury, as Metropolitan of our Realm, hath given Sentence in due judgment for the Kings party. It is not to be asked, nor questioned, whether that matter hath been determined after the common fashion, but whether it hath in common Justice, truth, and equity of Gods Law? For observation of the common order, his Grace hath done that lay in him, and enforced by necessity, hath found the true order maintainable by Gods Word and General Councils, which be hath in substance followed with effect, and hath done as becometh him, rendering either Gods Law, or his Person, or the wealth of his Realm, like as he doubteth not but your Majesty (as a wife Prince) remembering his Cause from the beginning hitherto, will of your self consider and think, that among mortal men nothing should be immortal, and Suius must once have an end, Si possit recte, si non quocunque modo. And if he cannot as he would, his Highness then to do as he may; and be that hath a journey to be perfected, must, if he cannot go one way, alay another. Whatsoever hath been herein done, necessity hath enforced him (that is to say, Gods Law) in the matter, and such manner of dealing of the Pope as he hath shewed unto him in the same, doing sundry injuries without effect of justice, wherein he promised the same. But as for the Kings matter to the Pope, he shall intreat with him apart. As touching your Majesty, he taketh you for his friend, and as to a friend he openeth these matters unto you, trusting to find your Majesty no less friendly hereafter unto him, than he hath done heretofore.

By these matters thus passed and discoursed to and fro between the King and these foreign Princes above rehearsed, many things are to be understood of the Reader, who is disposed to behold and consider the state and proceeding of public Affairs, as well to the Church appertaining, as to the Commonwealth. First, how the King cleareth himself both justly and reasonably for his divorce made with the Lady Katharine, the Emperors Aunt. Secondly, how he proveth and defendeth his marriage with Queen Anne to be just and lawful, both by the authority of Gods Word, and the approbation of the best and most famous learned men and Universities, and also by the assent of the whole Realm.

Furthermore, for the stabilishing of the Kings Succession in the Imperial Crown of this Realm, for the suppression of the Pope, and uniting the Title of Supremacy unto the Kings Crown, what order was therein taken, and what penalty was at upon the same, may appear by the Act of Parliament set forth Anno 1534. Ex H. reg. 26. cap. 13. in these words following:

If any person or persons after the first of February next, do maliciously imagine, invent, practice, or attempt to deprive the King of the Dignity, Title, or Name of his Royal Estate, &c. that then every such person and persons so offending in any of the premises; their Aidors, Counsellors, Consenters, and Abettors, being thereof lawfully convicted, according to the Laws and Customs of

Upon this and such other Acts concluded in these Parliaments, what stomach the Pope took, what stir he kept, and what practices he wrought with Cardinal Pool, to stir up other Nations to War against us, what difficulty also there was with the Emperor, with the French King, and with the King of Scots, about the matter, and what labour was used on the Kings part to reconcile the Princes for his own indemnity, to keep from him their Wars and Invasions, and specially to obtain the Popes approbation, and to avoid his censures of Excommunication; and finally, what despicable injuries, and open wrongs the Pope wrought against him, upon the which Pope the King had bestowed so much money, and great treasures before, all this likewise by the premises may appear.

Wherefore, to end now with these, and to go forward in our story, as the order and computation of years do give, we have now consequently to enter into the story of the good Martyr of God, William Tindal, being this present year fully betrayed and put to death. Which William Tindal, as he was a special Organ of the Lord appointed, and as Gods Mattock to shake the inward roots, and foundation of the Popes proud Prelacy, so the great Prince of darkness, with his impious imps, having a special malice against him, left no way unthought how craftily to intrap him, and fallily to betray him, and maliciously to spill his life, as by the process of his story here following may appear.

The Life and Story of the true Servant and Martyr of God William Tindal; who, for his notable pains and travel may well be called the Apostle of England in this our later Age.

WILLIAM Tindal, the faithful Minister and constant Martyr of Christ, was born about the Borders of Wales, and brought up from a Child in the University of Oxford, where he by long continuance grew up, and increased as well in the knowledge of tongues, and other liberal Arts, as especially in the knowledge of the Scriptures, whereunto his mind was singularly addicted; inasmuch that he, lying then in Magdalen Hall, read privily to certain Students and Fellows of Magdalen College, some parcel of Divinity, instructing them in the knowledge and truth of the Scriptures. Whole manners also and conversation, being correspondent to the same, were such, that all they that knew him, reputed and esteemed him to be a man of most virtuous disposition, and of life unsported.

Thus he, in the University of Oxford, increasing more and more in learning, and proceeding in degrees of the Schools, spying his time, removed from thence to the University of Cambridge, where after he had likewise made his abode a certain space, being now further ripened in the knowledge of Gods Word, leaving that University also, he resorted to one Master Welch a Knight of Gloucestershire, and was there Schoolmaster to his Children, and in good favour with his Master. This Gentleman, as he kept a good Ordinary commonly at his Table, there resorted to him many times sundry Abbots, Deans, Archdeacons, with divers other Doctors, and great Beneficed men; who there together with Master Tindal sitting at the same Table, did use many times to enter communication, and talk of learned men, as of Luther, and of Erasmus; also of divers other controversies and questions upon the Scripture.

Then Master Tindal, as he was learned and well practised in Gods matters, so he spared not to tell unto them simply and plainly his judgment in matters, as he thought; and when as they at any time did vary from Tindal in opinions and judgment, he would shew them in the Book, and lay plainly before them the open and manifest places of the Scriptures, to confute their errors, and confirm his sayings. And thus continued they for a certain season, reasoning and contending together divers and sundry times, till at length they waxed weary, and bare a secret grudge in their hearts against him.

Not long after this, it happened that certain of these great Doctors had invited Mr. Welch and his Wife to a Banquet; where they had talk at will and pleasure, uttering their blindness and ignorance without any reluctance or gain-saying. Then Master Welch and his Wife, coming home, and calling for Mr. Tindal, began to reason with him about those matters, whereof the Priests had talked before at their Banquet. Master Tindal answering by Scriptures, maintained the truth, and reproved their false opinions. Then said the Lady Welch, a stout and a wife woman (as Tindal reported) Well (said she) there was such a Doctor which may dispense an hundred pounds, and another two hundred pounds, and another three hundred pounds: and what were it reason, think you, that we should believe you before them? Master Tindal gave her no answer at that time, and also after that (because he saw it would not avail) he talked but little in those matters. At that time he was about the Translation of a Book called Enchiridion militis Christiani, which being translated, he delivered to his Master and Lady. Who, after they had read and well perused the same, the Doctorly Prelates were no more so often called to the house, neither had they the cheer and countenance when they came, as before they had. Which thing they marking, and well perceiving, and supposing no less but it came by the means of Master Tindal, refrained themselves, and at last, utterly withdrew themselves, and came no more there.

As this grew on, the Priests of the Country clustering together, began to grudge and storm against Tindal, railing against him in Alehouses and other places. Of whom Tindal himself, in his Prologue before the first Book of Moses, thus testifieth in his own words, and reporteth that he suffered much in that Country by a sort of unlearned Priests, being full rude and ignorant (saith he) God knoweth: (which have seen no more Latin, than that only which they read in their Portifexes and Missals; which yet many of them can scarcely read) except it be Albertus de secretis mulierum, in which yet, though they be never so fondly learned, they pore day and night, and make notes therein, and all to reach the Midwives, as they say, and also another called Lindwood, a Book of Constitutions to gather Tythes, Mortuaries, Offerings, Customs, and other Pillage, which they call not theirs, but Gods part, the duty of Holy-Church, to discharge their Conscience withal. For they are bound that they shall not diminish but increase all things unto the uttermost of their powers, which pertain to Holy-Church. Thus these blind and rude Priests flocking together to the Alehouse (for that was their preaching place, raged and railed against him, affirming that his sayings were Heresie; adding moreover unto his sayings, of their own heads, more than ever he spake, and so accused him secretly to the Chancellor, and other of the Bishops Officers.

It followed not long after this, that there was a fitting of the Bishops Chancellor appointed, and warning was given to the Priests to appear, amongst whom Master Tindal was also warned to be there. And whether he had any misdoubt by their threatnings, or knowledge given him that they would lay some things to his charge, it is uncertain; but certain this is (as he himself declared) that he doubted their privy accusations; so that he by the way, in going thitherwards, cried in his mind heartily to God, to give him strength fast to stand in the truth of his Word.

Then when the time came of his appearance before the Chancellor, he threatened him grievously, reviling and rating at him as though he had been a Dog, and laid to his charge many things whereof no accuser yet could be brought forth (as commonly their manner is, not to bring forth the accuser) notwithstanding that the Priests of the Country the same time were there present. And thus Master Tindal after those Examinations, escaping out of

There dwelt not far off a certain Doctor, that had been an old Chancellor before to a Bishop, who had been of old familiar acquaintance with Master Tindal, and also favoured him well. Unto whom Master Tindal went and opened his mind upon divers questions of the Scripture; for to him he durst be bold to disclose his heart. Unto whom the Doctor said, Do you not know that the Pope is very Antichrist, whom the Scripture speaketh of? But beware what you say; for if you shall be perceived to be of that opinion, it will cost you your life; and said moreover, I have been an Officer of his; but I have given it up, and desce him and all his works.

The Pope
Antichrist

It was not long after, but Master Tindal happened to be in the company of a certain Divine, recounted for a learned man, and in communing and disputing with him, he drave him to that issue, that the said great Doctor, burst out into these blasphemous words, and said, We were better to be without Gods Laws than the Poper. Mr. Tindal hearing this, full of godly zeal, and not bearing that blasphemous saying, replied again, and said, I desce the Pope, and all his Laws; and further added, That if God spared him life, ere many years, he would cause a boy that driveth the Plough to know more of the Scripture than he did.

After this, the grudge of the Priests increasing still more and more against Tindal, they never ceased barking and raving at him, and laid many things fore to his charge, saying, That he was an Heretick in Sophistry, an Heretick in Logic, an Heretick in Divinity; and laid moreover to him, That he bare himself bold of the Gentlemen there in that Country; but notwithstanding, shortly he should be otherwise talked withal. To whom Master Tindal, answering again, thus said, That he was contented they should bring him into any Country in all England, giving him ten pounds a year to live with, and binding him to no more, but to teach children, and to preach.

To be short, Master Tindal being so molested and vexed in the Country by the Priests; was constrained to leave that Country, and to seek another place; and so coming to Master Welch, he desired him of his good will that he might depart from him, saying on this wise to him, Sir, I perceive that I shall not be suffered to tarry long here in this Country, neither shall you be able, though you would, to keep me out of the hands of the Spirituality; and also what displeasure might grow thereby to you by keeping me, God knoweth, for the which I should be right sorry. So that in fine, Master Tindal, with the good will of his Master, departed, and effions came up to London, and there preached a while, according as he had done in the Country before, and specially about the Town of Brisfol, and also in the said Town in the common place called St. Austen Green. At length he bethinking himself of Cutbert Tinsal then Bishop of London, and especially for the great commendation of Erasmus, who in his Annotations so extolled him for his learning, thus cast with himself, that if he might attain unto his service, he were a happy man. And so coming to Sir Henry Gilford, the Kings Controlier, and bringing with him an Oration of Isocrates, which he had then translated out of Greek into English, he desired him to speak to the said Bishop of London for him; which he also did, and willed him moreover to write an Epistle to the Bishop, and to go himself with him. Which he did likewise, and delivered his Epistle to a servant of his, named William Hebbelwait, a man of his old acquaintance. But God, who secretly disposeth the course of things, saw that was not the best for Tindal's purpose, nor for the profit of his Church, and therefore gave him to find little favour in the Bishops sight. The answer of whom was this, That his house was full, he had more than he could well find, and advised him to seek in London abroad, where he said he could lack no service, &c. And so remained he in London, the space almost of a year, beholding and marking with himself the course of the World, and especially the demeanour of the Preachers, how they boasted themselves, and set up their authority and Kingdom; beholding also the pomp of the Prelates, with other things more, which greatly disliked him. Inasmuch that he understood not only there to be no room in the Bishops house for him to translate the New Testament; but also that there was no place to do it in all England. And therefore, finding no place for his purpose within the Realm, and having some aid and provision by Gods Providence ministered unto him by Humphry Mammouth, above recited, (as you may see before) and certain other good men, he took his leave of the Realm, and departed into Germany. Where the good man, being inflamed with a tender care and zeal of his Country, refused no travel nor diligence, how by all means possible to reduce his Brethren and Countrymen of England, to the same taste and understanding of Gods holy Word and verity, which the Lord had induced him withal.

Germany.

Whereupon he considering in his mind, and partly also conferring with John Frish, thought with himself no way more to conduce thereto, than if the Scripture were turned into the vulgar speech, that the poor people might also read and see the simple plain Word of God. For first, he wisely casting in his mind, perceived by experience, how that it was not possible to establish the lay-people in any truth, except the Scripture were so plainly laid before their eyes in their Mother Tongue, that they might see the process, order and meaning of the Text; for else whatsoever truth should be taught them, their enemies of the truth would quench it again, either with apparent reasons of sophistry and traditions of their own making, founded without all ground of Scripture; or else juggling with the Text, expounding it in such a sense, as impossible it were to gather of the Text, if the right process, order and meaning thereof were seen.

The cause moving Tindal to translate the Scripture
into the English Tongue.

Again, right well he perceived and considered, this only, or most chiefly to be the cause of all mischief in the Church, that the Scriptures of God were hidden from the peoples eyes; for so long the abominable doings, and idolatries maintained by the Pharisaical Clergy, could not be spied, and therefore all their labour was with might and main to keep it down, so that either it should not be read at all, or if it were, they would darken the right sense with the Mist of their Sophistry, and so entangle them which rebuked or despised their abominations, with arguments of Philosophy, and with worldly similitudes, and apparent reasons of natural wisdom; and with wresting the Scripture unto their own purpose, contrary unto the process, order and meaning of the Text, would to delude them in decanting upon it with allegories, and amaze them, expounding it in many senses laid before the unlearned lay people, that though thou seek in thy heart, and wert sure that all were false that they said, yet couldst thou not solve their subtil riddles.

Scripture
the cause of mischief.

For these and such other considerations this good man was moved (and no doubt stirred up of God) to translate the Scripture into his Mother Tongue, for the publick utility and profit of the simple vulgar people of the Country; first setting in hand with the New Testament, which he first translated about the year of our Lord 1527. After that he took in hand to translate the Old Testament, fulfilling the five Books of Moses, with sundry most learned and godly Prologues prefixed before every one, most worthy to be read and read again of all good Christians, as the like also he did upon the New Testament.

Testament

He wrote also divers other Works under sundry Titles, amongst the which is that most worthy Monument of his, entitled, The obedience of a Christian man, wherein with singular dexterity he instructeth all men in the office and duty of Christian obedience; with divers other Treatises, as, The wicked Mammon, The practice of Prelats; with Expositions upon certain parts of the Scripture, and other Books also, answering to Sir Thomas More, and other adversaries of the truth, no less delectable, than also most fruitful to be read; which partly before being unknown unto many, partly also being almost abolished and worn out by time, the Printer hereof (good Reader) for conserving and restoring such singular treasures, hath collected and set forth in Print the same in one general Volume, all and whole together, as also the Works of John Frish, Barnes and other, as are to be seen, most special and profitable for thy reading.

The

{ KING } The Books of William Tindal being compiled, pub-{ H. 8. } lished, and sent over into England, it cannot be spoken what a door of light they opened to the eyes of the whole English Nation, which before were many years shut up in darkness.

At his first departing out of the Realm he took his journey into the further parts of Germany, as into Saxony, where he had conference with Libther, and other learned Men in those Quarters, where after that he had continued a certain feafe, he came down from thence into the Netherlands, and had his most abiding in the Town of Amwerp, until the time of his apprehension; whereof more shall be said (God willing) hereafter.

Amongst his other Books which he compiled, one Work he made allo for the declaration of the Sacrament (as it was then called) of the Altar; and which he kept by him, considering how the people were not as yet fully perlawaded in other matters tending to superstitious ceremonies and grofs Idolatry. Wherefore he thought as yet time was not come to put forth that Work, but rather that it fhould hinder the people from other inſtructions, ſuppoſing that it would ſeem to them odious to hear any ſuch thing ſpoken, or let forth at that time, ſounding againſt their great Goddeſs Diana, that is, againſt their Maſs, being had every where in great eſtimation, as was the Goddeſs Diana amongst the Epiſcopes; whom they thought to come from Heaven.

Wherefore Master Tindal, being a man both prudent in his doings, and no less zealous in the setting forth of Gods holy truth, after such sort as it might take most effect with the people, did forbear the putting forth of that work, not doubting but by Gods merciful grace, a time should come to have that abomination openly declared, as it is at this present day, the Lord Almighty be always praised therefore. Amen.

These godly Books of Tindal, and especially the New Testament of his Translation, after that they began to come into mens hands, and to spread abroad, as they wrought great and singular profit to the godly, so the ungodly envying and disdaining that the people should be any thing wiser than they, and again, fearing left by the shining beams of truth, their false hypocritie and works of darkness should be difsemmed, began to stir with no small adoe, like as at the birth of Christ Herod and all Jerusalem

lem was troubled with him. But especially Satan the Prince of Darknes, maligning the happy course and success of the Gospel, let to his might, able, how to impeach and hinder the blessed travels of that man; as by this, and also by sundry other ways may appear. For at what time Tindal had translated the fifth Book of Moses call'd Deuteronomium, minding to Print the same at Hamborough, he failed thitherward; where by the way upon the Coast of Holland, he suffered Shipwreck, by the which he lost all his Books, Writings and Copies, and so was compelled to begin all again anew, to his hindrance and doubling of his labours. Thus having lost by that Ship, both Mony, his Copies and time, he came in another Ship to Hamborough, where at his appointment, Master Coverdale variousely helped him in the translating of the whole five Books of Moses, from Ezra till Deuteronomy in the house of a worshipfull Citizen, Margaret Van Emmeren, Anno 1590. a great while having sickned by the same time in the Town. So having discharged his business at Hamborough, he returned afterward to Antwerpe again.

That as Satan is, and ever hath been an enemy to all godly endeavours, and chiefly to the promoting and furtherance of Gods Word, as by this and many other experiments may be seen, to his Ministers and Members, following the like quality of their Master, be not altogether idle for their parts; as also by the Popes Chaplains and Gods enemies, and by their cruel handling of the said Mr.
Tindal the same time, both here in England and in Flan- ders, may well appear,

When Gods will was that the New Testament in the common tongue should come abroad, Tindal the Translator thereof added to the later end a certain Epistle wherein he desired them that were learned to amend if ought were found amiss. Wherefore if any such default had been, deserving correction, it had been the part of courtesie and gentleness, for men of knowledge and he lay in the same House of the said Pointz; to whom he shewed moreover his Books and other secrets of his study, so little did Tindal then mistrust this Traytor.

But Pointz, having no great confidence in the fellow, asked Master Tindal how he came acquainted with this Philips. Master Tindal answered, that he was an honest man, handomely learned, and very comfortable. Then Pointz, perceiving that he bare such favour to him, said no more, thinking that he was brought acquainted with him by some friend of his. The said Philips being in the Town three or four days, upon a time desired Pointz to walk with him forth of the Town to shew him the commodities thereof, and in walking together without the Town, had communication of divers things, and some of the Kings affairs; by the which talk Pointz, as yet suspected nothing, but after, by the sequel of the matter, he perceived more what he intended. In the mean time this he well perceived, that he bare no great favour either to the setting forth of any good thing, or to the proceedings of the King of England. But after, when the time was past, Pointz perceived this to be his mind, to feel if he could perceive by him, whether he might break with him in the matter, for lucre of money, to help him to his purpose; for he perceived before that he was ruined, and would that Pointz should think no less; but by whom it was unknown. For he had desired Pointz before to help him to divers things, and such things as he named, he required might be of the best, for said he, I have money enough; but of this talk came nothing, but that men should think he had some things to do; for nothing else followed of his talk. So it was to be suspected, that Philips was in doubt to move this matter for his purpose, to any of the Rulers or Officers of the Town of Antwerp, for doubt it should come to the knowledge of some Englishmen, and by the means thereof Mr. Tindal should have had warning.

So Philips went from Antwerp to the Court of Brussels, which is from thence twenty four English miles, the King having there no Embassador; for at that time the King of England and the Emperor were at a controversy, for the question betwixt the King and the Lady Katarine, which was Aunt to the Emperor, and the discord grew so much, that it was doubted left there should have been War between the Emperor and the King, so that Philips as a Traytor both against God and the King, was there the better retained, as also other Traitors more besides him; who after he had betrayed Mr. Tindal into their hands, shewed himself likewise against the Kings own person, and there set forth things against the King. To make short, the said Philips did so much there, that he procured to bring from thence with him to Antwerp, that Procuror General, which is the Emperors Attorney, with certain other Officers, as after followeth. The which was not done with small charges and expences, from whomsoever it came.

Within a while after, Pointz, sitting at his door, Philips man came unto him, and asked whether Mr. Tindal were there, and said, his Master would come to him, and so departed. But whether his Master Philips were in the Town or not, it was not known; but at that time Pointz heard no more, neither of the Master nor of the Man. Within three or four days after, Pointz went forth to the Town of Barrow being eighteen English Miles from Antwerp, where he had business to do for the space of a Month or six Weeks, and in the time of his absence Henry Philips came again to Antwerp to the house of Pointz, and coming in, spake with his Wife, asking her for Mr. Tindal, and whether he would dine there with him, saying, What good meat shall we have? She answered, such as the Market will give. Then went he forth again (as it is thought) to provide, and set the Officers which he brought with him from Brussels, in the street, and about the door. Then about Noon he came again, and went to Master Tindal, and desired him to lend him forty shillings; for (said he) I lost my Purse this morning, coming over at the passage between this and Machelin. So Master Tindal took him forty shillings, the which was easie to be had of him, if he had it, for in the wily subtilties of this World he was simple and unexpert.

Then said Philips, Master Tindal you shall be my Guest here to day. No, said Master Tindal, I go forth this day to Dinner, and you shall go with me, and be my Guest, where you shall be welcome. So when it was Dinner time, Master Tindal went forth with Philips, and at the going out of Pointz house, was a long narrow Entry, so that two could not go in a front. Master Tindal would have put Philips before him, but Philips would in no wise, but put Master Tindal afore, for that he pretended to shew great humanity. So Master Tindal, being a man of no great stature, went before, and Philips a tall comely person followed behind him; who had set Officers on either side of the Door upon two seats, which being there might see who came in the Entry; and coming through the same Entry, Philips pointed with his finger over Master Tindal's head down to him, that the Officers which fate at the door might see that it was he whom they should take, as the Officers that took Master Tindal, afterward told Pointz, and said to Pointz when they had laid him in Prison, That they pitied to see his simplicity when they took him. Then they took him and brought him to the Emperors Attorney, or Procuror General, where he dined. Then came the Procuror General to the House of Pointz, and sent away all that was there of Master Tindal's, as well his Books as other things, and from thence Tindal was had to the Castle of Filsford, eighteen English Miles from Antwerp, and there he remained until he was put to death.

Then incontinent, by the help of English Merchants, were Letters sent in the favour of Tindal to the Court of Brussels. Also not long after, Letters were directed out of England to the Council at Brussels, and sent to the Merchant Adventurers to Antwerp, commanding them to see that with speed they should be delivered. Then such of the chief of the Merchants as were there at that time, being called together, required the said Pointz, to take in hand the delivery of those Letters, with Letters also from them in the favour of Master Tindal, to the Lord of Barrow and others; the which Lord of Barrow (as it was told Pointz by the way) at that time was departed from Brussels, as the chiefe Conductour of the eldest Daughter of the King of Denmark, to be married to the Palegrave, whose Mother was Sister to the Emperor, the being chief Prince of Denmark. Who, after he heard of his departure, did ride after the next way, and overtook him at Achem, where he delivered to him his Letters. The which when he had received and read, he made no direct answer, but somewhat objecting, said, There were of their Countrymen that were burned in England not long before; as indeed there were Anabaptists burned in Smithfield, and so Pointz said to him; Howbeit, said he, whatsoever the crime was, if his Lordship or any other Nobleman had writen, requiring to have had them, he thought they should not have been denied. Well, said he, I have no leisure to write, for the Princess is ready to ride.

Then said Pointz, If it shall please your Lordship, I will attend upon you unto the next bailing place, which was at Maftricht. If you so do, said the Lord, I will advise my self by the way what to write. So Pointz followed him from Achem to Maftricht, the which are fifteen English Miles asunder, and there he received Letters of him, one to the Council there, another to the company of the Merchant Adventurers, and another also to the Lord Cromwel in England.

So Pointz rode from thence to Brussels, and then and there delivered to the Council the Letters out of England, with the Lord of Barrow's Letters also, and received efficacious answer into England of the same by Letters, which he brought to Antwerp to the English Merchants, who required him to go with them into England. And he very desirous to have Mr. Tindal out of Prison, let not to take pains, with loss of time in his own business and occupying, and diligently followed with the said Letters, which he there delivered to the Council, and was commanded by them to tarry until he had other Letters, of the which he was not dispatched thence in a Month after. At length the Letters being delivered him, he returned again, and delivered them to the Emperors Council at Brussels, and there tarried for answer of the same.

KING When the said Pointz had tarried three or four days, it was told him of one that belonged to the Chancery, that Master Tindal should have been delivered to him according to the tenour of the Letters; but Philips being there, followed the Suit against Master Tindal, and hearing that he should be delivered to Pointz, and doubting lest he should be put from his purpose, he knew none other remedy but to accuse Pointz, saying That he was a dueller in the Town of Antwerp, and there had been a succour of Tindal, and was one of the same Opinion, and that all this was only his own labour and suit, to have Master Tindal at liberty, and no more else.

William Tindal was executed by Philips.

Philips executed.

Thus upon his information and accusation Pointz was attached by the Procuror General, the Emperors Attorney, delivered to the keeping of two Serjeants at Arms; and the same Evening was sent to him one of the Chancery, with the Procuror General, who ministered unto him an Oath, that he should truly make answer to all such things as should be inquired of him, thinking they would have had no other examinations of him but of his message. The next day likewise they came again, and had him in examination, and so five or six days one after another, upon not so few as hundred Articles, as well of the Kings affairs, as of the message concerning Tindal, of his aids, and of his Religion. Out of the which examinations, the Procuror General drew twenty three or twenty four Articles, and declared the same against the said Pointz, the Copy whereof he delivered to him to make answer thereunto, and permitted him to have an Advocate and Proctor, that is, a Doctor and Proctor in the Law; and order was taken, that eight days after he should deliver unto them his answer, and from eight days to eight days, to proceed till the Process were ended. Also that he should send no messenger to Antwerp whereas his house was; being twenty four English Miles from Brussels, where he was Prisoner, nor to any other place, but by the Post of the Town of Brussels, nor to send any Letters, nor any to be delivered to him, but written in Dutch, and the Procuror General, who was party against him, to read them, to peruse and examine them thoroughly, contrary to all right and equity, before they were sent or delivered: neither might any be suffered to speak or talk with Pointz in any other Tongue or Language, except only in the Dutch Tongue, so that his Keepers, who were Dutch men might understand what the contents of the Letters or talk should be. Saving that at one certain time the Provincial of the White Fries came to Dinner where Pointz was Prisoner, and brought with him, a young Novice, being an Englishman, whom the Provincial after Dinner, of his own accord, did bid to talk with the said Pointz, and so with him he was licenced to talk. The purpose and great policy therein was easily to be perceived. Between Pointz and the Novice was much pretty talk, as of Sir Thomas More, and of the Bishop of Rochester, and of their putting to death, whose death he seemed greatly to lament, especially dying in such a quarrel, worthy (as he said) to be accounted for Martyrs; with other noble Doctrine, and deep learning in Divinity, meet to feed Swine withal. Such blindness then in those days reigned amongst them. After this Pointz delivered up his answer to the Procuror General, and then after, at the days appointed, went forth with Replication duplicke, with other answers each to other in writing, what they could.

As the Commissioners came to Pointz, Philips the Traitor accompanied them to the Door in following the Process against him, as he also did against Master Tindal, for so they that had Pointz in keeping, shewed him. Thus Pointz for Master Tindal was sore troubled, and long kept in Prison; but at length, when he saw no other remedy, by night he made his escape, and avoided their hands. But good Tindal could not escape their hands, but remained in Prison still, who being brought unto his answer, was offered to have an Advocate and a Proctor; for in any criminal cause there, it shall be permitted to have Council, to make answer in the Law. But he refused to have any such, saying, That he would answer for himself; and so he did.

At last, After much reasoning, when no reason would serve, although he deserved no death, he was condemned by virtue of the Emperors Decree, made in the Assembly at Antwerp (as is before signified) and upon the same brought forth to the place of Execution, was there tied to the Stake, and then strangled first by the Hangman, and afterward with fire consumed in the morning at the Town of Vilford, Anno 1536. crying thus at the Stake with a fervent zeal, and a loud voice, Lord open the King of England's Eyes.

Talk of Thomas More, and of the Bishop of Rochester, and of their putting to death, whose death he seemed greatly to lament, especially dying in such a quarrel, worthy (as he said) to be accounted for Martyrs; with other noble Doctrine, and deep learning in Divinity, meet to feed Swine withal.

Pointz troubled for Master Tindal.

The condemnation of Master Tindal, and the strydon of the same brought forth to the place of Execution, was there tied to the Stake, and then strangled first by the Hangman, and afterward with fire consumed in the morning at the Town of Vilford, Anno 1536.

The prayer of Master Tindal.

Mr Tindal converted his Keeper, Commendation of Mr Tindal, by them that were about him.

Such was the power of his Doctrine, and sincerity of his life, that during the time of his imprisonment (which endured a year and a half) it is said, he converted his Keeper, his Daughter, and other of his household. Also the self that were with him confert in the Cattle reported of him, that if he were not a good Christian man, they could not tell whom to trust.

The Procurator General, the Emperors Attorney, being there, left this testimony of him, that he was Homo doctus, pius & bonus, that is, a learned, a good and a godly man.

The same Morning in which he was had to the fire, he delivered a Letter to the Keeper of the Cattle which the Keeper himself brought to the House of the forefald Pointz in Antwerp, shortly after; which Letter with his Examinations and other his Disputations, I would might have come to our hands; all which I understand did remain, and yet perhaps do, in the hands of the Keepers Daughter. For so it is of him reported, that as he was in the Cattle Prisoner, there was much writing, and great Disputation to and fro, between him and them of the University of Lovain (which was not past nine or ten Miles from the place where he was Prisoner) in such sort, that they all had enough to do, and more than they could well wield, to answer the authorities and testimonies of the Scripture, whereupon he most pithily grounded his Doctrine.

Gods commendation upon Philips the betrayer of Tindal.

Of Judas that betrayed Christ it is written, That he returned the Money again to the Pharisees, and afterward hanged himself. So Philips this miserable Traitor, after he had bin received of Tindal, and borrowed money of him, and yet betrayed him and pursued him to death; albeit he rejoiced a while after that he had done it, yet the saying to goeth, that he not long time after enjoyed the price of innocent blood, but was consumed at last with Lice.

The worthy virtues and doings of this blessed Martyr, who for his painful travels, and singular zeal to his Country, may be called in these our days, an Apostle of England, it were long to recite. Among many other, this because it seemeth to me worthy of remembrance, I thought not in silence to overskip, which hath unto me been credibly testified by certain grave Merchants, and some of them also such as were present the same time at the fact; and men yet alive. The Story whereof is this.

There was at Antwerp on a time, amongst a company of Merchants, as they were at Supper, a certain Jugler, which through his Diabolical Enchantments of Art Magical, would fetch all kind of Viands, and Wine from any place they would, and set it upon the Table incontinent before them, with many other such like things. The fame of this Jugler being much talked of, it chanced that as Master Tindal heard of it, he desired certain of the Merchants, that he might also be present at Supper, to see him play his parts.

To be brief, the Supper was appointed, and the Merchants with Tindal were there present. Then the Jugler being required to play his feats, and to shew his cunning, after his wonted boldness began to utter all that he could do, but all was in vain. At the last with his labour, sweating and toying, when he saw that nothing would go forward, but that all his enchantments were void, he was compelled openly to confess, that there was some man present at Supper, which disturbed and letted all his doings. So that a man, even in the Martyrs of these our days, cannot lack the Miracles of true faith, if Miracles were now to be desired.

Mr Tindals Works looked for to be all set out in one Volume.

As concerning the Works and Books of Tindal, which extend to a great number, thou wast told before, loving Reader, how the Printer hereof minded, by the Lords leave, to collect them all in one Volume together, and put them out in Print. Wherefore it shall not greatly at this time be needful to make any several rehearsal of them.

And as touching his Translation of the New Testament, because his enemies did so much carp at it, pretending it to be so full of Heresies, to answer therefore to their slanderous tongues and lying lips, thou shalt hear and understand, what faithful dealing, and sincere Conscience he used in the same, by the testimony and allegation of his own words written in the Epistle to John Frith as followeth, I call God to record against the day we shall appear before our Lord Jesus, to give our reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one syllable of Gods Word against my conscience, nor would do this day, if all that is in Earth, whether it be honour, pleasure, or riches, might be given me, &c.

KING I Hra. 8. f The faithful dealing of Tindal in translating the New Testament.

And as ye have heard Tindal's own words thus protesting for himself, now let us hear likewise the faithful testimony of John Frith, for Tindal his dear companion and Brother, thus declaring in his answer to Master More, as followeth:

The Testimony of John Frith in his Book of the Sacrament, concerning William Tindal.

AND Tindal I trust liveth, well content with such a poor Apostles life, as God gave his Son Christ, and his faithful Ministers in this World, which is not sure of so many mites, as ye be yearly of pounds, although I am sure that for his learning and judgment in Scripture, he were more worthy to be promoted than all the Bishops in England. I received a Letter from him, which was written since Christmas, wherein among other matters he writeth this, I call God to record against the day we shall appear before our Lord Jesus, to give a reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one syllable of Gods Word against my Conscience, nor would do this day, if all that is in Earth, whether it be honour, pleasure, or riches might be given me.

The testimony of J. Frith, for Tindal.

The words of Tindal written to J. Frith.

Moreover, I take God to witness to my Conscience, that I desire of God to my self in this World, no more than that, without which I cannot keep his Laws, &c. Judge, Christian Reader, whether these words be not spoken of a faithful clear innocent heart. And as for his behaviour, it is such, that I am sure no man can reprove him of any sin, howbeit no man is innocent before God, which beholdeth the heart. Thus much out of Frith.

And thus being about to conclude and finish with the life and story of William Tindal, it shall be requisite now that the Reader do hear something likewise of his supplications made to the King and Nobles of the Realm, as they are yet extant in his works to be seen, and worthy in all ages to be marked, the tenor whereof readeth to this effect as followeth.

Ex lib. Tind. as great Prelates.

Tindal's Supplication to the King, Nobles and Subjects of England.

I beseech the Kings most Noble Grace, well to consider all the ways, by the which the Cardinal, and our holy Bishops have led him since he was first King, and to see whereunto all the pride, pomp and vain boast of the Cardinal is come, and how God hath refilled him and our Prelates in their wiles. We, having nothing to do at all, have medled yet with all matters, and have spent for our Prelates causes, more than all Christendom, even unto the utter beggering of our selves, and have gotten nothing but rebuke and hate among all Nations, and a mock and a scorn of them whom we have most holpen. For the Frenchmen (as the saying is) of late days made a Play, or a Disguising at Paris, in which the Emperor danced with the Pope, and the French King, and wearied them; the King of England sitting on a high Bench, and looking on. And when it was asked why he danced not, it was answered, that he sat there but to pay the Minstrels their wages. As who should say, we paid for all mens dauncing. We moved the Emperor openly, and gave the French King double and treble secretly; and to the Pope also. Yea, and though Ferdinandus had money sent openly to blind the World withal, yet the saying is through all Dutchland, that we sent money to the King of Pole, &c.

Tindals Supplication to the King and Nobles of England.

The King of England pays for all.

Furthermore, I beseech His Grace also to have mercy of his own soul, and not to suffer Christ and his holy Tefament to be persecuted under his name any longer, that the sword of the wrath of God may be put up again, which for that cause, no doubt, is most chiefly drawn.

The 2d Pt. of Tindal.

KING Thirdly, My Petition is to his Grace, to have compaffion on his poor fubjects, that the Realm utterly periff with the wicked counfel of our petulant Prelates. For if his Grace, which is but a man, fhould die, the Lords and Commons not knowing who hath moft right to enjoy the Crown, the Realm could not but ftand in great danger.

The fourth Petition of Tindal. My fourth fuit and exhortation is to all the Lords Temporal of the Realm, that they come and fall before the Kings Grace, and humbly defire his Majesty to fuffer it to be tried, who of right ought to fucceed : and if he or the fail, who next, and who third. And let it be proclaimed openly : and let all the Lords Temporal be fworn thereto, and all the Knights, and Squires and Gentlemen, and the Commons above eighteen years old, that there be no ftrife for the Succellion. If they try it by the fword, I promife them, I fee no other likelihood, but it will coft the Realm of England, &c.

The fifth Petition of Mr. Tindal. Further, of all the fubjects of England this I crave, That they repent. For the caufe of evil rulers is the fin of the fubjects, as teftifieth the Scripture. And the caufe of falfe Preachers is, that the people have no love unto the truth, faith Paul, in the fecond Chapter of the fecond Epiftle to the Theffalonians. We be all finners an hundred times greater than that we fuffer. Let us therefore each forgive other, remembering the greater finners, the more welcome if we repent, according to the fimilitude of the riotous Son, Luk. 15. For Chrift died for finners, and is their Saviour, and his blood their treafure, to pay for their fins. He is that fattened Calf which is flain to make them good cheer withal, if they will repent and come to their Father again : and his merits is the goodly raiment to cover the naked deformities of their fins.

Finally, if the perfecution of the Kings Grace, and other Temporal perfons confpiring with the Spiritually, be of ignorance, I doubt not but that their eyes fhall be opened fhordly, and they fhall fee and repent, and God fhall fhew them mercy. But if it be of a fet malice againft the truth, and of a grounded hate againft the Law of God, by the reafon of a full confent they have to fin, and to walk in their old ways of ignorance, wherunto being now paffed all repentance, they have utterly yielded themfelves, to follow with full luft without bridle or fufflage which is the fin againft the Holy Ghoft, then ye fhall fee even fhordly, that God fhall turn the point of the fword, wherewith they now fhed Chriffs blood wherewith to fhed their own again, after all the examples of the Bible.

These things thus difcoursed pertaining to the ftory and doings of Tindal, finally it remaineth to infer certain of his private Letters and Epiftles, wherof among divers other which have not come to our hands, two fpecial he wrote to John Frith, one properly under his own name, another under the name of Jacob, but in very deed was written and delivered to John Frith, being prifoner then in the Tower, as ye fhall further underftand by the fequel hereafter. The Copy and tenour of the Epiftles here followeth.

A Letter fent from Tindal, unto Mafter Frith, being in the Tower.

A Letter of Tindal to Mr. Frith. THE Grace and Peace of God our Father, and of Jefus Chrift our Lord be with you, Amen. Dearly beloved Brother John, I have heard fay, how the hypocrites now that they have overcome that great bufinefs which letted them, or at the leaft way have brought it to a ftey, they return to their old nature again. The will of God be fulfilled, and that which he hath ordained to be ere the world was made, that come, and his glory reign over all.

Pet. 2. Dearly beloved, however the matter be, commit your felf wholly and only unto your moft loving Father and moft kind Lord, fear not men that threat, nor truft men that flatter : but truft him that is true of promife, and able to make his word good. Your caufe is Chriffs Gofpel, a light that muft be fet with the blood of faith. The lamp muft be drefsed and fuffled daily, and that oyl poured in every evening and morning, that the light go not out. Though we be finners, yet is the caufe right. If when we be buffered for well doing, we fuffer patiently and endure, that is acceptable to God. For to that end we are called. For Chrift alfo fuffered for us, leaving us an example that we fhould follow his fteps, who did no fin. Hereby have we perceived love, that he laid down his life for us : therefore we muft alfo lay down our lives for the Brethren. Rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in Heaven. For we fuffer with him, that we may alfo be glorified with him : Mat. 5. who fhall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned Rom. 8. like unto his glorious body, according to the working where- by he is able even to fubjeft all things unto him.

Dearly beloved, be of good courage, and comfort your foul with the hope of this high reward, and bear the image of Chrift in your mortal body, that it may at his coming be made like to his immortal : and follow the example of all your other dear Brethren, which chofe to fuffer in hope of a better Refurrexion. Keep your confcience pure and undefiled, and fay againft that nothing. Stick at neceffary things, and remember the blafphemies of the enemies of Chrift, faying, they find none but that will abjure rather than fuffer the extremity. Moreover, the death of them that come again after they have once denied, though it be accepted with God, and all that believe, yet it is not glorious : for the hypocrites fay, he muft needs die, denying helpeth not. But might it have holpen, they would have denied five hundred times, but feeing it would not help them, therefore of pure pride and meer malice together, they fpake with their mouths that their confcience knoweth falfe. If you give your felf, caft your felf, yield your felf, commit your felf wholly and only to your loving Father, and then fhall his power be in you and make you ftrong, and that fo ftrong, that you fhall feel no pain, which fhould be to another prefent death : and his fpirit fhall feek in you and teach you what to answer, according to his promife : he fhall fet out his truth by you wonderfully, and work for you above all that your heart can imagine : yea and you are not yet dead, though the hypocrites all, with all that they can make, have fworn your death. Una falus viciis nullam fperare falutem : To look for no mans help, bringeth the help of God to them that feem to be overcome in the eyes of the hypocrites : yea, it fhall make God to carry you thorough thicks and thin for his truths fake, in fpite of all the enemies of his truth. There falleth not a hair till his hour be come : and when his hour is come, neceffary carrieth us hence though we be not willing. But if we be willing, then have we a reward and thank.

Fear not the threatening therefore, neither be overcome of furer words : with which the hypocrites fhall affail you. Neither let the perfuafions of worldly wifdom bear rule in your heart, no, though they be your friends, that counfel you. Let Bilney be a warning to you, let not their vifure beguile your eye. Let not your body faint. He that endureth to the end fhall be faved. If the pain be above your ftrength, remember, Whatfoever ye fhall afk in my name, I will give it you. And pray to your Father in that name, and he fhall ceafe your pain, or fhorten it. The Lard of peace, of hope, and of faith, be with you, Amen.

Sacraments without significations to be refused. Mr. Tindal here breatheth with time.

By the office, namely, he meaneth the opinion which Mr. Aquinas and the Schoolmen do hold of the Sacrament.

Mr. Tindal again breatheth with time.

Uniquity cannot be proved. Putting the Whores flesh, is to fust the Popes Church only for the prey and spoil thereof.

Worldly wisdom far as it may serve Gods glory may be used

Early beloved Brother Jacob, mine hearts desire in our Saviour Jesus, is that you arm your self with patience, and be cold, sober, wise and circumspect, and that you keep you a low by the ground, avoiding high Questions, that pass the common capacity. But expound the Law truly, and open the veil of Moles to condemn all flesh, and prove all men sinners, and all dead under the Law, before mercy have taken away the condemnation thereof, to be sin and damnable, and then as a faithful Minister, set abroad the mercy of our Lord Jesus, and let the wounded consciences drink of the water of him. And then shall your preaching be with power, and not as the doctrine of the hypocrites: and the Spirit of God shall work with you, and all consciences shall bear record unto you, and feel that it is so. And all Doctrine that casteth a mist on those two, to shadow and hide them, I mean the Law of God, and mercy of Christ, that resist you with all your power. Sacraments without signification refused. If they put significations to them, receive them, if you see it may help, though it be not necessary.

Of the presence of Christs Body in the Sacrament, meddle as little as you can, that there appear no division among us. Barnes will be hot against you. The Saxons be fore on the affirmative: whether consens or obtinate I remit it to God. Philip Melancthon is said to be with the French King. There be in Antwerp that say, they saw him come into Paris with an hundred and fifty Horse, and that they spoke with him. If the French men receive the Word of God, he will plant the affirmative in them. George Joy would have put forth a Treatise of that matter, but I have kept him at yet: what he will do if he get money, I wot not. I believe he would make many reasons little serving to that purpose: My mind is that nothing be put forth till we hear how you shall have sped. I would have the right use preached, and the promise to be an indifferent thing, till the matter might be reasoned in peace at leisure of both parties. If you be required, shew the phrases of the Scripture, and let them talk what they will. For as to believe that God is every where, hurteth no man that worshippeth him no where but within the heart, in spirit and verity: even so to believe that the Body of Christ is every where (though it cannot be proved) hurteth no man that worshippeth him no where save in the faith of his Gospel. You perceive my mind: howbeit if God shew you otherwise, it is free for you to do as he moveth you.

I guessed long ago, that God would send a dazing into the head of the Spirituality, to catch themselves in their own subtilty, and trust it is come to pass. And now me thinketh I smell a counsel to be taken, little for their profit in time to come. But you must understand, that it is not of a pure heart and for love of the truth, but to avenge themselves, and to eat the Whores flesh, and to suck the marrow of her bones. Wherefore cleave fast to the Rock of the help of God, and commit the end of all things unto him: and if God shall call you, that you may then use the wisdom of the worldly, as far as you perceive the glory of God may come thereof: refuse it not; and ever among I trust in, that the Scripture may be in the Mother-tongue, and learning set up in the Universities. But if ought be required contrary to the glory of God, and his Christ, then stand fast, and commit your self to God, and be not overcome of mens persuasions: which haply shall say, We see no other way to bring in the truth.

Brother Jacob, beloved in my heart, there liveth not in whom I have so good hope and trust, and in whom my heart rejoiceth, and my soul comforteth her self, as in you: not the ibon, and part so much for your learning, and what other gifts else you have, as because you will creep slow by the ground, and walk in those things: that the conscience may feel, and not in the imaginations of the brain: in fear, and not in boldness: in open necessary things, and not to pronounce or define of hid secrets, or things that neither help nor hinder, whether it be so or no: in unity, and not in seditions opinions: inasmuch that if you be sure you know, yet in things that may abide leisure you will defer, or say (till other agree with you) Methinks the Text requireth this sense or understanding. Yea, and if you be sure that your part be good, and another hold the contrary, yet if it be a thing that maketh no matter, you will laugh and let it pass, and refer the thing to other men, and stick you stiffly and stubbornly in earnest and necessary things. And I trust you be persuaded even so of me: for I call God to record against the day we shall appear before our Lord Jesus, to give a reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one syllable of Gods Word against my conscience, nor would this day, if all that is in the Earth, whether it be pleasure, honour, or riches, might be given me. Moreover, I take God to record to my conscience, that I desire of God to my self in this world, no more than that without which I cannot keep his Law.

Finally, if there were in me any gift that could help at hand, and aid you if need required, I promise you I would not be far off, and commit the end to God. My soul is not faint, though my body be weary. But God hath made me evil favoured in this world, and without grace in the sight of men, speechless and rude, dull and slow witted: your part shall be to supply what lacketh in me: remembering, that as lowliness of heart shall make you high with God, even so meekness of words shall make you sink into the hearts of men. Nature giveth age authority, but meekness is the glory of youth, and giveth them honour. Abundance of love maketh me exceed in babbling.

Sir, as concerning Purgatory and many other things, if you be demanded, you may say, if you err, the Spirituality hath so led you, and that they have taught you to believe as you do. For they preached you all such things out of Gods Word, and alleged a thousand Texts, by reason of which Texts you believed as they taught you, but now you find them liars, and that the Texts mean no such things, and therefore you can believe them no longer, but are as ye were before they taught you, and believe no such thing: howbeit you are ready to believe, if they have any other way to prove it: for without proof you cannot believe them when you have found them with so many liars, &c. If you perceive wherein we may help, either in being still or doing somewhat, let us have word, and I will do mine utmost.

My Lord of London hath a servant called John Tilen, with a red beard, and a black-reddish head, and was once my Scholar: he was seen in Antwerp, but came not among the Englishmen: whether he is gone an Ambassador secret I wot not.

The mighty God of Jacob be with you, to supplant his enemies, and give you the favour of Joseph, and the wisdom and the spirit of Stephan, be with your heart, and with your mouth, and teach your lips what they shall say, and how to answer to all things. He is our God, if we despair in our selves, and trust in him: and he is the glory. Amen.

William Tindal.

I hope our Redemption is nigh.

This Letter was written Ann. 1533, in the month of January. Which Letter, although it do pretend the name of Jacob, yet understand (good Reader) that it was written in very deed to John Frith, as is above told thee. For the more proof and evidence whereof, read Friths Book of the Sacrament, and there thou shalt find a certain place of this Epistle repeated word for word, beginning thus, I call God to record against the day we shall appear before our Lord Jesus to give a reckoning of our doings, that I never altered one syllable of Gods Word against my conscience, &c. Which Epistle John Frith himself witnesseth that he received from Tindal, as in his testimony above appeareth.

The death of Lady Katharine, and of Queen Anne.

KING
H. 2.

THE same year in the which William Tindal was burned, which was the year of our Lord 1536, in the beginning of the year, first died Lady Katharine Princess Dowager, in the month of January.

After whom the same year also in the month of May next following, followeth the death also of Queen Anne, who had now been married to the King the space of three years. In certain Records thus we find, that the King being in his Jests at Greenwich, suddenly with a few persons departed to Westminster, and the next day after Queen Anne his wife was had to the Tower, with the Lord Rockford her Brother and certain others; and the nineteenth day after was Beheaded. The words of this worthy and Christian Lady at her death were these.

Good Christian people, I am come hither to die, for according to the Law, and by the Law I am judged to death, and therefore I will speak nothing against it. I am come hither to accuse no man, nor to speak any thing of that whereof I am accused and condemned to die, but I pray God save the King, and send him long to reign over you, for a gentler, or a more merciful Prince was there never; and to me he was a very good, a gentle, and a Sovereign Lord. And if any person will meddle of my cause, I require them to judge the best. And thus I take my leave of the world, and of you all, and I heartily desire you all to pray for me. O Lord have mercy on me. To God I commend my soul: Jesus receive my soul. Repeating the same divers times, till at length the stroke was given, and her head was stricken off.

And this was the end of that godly Lady and Queen. Godly I call her, for sundry respects, whatsoever the cause was, or quarrel objected against her. First, her last words spoken at her death declared no less her sincere Faith and trust in Christ, than did her quiet modesty utter forth the goodness of the cause and matter, whatsoever it was. Besides that, to such as wisely can judge upon cases occurrent, this also may seem to give a great clearing unto her, that the King the third day after was married in his whites unto another. Certain this was, that for the rare and singular gifts of her mind so well instructed, and given toward God, with such a fervent desire unto the truth and setting forth of sincere Religion, joyed with like gentleness, modesty, and pity toward all men, there have not many such Queens before her born the Crown of England. Principally this one commendation the left behind her, that during her life, the Religion of Christ most happily flourished, and had a right prosperous course.

Many things might be written more of the manifold virtues, and the quiet moderation of her mild nature; how lowly she would bear, not only to be admonished, but also of her own accord would require her Chaplains plainly and freely to tell whatsoever they saw in her amiss. Also how bountiful she was to the poor, passing not only the common example of other Queens, but also the revenues almost of her estate: inasmuch that the Alms which she gave in three quarters of a year, in distribution, is summed to the number of fourteen or fifteen thousand pounds. Besides the great piece of money which her Grace intended to impart into four sundry quarters of the Realm, as for a stock there to be employed to the behoof of poor artificers and occupiers. Again, what a zealous defender she was of Christs Gospel, all the world doth know, and her acts do and will declare to the worlds end. Amongst which other her acts this is one, that she placed Master Hugh Latimer in the Bishoprick of Worcester, and also preferred Doctor Shaxton to his Bishoprick, being then accounted a good man. Furthermore, what a true Faith she bare unto the Lord, this one example may stand for many: for that when King Henry was with her at Woodstock, and there being afraid of an old blind Prophecie, for the which neither he nor other Kings before him durst hunt in the said Park of Woodstock, nor enter into the Town of Oxford, at last through the Christian and faithful counsel of that Queen, he was so armed against all infidelity, that both he hunted in the foresaid Park, and also entered into the Town of Oxford, and had no harm. But because touching the memorable vertues of this worthy Queen, partly we have said something before, partly because more also is promised to be declared of her vertuous life (the Lord so permitting) by other who then were about her; I will cease in this matter further to proceed.

This I cannot but marvel at, why the Parliament holden this year, that is, the twenty eighth year of the King (which Parliament three years before had established and confirmed this Marriage as most lawful) should now so suddenly, and contrary to their own doings, repeal and dissolve the said Marriage again as unlawful, being so lawfully before contracted. But more I marvel, why the said Parliament, after the illegitimation of the Marriage Enacted, not contented with that, should further proceed, and charge her with such carnal desires of her body, as to mislead her self with her own natural Brother, the Lord Rockford, and others, being so contrary to all nature, that no natural man will believe it.

But in this Act of Parliament lay (no doubt) some great mystery, which here I will not stand to discuss, but only that it may be suspected some secret practising of the Papists here not to be lacking, considering what a mighty stop she was to their purposes and proceedings, and on the contrary side, what a strong Bulwark she was for the maintenance of Christs Gospel, and sincere Religion, which they then in no case could abide. By reason whereof it may be easily considered, that this Christian and devout Deborah, could lack no enemies amongst such a number of Philistines, both within the Realm, and without.

Again, neither is it unlike, but that Stephen Winchester, being then abroad in Embassie, was not altogether asleep. The suspicion whereof may be the more conjectured, for that Edmund Bonner Archdeacon of Leicester, and their Ambassador in France, succeeding after Stephen Winchester, did manifestly detect him of plain Papistry, as in the sequel of their Stories, when we come to the time, more amply (the Lord granting) shall be expressed.

And as touching the Kings mind and assent, although at that time, through crafty fletters on, he seemed to be sore bent both against the Queen, and to the dissuading of his own Daughter: yet unto that former Will of the King so set against her then, I will oppose again the last Will of the King, wherein expressly and by name he did accept, and by plain ratification did allow the succession of his Marriage to stand good and lawful.

Furthermore, to all other sinister judgments and opinions, whatsoever can be conceived of man against that vertuous Queen, I object and oppose again (as instead of answer) the evident demonstration of Gods favour, in maintaining, preserving and advancing the off-spring of her body, the Lady ELIZABETH now Queen, whom the Lord hath so marvelously preserved from so manifold dangers, so Royally hath exalted, so happily hath blessed with such vertuous patience, and with such a quiet Reign hitherto, that neither the Reign of her Brother EDWARD, nor of her Sister MARY, to hers is to be compared, whether we consider the number of the years of their Reigns, or the peaceableness of their State. In whole Royal and flourishing Regiment we have to behold, not so much the natural disposition of her Mothers qualities, as the secret judgment of God in preserving and magnifying the fruit and off-spring of that godly Queen.

And finally, as for the blasphemous mouth both of Cardinal Pool, and of Fabius Jovius, that Popish Cardinal, who measuring belike other women by his Courtians of Rome, so impudently aboresh his pen in lying and railing against this noble Queen: To answer again in defence of her cause to that Italian, I object and oppose the content and judgment of so many noble Protestants and Princes of Germany, who being in League before with King Henry, and minding no less but to have made him the Head of their Confederation, afterward hearing of the death of this Queen, utterly brake from him, and refused him only for the same cause.

But

But all this seemeth (as is said) to be the drift of the wily Papists, who seeing the Pope to be repulged out of England, by the means chiefly of this Queen, and fearing always the succession of this Marriage in time to come; thought by sinister practice to prevent that peril before, whispering in the Kings ears what possibly they could, to make that Matrimony unlawful, and all for the disheriting of that succession.

Again, Stephen Gardiner (who was a secret worker against that Marriage, and a perpetual enemy against Lady Elizabeth) being then abroad with the French King, and the great Master of France, crafted not in his Letters, still to put the King in fear, that the foreign Princes and Powers of the world, with the Pope, would never be reconciled to the King, neither should he be ever in any perfect security, unless he undid again such Acts before passed, for the ratification of that succession. Which thing when they had now brought to pass after their own desire, in that both now the Queen was Beheaded, and Elizabeth the Kings Daughter disherited, they thought all things to be sure for ever. But yet Gods Providence still went beyond them, and deceived them; for incontinently after the suffering of Queen Anne, the King within three days after, married Lady Jane Seimer, of whom came King Edward, as great an enemy to Gods enemy the Pope, as ever his Father was, and greater too.

In the mean time as these troublous tumults were in doing in England, Paul the third, Bishop of Rome, for his part was not behind, to help forward in his own advantage. Who seeing his usurped Kingdom and seat to be darkened in the Countreies of Germany, and also in England, thought it high time to bestir him: and therefore to provide some remedy against further dangers, appointed a General Council at Mantua in Italy, requiring all Kings and Princes either personally to be there, or else to send their Embassadors under fair pretences, as to suppress Heresies, and to restore the Church, and to war against the Turk, &c. This Bull was subscribed with the hands of fix and twenty Cardinals, and set up in divers great Cities, that it might be known and published to the whole world. Unto the which Bull first the Protestants of Germany do answer, declaring sufficient causes why they refused to resort to that Council, being Indicted at Mantua, in the Popes own Country: Whose Declaration, with their causes grave and effectual, being set forth in print, and in the English Tongue, although they were worthy here to be inserted, yet for brevity, and more speed in our Story, I will pretermitt the same, and only take the Oration or Answer of our King here: wherein he likewise rendereth reasons and causes most reasonable, why he refuseth to come or send at the Popes call to this Council Indicted at Mantua. Whose Oration or Protestation, because it containeth matter of some weight and great experience, I thought good here to express as followeth.

A Protestation in the Name of the King, and the whole Council and Clergy of England, why they refuse to come to the Popes Council at his call.

Seeing that the Bishop of Rome calleth learned men from all parts, conducting them by great rewards, making as many of them Cardinals as he thinketh most meet, and most ready to defend frauds and untruths; we could not but with much anxiety cast with our selves, what so great a preparation of wits should mean. As chance was, we greeted even as it followed. We have been so long acquainted with Romish subtilties and Popish deceits, that we well and easily judged the Bishop of Rome to intend an Assembly of his adherents and men sworn to think all his lusts to be Laws; we were not deceived. Paul the Bishop of Rome hath called a Council, to the which he knew well either few or none of the Christian Princes could come. Both the time that he Indicted it, and also the place where he appointed it to be, might assure him of this. But whither wander not these Popish Bulls: whither go they not astray? what King is not cited and summoned by a proud Minister and servant of Kings, to come to bolter up errors, frauds, deceits and untruths, and to set forth this fained General Council? For who will not think that Paul the Bishop of Rome goeth sooner about to make men believe that he pretendeth a General Council, than that he desireth one indeed? No, who can less desire it, than they that do despair of their cause, except they be Judges, and give sentence themselves against their adversaries? We which very fore against our will at any time leave off the procurement of the Realm any Commonwealth, need neither to come our selves, nor yet to send our Procurators thither, no, nor yet to make our excuse for either of both. For who can accuse us, that we come not at his call, which hath no authority to call us?

But for a season let us (as a sort of blindings do) grant that he may call us, and that he hath authority so to do, yet (we pray you) may not all men see, what availeth it to come to this Council, where ye shall have no place, except ye be known both willing to oppress truth, and also ready to confirm and stablish Errors? Do not all men perceive as well as we, with what integrity, fidelity, and Religion, these men go about to discuss matters in controversy, that take them in hand in so troublesome a time as this is? Is it not plain what fruit the Commonwealth of Christendom may look for there, whereas Mantua is chosen the place to keep his Council in? Is there any Prince not being of Italy, yea, is there any of Italy, Prince, or other dissenting from the Pope, that dareth come to this assembly, and to this place? If there come none that dare speak for trodden truth, none that will venture his life, is it marvel if the Bishop of Rome being Judge, no man replying, no man gain-saying, the defenders of the Papacy obtain that Popish authority, now quelling and almost fallen, to be set up again?

Is this the way to help things afflict? to redress troubled Religion? to lift up oppressed truth? Shall men this way know, whether the Roman Bishops (which in very deed are, if ye look upon either their Doctrine or life, far under other Bishops) ought to be made like their fellows, that is, to be Pastors in their own Dioceses, and so to use no other power; or else, whether they may make Laws, not only unto other Bishops, but also to Kings and Emperors? O boldness, meet to be beaten down with force, and not to be convinced with arguments! Can either Paul that now Lordeth, or any of his earnestly go about (if they alone, or at the least without any adversary, be thus in a corner assembled together) to heal the sicknesses, to take away the Errors, to pluck down the abuses that now are crept into the Church, and there be bolstered up, by such Councils as now is like to be at Mantua?

Is it very like, that these which prole for nothing but profit, will right gladly pull down all such things as their forefathers made, only for the increase of money? Whereas their forefathers, when their honour, power, and primacy was called into question, would either in despite of Gods Law maintain their dignity, or to say better, their intolerable pride: Is it like, that these will not tread in their steps, and make naughty new Canons, whereby they may defend old evil Decrees? Howbeit, what need we to care, either what they have done, or what they intend to do hereafter, soasmuch as England hath taken her leave of Popish crafts for ever, never to be deluded with them hereafter? Roman Bishops have nothing to do with English people: The one doth not traffick with the other; at the least, though they will have to do with us, yet we will none of their Merchandize, none of their stuff. We will receive them of our Council no more. We have fought our hurt, and bought our loss a great while too long. Surely their Decrees, either touching things set up or put down, shall have none other place with us, than all Bishops Decrees have, that is, if we like them, we admit them; if we do not, we refuse them. But lest peradventure men shall think us to follow our senses too much, and that we, moved by small or no just causes, forsake the Authority, Censures, Decrees, and Popish Councils, we thought it best here to shew our mind to the whole world. Wherefore we protest before God and all men, that we embrace, profess, and will ever so do, the right and holy Doctrine of Christ. All the Articles of his Faith, no jot omitted, be all so dear unto us, that we should much sooner stand in jeopardy of our Realm, than to see any point of Christs Religion in jeopardy with us.

KING We protest that we never went from the unity of his Faith, neither that we will depart an inch from it. No, we will much sooner lose our lives, than any Article of our belief shall decay in England. We which in all this cause seek nothing but the glory of God, the profit and quietness of the world, protest that we can suffer deceivers no longer. We never refused to come to a General Council; no, we promise all our labour, study, and fidelity, to the setting up of trodden truth, and troubled Religion, in their place again, and to do all that shall lie in us, to finish such controversies as have a great while too long vexed Christendom. Only we will all Christian men be admonished, that we can suffer no longer that they be esteemed willing to take away errors, which indeed, by all the ways their wits will serve them, go about this alone, that no man, under pain of death may speak against any error or abuse.

We would have a Council, we desire it, yea, and crave nothing so oft of God, as that we may have one. But yet we will that it be such, as Christian men ought to have, that is, frank and free, where every man without fear may say his mind. We desire that it be an holy Council, where every man may go about to set up Godliness, and not apply all their study to oppressing of truth. We will it be general, that is to say, kept at such time, and in such place, that every man which seeketh the glory of God may be present, and there frankly utter his mind: For when it shall seem general, either when no man that dissenteth from the Bishop of Rome is compelled to be from it; or when they that be present are not letted by any just terror, to say boldly what they truly think: for who would not gladly come to such a Council, except it be the Pope, his Cardinals, and Popish Bishops? On the other side, who is so foolish, whereas the chief point that is to be handled in this Council is the Popes own cause, power and primacy, to grant that the Pope should reign, should be Judge, should be President of this Council? if he, which indeed can never think himself able to defend his cause before any other Judge, be evermore made his own Judge, and so Controversies not decided, but errors set up, what can be devised in the Commonwealth of Christendom more hurtful to the truth, than General Councils?

And here to touch somewhat their impudent arrogance, by what law, power, or honest title take they upon them to call Kings, to summon Princes to appear, where their Bulls command them? In time past all Councils were appointed by the authority, consent and commandment of the Emperor, Kings and Princes; why now taketh the Bishop of Rome this upon him? Some will say, It is more likely that Bishops will more tender the cause of Religion, gladlier have errors taken away, than Emperors, Kings and Princes. The world hath good experience of them, and every man seeth how faithfully they have handled Religious matters. Is there any man that doth not see how virtuously Paul now goeth about by this occasion to set up his tyranny again? Is it not like that he chooseth such a time as this is, to keep a Council, much intendeth the redress of things that now are amiss? that he seeketh the restoring of Religion, that now calleth a Council, the Emperor and the French King, two Princes of great power, so bent to wars, that neither they, nor any other Christian Prince can, in a manner, do any thing but look for the end of this long war? Go too, go too Bishop of Rome, occasion long wished for offereth her self unto you; take her, the openeth a window for your frauds to creep in at. Call your Cardinals, your own creatures, shew them that this is a jolly time to deceive Princes in.

O Fools: O wicked men! May we not justly so call you? Are ye not Fools, which being long suspected, not only of Princes, but of all Christian people in a manner, that in no case you could be brought to a General Council, plainly they the whole world, that by these your concillables, your hutter mutter in corners, you take away all hope of a lawful Catholick and General Council? Are you not wicked, which so hate truth, that except she be utterly banished, ye will never cease to vex her? The living God is alive, neither truth his darling, he being alive, can be called to so great shame, contumely, and injury: or if it may be called to all this, yet can it come to none of them. Who is he that grievously lamenteth not, men to be of such shameful boldness, to shew apertly that they be enemies unto Christ himself? On the other side, who will not be glad to see such men as foolish as they be wicked? The world is not now in a light supposition, as it hath been hitherto, that you intend no reformation of errors, but every man seeth before his eyes your deceits, your wicked minds, your immortal hatred that ye bear against the truth. Every man seeth how many miserable Tragedies your pretence of an unity and concord hath brought into Christendom? they see your fair face of peace hath served Sedition, and troubled almost all Christian Realms. They see ye never oppugn Religion more, than when ye will seem most to defend it. They be sorry to see that great wits a long season have spent their whole strength in defence of deceits: Reason to put his whole power to the promoting of pride and ungodliness; Virtues to serve vices: Holiness to be slave to Hypocrisie; Prudence to subtilty: Justice to tyranny. They be glad that Scripture now fighteth for it self, and not against it self. They be glad that God is not compelled to be against God: Christ against Christ. They be glad that subtilty hath done no more hurt to Religion in time past, than now constancy doth good to truth. They see the marks that ye have shot at in all your Councils past, to be lucre, money, gains. They see you sought your profit, yea, though it were joined with the slaughter of truth. They see, ye would ever that sooner injury should be done to the Gospel, than that your authority, that is to say, arrogant impudency should in any point be diminished.

And we pray you, what say Paul the Bishop of Rome seem now to go about, which seeing all Princes occupied in great affairs, would steal (as he calleth it) a General Council? what other thing, than hereby to have some excuse to refuse a General Council hereafter, when time and place much better for the handling of matters of Religion shall be given unto Princes of Christendom? He will think he may then do as Princes now do. He will think it lawful not to come then, because Princes now come not. We pray God that we ever brawle not one with another in Religion: and whereas dissention is amongst us, yet for our parts do say, that we, as much as men may, defend the better part, and be in the right way. We pray God that the world may enjoy peace and tranquillity, and that then we may have both time and place to settle Religion. For except first Princes agree and so (war laid aside) seek peace, he loseth his labour that seeketh a General Council. If the Bishop of Rome may keep his Council while they thus be together, will not there be made many pretty Decrees? If they which would come if they had leisure, be absent, and we, which though we safely might come, will not lose any part of our right; throw you, in all our absence, that the Bishop of Rome will not handle his profit and Primacy well?

Paul, how can any of ours not refuse to come to Mantua, through so many perils, a City so far set from England, so nigh your friends, kinsmen, and adherents? Is he not unworthy of life, that where he may tarry at home, will pass through so many jeopardies of life? Can he which cometh to Cremona, a City not far from Mantua, be safe if he be taken not to be the Bishop of Romes friend, that is, (as the common sort of deceived people doth interpret) an Heretick? And if there come to Mantua such a number as would furnish a General Council, may not Mantua seem too little, to receive so many guests? Put these two together, all the way from England to Mantua is full of just perils, and yet if ye escape all those, the very place where the Council is kept is more to be suspected, than all the way. Do ye not know all Civil Laws to compel no man to come to any place, where he shall be in jeopardy of his life all the way? We have no safe conduct to pass and return by the Dominions of other Princes, And if we had a safe conduct, yet should not we be charged with rashness, that where just terror might have dissuaded us from such a journey, we committed our selves to such perils? Surely, he that the time being as it is, things hanging as they do, will go from England to Mantua, may be careless, if he lack not wit: sure of his own arrival, or return from thence he cannot be. For who doth not know how oft the Bishops of Rome have plaid false parts with them, that in such matters have trusted to their late conducts? how oft have they caused by their Perfidie flood of

new things

such men to be slain, as they have promised by their faith before, that they should both come safe, and go safe? There be no news, Popes to be false, Popes to keep no promise neither with God nor man; Popes contrary to their Oaths, to defile their cruel hands with honest mens blood. But we tarry too long in things that as well touch all men as us.

The hatred of the Pope
land.

We will, these now laid apart, turn our Oration unto such things, as privately touch both us, King Henry the Eighth, and all Englishmen. Is it unknown to any man what mind Paul the Bishop of Rome beareth to us, King Henry the Eighth, to us his Nobility, to us his Graces Bishops, and to us all his Graces subjects, for the pulling down of his usurped power, and proud Primacy; for expelling of his usurped Jurisdiction; and for deliverance of our Realm from his grievous bondage and pollage? Who seeth not him even inflamed with hatred against us, and the flames to be much greater than he can now keep them in? He is an open enemy, he dissembleth no longer, provoking all men by all the means that he can, to endamage us and our Country. These three years he hath been occupied in no one thing so much, as how he might stir up the Commons of England, and corrupting some with money, some with dignities. We let pass what Letters he hath written to Christian Princes: with how great fervent study he hath exhorted them to set upon us. The good Vicar of Christ by his doing sheweth how he understandeth the words of Christ. He thinketh he playeth Christs part well, when he may say as Christ did, Non veni pacem mittere in terram, sed gladium, I come not to make peace in earth, but to send swords about; and not such swords as Christ would his to be armed withal, but such as cruel manquellers abuse in the slaughter of their neighbours. We marvel little though they vex other Princes off, seeing they recompence our favour shewed to them with contumelies, our benefits with injuries.

The Pope
brings not peace but the sword to the earth;
otherwise such Christ did.

Benefits call away upon
the Pope.

We will not rehearse here how many our benefits bestowed upon Roman Bishops be lost. God be with such ungrate Carles, unworthy to be numbred amongst men: Certes such that a man may well doubt, whether God or man hath better cause to hate them. But that we have learned to owe good will to them so evil, but they have deserved much worse? We with them this hurt alone that God send them a better mind. God be thanked, we have made all their feditious intents sooner to shew their great malice towards us, than to do us much hurt; yea, they have well taught us, evermore to take good heed to our enemies. Undoubtedly it were good going to Mantua, and to leave their whelps amongst the Lambs of our flock. VWhen we be weary of our wealth, we will even do then as they would have us now do. No, no, as long as we shall see his heart so good towards us, we must upon his warning we shall well provide to withstand his cruel malice. No, let him now spend his deceits, when they can hurt none but such as would deceive, and are deceived.

The Pope
curies not England.

They have by sundry ways made us privy, how much we be bound unto them. It went nigh their hearts, to see the judgment of July, of Clement the Seventh, of Paul the Third, nothing to be regarded with us. They be afraid, if we should sustain no hurt, because we justly rejected their Primacy, that other Princes would begin to do likewise, and to shake from their shoulders the heavy burdens that they so long have born against Scriptures, all right and reason. They be sorry to see the way stopped, that now their tyranny, avarice, and pride, can have no passage unto England, which was wont to walk, to triumph, to tols, to trouble all men. They can scarce suffer privileges, that is to say, license to spoil our Citizens, given them by our forefathers, and brought in by errorfull custom, to be taken from them. They think it unlawful, that we require things lawfull of them that will be under no Laws. They think we do them wrong, because we will not suffer them to do us wrong any longer. They see their Merchandize to be banished, to be forbidden. They see that we will buy no longer Chalk for Cheefe. They see they have lost a fair fleece, vengeable sorry that they can dispatch no more Pardons, Dispensations, Totquots, with the rest of their baggage and trumpery. England is no more a Babe. There is no man here, but now he knoweth that land.

they do foolishly that give Gold for Lead, more weight of that than they receive of this. They pass not though Peter and Pauls faces be graven in the Lead, to make fools fain. No, we be sorry that they should abuse holy Saints villages, to the beguiling of the world.

KING
HIS. 8.
Gold given for Lead.

Surely, except God take away our right wits, not only his authority shall be driven out for ever, but his name also shortly shall be forgotten in England. We will from henceforth ask counsel from him and his, when we list to be deceived, when we covet to be in error, when we desire to offend God, truth and honesty. If a man may guess the whole work by the foundation, where deceit beginneth: the work, can any other than deceits be builded upon this foundation? VWhat can you look for in this Manian Council, other than the oppression of truth and true Religion? If there be any thing well done, think, as every man doth, Bishops of Rome to be accustomed to do a few things well, that many evil may the better be taken at their hands. They, when they list, can yield some part of their right. They are content that some of their Decrees, some of their Errors and abuses be reprehended; but they are never more to be feared, than when they shew themselves most gentle. For if they grant a few, they ask many, if they leave a little, they will be sure of a great deal. Scarce a man may know how to handle himself, that he take no hurt at their hands, yea, when they bless him: which seldom do good, but for an intent to do evil. Certainly, come who so will to these shops of deceits, to these Fairs of frauds, we will lose no part of our right, in coming at his call, that ought to be called, and not to call. VVe will neither come at Mantua, nor send thither for this matter, &c.

God grant.

Proceed.

The Pope
ought to be called, and not to call.

And so the King, proceeding in the said his Protestation, declareth moreover, how the Pope after he had summoned his Council first to be kept at Mantua, the three and twentieth day of May, Anno 1537, shortly after directed out another Bull, to propagate the same Council to the month of November, pretending for his excuse, that the Duke of Mantua would not suffer him to keep any Council there, unless he maintained a number of warriors for defence of the Town. And therefore in his later Bull he prorogued this Assembly, commanding Patriarchs, Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and other of the Spirituality, by the virtue of obedience, and under pain of cursing, to be present, but sheweth no place at all where he would be, nor whither they should come. And in very deed no great matter though no place were named. For as good a Council no where to be called, as where it could not be. And as well no place served him that intended no Council, as all places. And to say truth, much better no place to be named, than to name such as he purposed not to come to; for so should he break no promise which trakteth none. And so going forward in his Oration, toward the later end he thus inferreth by his words of Protestation, saying:

Council.

No, we will the Pope and his adherents to understand that which we have oft said, and now say, and ever will say, He nor his hath no authority, nor jurisdiction in England. We give him no more than he hath, that is, never a deal. That which he hath usurped against Gods Law, and extorted by violence, we by good right take from him again. But he and his will say, we gave them a Primacy. We hear them well: we gave it you indeed. If you have authority upon us as long as our consent giveth it you, and you evermore will make your plea upon our consent, then let it have even an end where it began; we consent no longer, your authority must needs be gone. If we being deceived by false pretence of evil-alleged Scriptures, gave to you that ye ought to have refused, why may we not, our error now perceived, and your deceit espied, take it again? VVe Princes wrote our selves to be inferiours to Popes. As long as we thought so, we obeyed them as our superiours. Now we write not as we did, and therefore they have no great cause to marvel, if we hereafter do not as we did; both the Laws civil, and also the Laws of God, be on our side. For a free man born doth not lose his liberty, no nor hurt the plea, of his liberty, though he write himself a bondman.

they gave
the Pope Primacy, so they take it from him again.

Again,

{ KING } Again, If they lean to custom, we send them to Saint Cyprian, which faith, That custom, if truth be not joynd with it, is nothing, but Erroris vestigium, that is, An old error. Christ said, Ego sum via, veritas, & vita: I am the way, the truth, and life. He never said, Ego sum consuetudo, I am the custom. Wherefore, seeing custom serveth you on the one side, and Scripture us on the other, are ye able to match us? In how many places doth Christ admonish you to seek no Primacy, to prefer your selves before no body? No, to be obedient unto all Creatures? Your old Title, Servus servorum, evil agreeth with your new forged dignity. But we will not tarry in matters so plain: We only desire God, that Cæsar, and other Christian Princes, would agree upon some holy Council, where Truth may be tried, and Religion set up, which hath been hurt by nothing so fore, as by general not general Councils: errors and abuses grow too fast. Erudimini qui iudicatis terram: Get you learning you that judge the Earth and, excoigicate some remedy for these so many diseases of the sick Church. They that be wisest, do depair of a general Council. Wherefore we think it now best, that every Prince call a Council Provinciall, and every Prince to redress his own Realm. We make all men privy what we think best to be done, for the redress of Religion. If they like it, we doubt not but they will follow it, or some other better. Our trust is, that all Princes will so handle themselves in this behalf, that Princes may enjoy their own, and Priests of Rome content themselves with that they ought to have. Princes as we trust will no longer nourish Wolves whelps, they will subscribe no more to popish pride, to the Papacy, &c.

Best that every Prince reform his Realm and erry not for general Councils.

Favour our doings, O Christian Princes. Your honour and ancient Majesty is restored. Remember there is nothing pertaining so much to a Princes honour, as to set forth truth, and to help Religion. Take you heed that their deeds work not more mischief than your vertue can do good, and everlasting War we would all Princes had with this Papacy. As for their Decrees, soarken to them, that if in this Mantuan Assembly things be well done, ye take them, but not as authorized by them, but that truth, and things that maintain Religion, are to be taken at all mens hands. And even as we will admit things well made, so if there be any thing determined in prejudice of truth, for the maintenance of their evil grounded Primacy, or that may hurt the authority of Kings, we protest unto the whole world that we neither allow it, nor will at any time allow it.

Ye have Christian Readers our mind concerning the General Council. We think you all see, that Paul and his Cardinals, Bishops, Abbots, Monks, Friars, with the rest of the Rabbblement, do nothing less intend, than knowledge and search of truth. Ye see this is no time meet, Mantuan no place meet for a General Council. And though they were both meet, yet except some other call this Council, you see, that we neither need to come, nor to fend. You have heard how every Prince in his own Realm may quiet things amiss. If there be any of you that can shew us a better way, we promise with all hearty desire, to do that that shall be thought best for the setting of Religion, and that we will leave our own advices, if any man shew us better. Which mind of ours, we most heartily pray God that gave it us, not only to increase in us, but also to fend it unto all Christian Princes, all Christian Prelates, and all Christian people.

A little before the death of Queen Ann, there was a Parliament at Westminster, wherein was given to the King by consent of the Abbots, all such Houses of Religion, as were under three hundred Markes. Which was a shrewd Prognosticate of the ruine of greater Houses, which indeed followed shortly after, as was and might easily be perceived before of many, who then said, that the low Bulbes and Brambles were cut down before, but great Oaks would follow after.

Although the proceeding of these things did not well like the minds of the Popes friends in England, yet notwithstanding they began again to take some breath of comfort, when they saw the foresaid Queen Ann dispatched. Nevertheless they were frustrate of their purpose (as as is afore shewed) and that double wise. For first, after they had their wills of Queen Ann, the Lord raised up another Queen, not greatly for their purpose, with her Son King Edward. And also for that the Lord Cromwel the same time began to grow in authority. Who like a mighty Pillar set up in the Church of Christ, was enough alone to confound and overthrow all the malignant devils of the Adversaries, so long as God gave him in life here to continue; whose Story hereafter followeth more at large.

Shortly after this foresaid Marriage of the King with this Queen Jane Seimer above mentioned, in the month of June, during the continuation of the Parliament, by the consent of the Clergy holding then a solemn Convocation in the Church of Saint Paul, a Book was set forth containing certain Articles of Religion necessary to be taught to the people; wherein they intreated specially but of three Sacraments, Baptism, Penance, and the Lords Supper. Where also divers other things were published concerning the alteration of certain points of Religion, as that certain Holidays were forbidden, and many Abbeyes began to be suppressed. For the which cause the rude multitude of Lincolnshire, fearing the utter subversion of their old Religion, wherein they had been so long nuzzled, did rise up in a great Commotion, to the number well near of twenty Thousand, having for their Captain a Monk called Doctor Makereel, calling himself then Captain Cobler; but those Rebels being repressed by the Kings power, and desiring pardon, soon brake up their Assembly. For they hearing of the Royal Army of the King coming against them with his own person there present, and fearing what would follow of this, first the Noblemen and Gentlemen which before favoured them, began to withdraw themselves, so that they were destitute of Captains; and at the last they in writing made certain Petitions to the King, protesting that they never intended hurt toward his Royal Person. These Petitions the King received, and made this answer again to them as followeth.

Queen Jane married to the King. Lord Cromwel not groweth in authority.

Alteration of Religion a little be- alowed.

Commotion in Lincolnshire.

A Monk called Doctor Makereel, calling himself then Captain Cobler, but those Rebels being repressed by the Kings power, and desiring pardon, soon brake up their Assembly.

The Kings answer to the Rebels.

First, we begin to make answer to the fourth and sixth Articles, because upon them dependeth much of the rest. Concerning choosing of Counsellors, I never have read, heard, or known, that Princes, Counsellors, and Prelats, should be appointed by rude and ignorant common people, nor that they were persons meet, or of ability to discern and choose meet and sufficient Counsellors for a Prince. How presumptuous then are ye the rude Commons of one Shire, and that one the most base of the whole Realm, and of the least experience, to hind fault with your Prince, for the electing of his Counsellors and Prelats, and to take upon you, contrary to Gods Law and Mans Laws to rule your Princes, whom you are bound by all Law to obey and serve with both your Lives, Lands and Goods, and for no worldly cause to withstand.

The Kings answer to the Rebels.

As for the suppression of Religious Houses and Monasteries, We will that ye and all Our Subjects should well know, that this is granted Us by all the Nobles Spiritual and Temporal of this Realm, and by all the Commons in the same, by Act of Parliament; and not set forth by any Counsellor or Counsellors upon their meer will and fantasie, as you full fallacy would perfwade Our Realm to believe.

For suppression of Religious Houses.

And where ye alledge, that the service of God is much diminished, the truth thereof is contrary; for there be no Houses suppressed where God was well served, but where most vice, mischief, and abomination of living was used, and that doth well appear by their own confessions subscribed with their own hands in the time of their Visitations, and yet We suffered a great many of them (more than we needed by the Act) to stand; wherein if they amend not their living, We fear We have more to answer for, than for the suppression of all the rest. And as for the Hospitality for the relief of the poor, We wonder ye be not ashamed to affirm that they have been a great relief of poor people, when a great many or the most part hath not past four or five Religious persons in them, and divers but one which spent the substance of the goods of their Houses in nourishing of vice and abominable living. Now what unkindness and unreasonableness may we impute to you and all Our Subjects that be of that mind, which had lever such an unchristian sort of vicious persons should

In these Visitations of Religious Houses, they subscribed that which should be and abominable, and as for the Hospitality for the relief of the poor, We wonder ye be not ashamed to affirm that they have been a great relief of poor people, when a great many or the most part hath not past four or five Religious persons in them, and divers but one which spent the substance of the goods of their Houses in nourishing of vice and abominable living.

enjoy such possessions, profits, and emoluments, as grow of the said houses, to the maintenance of their unthrifty life, than we your natural Prince, Sovereign Lord and King, which doth and hath spent more of our own in your defences, than six times they be worth?

The Act of Utes.

As touching the Act of Utes, we marvel what madness is in your Brain, or upon what ground ye would take authority upon you to cause us to break those Laws and Statutes which by all the noble Knights and Gentlemen of this Realm (whom the same chiefly touched) have been granted and assented to, seeing in no manner of things it toucheth you the base Commons of our Realm.

Also, the grounds of all those Utes were false, and never admitted by Law, but usurped upon the Prince, contrary to all Equity and Justice, as it hath been openly both disputed and declared by all the well learned men in the Realm of England, in Westminster-Hall: Whereby ye may well perceive how mad and unreasonable your demands be, both in that and in the rest, and how unmeet it is for us, and dishonourable, to grant or assent unto, and less meet and decent for you in such a rebellious sort to demand the same of your Prince.

The Act of Utes.

As touching the Fifteen which you demand of us to be released, think ye that we be so faint hearted, that perforce ye of one Shire (were ye a great many more) could compel us with your insurrections and such rebellious demeanor to remit the same? Or think you that any man will or may take you to be true Subjects, that first make and shew a loving grant, and then perforce would compel your Sovereign Lord and King to release the same? The time of payment thereof is not yet come; yes, and seeing the same will not countervail the tenth penny of the charges which we have and daily do sustain for your tuition and safeguard, make you sure by your occasions of these ingratitude, unthankfulness, and unkindness to us now administered, ye give us cause (which have always been as much dedicate to your wealth, as ever was King) not so much to set our study for the setting forward of the same, seeing how unkindly and untruly ye deal now with us, without any cause or occasion: And doubt ye not, though ye have no grace nor naturalness in you to consider your duty of Allegiance to your King and Sovereign Lord, the rest of our Realm (we doubt not) hath, and we and they shall so look on this cause, that we trust it shall be to your confusion, if according to your former Letters you submit not your selves.

The Act of such fruits.

As touching the First Fruits, we let you to wit, it is a thing granted us by Act of Parliament also, for the supportation of part of the great and excessive charges, which we support and bear for the maintenance of your wealths and other our Subjects: And we have known also that ye our Commons have much complained also in times passed, that the most part of our Goods, Lands, and possessions of this our Realm, were in the spiritual mens hands; and yet bearing us in hand that ye be as loving Subjects to us as may be, ye cannot find in your hearts that your Prince and Sovereign Lord should have any part thereof (and yet it is nothing prejudicial unto you our Commons) but do Rebel and unlawfully Rise against your Prince, contrary to the duty of Allegiance and Gods Commandment. Sirs, remember your follies and Traitorous demeanors, and shame not your native Country of England, nor offend no more so grievously your doubted King and natural Prince, which always hath shewed himself most loving unto you, and remember your duty of Allegiance, and that ye are bound to obey us your King, both by Gods Commandment and Law of Nature.

Wherefore we charge you with ourselves, upon the foresaid Bonds and Pains, that you withdraw yourselves to your own houses every man, and no more to assemble contrary to our Laws and your Allegiances, and to cause the provokers of you to this mischief, to be delivered to our Lieutenants hands or ours, and you your selves to submit you to such condign punishment, as we and our Nobles shall think you worthy: For doubt you not else, that We and Our Nobles neither can nor will suffer this injury at your hands unrevenge, if ye give not to us place of Sovereignty, and shew your selves as bounden and obedient Subjects, and no more intermeddle your selves from henceforth with the weighty affairs of the Realm, the direction whereof only appertaineth to Us your King, and such Noble Men and Counsellors as we list to Elect and Choose to have the ordering of the same.

And thus we pray unto Almighty God, to give you grace to do your duties, to use your selves towards Us like true and faithful Subjects, so as we may have cause to order you thereafter: and rather obediently to consent amongst you to deliver into the hands of our Lieutenant, a hundred persons to be ordered according to their demerits, at Our Will and Pleasure, than by your obstinacy, and wilfulness to put your selves, your Wives, Children, Lands, Goods and Chattels, beside the indignation of God, in the utter adventure of total destruction, and utter ruine, by force and violence of the Sword.

After the Lincolnshire men had received this the Kings answer aforesaid, made to their Petitions, each mistrusting other who should be noted to be the greatest medler, even very suddenly they began to shrink, and out of hand they were all divided, and every man at home in his own house in Peace: But the Captains of these Rebels escaped not all clear, but were after apprehended, and had as they deserved. Ex Ed. Hal.

The commotion of Lincolnshire and Yorkshire.

After this, immediately within six days upon the same, followed a new Insurrection in Yorkshire for the same causes, through the Insatiation and lying tails of feditious persons, especially Monks and Priests, making them believe, that their Silver Chalice, Croffes, Jewels, and other Ornaments, should be taken out of their Churches, and that no man should be married, or eat any good meat in his house, but should give tribute therefore to the K. But there especial malice was against Cromwell and certain other Counsellors.

The number of these Rebels were near 40000 having for their Badges the five wounds, with the sign of the Sacrament, and Jesus written in the midst.

The Badges of the Rebels. A holy Pilgrimage.

This their devilish Rebellion they termed by the name of a Holy Pilgrimage, but they served a wrong and a naughty Saint. They had also in the field their Streamers and Banners, whereupon was painted Christ hanging upon the Crofs on the one side, and a Chalice with a painted Cake in it on the other side, with other such Ensigns of like hypocrisy and fained sanctity, pretending thereby to fight for the Faith, and right of holy Church.

The Kings power against the Rebels in the North.

As soon as the King was certified of this new feditious Insurrection, he sent with all speed the Duke of Norfolk, Duke of Suffolk, Marquess of Excester, Earl of Shrewsbury, and other with a great Army, forthwith to encounter with the Rebels.

These Noble Captains and Counsellors thus well furnished with habiliments of War, approaching towards the Rebels, and understanding both their number, and how they were full bent to Battel, first with policy went about to assay and practise how to appease all without bloodshedding; but the Northern men, stoutly and furdily standing to their wicked cause and wretched enterprise, would in no case relent from their attempts. Which when the Nobles perceived, and saw no other way to pacifie their furious minds utterly set on mischief, determined upon a Battel. The place was appointed, the day assigned, and the hour set; but see the wonderous work of Gods gracious providence. The night before the day of Battel came (as tellifieth Edward Hall) fell a small Rain, nothing to speak of, but yet, as it were by a great miracle of God, the water which was but a very small Flood, and that men, in manner the day before, might have gone dry-shod over, suddenly rose of such a height, deepness, and breadth, that the like no man that there did inhabit could tell they ever saw afore; so that that day, even when the hour of Battel should come, it was impossible for the one Army to come at the other.

The blind stubbornness of feditious people, rebelling where they have no cause.

After this, that the appointment made between both of the Armies being thus disappointed (as it is to be thought only by God, who extended his great mercy, and had compassion on the great number of innocent persons that in that deadly slaughter had like to have been murdered) could take no place; then by the great wisdom and policy of the said Captains, a Communication was had, and a Pardon of the Kings Majesty obtained for all the Captains, and chief doers of this Insurrection, and they promised that such things as they found themselves aggrieved withal, they should gently be heard, and their reasonable Petitions granted, and that their Articles should be presented to the King, that by his Highness authority, and wisdom of his Council, all things should be brought to good

A great miracle of God in defeating the cause of his Gospel.

{KING} good order and conclusion; and with this order every man quietly departed, and those which before were bent as hot as fire to fight, being letted thereof by God, went now peaceably to their houses, and were as cold as water.

A domino factum est istud.

Popph Priests re-belling against the King.

In the time of this ruffle in Yorkshire, and the King lying the same time at Windfor, there was a Butcher dwelling within five miles of the said Town of Windfor, which caused a Priest to preach that all they that took part with the Yorkshiremen, whom he called Gods people, did fight in Gods quarrel; for the which both he and the Priest were apprehended and executed.

Divers other Priests also, with other about the same time committing in like sort Treason against the King, suffered the like execution. Such a business had the King then to rid the Realm from the servitude of the Romish yokes.

Tanta molis erat Romanam evertere sedem.

But Gods hand did still work withal, in upholding his Gospel and trodden Truth, against all seditious stirr, Com-motions, Rebellions, and whatsoever was to the contrary, as both by the Stories afore passed, and by such also as here-after follow, may notoriously appear.

The next year after this, which was of the Lord 1537; after the great execution had been done upon certain rebellious Priests, and a few other Lay men, with certain Noble persons also and Gentlemen, amongst whom was the Lord Darcy, the Lord Hully, Sir Robert Con-fable, Sir Thomas Percy, Sir Francis Bygot, Sir Stephen Hamelton, Sir John Bulmer, and his Wife, William Lomley, Nicholas Tempest, with the Abbots of Gernsey, and of Rivers, &c. In the month of October, the same year following, was born Prince Edward. Shortly after whole birth, Queen Jane his mother, the second day after, died in Childbed, and left the King again a Wid-dower, which fo continued the space of two years together. Upon the death of which Queen Jane, and upon the birth of Prince Edward her Son, these two Verses were made which follow.

Here by the way is to be understood, that during all this season, since the time that the King of England had rejected the Pope out of the Realm, both the Emperors, the French King, and the King of Scots, with other foreign Potentates (which were yet in subjection under the Pope) bare him no great good favour inwardly, whatso-ver outwardly they pretended. Neither was here lacking privy setters on, nor secret working amongst themselves how to compass ungracious mischiefes, if God by contrary occasions had not stopped their intended devices. For first the Pope had sent Cardinal Pool to the French King, to stir him to War against the Realm of England.

Secondly, Whereas the French King, by Treaty of per-petual Peace, was bound yearly to pay to the King of Eng-land at the first days of May, and November, about 25000 Crowns of the Sun, and odd money, and over that ten thousand Crowns at the said two terms, for recompence of salt due, as the Treaties thereof did purport, that pension remained now unpaid four years and more.

Furthermore, the Emperor, and the French King both, retained Gronsester a Treacherous Rebel against the King, and condemned by Act of Parliament, with certain other Trai-tors more, and yet would not deliver him unto the King at his earnest sute and request.

The French King also, digressing from his promise and Treaty, made Alliance with the Bishop of Rome, Clement, in marrying the Dauphin to his Niece, called Katherine de Medicee.

The said French King moreover, contrary to his con-tract made, married his Daughter to the King of Scots. All which were prejudicial; and put the King no doubt in some fear and perplexity (though otherwise a stout and valiant Prince) to see the Pope, the Emperor, the French King, and the King of Scots fo bent against him.

And yet all this notwithstanding, the Lord still defend-ed the justness of his cause against them all. For although the French King was so set on by the Pope, and so linked in marriage with the Scots, and lacked nothing now but only occasion to invade the Realm of England, yet notwithstanding he hearing now of the birth of Prince Ed- ward the Kings Son by Queen Jane, and understanding also by the death of the said Queen Jane that the King was a Widdower, and perceiving moreover talk to be that the King would joyn in marriage with the German, began to wax more calm and cold, and to give much more gentle words, and to demean himself more courteously, labouring to marry the Queen of Navarr his Sister to the King.

The Embassadors resident then in France for the King, were Stephen Gardiner, with Doctor Thirleby, &c. Which Stephen Gardiner what he wrought secretly for the Popes devotion, I have not expressly to charge him. Whether he fo did, or what he did, the Lord knoweth all. But this is certain, that when Doctor Bonner, Arch-deacon then of Leicester, was sent into France by the King (through the means of the Lord Cromwel) to succeed Stephen Gardiner in Embassy, which was about the year of our Lord 1538, he found such dealing in the said Bishop of Winchester, as was not greatly to be trusted, beside the unkind parts of the said Bishop against the fore-said Bonner, coming then from the King and Lord Crom-wel, as was to be liked.

Doctor Bonner, the Kings Em-bassador in France.

Long it is to recite from the beginning, and few men peradventure would believe the brawling matters, the privy complaints, the contentious quarrels and bitter diffen-sions between these two, and especially what despitful contumelies Doctor Bonner received at the hands of Win-chester. For understand good Reader, that this Doctor Bonner all this while remained yet, as he seemed, a good man, and was a great furtherer of the Kings proceedings, and a favourer of Luthers Doctrine, and was advanced only by the Lord Cromwel. Whole promotions here to rehearse; first he was Archdeacon of Leicester, Parson of Bledon, of Derham, Cheswick, and Cheburton. Then he was made Bishop of Heresford, and at last preferred to be Bishop of London. The chief of which pre-ferments and dignities were conferred unto him only by the means and favour of the Lord Cromwel, who was then his chief and only Patron, and setter up; as the said Bonner himself in all his Letters doth manifestly protest and declare. The Copies of which his Letters I could here pro-duce and exhibit, but for prolonging my Story with superfluous matter. Yet that the world and all posterity may see, how the coming up of Doctor Bonner was only by the Gospel (howsoever he was after unkind unto the Gospel) this one Letter of his, which I will here infer, written to the Lord Cromwel out of France, may stand for a perpetual testimony, the tenour whereof here ensueth.

A Letter of Doctor Bonner the Kings Embas-sador resident in France, sent to the Lord Cromwel, declaring the order of his promotions and coming up.

MY very singular especial good Lord, as one most bounden, I most humbly commend me unto your honourable good Lordship. And whereas in times past it hath liked the same, without any my deserts or merits, even only of your singular exceeding goodness, to bestow a great deal of love, benevolence, and good affection upon me so poor a man, and of so small qualities, expressing indeed sundry ways the good effect thereof to my great preferment, I was very much bound thereby unto your Honourable good Lordship, and thought it always my duty, (as indeed it was) both to bear my true heart again unto your Lordship, and also remembering such kindnes, to do unto the same all such service and pleasure as might then lie in my small power to do.

But where of your infinite and inestimable goodness it hath further liked you of late, first to advance me unto the office of Legation from such a Prince as my So-veraign Lord is, unto the Emperor and French King; and next after to procure and obtain mine advancement to so honourable a promotion as the Bishoprick of Heresford; I must here acknowledge the exceeding greatnes of your Lordships benefit, with mine own imbecillity to re-compence it, and say, as Virgil Writeth.

Gracis

Grates persolvere dignas non opis est nostrae.

Surely my good Lord, I neither am, neither shall be able to requite this your Lordships most special kindnes and bountiful goodnes at any time, unless I should use that civil remedy called in Law Acceptation, which great Debtors especially are accustomed to procure to the hands of their Creditors: Whereby yet nevertheless your goodnes, the only doer thereof, should rather be increased, than my duty towards the same thereby diminished. And cessio Bonorum (the only extream refuge and help of poor Debtors deviled also in civil) might somewhat help herein, saying that it is not possible that I should come Ad rem perquam fortunam (whereupon that remedy is grounded.) whereby I may recompence and requite this Debt worthily.

Acceptation.

Here seemeth to lack some word, but that I would not alter any thing in his own Copy.

So that in conclusion these reſteth this, that unless your Lordships self do looke me, as you have bound me, I shall (and that full gladly) remain continually your most bound-ed Beadman. And Sir I most humbly beseech your good Lordship, in the honour of God, seeing this thing is begun, and advanced only by your goodnes and means, you will to the intent the Act may be wholly your own, stretch out your goodnes, not suffering the rest to be perfected otherwise than by your own hands; wherein as I must and shall acknowledge my self to be exceedingly beholden unto your good Lordship, so shall I the same more esteem and set by, during my life, having so attained it by your only goodnes: And verily, if your good Lordship be not better to me herein than I can (unless it be of your own goodnes) desire you, I know not how I shall be able to overcome the great charges annexed to this promotion. For though my promotions afore were right honest and good, yea, and such as one of far better qualities then I was, or am of, ought therewith to have been contented; yet considering that of divers of them, that is to wit, Leicester, Bledon, Derbam, Cheshwick, and Cheriburton, the first fruits, tenths, and charges born, I have not received clearly one penny, I am now never a whit the more able to bear the great charges of this.

I shall therefore herein and in all things else pertaining hereunto, seeing your Lordship is so great a Patron, and will needs bind me forever to be your own (as indeed I will) refer all together unto your goodnes, beseeching you to take the order and disposition of all into your hands. I cannot tell whether the late Bishop standeth bounden for the first fruits, tenths, or other duties which by Statute may be demanded of his Successor, but I fear it greatly, and beseech your Lordship that I may be helpen therein. My charges now here enforce me the more to speak and trouble your good Lordship, which at the beginning are not a few, and yet not ended. Of my fidelity to your good Lordship, I have of five hundred Crowns remaining forty, bestowed upon Horses, Mules, Mulet, Rayment, and other necessities, standing Debtor to Master Thirley nevertheless, and also to Master Dr. Heyns, for an hundred Marks, or full upon, to them both. And besides this, such is my chance now at the beginning, divers of my Servants have fallen sick, being in great peril and danger, putting me to no little charges.

Over and besides these displeasures coming unto me by not having their service, and other to keep them, and also wanting mine other Servants in England, which though I have sent for them, yet neither they, neither my Horses or stuff are come, I must and do take patience, trusting it will mend.

Upon the closing up of this Letter, and depeach of this Bearer, God willing I will pack up my gear, and to morrow betime follow the French King, who yesterday departed from Shambour, and maketh halt toward Paris. And thus our blessed Lord long and well preserve your good Lordship in health.

At Bloys, the second of September in the evening.

Written by the weary hand of him that is bounden to be, and is indeed, your Lordships Beadman at commandment.

Edmund Bonner.

Divers other Letters beside this of Doctor Bonner remain in writing unto the like effect and purport, which here also I might add for a further demonstration hereof; but this one in stead of many may suffice. Now to our purpose again; which is to declare how this Doctor Bonner, in the time of his first springing up, shewed himself a good man, and a fast friend to the Gospel of Christ and to the Kings proceedings: And contrariwise, how Stephen Gardiner did hate them both with God and with the King: Also what unkindnes and contumelies the said Bonner received at his hands; what rancour and heart-burning was between them; and what complaints the one moved against the other, remaineth consequently by their Writings and Records to be opened. For the more evident demonstration whereof, they that have the Letters of the said Doctor Bonner, written from France to the King and the Lord Cromwel, may right well perceive. And first to note what a Gospeller he was; in his Letter from Rome he speaking of his trusty companion, and bearer of his Letters (who was belike Doctor Heyns) he giveth this report both of him and of himself; saying,

1 Hrs 8. Dr. Bonner all this while shewed himself to be a good man and a good Gospeller.

Rancor and heart-burning. For between the Bishop of Winchester and Bonner.

If this bearer had been so much desirous to please the Emperor, and follow his religion, as he was studious to serve truly your Grace, and to advance the Truth, he had not wanted, &c.

The words of Bonner declaring himself to be a Gospeller.

And Again:

And besides that, he hath not wanted the evil report of naughty fellows, naming him a Lutheran wherein for company I was joyned, such was their goodnes, &c.

Bonner reckoned a Lutheran.

Again, in another Letter written to the Lord Cromwel, these words he hath, speaking of his companion Doctor Heyns.

Especially for that the said Doctor Heyns by his upright dealing herein, and professing the Truth, neither gave thanks nor reward, but was blazed abroad by honest folks to be a Lutheran. The left he pleaseth in Spain, the better argument it is, that his intent was to serve none but the Kings Highnes and the Truth, &c.

D. Bonner & D. Heyns noted for Lutherans.

And furthermore, in another minute writing to the Lord Cromwel of Stephen Winchester, and of his Churchfulness toward him, thus he saith:

And there I found in Master Doctor Thirley much kindness, and in the Bishop of Winchester as little, &c.

Winchester against Bonner.

And in the same Letter it followeth:

And if I had received any entertainment of the Bishop of Winchester, I would likewise have sent you Word. I thank God I need not, for I had nothing of him, &c.

Also in another Letter the said Bonner writing to the Lord Cromwel concerning one Barnabe, and himself, what cold welcome they both had at the hands of Winchester, used these words following:

Stephen Winchester a- gainst Barnabe because the Lord Cromwel favoured him.

Another Letter of Doctor Bonner to the Lord Cromwel, complaining of Winchester, and also declaring how he was promoted by the said Lord Cromwel, to the Bishoprick of Hereford.

MY very singular especial good Lord, according to my most bounden duty, I commend me right humbly unto your good Lordship, advertising the same, that the nine and twentieth of the last month, about four of the Clock at afternoon, there arrived here Barnabe with your Lordships Letters, dated at Ewrig the four and twentieth of the same: And thinking that at the said arrival, the Bishop of Winchester, M. Thirley and I had been all lodged together, where in very deed we had several lodgings, he went straight to the Bishop of Winchesters lodging (Master Thirley and I being then walking in the fields) and the Bishop incontinently inquired of him, not how the Kings Grace did, as was his duty; but

The Bishop of Winchester as inquired not how the King did.

{ KING } (as Barnabe told me) inquired of him where he left the Kings Grace at his coming away, whether he had brought any Letters for him: whether Master Brian and Master Wallop were in the Court at his departing, and finally what news were in England? To the which questions, when Barnabe had made answer, saying that he left the Kings Grace at Byrling, and that Master Brian and Master Wallop were in the Court at his departing, and withal, that he had no Letters from them, nor any other to him, and finally, for the news that the Kings Highness had given me the Bishoprick of Hereford: the Bishop (as Barnabe reporteth, and I doubt not but he faith truly) cast down his head, making a plaice mouth with his lip, and afterward lifting up his eyes and hands (as cursing the day and hour it chanced) seemed to evil contented therewith, that he would neither bid Barnabe drink, or tarry supper, nor yet further commune with him, but turning from him, called one Master Medow, and shewed him of the same tidings, taking it (as it appeared) very heavily, fembly as he doth every thing, that is or may be for my preferment. And when Barnabe perceived that I was not there, and then also this comfortable countenance and good cheer made unto him, he went thence and searched for me, who then was walking with Master Thirleby, as is before, and by chance communing with him of the Bishop of Winchester, giving him advertisement that he should not be abused by the said Bishop, who I said made him, not for any hearty love I thought he bear unto him, but either in despite of me, to whom he thought it should be greatly displeasing: Or else under colour thereof, and by familiarity, for to grope him and to serve his own crafty purposes by him. And soon after the departure of Master Thirleby from me, who then went to the Bishop to Supper, I returned towards my lodgings, and by the way met with Barnabe, whose salutation was after that fort, that it caused me to wonder at it, especially I having no expectation or hope of such things as he rehearsed unto me. And surely my good Lord I would not believe him in the thing he told, till I perceived the same by the superscription of your Lordships Letter, which he afterwards delivered unto me: declaring withal (to my great comfort) the prosperous estate of the Kings Highness, and of your good Lordship. Which known, I besought Almighty God to grant the long continuance thereof, and also as was my duty, did give most humble thanks to the Kings Highness, and to your said good Lordship. And hereupon keeping your Lordships Letters still in my hands unbroken, I went incontinently to the lodging of Master Thirleby which was in my way, to communicate these my news and great good fortune with him, and not finding him there, I read over your Lordships Letters, sending the same afterward to Master Thirleby, and perceiving by Barnabe, that he had other Letters for me, which he told me he must deliver unto me secretly, I went to mine own lodging with him, and there receiving them accordingly, did read them over, both that your Lordships second Letter sent to me, and also the other sent to Mr. Wyat, &c.

Your Lordships most bounden

Beadesman, and always at Commandment.

Edmund Bonner.

When the King, by the advice of the Lord Cromwell, and other of his Council had appointed Doctor Edmund Bonner to return from the Emperor, and to be resident in France, in the place of Winchester and of Doctor Thirleby, he sent his Letters to the said Bishop of Winchester, and to Master Thirleby, shewing his pleasure unto them in that behalf, with this Clause in the same Letters contained in express words as followeth.

And where the said M. Bonner wanteth furniture of stuff and plate meet for that Office, Our pleasure is that you M. Thirleby shall deliver unto him by indenture, all the Plate you have of Ours in your custody, and that you my Lord of Winchester shall furnish him with all such other stuff, as shall be necessary for him, Wherein as you shall do unto us Pleasure, so we shall be content at your return, to satisfy you for the same, &c.

The Bishop of Winchester receiving these Letters from the King, and being loath to come into England (whatsoever the matter was) also hearing that Doctor Bonner should succeed him, his disdainful nature did stomach him exceedingly. But because there was no other remedy but that the Kings commandment must be done, first he sendeth the Kings Letter, with his also to the Emperors Court, unto Master Bonner, and to Doctor Heyns, willing them in all hast to repair to Lyons within two days. Beside these Letters of Winchester, Dr. Thirleby adjoined his Letters also with the like quickness to the said Doctor Heyns and to Bonner, the Contents whereof here followeth.

The Letter of Doctor Thirleby to Doctor Heyns and Bonner.

With my hearty commendations, and the desire of your company, and now so much rather that I shall thereby have a great benefit, viz. the deliverance from trouble to ease, from a strange Country to mine own, from the waiting upon him that forceth as little for me, as I am acquainted with him, to the service of him whose prosperity and love I account as my life; these shall be to pray you to make no less speed hither, than you would make to a good feast when that you are hungry. M. Bonner shall know many things, but when you come I shall tell you more, so that you hasten. Come I pray you, I would fain be at home. I saw not my Master these four months. When as you Master Bonner shall come to Lyons, it shall be good to go to Bonniſe, he is a good money maker; in faith I can write no more, but bid you come heartily, hastily I would have written, and the sooner the better welcome to Lyons, where this was given the last of July.

By him that hath loved you well, and now will love you better,

if you haſt you hither.

Thomas Thirleby.

At the receipt of these Lettires, Doctor Bonner, and Doctor Heyns did put themselves in a readiness to repair incontinent unto Lyons, thinking there to have found Winchester and Thirleby, according to the purport of their Letters. But Winchester and Thirleby not abiding their coming, made hast away from Lyons to la Barelle; where Bonner, in riding in Post after him overtook him. With whom what entertainment and talk he had, and what accusations he laid to his charge, and what brawling words passed between them, and what great milking Bonner had of him for special causes here in this brawling matter or brawling Dialogue under following may appear, which for thy recreation, and for the further understanding of Winchester's qualities, I with thee loving Reader to peruse and consider.

But first here is to be noted, that the King and the Lord Cromwell, at what time they had appointed Doctor Edmund Bonner to be Resident Ambassador in France, required in their Letters, that he should advertise them by writing, what he did milke in the doings and behaviour of certain persons whom they did then note unto him. Whereupon the said Doctor Bonner sendeth this declaration of Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester; as followeth.

First, I misliked in the Bishop of Winchester, that when any man is sent in the Kings affairs, and by his Highness commandment, the Bishop, unless he be the only and chief inventor of the matter and letter forth of the person, he will not only use many cavillations, but also use great strangeness in countenance and cheer to the person that is sent; over and besides, as small comfort and Counsel as may be in the matter, rather disswading and discouraging the person earnestly to set forward his Message, than boldning and comforting him, as is his duty, with help and Counsel to adventure and do his best therein. The experience whereof I have had my self with him, as well at Roan, the first time I was sent to Rome, commanded by the Kings Highness to come by him, and at Marcellus, the time of the intimation of the Kings protestation, provocation and appeal, as also lately going to Nice, touching the general Council, and the authority of the Bishop of Rome, and finally, now last of all, at my return from Spain, where neither my diligence in coming to him and using him in the beginning with all the reverence I could, neither the Kings Letter written unto him in favour, nor yet other thing could mollify his hard heart, and cankred malicious stomach, but that he would spitefully speak, and unkindly do, as indeed he did, to his great shame and my dishonour, as followeth.

When riding in Post I came to la Barrella, a Post on this side Lyons, the seventh day of August, he being in bed there, I carried till he rising up and making himself ready, came at last out to me, standing and tarrying for him in a second Chamber, and at his coming thither, he said; What! Master Bonner, good morrow. Ah Sir, ye be welcome, and therewithal he put out his hand, and I kissing mine, took him by it, and incontinently after he said; come on, let us go and walk a while into the Fields, and withal drew towards the door, preparing him to walk. To whom I said, I would waite upon him. His going to the Fields (as appeared afterwards) was not so much to walk, as to have a place where he might speak loud, and triumph alone against me calling in his words again, if he spake any amiss, and utterly deny them if that made for his purpose. And by chance, or rather than by good wisdom, afore I went forth, I asked for Master Thirleby, and desired I might see him and speak with him. The Bishop that perceiving, and with all that I stuck upon it, he commanded one of his Servants to call Master Thirleby, but yet afore his coming the Bishop would not be idle, but said thus to me.

Master Bonner, your servant was yesterday with me, and as I told him, I will tell you; In good faith you can have nothing of me. Nothing, my Lord, quoth I, merrily speaking. Marry God forbid, that is a heavy word, and much uncomfortable to him that wanteth all things, and trutheth much upon your goodness that hath a great deal. In faith, quoth he, ye shall have nothing of me: Marry, ye shall have of Master Thirleby his Carriage, Mules, his Bed, and divers other things, that he may spare, and which he hath kept for you. Well My Lord, quoth I, if I shall have nothing of you, I must make as good shift as I can for my self otherwise, and provide it where I may get it. And here the Bishop, because I would not give him thanks for that thing which was not worthy thanks, and that also I would not shew my self greatly contented and pleased, though I received nothing at his hands, he began somewhat to kinde, and asked what I wanted. I told him again, that I wanted all things saving money and good will to serve the Kings Highness.

Tell me one thing, quoth he; that you want. One thing, quoth I? Marry amongst many things that I want, I want Napery. That shall ye not need, quoth he, here in this Country: And here he began to tell a long tale, that none used that but Master Wallop and he in the beginning. Which is not true generally. And from this he began to go, defending by his Negatives; my Mules, said he, ye cannot have, for if ye should, I must needs provide other for them again: my Mule clothes ye cannot have, because mine Armes are on them, not meet for you to bear: my Raiment (I being Bishop) that is Negative, not meet for you: And so proceeding forth in the rest, nothing had he for me, and nothing should I have.

And here came Master Thirleby, who welcomed me very gently, and after an honest sort: To whom the Bishop rehearseth again his Negatives, and maketh a long this party discourse, bringing in conclusion, for all that he could do, that nothing I should have of him, and this rehearsed he full on end, I am sure above a dozen times, and that with a Pilates voice, so that all his Company, standing more than three or four pair of Burs length off, heard him.

When I saw that he would make no end, but ever rehearsed one thing full, I said to him, My Lord, I beseech you, seeing I shall have nothing of you, but of Master Doctor here, let me give him thanks that deserved it, and trouble you therein no more: But leaving communication therein, let me desire and pray you, that we may commune of the Kings matters. And that I may have therein knowledge, as well of the state thereof, as also of your Counsel in that behalf. The Bishop was so hot and warm in his own matters, that he would not hear, but needs would return again, and shew why that I could have nothing of him. My Lord, quoth I, here is still on End one Tail, which me thinketh, seeing that I understand it, ye need not lo off to repeat it, especially seeing that it cometh always to this conclusion, that I shall have nothing of you. Ye lie, quoth he, I said not so. I report me, quoth I, to Master Thirleby here present, whom I shall desire to bear record of your fad and discreet honest behaviour with me. I say you lie, quoth he: My Lord, quoth I, I thank you.

I do not say, quoth he, that ye shall have nothing of me; but I say you can have nothing of me. And though the one here comprehendeth the other, yet there is a great diversity between these two manners of speaking: I can spare nothing unto you, and therefore ye shall have nothing; and though I can spare you, yet you shall have nothing; for in the one is an honesty in the Speaker, which would, if he could do, pleasure; and in the other there lacketh that honesty.

My Lord, quoth I, to examine whether I shall have nothing, because ye can spare nothing; or shall have nothing, though ye have plenty, because ye will I shall have nothing, it shall not much help me in my journey. Wherefore seeing you bide upon this, I shall have nothing, I thank you for nothing, and provide otherwise for my self. Turd in your teeth, quoth he, and provide as ye will. Bishop-like spoken, by my Faith, quoth I, and well it becometh you to speak thus to me. Ye marry doth it become me, quoth he, and repeating the words again, said with a sharp accent, Have nothing of me? Turd in your teeth. Well my Lord, quoth I, this needeth not, saving that ye have a full stomach, and your wit abroad, willing hereby to ease your stomach against me. Ye marry, quoth he, it needeth for me, though it needeth not for you, for I intend, quoth he, I would ye should know it, to justify my self to the King in all things. If ye do so, quoth I, ye shall do the better. Nay, quoth he, I do it, and will do it. Well, quoth I, ye are the more to be commended, if ye so can do. Yes, quoth he, I can do it.

Now, by my Troth, quoth I, seeing the Kings Highness hath written so tenderly for me unto you, as appeareth by his Highness Letters that his Grace hath done; me thinketh, ye having so great plenty of all things, and I do great need thereof, coming Post, as I do, ye go about as evil to justify your self to the King, as any one that I have seen. And I wis my Lord (quoth I) I would have reckoned, that coming as I do come, I should have been both better welcome, and better intreated of you, than now I am, if it had been for no other respect, than because I am an English man.

I shall tell you, quoth he, for the Kings sake ye may look to have; but for your own sake ye get nothing. Well, quoth I, then having nothing, I will give no thanks at all, and having anything, I shall give thanks to the King.

King, and none to you. I tell you, quoth he, ye get nothing. And I tell you again, quoth I, that I will thank you for nothing: and here the Flesh of his Cheek began to swell and tremble, and he looked upon me as he would have run through me, and I came and stood even by him, and said, Trow you, my Lord, quoth he, that I fear your great looks? Nay faith do I not. Ye had need to get another stomach to what upon, than mine, and a better Whetstone than any ye have. For, I assure you, you shall not whet me to your purpose: and if ye knew how little I do set by this unloving and indiscreet behaviour of yours, you would not use it upon me. And I shall tell you, quoth I, if I were not bridled, and had other respects both to the Kings Highness my Sovereign Lord, and also unto other that may command me, I would have told you ere this time my mind after another sort. Tell me, quoth he, Tuid in your Teeth. Well my Lord, quoth I, ye would, I perceive by you, and by your words, provoke me to speak as undifferently and beddelily, as ye do. But surely ye shall not, howsoever ye shall speak. But this will I tell you, I shall shew how I am handled of you. Mary spare not, quoth he. Well my Lord, quoth I, you have here full well plaid the part of a Bishop, and it is great joy of you, that with this your furious anger and choler, ye can make all the company here about you to be ashamed of you, as I am sure they are. And for my part, if ye your self be not ashamed, or coming to your self (for now your anger is such that you hear not your self) be not displeased, I shall be ashamed, and pity this your doing without wilddom, and the oftener ye use this manner, the more shall it be to your dishonour.

Lo, quoth he, how fondly he speaketh, as who saith, I were all in the blame. Will ye not hear, quoth he, this well? Man? My Lord, quoth I, I would you could hear with indifferent Ears, and see with indifferent Eyes your self. Ye have made a brabbling here for nothing, and would that I should give you thanks for that thing which Master Thirleby hath done for me, I look for no thanks of you, quoth he, and said withal, looking spitefully, that he knew me well enough; and that he was not deceived in me. Well quoth I, and me think I know you well enough too, wherefore as ye say you are not deceived in me, so I trust I will not be deceived by you. But I pray you, Sir, quoth I, because ye say ye know me well enough, and that ye be not deceived in me, How do you know me? for honest and true, or otherwise? If you do, say it, and I shall make answer.

I could not drive him to answer hereunto; so that I suppose, either of his own naughty Nature he hath made me an image after his own fantastic, or else believed the report of such in conditions, as he is himself, who in malice, I suppose, and disdain may be compared to the Devil in Hell, not giving place to him in Pride at all. In communication he repeated oft the provision of the M. Crowns. I told him they went in my diets, and that it would be a good while afore they would come out: and further I said, That seeing they had been simpliciter given to me, I would never thank him for them, but the Kings Highness: And I said, That if they were twenty thousand, he should break so many sleeps afore he should have any part thereof, intreating me as he did. Well, quoth he, you have them. That is truth, quoth I, and nothing thankful to you.

Why then, quoth he, seeing you have here divers things of M. Thirleby, and all other things are parabilia pecunie, which you have, you may make thereby good provision for your self. That is truth, quoth I, and that can I and will do, though you tell me not, seeing I have nothing of you, and afore this had provided at Lyons for all things necessary, if ye without necessity had not made that great haste to depart thence, informing me thereby to follow you. And yet, quoth I, one thing may I tell you: ye are very delicious I should be provided well for, as appeareth in that you have taken away at Lyons one Horse that Francis had provided for me, and also your servant Mass having an Horse to sell, and knowing my need, by your consent hath sold his Horse to a stranger, rather than he would sell him to me. So that nothing suffering me to have of you, and taking away that provision which I make, and go about to make, you well declare how heartily you desire I should be provided for. In faith (quoth he) chuse you, ye may provide if you will; and seeing your journey hither from Lyons is vain, you may thither return again, and make there provision for your self. I thought, quoth he, departing from Lyons, to have made easie journies, and to have followed the Court till you had come, and now come you quitting in Poit, and trouble all. I came forth in Poit, quitting in Poit, and the commandment of the King my Master, and had liberty to return at pleasure by his Graces Letters, and seeing that I had no Horses for the journey, me thought better to ride in Poit than go on foot. Well, quoth he, I will not depart hence this twelve month, except ye be otherwise provided. Provided (quoth I) I must tarry till I may be provided of Horses, if ye speak of that provision: and seeing that this riding in Poit grieveth you, I causeth me to think you are loth to depart, and angry that I should succeed you. I have here already two Gowns and a Velvet Jacket, so that you shall not be letted an hour by me.

I tell you, quoth he, ye shall otherwise provide, or else I will not depart. For I tell you, quoth he, though you care not for the Kings Honour, but wretchedly do live with ten Shillings a day, as ye did in yonder parts, you and your companion, I must and will consider the Kings Honour. And I tell you again, quoth I, I will and do consider the Kings Honour as much as ye at any time will do, and as sorry will be that it should be touched by any negligence or default in me: yea, and I say more to you (quoth I) though ye may spend far above me, I shall not stick if any thing be to be spent for the Kings Honour, to spend as liberally as you, so long as either I have it, or can get it to spend. And whosoever informed you of the wretchedness and spending scarcely of my companion and me in the parts where we have been, made a false lye, and ye shew your wilddom full well in so lightly believing and rehearsing such a tale.

I cannot tell, quoth he, but this was openly rehearsed by Master Briens servants at my Table. Yea, was? (quoth I) Yea marry was it, quoth he. Now, by my Troth, quoth I, then was the fare that was bestowed upon them very well cast away: for of my Fidelity, that Week that Master Brian and his servants were with us at Villa Franca, it cost my companion and me five and twenty Pounds in the Charges of the House. This they lay, quoth he. Yea, quoth I, and therein they lye. And here I shewed him, that being well settled at Nice, and having made there good and honest provision, to our no little charges, Master Wyat would not rest till he had gotten us to Villa Franca, where even upon the first words of Master Hayns, he was right well content to take of us twenty Shillings by the day. Which was not during ten days; where at his coming to us to Nice, himself and all his servants, and then tarrying with us two days, we took not one penny of him. And moreover, at the departing of Master Wyat from Villa Franca, in Poit into England, we found our selves, our Servants, all Master Wyat's Servants, to the number of sixteen, all his acquaintance, which Dinner and Supper continually came to us, sometime twelve, sometimes ten, and when they were least, six or eight, and for this had not one penny of Master Wyat, and yet at our coming from Barcelona, where we tarried about eight days, we gave to Master Wyat twenty eight Pounds, and to his Servants five Pounds, besides forty Shillings that privately I gave to some being of gentle fashion, out of mine own Purse: so that I told him, it was neither Master Wyat, nor Master Hayns, that found us and our Servants, but we prayed for the finding of them, and here it chanced to us to have all the charge, and other Men to have all the thanks.

The Bishop when he heard this was amazed, and stood still, finally saying, By my Troth, quoth he, I tell you as it was told me, and Master Doctor here can tell whether it was so or no. Yea, and I will tell you more, quoth he, They said that Master Hayns, would have been more liberal a great deal, if you had not been. Now by my Troth, quoth I, I shall therein make Master Hayns, himself Judge thereof, who can best tell what communication hath been between him and me therein.

Another king of Winchester and Bonner.

Thinking that this communication had driven the other matters out of the Bishops wild Head, I held my peace; and by and by was he in hand again with them as hot as ever he was. My Lord (quoth I) I desired ere while your Lordship to make an end of this Communication, wherein the longer ye talk, the more ye make me believe that you would (where ye have spoken undirectly, yea, and unkindly, not regarding the Kings Letters) with multitude of words, and great countenance I should think ye had not done amiss. But surely you lose your labour, for ye shall never make me think that ye are desirous to do me pleasure, neither for mine own sake, nor for the Kings. For if your words be well weighed, I have as much of you indeed for mine own sake, as I have for the Kings sake, that is nothing at all.

Here both of us were talking together; but I held on still, and ever enforced him to this: My Lord, quoth I, this is the thing that I shall only desire of you: That where the Kings Grace hath here in the French-Court divers affairs (as I take it) ye would therein instruct me in the state thereof, and give me your best counsel and advice: and this I protest unto you, that if ye this will do, I will attentively hear you: and if ye will not, I shall with pain hear you in your other things, but I will make no answer at all.

For all this the Bishop ended not; but in conclusion, when he saw by no means that he could induce me to answer, he returned homewards, and I brought him unto his Lodging and Chamber.

It being Dinner-time, and all things provided, and standing afore him, and he turning his back from me into a Window: I at his turning towards me again, put off my Bonnet, and said, God be with you my Lord. He gave no answer to me at all, nor countenance, but suffered me to go. Whereupon returning to my Lodging, which was in Master Thirlebies Chamber, I caused my Dinner to be provided, and when it was almost ready, the Bishops Steward, called Myrrel, came for me (whether sent from the Bishop or not, I cannot tell) and I told him my Dinner was provided for, and withal, that my Lord his Master had given me such a Breakfast, that I need no Dinner nor Supper, and so the Steward, drinking with me, returned again, and I went to Dinner at Master Thirlebies Lodging, and after Dinner I went to the Bishops Lodging, who at my coming, very gently put off his Bonnet, and so we walked together quietly a while, and shortly after, the Bishop began after this manner: Master Bonner, to day we communed of provision for you, and because ye shall lay no blame upon me, I will tell you what I will do for you, I will provide and make ready for you, Mules, Mulets, Horses, Servants, Money, yea, and all things that shall be necessary.

My Lord, quoth I, here is a large offer, and a great kindness come upon you; I marvel, quoth I, that I could hear nothing of this to day in the Morning. I tell you, quoth he, this will I do, for know you, that I will consider the Kings honour and pleasure, and doubt not but the King will pay me again. My Lord, quoth I, I have sent my Servant already to Lyons, to make provision for me, and I have sent other abroad here in the Town and Country, to do the same: ye shall never need to trouble your self herewith. I will, quoth he, you shall not say another day, that ye could not be provided for. My Lord, quoth I, let me have instructions in the Kings matters, and as for other things I shall not ask of you, because this day ye made me so plain answer. After much communication I departed from him lovingly, telling him that I would be at Terrara that night where he intended to be lodged. And so the Bishop bidding me farewell, took soon after his Horse, riding to Terrara to Bed.

And by the way I overtook him, and passing by, doing my duty to him and his company, I came to Terrara, lodging at the Post-House, and even as the Bishop came into the Town, stood at the Post-House-door: To whom the Bishop said, We shall see you soon, Master Bonner. Yea, my Lord, quoth I, thinking that thereby he had desired me to Supper, and at Supper-time I went to his Lodging, having other to eat my Supper at home, and glad he appeared to be that I was come, making merry communication all Supper-while, but nothing at all yet speaking to me, or giving any thing to me, saving at the coming of the Fruit, he gave me a Pear, I crow, because I should remember mine own Country. After Supper, he walked, taking Master Thirleby with him, and I walked with an Italian, being Embassador for the Count Mandula, and after a good space he returned, and bade the Bishop good night.

I did not after that night Dine or Sup with the Bishop, till he came to Burges in Berry, whereupon the depeach of Frances, and closing up of our Letters sent to the Kings Highness, the Supper was so provided, and set upon the Board, and the Bishop in washing, standing so between me and the Door that I could not get out; and there would he needs that I should walk with him and Sup, and I suppose all the way from Barella to Blois, he talked not above four times with me, and at every time saving at Molyns (where he by mouth told me somewhat of the Kings affairs here in France) and at Veronne (when he answering to my requests in writing, delivered me his Book of his own hand for mine instructions, the Copy whereof is now sent herewithal) there was quick communication between us. His talking by the way was with Master Thirleby, who I think knoweth a great deal of his doing, and will, if he be the Man I take him for, tell it plainly to your Lordship. I my self was out of credence with the Bishop, not being applicable to his manners and desires.

And surely, as Master Thirleby told me, at his first coming to Lyons, and then speaking with the Bishop, the Bishop seemed to be so well content to return, and so glad of his coming to succeed him, that his flesh in his Face began all to tremble, and yet would the Bishop make Men believe that he would gladly come home. Which thing, believe it who will, I will never believe; for ever he was looking for Letters out of England, from M. Wallop and Master Brian, whom he took for his great Friends; and Master Myrrel himself reckoned, that the Bishop should have come into Spain, or else my Lord of Dureseme; so that the Bishop of Winchester ever coveted to protect the time, desiring yet withal to have some shadow to excuse and hide himself; as tarrying at Barella, he made excuse by my not coming to Lyons; and coming to Varennes, and there hearing by the Embassadors of the Venetians a lying tale of the going of the French-King towards Bayon to meet the Emperor, by and by he said, Lo, where is Master Diligence now? If he were now here (as then I was that night) we would to the Court and Prefect him, and take our leave. But when I in the morning was up afore him, and ready to Horse, he was nothing hasty. No, coming to Molyns after him, and there tarrying for him, the French-King lying at Schavenna, three small Leagues off, he made not half the speed and haste that he pretended.

I mislike in the Bishop of Winchester, that he cannot be content that any joined in Commission with him should keep House, but to be at his Table. Wherein either he searcheth thereby a vain-glory and pride to himself, with some dishonour to the King, as who saith, there were among all the Kings Embassadors but one able to maintain a Table, and that were he, or else he doth the same for an evil intent and purpose, to bring them thereby into his danger, that they shall say and do as liketh him alone, which I suppose verily hath been his intent.

I mislike in the said Bishop, that where he for his own pomp and glory hath a great number of Servants in their Velvet and Silks, with their Chains about their Necks, and keepeth a costly Table with excellent Fare, and exceeding Expences many other ways; he doth say, and is not ashamed to report, that he is so commanded to do by the Kings Grace, and that is his answer commonly, when his Friends tell him of his great Charges; and so, under colour of the Kings Commandment and Honour, he hideth his Pride, which is here disdaind.

I mislike in the said Bishop, That he having private hatred against a Man, will rather satisfy his own stomach and affection, hindering and neglecting the Kings Affairs, than relencing in any part of his sturdy and stubborn will, give familiar and hearty counsel (whereby the Kings Highness matters and business may be advanced and set forth) to him that he taketh for his Adversary.

RING. Hm. 8. J Bonner feigns by this Pear to be a Winchester John Mann.

The straits between Winchester and Bonner. Winchester Book of instructions delivered to Bonner. Thirleby and Winchester great together.

Why Bonner was out of credit with Winchester. Winchester Fleth trembled at the first coming of Doctor Thirly to succeed him.

Winchester looks to return into England.

Bonner called Mr. Diligence.

The second complaint.

Winchester would be alone.

The third complaint, the pomp and glory of Winchester.

The fourth complaint, Winchester given more to his own affections than to the Kings Affairs.

[KING] I mislike in the said Bishop, That he ever continually herein in this Court of France, made incomparably more of the Emperors, King of Portugals, Venetians, and Duke of Ferraries Embassadors, than of any French-men in the Court, which with his Pride caused them to disdain him, and to think that he favoured not the French-King, but was Imperial.

I mislike in the Bishop, That there is so great familiarity and acquaintance, yea, and such mutual confidence between the said Bishop and M. as naughty a fellow, and as very a Papist as any that I know, where he dare express it. The Bishop in his Letters to Master Wyat, ever sendeth special Commendations to Mason, and yet refuseth to send any to Master Heyns and me, being with Master Wyat, as we perceived by the said Letters. And Mason maketh such foundation of the Bishop, that he thinketh there is none such. And he told me at Villa Franca, That the Bishop upon a time, when he had fallen out with Germain, so trusted him, that weeping and sobbing he came unto him, desiring and praying him that he would speak with Germain, and reconcile him, so that no words were spoken of it, and what the matter was he would not tell me. That young fellow Germain knoweth all: and Presbon, which is Servant to the Bishop of Winchester, shewed me one Night in my Chamber at Boys after Supper, that Germain is ever busie in shewing the Kings Letters to strangers, and that he himself hath given him warning thereof. This thing Presbon told me the Night before that the Bishop departed hence, and when I would have had more of him therein, he considering how the Bishop and I stood, kept him more close, and would say no further.

In this Declaration of Doctor Edmund Bonner, above- prefixed, sent to the Lord Cromwel, divers things we have to note: First, as touching Stephen Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, here we have plain demonstration of his vile Nature and peevish Pride, joyined with malice and disdain intolerable: whereof worthily complaineth Doctor Bonner aforesaid, shewing six special causes, why and wherefore he misliketh that person, according as he was willed before by the Kings Commandment fo to do.

Secondly, In the said Stephen Winchester, this we have also to note and understand, That as he here declareth a secret inclination from the truth (which he defended before in his Book De Obedientia) to Papistry, joyning part and side with such as were known Papists; so he seemeth likewise to bear a like secret grudge against the Lord Cromwel, and all such whomsoever he favoured.

Thirdly, As concerning the fore-named Doctor Edmund Bonner the Author of this Declaration, here is to be seen and noted, That he all this while appeared a good Man and diligent friend to the Truth; and that he was favoured of the Lord Cromwel for the same.

Fourthly, That the said Doctor Bonner was not only favoured of the Lord Cromwel, but also by him was advanced first to the Office of Legation, then to the Bishoprick of Hereford, and lastly, to the Bishoprick of London, whom the said Doctor Bonner in his Letters acknowledgeth and confesseth to be his only Patron, and singular Mecenas.

Which being so, we have in this said Doctor Bonner greatly to marvel, what should be the cause, that he, seeing all his setting up, making and preferring came only by the Gospel, and by them of the Gospel-side, he being then so hated of Stephen Gardiner, and such as he was, being also at that time such a furtherer and defender of the Gospel (as appeared both by his Preface before Gardiner's Book De Obedientia, and by his Writings to the Lord Cromwel, also by helping forward the Printed Bibles at Paris) could ever be a Man so ungrateful and unkind afterward, to join part with the said Stephen Gardiner against the Gospel (without the which Gospel he had never come to be Bishop neither of Hereford, nor yet of London) and now to abuse the same Bishoprick of London, to persecute that so vehemently which before he openly he defended? Wherein the same may well be said to him in this case, that he himself was reported once to say to the French-King in the cause of Granconet: to wit, That he had done therein against his Honour, against

Justice, against Reason, against Honesty, against Friendship, against his own Promise and his Oath so often made, against his own Doctrine and Judgment, which then he professed, against all Truth, against the Treaties and Leagues between him and his letters up, and against all together, and to conclude, against the Salvation of his own Soul.

But to refer this to the Book of his Accoripts, who shall judge one day all things uprightly, let us proceed further in the continuation of this Doctor Bonner's Legation. Who being now Embassador in the Court of France (as ye have heard) had given him in Commendation from the King to entreat with the French-King for sundry dry points, as for the Printing of the New Testament in English, and the Bible at Paris; also for slanderous preachers, and malicious speakers against the Kings for Goods of Merchants taken and spoiled, for the Kings Prison to be paid; for the matters of the Duke of Suffolk's, for certain Prisoners in France; Item, for Granconet the Traitor, and certain other Rebels to be sent into England, &c. Touching all which Affairs, the said Doctor Bonner did employ his diligence and mavel to the good satisfaction and contentment of the Kings mind, and discharge of his duty, in such sort as no default could be found in him, save only that the French-King one time took displeasure with him, for that the said Bonner, being now made Bishop of Hereford, and bearing himself somewhat more seriously and boldly before the King; in the Cause of Granconet the Traitor (wherein he was willed, by the advertisement of the Kings pleasure, to wade more deeply and instantly) used these words to the French-King (as the French-King himself did afterward report them) saying, That he had done in deliverance of that foresaid Granconet being an English-Man, against God, against his Honour, against Justice, against Reason, against Honesty, against Friendship, against all Law, against the Treaties and Leagues between him and his Brother, the King of England, yea, and against all together, &c. These words of Bishop Bonner, although he denieth to have spoken them in that fort and quality, yet howsoever they were spoken, did stir up the stomach of the French-King to conceive high displeasure against him, inasmuch that he answering the Lord Embassador again, bade him write these three things unto his Master.

First, Among other things, That his Embassador was a great fool.

Secondarily, That he caused to be done better Justice there in his Realm in one hour, than they did in England in a whole year.

Thirdly, That if it were not for the love of his Masters, he should have an hundred strokes with a Halbard, &c.

And furthermore, The said French-King beside this, sending a special Messenger with his Letters to the King of England, willed him to revoke and call this Embassador home, and to send him another. The cause why the French-king took these words of Bishop Bonner so to stomach (as the Lord Chancellor said) was this: For that the Kings of France, standing chiefly, and in manner only upon their honour, can suffer that in no case to be touched. Otherwise, in those words (if they had been well taken) was not so much blame, perchance, as boldness, being spoken somewhat vehemently in his Masters behalf. But this one thing seemeth to me much blameworthy, both in this Bishop, and many other, that they in earthly matters, and to please terrene Kings, will put forth themselves to such a boldness and forwardness, and in Christs cause, the King of all kings, whose cause they should only attend upon and tender, they are so remiss, cold, and cowardly.

To these Letters of the French-King, the King of England sent answer again by other Letters, in which he revoked and called home again Bishop Bonner, giving unto him about the same time the Bishoprick of London; and sent in supply of this place Sir John Walslop, a great Friend to Stephen Gardiner. Which was in February, about the beginning of the year of our Lord 1540. Here how followeth the Oath of Bonner to the King, when he was made Bishop of London:

YE shall never consent nor agree that the Bishop of Rome shall practise, exercise, or have any manner of Authority, Jurisdiction, or Power within this Realm, or any other the Kings Dominion, but that you shall resist the same at all times, to the uttermost of your power: and that from henceforth ye shall accept, repate, and take the Kings Majesty to be the only Supreme Head in Earth of the Church of England, and that to your cunning, wit, and uttermost of your power, without guile, fraud, or other undue mean, ye shall observe, keep, maintain, and defend the whole effects and contents of all and singular Acts and Statutes made and to be made within this Realm, in derogation, extirpation, and extinguishment of the Bishop of Rome, and his Authority, and other Acts and Statutes made and to be made in Reformation and Corroboration of the Kings Power of Supreme Head in the Earth of the Church of England: and this ye shall do against all manner of Persons, of what Estate, Dignity, Degree, or Condition they be, and in no wise do nor attempt, nor to your power suffer to be done or attempted, directly or indirectly: any thing or thing, privily or openly, to the let, hinderance, damage, or derogation thereof or of any part thereof, by any manner of means, or for any manner of pretence: and in case any Oath be made, or hath been made by you to any person or persons in maintenance or favour of the Bishop of Rome, or his Authority, Jurisdiction, or Power, ye repate the same as vain and adulterate: So help you God, &c.

{ Anno 1538 } It will be judged, that I have lingred peradventure too much in these outward Affairs of Princes and Embassadors. Wherefore leaving these by-matters pertaining to the Civil State a while, I mind (the Lord willing) to put my Story in order again, of such occurrences as belong unto the Church, first shewing such Injunctions and Articles as were devised and set forth by the King, for the behoof of his Subjects. Wherein first is to be understood, that the King, when he had taken the Title of Supremacy from the Bishop of Rome, and had translated the same to himself, and was now a full Prince in his own Realm, although he well perceived by the wisdom and advice of the Lord Cromwel and other of his Council, that the corrupt state of the Church had need of Reformation in many things; yet because he saw how stubborn and untoward the hearts of many Papists were to be brought from their old persuasions and customs, and what business he had with them, only about the matter of the Popes Title, he durst not by and by reform all at once (which notwithstanding had been to be wished) but leading them fare and softly, as he might, proceeded by little and little, to bring greater purposes to perfection (which he no doubt would have done, if the Lord Cromwel had lived) and therefore first he began with a little Book of Articles (partly above-touched) bearing this Title: Articles devised by the Kings Highness to stablish Christian quietness and unity among the People, &c.

The King and his Council bearing with the weakness of the People.

The Book of Articles devised by the King for quietness of the People, &c.

Articles devised by the King.

IN the Contents of which Book, first he set forth the Articles of our Christian-Creed, which are necessarily and expressly to be believed of all Men. Then with the Kings Preface going before, followeth the Declaration of three Sacraments: to wit, of Baptism, of Penance, and of the Sacrament of the Altar. In the tractation whereof he altereth nothing from the old trade received heretofore from the Church of Rome.

Further then, proceeding to the order and cause of our Justification, he declareth, That the only Mercy and Grace of the Father promised freely unto us for his Sons sake Jesus Christ, and the Merits of his Passion and Blood, be the only sufficient and worthy causes of our Justification: yet good Works with inward Contrition, Hope, and Charity, and all other Spiritual Graces and Motions, be necessarily required, and must needs concur also in Remission of our Sins: that is, our Justification; and afterward we being Justified, must also have good Works of Charity, and Obedience towards God, in the observing and fulfilling outwardly of his Laws and Commandments, &c.

As touching Images, he willett all Bishops and Preachers to teach the People in such sort as they may know how they may use them safely in Churches, and not abuse them to Idolatry, as thus: That they be representatives of Vertue and good Example, and also by occasion may be flitters of Mens minds and make them to remember themselves, and to lament their sins, and so far he permitte them to stand in Churches. But otherwise, for avoiding of Idolatry, he chargeth all Bishops and Preachers diligently to instruct the People, that they commit no Idolatry unto them, in censuring of them, in kneeling and offering to them, with other like worshippings, which ought not to be done, but only to God.

And likewise for honouring of Saints, the Bishops and Preachers be commanded to inform the People how Saints hence departed ought to be revered and honoured, and how not. That is, that they are to be praised and honoured as the Elect Servants of Christ, or rather Christ to be praised in them for their excellent Vertues planted in them, and for their good Example left us, teaching us to live in Vertue and in Goodness, and not to fear to die for Christ, as they did. And also as advancers of our Prayers in that they may, but yet no confidence, nor any such honour to be given unto them, which is only due to God: And so forth charging the said Spiritual Persons to teach their flock that all Grace and Remission of Sins and Salvation, can no otherwise be obtained but of God only, by the Mediation of our Saviour Christ, who is only a sufficient Mediator for our sins; that all Grace and Remission of sin, must proceed only by the Mediation of Christ and no other.

From that he cometh further to speak of Rites and Ceremonies in Christs Church, as in having Vestiments used in Gods Service, sprinkling of Holy Water, giving of Holy Bread, bearing of Candles on Candlemas-day, taking of Athes, bearing of Palms, creeping to the Crose, setting up the Sepulchre, hallowing of the Font, with other like Customs, Rites, and Ceremonies; all which old Rites and Customs the foresaid Book doth not by and by repeal, but so far admitteth them for good and laudable, as they put Men in remembrance of Spiritual things: but so, that the People withal must be instructed, how the said Ceremonies contain in them no such power to remit sin, but only that to be referred unto God, by whom only our sins be forgiven us.

And so concluding with Purgatory, he maketh an end of those Articles, thus laying thereof: That because the Book of Maccabees alloweth praying for Souls departed, he therefore disproveth not that so laudable a Custom, so long continued in the Church. But because there is no certain place named, nor kind of pains exprest in Scripture, he therefore thinketh necessary such abuses clearly to be put away, which under the name of Purgatory have been advanced: as to make Men believe, that by the Bishop of Rome, Pardons, or by Masses said at Scala Celi, or otherwise, in any place, or before any Image, Souls might clearly be delivered out of Purgatory, and from the pains thereof, to be sent straight to Heaven, and such other like abuses, &c.

And these were the Contents of that Book of Articles devised, and passed by the Kings Authority, a little before the flux of Lincolnshire and Torkshire. Wherein although there were many and great imperfections and untruths not to be permitted in any true reformed Church: yet notwithstanding, the King and his Council, to bear with the weaklings which were newly weaned from their Mothers Milk of Rome, thought it might serve somewhat Injunctions for abrogating certain Holy days. And so consequently, not long after these Articles thus set forward, certain other Injunctions were also given out about the same year 1536, whereby a number of Holy-days were abrogated; and especially such as fell in the Harvest-time: The keeping of which redounded greatly to the hinderance of gathering in their Corn, Hay, Fruit, and other such like necessary commodities. The Copy and Tenor of which Injunctions I have also hereunto annexed, as under followeth:

The Kings Injunctions.

Intendence by the King FOrasmuch as the number of Holy-days is so excessively grown, and yet daily more and more by Mens Devotion, yea, rather Superstition, was like further to increase, that the same was and should be not only prejudicial to the Commonweal, by reason that it is occasion as well of much sloth and idleness, the very nurse of Thieves, Vagabonds, and of divers other unthriftiness and inconveniences, as of decay of good Mysteries and Arts, profitable and necessary for the Commonweal, and loss of Mans labour, many times being clean destroyed through the Superstitious observance of the said Holy-days, in not taking the opportunity of good and serene weather offered upon the same in time of Harvest, but also pernicious to the Souls of many Men, which (being inticed by the licentious vacation and liberty of those Holy-days) do upon the same commonly use and practise more excess, riot, and superfluity, than upon any other days. And sith the Sabbath-day was used and ordained but for Mans use, and therefore ought to give place to the necessity and behoof of the same, whensoever that shall occur, much rather than any other Holy-day Instituted by Man: It is therefore by the Kings Highness Authority, as Supreme Head in Earth of the Church of England, with the common assent and consent of the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm, in Convocation lawfully Assembled and Congregated, amongst other things, Decreed, Ordained, and Established:

Feasts of Dedication to be kept all upon one day. First, That the Feast of Dedication of Churches shall in all places throughout this Realm, be Celebrated and kept on the first Sunday of the Month of October for ever, and upon none other day.

Church Holy-days forbidden. Item, That the Feast of the Patron of every Church within this Realm, called commonly the Church Holy-day, shall not from henceforth be kept and observed as a Holy-day, as heretofore have been used; but that it shall be Lawful to all and singular Persons resident or dwelling within this Realm, to go to their work, occupation or mystery, and the same truly to exercise and occupy upon the said Feast, as upon any other work-day, except the said Feast of Church-holy-day be such as must be else universally observed and kept as a Holy-day by this Ordinance following.

Holy-days in the Harvest-time put down. Also that all those Feasts or Holy-days which shall happen to fall or occur either in the Harvest-time, which is to be accounted from the first day of July, unto the twenty ninth day of September, or else in the Term-time at Westminster, shall not be kept or observed from henceforth as Holy-days, but that it may be lawful for every Man to go to his work or occupation upon the same, as upon any other work-day, except always the Feasts of the Apostles, or of the blessed Virgin, and of St. George, and also such Feasts as wherein the Kings Highness Judges at Westminster do not use to sit in Judgment. All which shall be kept Holy and Solemn of every Man, as in time past have been accustomed. Provided always, that it may be Lawful unto all Priests and Clerks, as well Secular as Regular, in the foresaid Holy-days now abrogate to sing or say their accustomed Service for those Holy-days, in their Churches; so as they do not the same Solemnly, nor do ring to the same, after the manner used in high Holy-days, ne do command or indict the same to be kept or observed as Holy-days.

Four Offering-days. Finally, That the Feasts of the Nativity of our Lord, of Easter-day, of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, and of St. Michael the Archangel, shall be from henceforth counted, accepted, and taken for the four general Offering-days.

And for further Declaration of the Premises, be it known that Easter beginneth always the eighteenth day after Easter, reckoning Easter-day for one, and endeth the Monday next following the Ascension-day.

Trinity Term beginneth always the Wednesday next after the Octaves of Trinity Sunday, and endeth the eleventh or twelfth day of July.

Michaelmas Term beginneth the ninth or tenth day of October, and endeth the 28th or 29th day of November.

Hilary Term beginneth the twenty third or twenty fourth day of January, and endeth the twelfth or thirteenth day of February.

In Easter Term, upon the Ascension-day; in Trinity Term, upon the Nativity of St. John the Baptist; in Michaelmas Term, upon Allallow-day; in Hilary Term, upon Candlemas-day, the Kings Judges at Westminster do not use to sit in Judgment, nor upon any Sunday.

After these Articles and Injunctions thus given out by the King and his Council, then followed moreover as time served, other Injunctions moe, concerning Images, Relicks, and blind Miracles, and for abrogating of Pilgrimages, devised by Superstition, and maintained for lucre sake, also for the Pater-Noster, Credo, and Gods Commandments, and the Bible to be had in English, with divers other points moe, necessary for Religion: The words of which Injunctions here also ensue:

Other Injunctions given by the Authority of the Kings Highness, to the Clergy of this his Realm.

IN the Name of God, Amen. In the year of our Lord God 1536, and of the most Noble Reign of our Sovereign Lord Henry the Eighth, King of England, and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in the Earth Supreme Head of the Church of England, the twenty eighth, &c. I Thomas Cromwel, Knight, Lord Cromwel, Keeper of the Privy Seal of our said Sovereign Lord the King, and Vicegerent to the same, for and concerning all his Jurisdiction Ecclesiastical within this Realm, to the glory of Almighty God, to the Kings Highness Honour, the publick Weal of this Realm, and increase of Vertue in the same, have appointed and assigned these Injunctions ensuing to be kept and observed of the Dean, Parsons, Vicars, Curates, and Stipendiaries, resident or having cure of Souls, or any other Spiritual Administration within this Deany, under the pains hereafter limited and appointed.

THE first is, That the Dean, Parsons, Vicars, and other having cure of Soul any where within this Deany, shall faithfully keep and observe, and as far as in them may lie, shall cause to be kept and observed of all other, all and singular Laws and Statutes of this Realm, made for the abolishing and extirpation of the Bishop of *Rome*s pretended and usurped Power and Jurisdiction within this Realm, and for the Establishment and Confirmation of the Kings Authority and Jurisdiction within the same, as of the Supreme Head of the Church of England, and shall to the uttermost of their Wit, Knowledge, and Learning, purely, sincerely and without any colour or dissimulation, declare, manifest, and open, by the space of one quarter of a year now next ensuing, once every Sunday, and after at the least twice every quarter of a year, in their Sermons and other Collations, that the Bishop of *Rome*s, usurped Power and Jurisdiction, having no establishment nor ground by the Law of God, was for most just causes taken away and abolished, and that therefore they owe unto him no manner of obedience or subjection, and that the Kings power is within his Dominion the Highest Potentate and Power under God, to whom all Men within the same Dominion, by Gods Commandment owe most Loyalty and Obedience afore and above all other Potentates in Earth.

Item, Whereas certain Articles were lately devised and put forth by the Kings Highness Authority, and condemned unto by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm in Convocation (whereof part were necessary to be holden and believed for our Salvation, and the other part do concern and touch certain laudable Ceremonies, Rights, and Usages of the Church, meet and convenient to be kept and used for a decent and politick order in the same) the said Dean, Parsons, Vicars, and other Curates shall so open and declare, in their Sermons and other Collations, the said Articles unto them that be under their Cure, that they may plainly know and discern which of them be necessary to be believed and observed for their Salvation, and which be not necessary, but only do concern the decent and politick order of the said Church, according to such Commandment and Admonition as hath been given unto them heretofore by the Authority of the Kings Highness in that behalf.

The Kings
Articles to be read to the People.

Moreover, That they shall declare unto all such as be under their Cure the Articles likewise devised, put forth, and authorised of late, for and concerning the abrogating of certain superstitious Holy-days, according to the effect and purport of the same Articles, and persuade their Parishioners to keep and observe the same inviolably, as things wholesome, provided, decreed, and established by the common consent and publick authority for the Commonweals commodity, and profit of all this Realm.

Images
abolished.

Besides this, to the intent that all Superstition and Hypocrite, crept into divers Mens hearts, may vanish away, they shall not set forth or extol any Images, Relicks, or Miracles, for any Superstition or lucre, nor allure the People by any intreatments to Pilgrimages of any Saints, or otherwise than is permitted in the Articles lately put forth by the Authority of the Kings Majesty, and condescended unto by the Prelates and Clergy of this his Realm in Convocation, as though it were proper and peculiar to that Saint to give this commodity or that, seeing all goodness, health, and grace ought to be both looked and asked for only of God, as of the very Author of the same, and of none other, for without him it cannot be given; but they shall exhort as well their Parishioners, as other Pilgrims, that they do rather apply themselves to the keeping of Gods Commandments, and the fulfilling of his works of Charity; perswading them that they shall please God more by the true exercise of their bodily labour, travel, or occupation, and providing for their Families, than if they went about to the said Pilgrimages; and it shall profit more their Souls health, if they do bestow that on the poor and needy, which they would have bestowed upon the said Images or Relicks.

forbidden.

Also in the same their Sermons and other Collations, the Parsons, Vicars, and other Curates aforesaid shall diligently admonish the Fathers and Mothers, Masters and Governors of Youth, being within their Cure, to teach or cause to be taught their Children and Servants, even from their infancy, the Pater-Noster, the Articles of our Faith, and the Ten Commandments in their Mother-Tongue, and the same so taught shall cause the said Youth oft to repeat and understand. And to the intent this may be the more easily done, the said Curates shall in their Sermons deliberately and plainly recite of the said Pater-Noster, Articles, or Commandments, one Clause or Article one day, and another another day, till the whole be taught and learned by little and little, and shall deliver the same in Writing, or shew where Printed Books containing the same be to be sold to them that can read, or will desire the same; and thereto that the said Fathers and Mothers, Masters and Governors do bestow their Children and Servants, even from their Childhood, either to learning, or to some honest exercise, occupation, or husbandry, exhorting, counselling, and by all the ways and means they may, as well in their said Sermons and Collations, as otherwise, the said Fathers, Mothers, Masters, and other Governors being under their cure and charge, diligently to provide and force, that the said Youth be in no manner-wise kept or brought up in idleness, left at any time afterward they be driven, for lack of some mystery or occupation to live by, to fall to begging, stealing, or some other unchristlike, so far as we may daily see, through sloth and idleness divers valiant Men fall, some to begging, some to theft and murder, which after brought to calamity and misery, impute a great part thereof to their Friends and Governors, which suffered them to be brought up so idly in their youth;

where if they had been brought up and educated in some good literature, occupation, or mystery, they should (being rulers of their own Families) have profited as well themselves, as divers others Persons, to the great Commodity and Ornament of the Commonwealth.

Placing of good Vicars
and Curates

Also that the said Parsons, Vicars, and other Curates shall diligently provide, that the Sacraments and Sacramentals be duly and reverently Ministrified in their Parishes. And if at any time it happen them either in any of the Cases expressed in the Statutes of this Realm, or of special license given by the Kings Majesty, to be absent from their Benefices, they shall leave their cure not to a rude and unlearned Person, but to an honest well-learned, and expert Curate, that may teach the rude and unlearned of their Cure, wholesome Doctrine, and reduce them to the right way, that they do not err; and always let them see, that neither they nor their Vicars do seek more their own profit, promotion, or advantage, than the profit of the Souls that they have under their Cure, or the glory of God.

Every Parson to provide a Bible in English.

Item, That every Parson or Proprietary of any Parishes Church within this Realm shall on this side the Feast of St. Peter, ad vincula, next coming, provide a Book of the whole Bible both in Latin and also in English, and lay the same in the Quire, for every Man that will, to look and read thereon, and shall discourage no Man from the reading of any part of the Bible, either in Latin or English, but rather comfort, exhort, and admonish every Man to read the same, as the very Word of God, and the Spiritual Food of Mans Soul, whereby they may the better know their duties to God, to their Sovereign Lord the King, and their Neighbour; ever gently and charitably exhorting them, that using a sober and a modest behaviour in the reading and inquisition of the true sense of the same, they do in no wise flilly or eagerly contend or strive one with another about the same, but refer the declaration of those places that be in controversy to the judgment of them that be better learned.

Priests not to haunt Ale-houses.

Also the said Dean, Parsons, Vicars, Curates, and other Priests shall in no wife at any unlawful time, nor for any other cause than for their honest necessity, haunt or resort to any Taverns or Ale-houses, and after their Dinner and supper they shall not give themselves to drinking or riot, spending their time idly by day or by night, at Tables or Cards playing, or any other unlawful Game, but at such times as they shall have such leisure, they shall read or hear somewhat of Holy Scripture, or shall occupy themselves with some honest exercise, and that they always do those things that appertain to good congruence and honesty, with profit of the Commonwealth, having always in mind, that they ought to excel all other in purity of life, and should be example to all other to live well and Christianly.

Furthermore, because the goods of the Church are called the goods of the poor, and in these days nothing is less seen than the poor to be sustained with the same, all Parsons, Vicars, Prebendaries, and other beneficed Men within this Deanry, not being resident upon their Benefices, which may dispense yearly twenty pounds or above, either within this Deanry or elsewhere, shall distribute hereafter yearly amongst their poor Parishioners or other inhabitants there, in the presence of the Churchwardens or some other honest Men of the Parish, the fortieth part of the Fruits and Revenues of their said Benefices, lest they be worthily noted of ingratitude, which reserving so many parts to themselves, cannot vouchsafe to impart the fortieth portion thereof amongst the poor people of that Parish that is so fruitful and profitable unto them.

worth 200 pounds to find a Scholar at the University.

And to the intent that learned Men may hereafter spring the more, for the executing of the said Premises, every Parson, Vicar, Clerk, or Beneficed Man within this Deanry, having yearly to spend in Benefices or other promotions of the Church, an hundred pounds, shall give competent exhibition to one Scholar, and for as many hundred pounds more as he may dispense, to so many Scholars more shall give like exhibition in the University of Oxford or Cambridge, or some Grammar-School, which after they have profited in good learning, may be partners of their Patrons Cure and charge, as well in preaching, as otherwise { KING Hen. 8. } wife in the execution of their Offices, or may when need shall be, otherwise profit the Commonwealth with their counsel and wisdom.

Beneficed Men to maintain their man- sions. Also that all Parsons, Vicars and Clerks, having Churches, Chappels, or Mansions within this Deanery, shall bestow yearly hereafter upon the same Mansions or Chancels of their Churches being in decay, the fifth part of those their Benefices, till they shall be fully repaired, and the same to be repaired they shall always keep and maintain in good estate.

All which and singular Injunctions shall be inviolably observed of the said Dean, Parsons, Vicars, Curates, Stipendiaries, and other Clerks and beneficed men, under pain of suspension, and sequestration of the fruits of their Benefices, until they have done their duties according to these Injunctions.

After these Injunctions and Articles afore expressed (which were given about the year of our Lord, 1536 and 1537.) it was not above the space of a year, but other Injunctions also were published, to the further instruction of the people in the proceedings of Religion, whereby both the Parsons of Churches, and the Parishes together, were enjoined to provide in every Church to be a Bible in English: Also for ever Parishioner to be taught by the Minister, to understand and to say the Lords Prayer and Creed in their own Vulgar tongue, with other necessary and most fruitful Injunctions, the Tenor whereof followeth.

Injunctions by the King. IN the Name of God, Amen. By the authority and commission of the most excellent Prince Henry by the grace of God, King of England, and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in the Earth supreme head under Christ of the Church of England; I Thomas Lord Cromwell, Lord privy Seal, Vicegerent to the Kings said Highness for all his jurisdiction Ecclesiastical within this Realm, do for the advancement of the true honour of Almighty God, increase of Vertue, and discharge of the Kings Majesty, give and exhibit unto you N. these Injunctions following to be kept, observed and fulfilled upon the pain hereafter declared.

First, That ye shall truly observe and keep all and singular the Kings Highness Injunctions given unto you heretofore in any name by his Graces authority, not only upon the pains therein expressed, but also in your default now after this second monition continued, upon further punishment to be straightly extended towards you by the Kings Highness arbitrement or his Vicegerent aforesaid.

For the Bible to be set up in Churches. Item, That ye shall provide on this side the Feast of N. next coming, one Book of the whole Bible of the largest Volume in English, and the same set up in some convenient place within the said Church, that ye have Cure of, whereas your Parishioners may most commodiously resort to the same and read it. The charges of which Book shall be ratably born between you, the Parson and Parishioners aforesaid, that is to say, the one half by you, and the other half by them.

Item, That ye shall discourage no Man privily nor apertly from the reading or hearing of the said Bible, but shall expressly provoke, stir, and exhort every person to read the same; as that which is the very lively Word of God, that every Christian person is bounden to embrace, believe and follow, if he look to be saved, admiring them nevertheless to void all contention and altercation therein, and to use an honest Sobriety in the Inquisition of the true sense of the same, and to refer the explication of the obscure places, to Men of higher judgment in Scripture.

The Lords Prayer to be learned in English. Item, That ye shall every Sunday and Holy-day through the year openly and plainly recite to your Parishioners, twice or thrice together, or oftner if need require, one Article or Sentence of the Pater Noster, or Creed in English, to the intent they may learn the same by heart, and so from day to day, to give them one like Lesson or Sentence of the same, till they have learned the whole Pater Noster, and Creed in English by rote: and as they be taught every sentence of the same by rote, ye shall expound and declare the understanding of the same unto them, exhorting all Parents and Housholders, to teach their Children and Servants the same, as they are bound in conscience to do: and that done, ye shall declare unto them, the Ten Commandments, one by one, every Sunday and Holy-day, till they be likewise perfect in the same.

Item, That ye shall in Confessions every Lent, examine every person that cometh to Confession to you, whether they can recite the Articles of our Faith, and the Pater Noster in English, and hear them say the same particularly: wherein if they be not perfect, ye shall declare to them, that every Christian person ought to know the same before they should receive the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, and monish them to learn the same more perfectly by the next year following: or else, like as they ought not to presume to come to Gods board without perfect knowledge of the same (and if they do, it is to the great peril of their souls) so ye shall declare unto them that ye look for other Injunctions from the Kings Highness by that time, to stay and repel all such from Gods board, as shall be found ignorant in the premises: wherefore do ye thus admonish them, to the intent they should both chew the pill of their souls, and also the worldly rebuke that they might incur hereafter by the same.

Item, That ye shall make or cause to be made in the said Church, and every other Cure ye have, one Sermon every quarter of a year at the least, wherein ye shall purely and sincerely declare the very Gospel of Christ, and in the same exhort your hearers to the works of Charity, Mercy and Faith, specially prescribed and commanded in Scripture, and not to repose their trust or assistance in other works devised by Mens fantasies besides Scripture: as in wandering to Pilgrimages, offering of Money, Candles, or Tapers to fained Reliques, or Images, or Kissing or Licking the same, saying over a number of Beads not understood, ne minded on, or such like superstition: for the doing whereof, ye not only have no promise of reward in Scripture, but contrariwise great threats and maledictions of God, as things tending to Idolatry and Superstition, which of all other offences, God Almighty doth most detest and abhor, for that the same diminisheth most his honour and glory.

Item, That such fained Images as ye know in any of your Cures to be so abused with Pilgrimages or offerings of any thing made thereunto ye shall for avoiding of that most detestable offence of Idolatry, forthwith take down without delay, and shall suffer from henceforth no Candles, Tapers, or Images of Wax, to be set afore any Images or Picture, but only the light that commonly goeth about the Cross of the Church by the Rood-loft, the light afore the Sacrament of the Altar, and the light about the Sepulcher: which, for the adorning of the Church and divine Service, ye shall suffer to remain still, admonishing your Parishioners, that Images serve for none other purpose, but as the Books of unlearned Men, that can no Letters, whereby they might be admonished of the lives and conversation of them, that the said Images do represent. Which Images if they abuse for any other intent than for such remembrances, they commit Idolatry in the same to the great danger of their souls: and therefore the Kings Highness, graciously tendering the weal of his Subjects souls, hath in part already, and more will hereafter travel for the abolishing of such Images as might be occasion of so great offence to God, and so great danger to the souls of his loving Subjects.

Item, That in all such Benefices or Cures, as ye have, whereupon you be not your self resident, ye shall appoint such Curates in your stead, as both can by ability, and will also promptly execute these Injunctions, and do their duty otherwise, that ye are bound to do in every behalf accordingly, and profit their Cure no less with good example of living than with declaration of the Word of God, or else their lack and defaults shall be imputed unto you, who shall straightly answer for the same, if they do otherwise.

Item, That you shall admit no Man to preach within any of your Benefices or Cures, but such as shall appear unto you to be sufficiently licensed thereto by the Kings Highness, or his Graces authority, or the Bishop of the Diocess, and such as shall be so licensed, ye shall gladly receive,

Sermons? quarterly to be made.

Images pulled down.

Good whil' there to be placed.

ceive, to declare the Word of God without any resistance or contradiction.

Pilgrimages
abolished.

Item, If ye have heretofore declared to your Parishioners any thing to the extolling and setting forth of Pilgrimages to feigned Reliques or Images, or any such superstition, you shall now openly afore the same recant and reprove the same, shewing them, as the truth is, that ye did the same upon no ground of Scripture, but as being led and seduced by a common error and abuse crept into the Church through the sufferance and avarice of such as felt profit by the same.

The word of God to be preached without stop or interruption.

Item, If ye do or shall know any within your Parish, or elsewhere, that is a Letter of the Word of God to be read in English, or sincerely Preached, or of the execution of these Injunctions, or a fautor of the Bishop of Rome pretended power, now by the Laws of this Realm justly rejected and extirped: ye shall detect the same to the Kings Highness, or his Honourable Council, or to his Vicegerent afore said, or to the Justice of Peace next adjoining.

Register
every Parish.

Item, That you and every Parson, Vicar, or Curate, within this Diocese, shall for every Church keep one Book of Register, wherein ye shall write the day and year of every Wedding, Christening, and Burying, made within your Parish for your time, and so for every Man succeeding you likewise, and also therein set every persons name that shall be so Wedded, Christened or Buried, and for the safe keeping of the same Book, the Parish shall be bound to provide of their common charges one sure Coffer with two Locks and Keys; whereof the one to remain with you, and the other with the Wardens of every such Parish wherein the said Book shall be layed up: which Book ye shall every Sunday take forth, and in the presence of the said Wardens or one of them, write and record in the same, all the Weddings, Christenings and Burys, made the whole week before: and that done, to lay up the said Book in the said Coffer as afore, and for every time the same shall be omitted, the party that shall be in the fault thereof, shall forfeit to the said Church three Shillings four Pence, to be employed on the reparation of the same Church.

Item, That ye shall once every quarter of a year, read these and the other former Injunctions given unto you by authority of the Kings Highness, openly and deliberately before all your Parishioners, to the intent that both you may be the better admonished of your duty, and your said Parishioners the more incited to ensue the same for their part.

Tithes to be paid.

Item, Forasmuch as by a Law established, every Man is bound to pay his Tithes, no Man shall by colour of duty omitted by their Curates, detain their Tithes, and so redouble one wrong with another; and be his own judge, but shall truly pay the same as hath been accustomed to their Parsons and Curates without any restraint or diminution: and such lack and default as they can justly find in their Parsons and Curates, to call for reformation thereof, at their Ordinaries and other Superiors hands, who upon complaint and due proof thereof, shall reform the same accordingly.

Item, That no Parson shall from henceforth alter or change the order and manner of any Fastings day that is commanded and indicted by the Church, nor of divine Prayer, nor of Service, otherwise than is specified in the said Injunctions, until such time as the same shall be so ordered and transported by the Kings Highness authority: the Evens of such Saints, whose Holy-days be abrogated, only excepted, which shall be declared henceforth to be no fasting days, except also the Commemoration of Thomas Becket sometimes Archbishop of Canterbury, which shall be clean omitted, and instead thereof, the ferial Service used.

abrogated.

Knolling of Aves for-bidden.

Item, That the knolling of the Aves after Service and certain other times, which hath been brought in and begun by the pretence of the Bishop of Rome's Pardon, henceforth be left and omitted, lest the people do hereafter trust to have Pardon for the saying of their Aves between the said knolling, as they have done in times past.

Suffrages of
jected.

Item, Where in times past, Men have used in divers places in their processions, to sing, Ora pro nobis, to so many Saints, that they had no time to sing the good suffrages following: as Parce nobis Domine, and Libera nos

Domine, it must be taught and preached, that better it were to omit Ora pro nobis, and to sing the other suffrages being most necessary and effectual. All which singular Injunctions, I minister unto you and to your Parishioners by the Kings Highness authority to be committed in this part, which I charge and command you by the same authority to observe and keep, upon pain of deprivation, sequestration of your fruits, or such other coercion as to the King or his Vicegerent for the time being shall be seen convenient.

By these Articles and Injunctions thus coming forth one after another, for the necessary instruction of the people, it may appear, how well the King then deserved the title of his supreme Government, given to him over the Church of England: By the which title and authority he did more good for the redressing and advancing of Christs Church and Religion here in England, in these three years, than the Pope, the great Vicar of Christs, with all his Bishops and Prelates had done the space of three hundred years before. Such a vigilant care was then in the King and in his Council, how by all ways and means to redress Religion, to reform Errors, to correct corrupt customs, to help ignorance, and to reduce the misleading of Christs Flock drowned in blind Popery, Superstition, Customs, and Idolatry, to some better form of more perfect reformation. Whereunto he provided not only these Articles, Precepts, and Injunctions above specified, to inform the rude people; but also procured the Bishops to help forward in the same cause of decayed Doctrine, with their diligent preaching and teaching of the people, according as ye heard before, how that in the year 1534 during the whole time of Parliament, there was appointed every Sunday a Bishop to Preach at Pauls Cross, against the Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome.

Amongst which Bishops, John Longland Bishop of Lincoln, the Kings Confessor, and a great persecutor of the poor Flock of Christs (as is before sufficiently recorded) made a Sermon before the King, upon Good-Friday, this present year 1538 at Greenwich, seriously and effectuously preaching on the Kings behalf, against the usurped Supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, the Contents of whose Sermon wholly to express were here too long and tedious. So much as may suffice for our purpose I thought should remain to the posterity, beginning at his Theme, which when he took in hand to intreat upon, written in the thirteenth Chapter to the Hebrews, as followeth.

The words of the Apostle are these, Habemus altare de quo edere non habent potestatem qui tabernaculo deserviunt. Quorum enim animalium inferius sanguis pro peccato in sancta per pontificem, horum corpora cremantur extra castra, Propter quod & Jesus extra portam passus est. Esecamus igitur ad eum extra castra improprium ejus portantes.

These are the words of the Apostle: Many things contained in few words, and the English thereof is this; 1538 We have an Altar, we have an Altar (saith the Apostle) an Altar, and a Sacrifice upon this Altar. And they that serve at the Tabernacle may not eat of this Altar, may not eat of this Sacrifice, that is offered upon this Altar. For the Apostle here (Per metonymiam) doth put the Altar for that that is Sacrifice upon the Altar. The blood of those Beasts that were slain for the Sacrifice was brought into the holy secret high place of the Temple where the Ark was, between the high Altar, (as we will say) and the veil by the Bishop, and there offered up for the sin of the people. The bodies of the Beasts that were burned without the Pavilions or Tents, for the which, Propter quod, for which, what? for the fulfilling of which mystery. Alfo to verifie and fulfil the figure, and that thing figured might be correspondent to the figure, Jesus suffered without the Gate, to sanctifie the people by his blood. Let us go out therefore and suffer with Christs, bearing his opprobries and rebukes. These be the words of the Apostle now taken.

A Sermon of Bishop Long-land before the King
An. 1538.
The Theme,
Heb. 13.

KING} I will by the help of our Lord God declare these words in order, even as they do stand. Here is an Altar, here is a Sacrifice, here is a Bishop which did offer this Sacrifice, here is a Tabernacle, a serving of the Tabernacle, the Blood of the Sacrifice which was offered by the Bishop for the sins of the people, in the most holy place of the Temple, and the bodies of the Beasts (whose blood was offered) were burned without the Tents. And this was done the Tenth day of the seventh Month. Ye hear now the words of the Apostle, wherein appeareth the manifest figure of the passion of our Saviour Jesus Christ, which we this day do honour.

Numb. 19. In these words the Apostle toucheth the figure of the Law, and bringeth it to a spiritual understanding; For it was commanded in the Law, in the Book of Numbers, the Tenth day of the seventh Month, in the Feast that was called the Feast of the propitiation of mercy of remission, or the Feast of Purgation, when the people were purged. At which time they should take a Colt and a Kid and slay them; whose blood the only Bishop should bring In sancta sanctorum, into the most holy, solemn, and secret place of the Temple, wherein the Bishop never came unless he brought with him Blood to offer in Sacrifice. Quia omnia fere in sanguine secundum legem mundabantur, & sine sanguinis effusione non fit remissio, saith the Apostle. Almost all things after the Law, or in the Law, were cleansed in Blood, and by Blood, and without the effusion of Blood was no remission: and in that place of the Temple called Sancta sanctorum, the Bishop prayed and offered for the People. The Flesh and Corps of the Sacrifice was burned without the Tents, without their pavilions. And it was not lawful to any that did serve the Tabernacle to eat of the Flesh of that Sacrifice.

1 Pet. 2. Here is a manifest figure (as I said) of the passion of our Saviour Christ. The Altar that was consecrated and hallowed in this solemnity of the Blood of the eternal Testament, was that holy Cross that Christ suffered on. Which as on this day he did consecrate, hallow, dignify, and dedicate, and did adorn and deck the same with the Members of his most precious Body, more gloriously than if it had been imbroided and inserted with precious stones. For as Gold which is the most precious Metal is made more precious when it is set with precious Stones, and is dignified therewith, whether it be Altar, Image, Crown, Ring or Ouch; so was the Altar the holy Cross, beautified, dignified, adorned, and made precious with the Members of that most precious Stone Christ, which is as Peter saith, Lapis vivus, ab hominibus reprobatus, a Deo electus, probatus angularis, & pretiosus. This Christ is (he saith) the lively stone, which men did reprove, which God did elect for the approved stone, for a Corner stone, for the chief stone in the building of his Church, for the stone that joyneth the Walls of the Church together, for the stone whereupon the Faith of Christ and his Church is builded. A precious stone, a stone of price, a stone of high value, far passing in the estimation of a good Christian Man all other precious stones in the world. This precious stone Christ, with the members of his most precious body, did deck, adorn, and make precious this Altar of the Cross, when his body was by the Jews, with violence, extremely strained upon the same, that all his bones (as reftified the Prophet) might be numbered. Upon this Altar was the great Sacrifice of the World offered, Christ himself. He was the Sacrifice, and he was the Priest. He offered up himself to God his Father, for the sin of Man; Obrulit semetipsum immaculatum Deo, ut sanctificaret iniquitatis, saith the Apostle. He offered himself a pure, clean, immaculate Host to God, to redeem the world, to sanctifie sinners, to justifie man.

2 Pet. 2. This Christ the Bishop of good things to come (as the Apostle witnesseth) entred once into the place called Sancta sanctorum, not only of the Temple, but In Sancta sanctorum, into the holy place of places, into Heaven. He entred with Sacrificed Blood like a Bishop. Not with the Blood of Goats or Calves, not with the Blood of Rams or Bulls, but with his own precious Blood. For if the Blood of Goats and Bulls, and the ashes of the burned Calves sprinkled abroad, were sufficient to the making clean of the flesh, how much more then is the Blood of Christ, who by the Holy Ghost did offer up himself to God, a most pure, most clean, and immaculate Sacrifice, able to purge, cleans, and make fair our Consciences from the works of Death, and to live in the living God?

This is our great Bishop, as the Apostle saith, Habemus pontificem magnum qui penetravit celos: Jesum Filium Dei. We have a great Bishop, which did penetrate the Heavens, whose name is Jesus the Son of God. This is our great Bishop, our high Bishop, our universal Bishop. This is the head Bishop of all Bishops and of all the world, named of God (as the Apostle saith) to be our great Bishop, properly called Summus Pontifex, the highest Bishop, the Bishop of Bishops. For this is he only that is, Summus, maximus, & universalis Pontifex.

The Bishop of Rome therefore ought herein to be abashed, astounded, and to abhor his own pride. For in this he outrageously doth offend God, and blasphemeth him, in that he presumeth to take this high Name from our Bishop Christ; in that he taketh away, as much as lieth in him, the glory of God, the majesty appertaining unto Christ; in that he taketh upon him these names appropriate only to Christ, Summus Pontifex, maximus Pontifex, universalis Pontifex, the highest Bishop, the greatest Bishop, the universal Bishop, the Bishop of all the world. I much marvel how he dare be so bold to usurp and take these great names upon him. Greater Blasphemy cannot be, than to take from God that that naturally be- longeth unto him; than to take from God his glory and honour; than to vindicate and take upon him such high names, as becometh no Christian Man to usurp. God said by his Prophet, Non dabo gloriam meam alteri, I will not give my glory away to any other, to any creature. He doth relieve the glory, that laud and honour that be- longeth only unto him, unto himself; no Man may at- tempt so far, no Man may take so much upon him.

1 Pet. 2. Peter, Peter, thou wast once Bishop of Rome, and the first Bishop of Rome; Didst thou ever take this Name up- on thee, Summus, Maximus, Universalis; No, no, no. And why? for the Holy Ghost was in thee. Thou wouldest take no more upon thee than God gave thee. Thou wast not desirous of worldly fame and glory. All that thou soughtest for, was for the glory of God; as all that will read thy Sermons, thy Epistles, and thy Life, shall soon per- ceive. Look a great number of Bishops that next follow- ed Peter in the same See; what were they? Holy Martyrs, Holy Livers, which never attempted thus far. Let the Bishop of Rome therefore acknowledge his great fault, his high folly, his unlawful usurpation, his unchristly pre- sumption, and humble himself to Christ and God his great Bishop. Would God he would reform himself, would God he would keep himself within that compass of his authority, and encroach no more upon other Men's jurisdictions, but diligently keep and overlook his own Diocels and be content with that; would God he would look upon his predecessor Saint Gregory in his Register, which was a Bishop of Rome, a holy Man. Let him learn there how he did rebuke John, that time the Bishop of Constantinople, for taking on him so highly, in such names; universal Bishop, highest Bishop, greatest Bishop; and how he proved it to be against the Law of God. He saith there in one place to this proud Bishop John, What answer shalt thou make in that strict examination at that last judgment to Christ the head of the Universal Church, that goest about to have subject unto thee all the Members of Christ, by taking on thee the name of Uni- versal Bishop? In another place again in the same Book 140. he saith unto him, who art thou that dost presume to usurp a new name upon thee of Universal Bishop, con- trary to the Statutes of the Gospel and Decrees?

God forbid that ever this Blasphemy should come in the hearts of Christian people. In the which the honour of all Priesthood is taken away, when a Man shall rashly and arrogantly take that name upon him. Let this Bi- shop of Rome therefore humble himself unto our great Uni- versal Bishop Christ, humble himself under the mighty hand of God, and know what the Apostle doth write of the honour and power of this Christ our great high Bishop. He is (he saith) Pontifex misericors, fidelis, potens, magnus, humilis, penetrans celum, compatiens infirmi- tatibus nostris, offerens dona & sacrificia pro peccatis nostris, condolens iis qui ignorant & errant: Qui potest saluum facere a morte, offerens preces & supplicationes Ecce cum clamore valido & lacrymis, & exauditus est pro reverentia sua: Pontifex appellatus a Deo: Pontifex sanctus, innocens, impollutus, segregatus a peccatoribus, excelsus calis: Non habens necessitatem (quemadmodum alii) prius pro suis delictis hostias offerre, deinde pro populo: Pontifex sedens in dextris Dei interpellans pro nobis, amundans conscientias nostras ab operibus mortuis, intrantem Sancta sanctorum, per proprium sanguinem. Hic est Pontifex confestim nostrum.

Let earthly Bishops learn of this heavenly Bishop Christ: some of these properties are appropriate and belong only to God, and not to Man. In some we ought to follow him, in some we cannot, nor ought to do. This our high and great Bishop is Misericors (saith the Apostle) merciful. A merciful Bishop, ready to forgive, ready to remit those that have offended him. He is not cruel, nor vengeable, but full of pity, full of mercy. And in this we ought to follow him.

Misericors.

Potens.

He is Potens potent, a mighty Bishop, mighty and full of power. We be but weak and feeble Bishops, not able to do any thing, but by his permission and help. He is able to make sick, to make whole, to make rich, to make poor, to set up, to put down. Potens, a mighty Bishop, mighty and able to remit sin, to forgive, to save both body and soul from damnation. Potens, a mighty Bishop, and full of power. No power in this world but of him: Omnis potestas a Domino Deo est: All power is of him. And as he witnesseth, Data est mihi omnis potestas in Cælo & in Terra: All power is given unto me in Heaven and in Earth. Potens salvare a morte: He can save the body and save the soul. He can deliver the one and deliver the other from the everlasting death. Who can forgive sin but he? Quis potest dimittere peccatum nisi solus Deus? Est potens: He is a mighty Bishop: Of him and by him Emperors, Kings, Magistrates, and Potestates, Bishops, Priests, with all other that have power, have their power and authority. Who is able to turn the Wind, to make the Wind blow or cease, but he? Who is able to say and prove, I will now have it Rain, now clear? The Sun to shine, the Water to flow, to ebb, with such other, but only he? This is our mighty Bishop.

Potens potent, a mighty Bishop, mighty and full of power. We be but weak and feeble Bishops, not able to do any thing, but by his permission and help. He is able to make sick, to make whole, to make rich, to make poor, to set up, to put down. Potens, a mighty Bishop, mighty and able to remit sin, to forgive, to save both body and soul from damnation. Potens, a mighty Bishop, and full of power. Potens potent, yea, Omnipotens, Almighty. He can do all: nothing is to him impossible. Ipse dixit, & facta sunt omnia. Mandavit, & creata sunt universa. Potens ergo est. He is a mighty Bishop. We are not so. Fidelis Pontifex. He is a faithful Bishop: faithful. He is a faithful Bishop to God, referring all lauds, all honour and glory to his Father. In all things that he did, miracles or other, he took never the more upon himself. He was also a faithful Bishop to the world: for he did all that belonged to the Office of a good Bishop. The very Office of a Bishop is, Prædicare, orare & sacrificare, sive offerre. To preach, to pray, to do sacrifice, or to offer. He preached to his people: he taught the world most wholesome Doctrine, whereby he called the people to God, he converted sinners, he called them to Penance. He made them weep and lament their sins, they followed his person, they followed his word, they followed his example. They came out of all the Coasts to see him, to hear him, to learn of him. They forsook Meat and Drink, House and Home, and followed him, wheresoever he went, as well in Wildernesses as elsewhere. Inasmuch that after they had followed him three days, he being moved with pity, lest they should perish for lack of Food, being in Wilderness far from succour, he fed them twice miraculously. Once in the Desert with five loaves and two fishes he fed five thousand men, besides women and children, and there were left twelve Baskets, twelve Maunds full of brokelets and offalls at that meal. At another time he fed in the Wilderness to the number of four thousand men, besides women and children, with seven loaves, and a few little fishes, and there was left of fragments, seven Maunds full.

The second Office of a Bishop he fulfilled also, for he prayed. He was most devout in Prayer, so to teach all Bishops and Preachers not to presume in their wit or learning, neither in their capacity, memory, fair tongue or utterance; but that the Preacher do studiously apply his Book with all diligence to study, how to speak, what to speak, afore whom he shall speak, and to shape his Sermon after the audience. The Preacher ought also besides his study and preaching to pray. For by devout Prayer he shall attain percale as much or more, as by study or learning. For without Prayer the words will little prevail. Look in Christ his Life, and thou shalt find, that in every thing he went about, he prayed, to shew the valiancy, the virtue and strength of Prayer; to shew our necessities, our weakness and feebleness of nature. He prayed for his people (as Luke witnesseth) the space of one whole night. And what a marvelous devout Prayer made he for his people in the Mount the night afore his Passion, when the Chalice of death was represented unto him? When he sweat water and blood? When he cried thrice, Transat a me Calix iste, Let this Chalice, let this passion and blood, let the virtue thereof pass from me unto all mankind. Let every Man have the virtue and merit thereof: Let it work in all folks, let every faithful Man and Woman be, partaker thereof: let it not be lost, but work to the worlds end. This was a marvelous devout merciful Prayer. And again, he suffering and hanging on the Cross, offered up for his people, Preces & supplicationes cum clamore valido & lacrymis. He offered up his prayers and supplications with a huge cry, with a piteous voice, with a lamentable and deadly shriek, and with weeping tears to God his Father: he hanging on the Cross, even when the Spirit should depart the Body, not then forgetting his people at the hour when all the people forgetteth both the world and themselves. Which cry was so huge and great, so marvelous, and of that effect that the Heavens trembled thereat, the Angels mourned for pity, the Sun lost his light, the Veil in the Temple rived in two, the Earth quaked, the Stones rent asunder and brake in Cobbles, the Graves opened, the Dead bodies rose to life, and appeared in the City. Centurio, and those that kept Christ to see the execution done, cried, Vere, Filius Dei erat iste: This was the undoubted Son of God. His prayer and weeping tears were so pleasant to the Father that he was heard: Exauditus est pro reverentia sua. He was heard, and why? For it was so entire, so devout, so reverently done, in such a manner and fashion, with such a zeal grounded upon such a charity, suffering for our guilt, and not for his own. And for that he did the very Office of a Bishop, so intirely to pray, and so reverently to offer up himself in Sacrifice for his people, he was heard, he was heard, his Prayer was heard of God. And that is the third property of a good Bishop to offer Sacrifice for his people. Every Bishop, every Bishop, for his Diocessans and for the whole Universal Church. In these three we ought as much as we may to follow Christ.

Thus this Christ was and is Pontifex fidelis, a faithful Bishop. Faithful: faithful in his Word, true in his Promise, deceiving no Man, but profiting all. In all that he did or spake, or sought nothing his own glory, but the glory of God: teaching thereby all Bishops of the World in all that they go about, to do it unto the praise and glory of God. And herein we ought also to follow him.

Magnus Pontifex, he is the great Bishop, the high Bishop, the supreme Bishop, the universal Bishop over all the World. No great Bishop but he. None high, none Supreme nor Universal Bishop but he.

And herein the Bishop of Rome outrageously usurpeth upon God, as he doth upon the World, to take the honour and name (only to God appropriate) to himself, and doth grievously blasphemous and offend God therein. Greater blasphemy cannot be, than to ascribe to God that that no ways belongeth unto him, or to take from God, that that is to him appropriate. It is meet therefore he do betimes, and in season leave his unjust incroachments both against his Lord God, and also against the World, lest he do provoke God to pour out all his vials of wrath upon him: the Vae, I mean the maledictions and vengeance that Isaiah speaketh of in the Apocaply. I would advise him to cease the injuries which he hath, and daily doth against thee Christ our great high Universal Bishop, lest thou excommunicate and strike him, lest thou shew thy wrath and judgment against him, and utterly extinct his pride, and ambitious pretended authority. For thou wilt be known, thou wilt be known to be God. And thou art and wilt be our great Universal Apoc. 9.

Isa.

KING {al and Supreme Bishop, whatsoever the Bishop of Rome shall attempt to the contrary; and thou wilt punish his worldly arrogance, and strike when thou seest thy time. And though it be long ere thou strike, yet let him beware, for strike thou wilt if thou be utterly provoked, and when thou dost strike, thy stroke is great, thy stroke is dreadful and sore. It vanquisheth the Body, it slayeth the Soul, it dameth both. Beware therefore, thou Bishop of Rome, and be content with thine own Diocess, with thine own charge, as other Bishops are with theirs: for further than thine own Diocess thy jurisdiction doth not stretch.

A marvelous blindness in thee therefore, to take upon thee to answer for all the World, and art not able to answer our great Bishop Christ for thy self at the dreadful day of Judgment, when he shall ask but these few questions of thee; Quomodo intrasti? Quomodo existi? Quomodo vivisti? Quomodo parasti? Qua & qualia exempla dedisti? Quid ad meam gloriam fecisti? & hujusmodi. How didst thou enter into the Bishoprick? By me, or by the world? unlawfully, or lawfully? By Symony or freely? By labour, by passion, or called of God? How didst thou rule thy Cure, thy Diocess? Didst thou pray for thy people? Didst thou preach me to thy Diocessans? Didst thou give them ghostly and bodily food? Didst thou minister spiritual and ghostly selves (the Sacraments I mean) to heal the Sores of their souls? How didst thou live? Didst thou cast away the care, the glory and pomp of the World? Didst thou follow me in humility, in charity, in compassion, in poverty, in cleanness, and in chaste living?

How didst thou govern thy Diocessans? Didst thou not make of all things that thou didst meddle with, a Money matter, in selling that which was not in thee to sell nor give, which thou callest thy Pardons, thy Commiſſions, thy Brevies, thy Delegates, Recessations, Exemptions, Appellations, Bulls, and Dispensations? Didst not thou under these pretences, and like other doings, deceive the world? What answer shalt thou make to this at that day, to our and thy great Bishop Christ, when he shall visit thee and all thy Diocess, me and all my Diocess; yea, when he shall visit all the World? What answer shalt thou then make? I think verily thou shalt then have enough to do, yea, and more than thou canst wind thy self out of to make answer for thy self, for thine own Diocess, and for thine own Diocessans, though thou usurp not upon other Mens as thou dost. The Apostle writeth of Christ humbly, and calleth him Magnum Pontificem, the Great Bishop. And he of Rome is not with this word contented, but will have a higher word for himself in the superlative Degree, Maximum Pontificem. The greatest Bishop. Oh, where is the humbleness and meekness that should be in him? Alas, he that taketh on him to teach all the World, how can he for shame suffer for blasphemous words to pass in his name, to his great shame and rebuke; to the great danger of his soul, and to the perilous ensample unto other? Oh, he upon pride! It is a common Proverb, Pride will have a fall.

Our Bishop Christ was humilis, meek, lowly, and humble in heart. He rode not upon any Palfrey or courageous Horse, but upon an Ass, and that but once. He never was born pompously abroad in a Chair upon Mens shoulders. He never proffered his Foot to any body to Kiss. We read that he washed the feet of his Disciples and wiped them. We read that Mary Magdalen proffered to have kissed his feet, but he did prohibit her, saying, Noli me tangere; Touch me not. He would not suffer the Woman then to touch him. He never had Guard to defend him. He never followed the pomp of the world. He did not go upon the ground with his bare Feet. What shall I say? He gave ensamples enough to the Bishop of Rome, to me, and all other Bishops, to be meek and humble: he to know himself, and we our selves, as if he and we diligently look in Scripture, we shall find. And herein in meekness we are bound to follow him.

Compatiens infirmitates. This Bishop Christ, had compassion of our infirmities; of our frailties. It is impossible for a Man to know the afflictions of a miserable person, that never suffered himself affliction, that never had experience of pains, that never felt what pain meant. But this Bishop Christ, had experience of our nature, how weak, how feeble the nature of Man is, how weak, of himself to do any good work without the help of God, how feeble to resist temptations. He suffered and felt the infirmities and pains of this natural body. He hath therefore compassion upon Man, when he doth see him fall. He sorroweth his ruine, teaching Bishops in especial afore all other, to have compassion and pity upon the sinner, to help him spiritually, to comfort him ghostly, to help him to arise from sin, to allure him to Penance, to draw him to Vertue, to make him know God, to fear his Justice, to love his Laws, and thus to seek all the ways that he and we can, to save the sinners soul, for whom he shall make answer to God for his own Diocessans; Soul for Soul, Blood for Blood, Pain for Pain, Hell for Hell, Damnation for Damnation. For which which soul, our great Bishop Christ (as the Apostle doth witness) did offer Gifts and Sacrifice himself, having compassion of them that by ignorance and by error did sin and offend God. Even when he was in his greatest agony upon the Cross, he cried to his Father; Forgive them Father, forgive them, they know not what they do, they are ignorant people, they know not what is what, or what danger they run into by thus intreating me. They know not their offences, forgive them Father, forgive them. In this compassion we ought also to follow our great Bishop Christ.

It followeth in the former Letter, Esse Pontifex appellatus a Deo. He is a Bishop, and so named of God: he is the very Bishop. He offered up the very Sacrifice, the Sacrifice of his own most blessed Body and Blood, wherewith the sin of the World was put away. Every Bishop of the World is not named a Bishop by God. For some come into that Office not by the Holy Ghost, nor elect of God (as John faith) not entering in voie ovium per osium, sed ascendens alvande. Some there are that enter into the fold of the Sheep of God not by the door. Some there be that enter in, having charge and cure of soul, not by God, but by worldly means, by worldly labour, by importune suites and intercessions of friends, or by their own unlawful labour, by symony, and such other ways. Such are named Bishops by God. Such enter not by the door, not by him that faith, Ego sum osium, Ego sum via, veritas & vita, I am the door, I am the way, I am the life, I am the Truth, I am Pastor Bonus, the very true and good Bishop that entered by God. And all that enter otherwise than by God, Christ calleth them Fures & Latrones, Thieves, Spoyleers, Ravens, Devourers, and Deceivers of the Sheep. Their living shall declare the same. For such as so wilfully do enter, do study their own profits and commodities. Such receive the fruits, and do nothing for them, such suffer their sheep to perish for lack of bodily and ghostly food and sustenance, for lack of preaching, for lack of giving good counsel, for lack of good living, for lack of good ensample. And such for the most part, live naughtily, carnally, fleshly, viciously, pompously, worldly, and not Bishoply nor Priestly. For they came not in by God; nor by grace. Christ faith, Qui intrat per me salvabitur, & ingredietur, & egredietur, & pasqua inveniet. He that entereth by me shall be saved. Et ingredietur, & egredietur. And he shall go in, and he shall go out. What is that to say, He shall go in, and he shall go out? I think and suppose he meaneth thereby going in, that he shall have grace to enter studiously into the holy Scripture, daily and nightly to meditate, to study, and to profit in the Laws of God. Et egredietur. And he shall explain and truly interpret and publish it unto the people. Et pasqua inveniet. And he shall find there plenty of spiritual food for himself and for his people, to edify their souls, to instruct and call them to the knowledge of God, to feed them plentifully, that they shall not lack necessities to their souls. Let us therefore so live, that we may be called Pontifices appellati a Deo.

This our great Bishop Christ is also Pontifex sanctus, innocens, impollutus, segregatus a peccatoribus, excelsior cælis, sedens a dextris Dei, emundatus conscientiae nostrae a peccatis, intrans sancta sanctorum per proprium sanguinem. He is sanctus, a holy Bishop, and willesh us to be holy in our conversation, applying our selves unto godliness, to the service of God, to live like Bishops, like Priests, pure, clean, chaste, devout, studious, faithfully labouring.

ing in his Word, praying, doing Sacrifice, and ever to be godly and virtuously occupied.

Innocent. He is Innocent, an Innocent. He never sinned, he never offended in word, thought, nor deed. Innocent, annoying no creature, profiting all folks, meekly suffering aduities, opprobries, rages, rebukes, and reproaches, without grudge or contradiction. Innocent & simplex, simplex sine plica. An innocent, without plet or wrinkle, without error or doubleness, without hypocrite or dissimulation, without flattering or glofing, without fraud or deceit; not serving the Body nor the World, but God. In this we ought also to follow our heavenly Bishop.

Impollutus. He was undefiled. He lived clean without spot or blot, without wem or stain. No immunditia in him, no uncleanness nor filthiness; but all pure and clean, chaste and immaculate, all bright and shining in grace and godliness; Infomuch that he was segregatus a peccatoribus, clean segrege from all kind of uncleannels, from all manner of sins, and from all sinners. Segrege from them, not from their company; for as Matthew writeth, Publicans and Sinners came and eat and drank with him and his Disciples in the Houle of Levi. And he also came as a Physician to heal the sinner. And yet he was segrege from them, Quantum ad participationem eam eis in peccato; as touching their ill livings, not being participant with them in sin, but came only to heal them, and to rid them from sin and fore of the foul. He entred the Heavens, not with the blood of Kid nor Goat, but with his own proper blood. For which, and for holiness and perfectness, Excelsior calis factus est. He is extolled and exalted above all Angels and beatitudes; above all the Heavens, sitting on the right hand of the Father. Whom all the heavenly Creatures do worship, honour, and do reverence unto. Where he prayeth for his people, and is Mediator in his manhood to his Father for us.

Manib. 9. This our Bishop purgeth our conscience (as witnesseth the Apostle) he cleanseth our Souls, he maketh us inwardly beautiful and fair. The Bishop of Rome lacketh many of these notable virtues. He hath few or none of these properties, few or none of these qualities. He is (as we all are sinners) a sinner. To whom this word Magnus, great, is not convenient, nor can be in him any ways verified. For he cannot forgive sin as our Bishop doth, nor justice as he doth, neither enter in sancta sanctorum, with his own blood, as he did. How can he then be called a great Bishop, that is, (as we be all sinners) a sinner, a breaker of the Laws of God, and daily doth, or may fall and sin? And for that cause the Law commanded that every Bishop and Priest should first offer Holts and Sacrifice for his own sins, and afterward for the sins of the people. How can he therefore be called a great Bishop or Priest?

Magni. Our Bishop we speak of is the very great Bishop. No dole, no fraud, no guile was ever found in his mouth. And when the Prince of the World, the Devil, came to him, he could find no point of sin in him. Wherefore Gabriel the Archangel shewing his Nativity unto Mary his Mother, said, Hic erit magnus, & Filius Altissimi vocabitur. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of God. And again it is written of him, Propheta magnus surrexit inter nos. A great Prophet is risen among us. Sin maketh a Man small and little; little in reputation before God and Man. Virtue maketh Man great and of high reputation. Shew me one place in Scripture where you have read, that a sinner was called great; I trow it shall not be found. Will you hear who were called great in Virtue; It is written of Isaac, Quod proficiebat, & factus est magnus valde. He prouted greatly in Virtue, and was made great, great in reputation of the world. Moses was called Magnus, Great for his Virtue. Abraham and John Baptist likewise. Now Jesus our Bishop, is called Magnus Episcopus, magnus Sacerdos. And after him never Bishop called Magnus in all Scripture, neither in the reputation of Man, unless it be in comparison one of another (and so Saints and holy lives are called great in respect of sinners, or other mean lives) But where Christ our Bishop cometh, there he, not in comparison of other, but simpliciter, by his own magnitude and greatness, and of himself, ever was and is great, of whom it is written, A summo calo egressus ejus; & accursus ejus usque ad summum ejus. And as the Apostle KING also proveth in many places by expres word. But now there is no Bishop or Priest in this world that may worthily of himself be called great, nor ought to take this name Magnus upon him. 1 Hm. 8.

This is he therefore of whom it is written, Magnus Sacerdos ex fratribus suis. The great Bishop above all other. And as he is called, and in very deed is, Pastor pauperum, Pontifex pontificum, Propeta prophetarum, Sanctus sanctorum, Dominus dominantium, Rex regum; ita & Magnus magnorum est. And as he is called the Herdman of Herdmen, the Bishop of Bishops, the Prophet of Prophets, the Holy of Holies, the Lord of Lords, the King of Kings; even so he is called, and verily is Episcopus magnus. Therefore the Prophet did add; Magnus Sacerdos ex fratribus suis. The great Bishop or Priest. Great of himself, great in virtue and power: great of himself, and great in comparison afore all other. And therefore the Apostle said, Habemus Pontificem magnum, qui penetravit calos, Jesum Filium Dei; We have a great Bishop which did penetrate the Heavens, Jesus the Son of God.

Here may ye now see, how the Bishop of Rome doth wrongfully incoach upon our great Bishop, Jesus Christ, to take from him not only this name Magnus; and is not with that name yet contented, but addeth more, viz. Maximus, Summus, Sanctissimus, Beatissimus, Universalis, and such other; The Greatest, the Highest, the Holiest, the Blessedst and Universal, in the superlative Degree, and yet there is no great Bishop but Christ only, no supreme Bishop but he only, none Holy, none Blessed, none Universal Bishop but only he. The Bishop of Rome and all other Bishops are but Underlings and unworthy Suffragans unto this Bishop Christ.

This our Christ (as witnesseth the Apostle) is Pontifex nostrae confessionis. The Bishop whom we do confesse to be our Great Bishop, our High Bishop, our Supreme Bishop, our Holy Bishop, Blessed and Universal Bishop. Which names are reserved only unto Christ, and to no Earthly Bishop; Not to the Bishop of Rome, nor to the Bishop of Jerusalem, nor to the Bishop of Antioch, nor of Constantinople, nor to any other Bishop. No Earthly Bishop may presume to take upon him the high and holy Names, only to God appropriate. The Pope Incoacheth upon Christ.

God of thy goodness thou mayest, and I trust wilt once make this Vain-glorious Bishop of Rome first to know and acknowledge thy Son Christ to be the only Supreme and Universal Bishop of the World. Secondly to know himself, his weakness, his frailty, and his presumption; To know his Office and bounden duty unto thee: To know his own Diocels, and to usurp no further: Thirdly, to have a low, humble, meek heart and stomach, to fear thee God, and thy judgments, to know ledge his own faults and usurpations, and to redress the same.

Now to return unto our matter, it followeth in the Letter first taken; De quo edere non habent potestatem qui Tabernaculo deservunt, &c. And thus much out of John Longlands Sermon against the Pope.

You heard before by the Kings Injunctions above expressed, and directed out Anno 1538, how all such Images and Pictures which were abused with Pilgrimage or offerings of any Idolatry were abolished: By virtue of which Injunctions, divers Idols, and specially the most notable Stocks of Idolatry, were taken down the same year, 1538 as the Images of Walsingham, Ipswich, Worcester, the Lady of Willesden, Thomas Becket, with many more, having Engines to make their eyes to open and roll about, and other parts of their body to stir, and many other false juggings, as the blood of Hayles, and such like, wherewith the simple People a long time had been deceived. All which were eiped out, and destroyed. Ann. 1538

Among divers other of these foul Idols, there went also in the same reckoning a certain old Idolatrous Image in Wales, named Darvel Gathern; which in the Month of May, in the year above mentioned, was brought up to London, and burned in Smithfield. With the which Idol also was burnt the same time and hanged for Treason, Frier Forrest, of whom some mention was partly touched before in the Story of Cardinal Wolfe. The Idol of Darvel Gathern in Wales.

Mat. 15.

This Forrest was an observant Frier, and had secretly in Confessions declared to many of the Kings Subjects that the King was not supreme Head; and being thereof accused and apprehended, he was examined how he could say that the King was not supreme Head of the Church, when he himself had sworn to the contrary? He answered, That he took his Oath with his outward man, but his inward man never consented therunto. And being further accused of divers damnable Articles, and thereupon convicted, he gladly submitted himself to abide the punishment of the Church. Upon this submission, having more liberty than before he had to talk with whom he would, he became as far from his submission as ever he was. And when his Abjuration was sent him to read, he utterly refused it, and obstinately persevered in his Errors: wherefore he was justly condemned, after hanged in Smithfield in Chains upon a Gallows quick, by the middle and armoles, and fire was made under him, and so was he consumed and burnt to death.

In the place of Execution, there was a Scaffold prepared for the Kings most honourable Council, and the Nobles of the Realm to sit upon, to grant him Pardon, if he had any spark of Repentance in him. There was also a Pulpit prepared, where the right reverend Father, Hugh Laitman, Bishop of Worcester declared his Errors, and manifestly confuted them by the Scripture, with many godly Exhortations to move him to Repentance. But he was so forewarned, that he neither would hear, neither speak. A little before, the foresaid Image, called Darvill Gatheren, coming out of Wales, was brought to the Gallows, and there also with the foresaid Frier, as is said, was set on fire: whom the Welshmen much worshipped, and had a Prophecie amongst them, That this Image should set a whole Forrest on fire. Which Prophecie took effect; for he set this Frier Forrest on fire, and consumed him to nothing. The Frier, when he saw the fire come, and that present death was at hand, he caught hold upon the Ladder, and would not let it go, but so unpatiently took his death, as never any man that put his trust in God, at any time so ungodly or unquietly ended his life.

In the month of October and November the same year, shortly after the overthrow of these Images and Pilgrimages, followed also the ruine of the Abbeys and religious Houses, which by the special motion of the Lord Cromwell (or rather and principally, by the singular blessing of Almighty God) were suppressed, being given a little before by Act of Parliament into the Kings hand; whereupon not only the Houses were rased, but their Possessions also disparted among the Nobility in such sort, as all Friers, Monks, Chanons, Nuns, and other Sects of Religion were then so rooted out of this Realm from the very foundation, that there seemeth, by Gods Grace, no possibility hereafter left for the Generation of those strange weeds to grow here any more, according to the true Verdict of our Lord and Saviour Christ in his Gospel, saying, Every Plantation being not planted of my Father, shall be plucked up by the roots, &c.

The History of the worthy Martyr of God John Lambert, otherwise named Nicolson, with his Troubles, Examinations and Answers, as well before the Archbishop of Canterbury, Warham, and other Bishops: as also before King Henry the Eighth, by whom at length he was condemned to death, and burned in Smithfield, in Anno 1538.

Immediately upon the ruine and destruction of the Monasteries, the same year, and in the month of November, followed the trouble and condemnation of John Lambert, the faithful Servant of Jesus Christ, and Martyr of blessed Memory. This Lambert being born and brought up in Norfolk, was first converted by Bilney, and studied in the University of Cambridge. Where after that he had sufficiently profited both in Latin and Greek, and had translated out of both Tongues sundry things into the English-Tongue, being informed at last by violence of the time, he departed from thence to the parts beyond the Seas, to Tindall and Friib, and there remained the space of a year and more, being Preacher and Chaplain to the English-House at Antwerp, till he was disturbed by Sir Thomas More, and by the Accusation of one Barlow, was carried from Antwerp to London: where he was brought to Examination first at Lambeth, then at the Bishops Houle at Oxford, before Warham the Archbishop of Canterbury, and other Adversaries, having five and forty Articles minilisted against him, whereunto he rendered Answer again by writing. The which Answers forasmuch as they contain great learning, and may give some light to the better understanding of the common causes of Religion now in controversy, I thought here to exemplifie the same, as they came right happily to our hands. The Copy both of the Articles, and also of his Answers, here in order followeth.

Articles to the number of five and forty laid to Lambert.

¶ The Answer of John Lambert to the first Article.

UNTO your first demand, wherein you do ask whether I was suspect of infamed of Heresie? I answer, That I am not certain what all persons at all seasons have deemed or suspected of me, peradventure some better, some worse, like as that opinion of the people was never one, but thought diversly of all the famous Prophets, and of the Apostles, yea, and of Christ himself: as appeareth in Saint John, how when he came into Jerusalem in the Feast called Scenopogia, anon there arose upon him a great noise, some saying that he was a very good man, other said nay, and called him a Seducer, because he led the people from the right ways of Moses Law into Error. Seeing therefore that all men could not say well by Christ, which is the Author of Verity and Truth, yea the very Truth it self, and likewise of his best Servants: what should I need to regard, if at some time, some person for a like cause should suspect of me amiss, and evil report of me. Saying, moreover it is said in the Gospel, Vos vobis cum laudaverint vos omnes homines, &c. Was he to you when all men speak well of you: for so did their Fathers to the false Prophets. If therefore at any season such infamy was put upon me, I am glad that I have so little regarded the same, that now I have forgotten it. And though I did remember any such, yet were I more than twice a fool to shew you thereof: for it is written in your own Law, Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum, no man is bound to bewray himself. But this I censure you, I was never so charged with suspicion or infamy of this crime, that I was therefore at any time convicted and reproved afore any Judge afore that I was troubled for these causes, for which I was at the first put into your hands: and of them, seeing

KING feeling you could not prove me faulty, I wonder why you would never yet pronounce me quit and innocent, according as I have even lowly desired of you, and required full instantly the same. But letting those things pass, you have imagined new matters to charge me with, wherein I think certainly, that you could no more have proved me culpable, than you did in the first; that is to wit, no whit culpable in neither, had it not been, that by long imprisonment you enforced me to tell what I thought in them, which I have and will freely do; and that indifferently considered, I suppose shall not deserve any fore punishment, unless you will beard the truth, wherein I hope it shall not disagree.

Answer to the second Article. To your second demand, where you do inquire whether ever I had any of Luthers Books, and namely, since they were condemned, and how long I kept them, and whether ever I have spent any study in them? I say that indeed I have had of them, and that both before they were condemned and also since, but I never will, ne can tell you, how long I kept them; but truth it is, that I have studied upon them, and I thank God that ever I did: for by them hath God shewed unto me, and also to a huge multitude of other, such light, as the deceiverable darkness of them (I beseech God amend it) that name themselves, but amils, to be the holy Church, cannot abide. And that appeareth evidently, for they dare not stand to any trial. He coveteth above all things, as all his Adversaries do well know, that all his writings, and the writings of all his Adversaries, might be translated into all Languages, to the intent that all people might see and know, what is said of every part, whereby men should the better judge what the truth is. And in this re thinketh he requirerh nothing but equity; for the Law would have no man condemned, ne justified, until his cause were heard and known.

But the contrary part, I mean our over-rich Prelacy, which is so drowned in voluptuous living that they cannot attend to study Gods Scripture, ne preach the same, which should be the principal part of their Office, abhor this fashion (albeit it is right indifferent and full equity) no less than they do abhor death. And no marvel, for doubtless, if it so could be obtained, that the Writings of all Parties might openly be seen and conferred, we should soon see their slight dealing and facing Doctrine, with all other cloaked abusion, lightly overthrown, as appeareth well in Almaine: for there be the Books of every Party seen openly, and translated in the Vulgar Language, that all people may see and read upon them; and so upon the light of the Books, they lightly follow the true light of Gods Word, refusing the horror of darkness and false Doctrine, whereby before they have been seduced from the right teaching and way shewed in the Bible. And this is done, not of an hundred, ne of a thousand, but generally of whole Cities and Countries, both high and low, few or none except.

But our Prelates seeing this, and that their dealing should, if this light were set up, soon be detect and discovered, have sent out Commandments, that if any person should adventure to keep any such Books, they shall be in so doing Excommunicate from God, and all his Saints, and cursed as black a Pitch, whether the Books be in Latin, English, French, Dutch, or any other Tongue; as indeed men seeing the fruit contained in them have set them forth in all Languages. But this ought not Christian men to think any novelty; for so did their Forefathers the Prelates in Christs time, and after to the Apostles; yea, and if it were well tried, I think it should be soon found out, that they have so dealt ever since unto this day. For when Christ went about preaching, the Scribes and Pharisees, which were Bishops then and Prelates, gave a general Commandment, That whosoever confessed him to be Christ, should be accursed, and put out of the Synagogue, that we call the Church, and so they were.

Look in the Acts of the Apostles; and you shall find how they were in like manner served; yea, look in the Old Testament, and you shall find (as I remember) how they procured of one that was a Temporal Ruler at that season, to have the Prophecie of Jeremy (for he of all other is most vehement against the diminution of Priests) to be burned: why then should we chide them, or their works (unless we knew a better cause why) whom our Prelates reject and cast away, seeing they render no reasonable cause of their enterprise; but presuming of their power, without any due authority that I can find, granted unto them so to do, will; because they so command, so have all done, according to the tyrannical saying, as Ixtrow, of Sardanapalus, Sic volo, sic jubeo, stat pro ratione voluntas; That is to say, So will I, so do I command, and that my will for reason stand.

But I would to God that such knew what spirit they have in them; for if they had indeed the Spirit which they claim and pretend to have, I mean the Spirit of Christ, I dare say it should soon alter thee from such haughty Language and doting, and cause them to turn a new leaf; for that Spirit is full of softness and lenity, lowliness and humility, patience and temperancy, void of wilfulness and tyranny, yea, it should cause them not to prevent, but easily to follow the Counsel and Doctrine of Christs Apostles and holy Saints that be their Interpreters. As Saint Paul, which writing unto the Thessalonians would have them all to prove all things; and to retain or hold that only which is good, refraining from all that hath semblance of evil. And Saint John would have Christian people to try the Spirits of them that should speak, whether they were of God or no. Also he writing in another Epistle unto a Noble woman, and unto her Children, saith, If any person shall come unto you, bringing with them the Doctrine that is not of Christ, receive him not into your house, ne make him any cheer. So that in this he would have Women to know the Doctrine of Christ, and to love that, refusing to give Credence unto foreign Teaching, not favouring the same.

In the first Epistle also to the Corinthians, Saint Paul writing in general to all the Inhabitants of that City, saith, Brethren, be ye not Children in wit and understanding, but as concerning maliciousness, be you Children. In wit I would have you perfect; and why? Verily for none other cause, but that we should (as he writeth unto the Hebrews) have discretion to judge the good from ill, and the ill from the good, and so to be like men differing from beasts, according unto the saying of the Prophet, See that ye be not like unto an Horse or a Mule which lack understanding. And we should pray with him in another Psalm, O Lord teach me the way that I should walk in, for I lift up my Soul unto thee.

Saint Chrysostome according unto this, in a certain Book of his Commentaries upon Matthew, the Book is called Jesus Opus imperfectum, writeth after this manner, so near as my remembrance doth serve, and certain I am that I shall not mis-report him, and in that I will be tried whensoever it shall please you to bring the Book. The Priests that were Pharisees in the time (saith he) of Christ, made an Ordinance, That whosoever should acknowledge Jesus to be Christ, should be accursed and Excommunicate. If then the Pharisees or Priests that now do occupy their rooms should make a like Ordinance, because they would not have Christs Doctrine to be professed for hindering of their lucre, should we therefore give in all points credence unto them, and leave off to seek after the knowledge of Christs Doctrine? Nay truly, Why (quoth he) shall we not be excused herein by ignorance, seeing we be forewarned by the Rulers to have knowledge? He answereth, No verily; for if (saith he) when thou desirest to buy Cloth, thou wilt not be content to see one Merchant; Ware, but go from the first to the second, from the second to the third, and so further, to know where is the best Cloth and best cheap; thou using such careful diligence for a Temporal profit, art well worthy great reproach, that wilt be more remiss and negligent for thy Souls health. Seek therefore about from one Doctor or Teacher unto another, that thou mayst know who doth most duly and truly teach Christ, and him follow, according to the saying of the Apostle, Prove all, and hold the good; and as it is said in the Gospel, that thou mayst know Qui sunt probati numismatici, & qui non; that is to wit, know who be true or lawfull Changers or Coiners; and who be not.

He also addeth another similitude or parable. When thou goest (quoth he) a journey, not knowing perfectly the way, thou wilt, lest thou shouldst fail of the right way, enquire of one man and after of another, and if thou shouldst chance to go somewhat wide, yet thou wilt

The same Author also, in an Epistle which you shall find in a work called Esquima Chrysolami, sheweth, as I remember, how certain men deemed ill of him, because he did study Origens Work, which afore was condemned for an Heretick: But he maketh an Apology to the same, shewing, that Christian men ought not to be reprehended for so doing. In which Apology he bringeth for his defence the saying of Paul above rehearsed, Prove all things; &c. Likewise did St. Hierome, I wrote not well in what place of his Works, but you shall find it in a Treatise called Unio disidentium, where he entreateth De mandatis hominum. When it was objected against him that he retained by him the Works of Eusebius and of Origen, studying upon them, he bringeth for him, that it was so lawfull, the said place of the Apostle, making therewith an answer worthy to be greatly noted.

The same is also reported in the Book called Ecclesiastica Historia, or else Historia Tripartita, I wrote not now precisely whether. So that these and other more Authorities of the Scripture, and semblable ensamples of holy Interpreters shall prove, that I and other may fairly (no good Law inhibiting, unless Constitutions Pharisaical) read and search the Works not only of Luther, but also of all other, be they never so ill or good; namely, seeing I am a Priest; whom the Bishop of Norwich ought not to have admitted into Orders, unless he had seen me to have had judgment to discern good from ill, neither ought any of you to give Orders to any such, in whom you do not find like ability to judge the light from darkness, and the truth from falsehood: and therefore if for this you would punish me, I cannot see but you shall condemn your selves, judging rather of sensual pleasure than of equity, which in men of your Order were a great shame, and much uncomely.

Priests, whether it be lawfull and expedient.

¶ Unto the fourth, wherein you do demand whether it be lawfull for a Priest to marry a Wife, and whether a Priest in some case be bound by the Law of God to marry a Wife: I say that it is lawfull, yea, and necessary for all men that have not given to them of God the gift of Chastity, to marry a Wife, and that sheweth both Christ and Saint Paul. In the nineteenth of Matthew Christ speaking unto the Pharisees that came to tempt him, in the conclusion, faith in this wise, Whosoever shall forsake his Wife except it be for Fornication, and marryeth another, committeth Adultery; and whosoever marryeth her so forsaken, doth also commit Adultery.

Mat. 19.

Rom. 9.

With that speak his Disciples, if thus the case stand betwix a Man and his Wife, it shall be hurtful and not expedient to contract Matrimony. He made answer, Mat. 19. Every man cannot away with that saying, but they unto whom it is given of God; meaning, that every man could not abide single or unmarried, but such unto whom was given of God a special Grace so to continue. And if with your better advice I might be somewhat herein bold, I would suppose that whereas he doth say, Non omnes sunt capaces huius dicti (Every man cannot away with that saying) this word Non omnes ought to be here taken as it is in many other places of Scripture, as where in the Psalms it is said, Non iudicabitur in conspectu tuo omnis vivens; It is meant that no person living shall be justified afore God. And in the Epistle to the Galaicians, and to the Romans, where it is said, Ex operibus Legis

taken un-derstandly in

non iustificabitur omnis caro; (By the Works of the Law no flesh shall be justified in his sight) it is meant thereby. Nulla caro: so that, Non omnis, after the rule of equipollence, should be taken for as much as nullus, and then the sense should be thus, Nulli sunt capaces huius dicti nisi hi quibus datum sit. No man can be capable of this saying, or can so pass their life without marriage, except those which have it given them by a singular Grace of God to live chaste.

Then he proceeded further, saying, There be gelded Men which so were born from their Mothers Womb, and there be some gelded men, which have been so made by men, and there be gelded men that have so made themselves for love of the Kingdom of Heaven. In conclusion he saith, Who that receiveth this saying, thinketh that it should be unexpedient for him to marry, and that he may live chaste through the gift given him of God, let him take it and so live. So he leaveth single life to all mens election, without any compelling them thereto.

Hereunto assenteth Saint Paul, when that by many reasons he had perverted the Corinthians to single life; finally, he concludeth thus, This (quoth he) I unto you, willing that which should be for your profit, but not to bring you into bondage. And a little afore, I would (quoth he) that all men were even as my self am. But every one hath a several Gift from God, one one wife, another another wife: shewing thereby, that unto some it is given of God to live continent, and to other to engender and procreate Children, and therefore his will cannot come to effect. Which thing you may easily perceive in this, that after he had shewed forth his good will and desire, saying, Velim omnes homines, &c. I would that all men were even as I am, he putteth a Conjunction adverbative, that declareth an obstacle or stop, saying, Sed unusquisque proprium donum habet, &c. But every man hath his proper Gift of God. Upon this he proceedeth further, whereby you may aptly see, that he would have all men, none except, to marry, wanting the gift of continency. This (quoth he) I say to the unmarried and Widows; expedient it were for them to remain as I do; but if they cannot live continent, let them contract marriage, for better is it to marry than to burn. This proveth well, that all Priests, wanting continency of heart, had need to marry to avoid burning ill, unless they be inobedient to the mind of Christ that spake in Paul, in observing the Traditions of men. In the beginning of the same Chapter also he saith, It is good that a man should not deal with a woman; notwithstanding for avoiding Fornication (quoth he) let every man have his wife, and every woman have her husband. He saith here, Quisquis & quæque, every man and every woman. And not quisquam and quædam, some man nor some woman; he excepteth neither Priest nor Nun, but every one both man and woman is bound, for avoiding of burning and Fornication, to marry, not having the gift given of Chastity.

The same also confirmeth your own Law, Dispositio. 29. Dispositio. 29. where it is written thus, Si quis discernit Presbyterum conjugatum, tanquam occasione nuptiarum, quod offerre non debeat, anathema sit. If any man do hold that a Priest being married, in that respect that he is married, ought not to minister in his Function, be he accused. And in the 31. Dispositio, Si quis vituperat nuptias, & dormientem cum viro suo fidelem, ac religiosam detestatur, aut culpabilem estimat, veluti quæ Regnum Dei intrare non possit, anathema sit. If any man shall find fault with Matrimony, and detest a faithful and devout woman lying with her husband, and think her culpable, as one that could not therefore enter into the Kingdom of God, be he accused. And every where else such like are to be seen.

Moreover, in Historia tripartita it is written, that a noble Martyr of Christ called Papinianus, in the Nicens Council, when all other Bishops were purposed to have excommunicated those that Priests should live unmarried, this holy man resisted them so mightily both with Reasons, and also with Authority of Scripture, that then their purpose altered, and their first devise could not pass. And one Authority I remember was this, which he borrowed of Paul in the second Epistle to Timothy, Tuus devotus (quoth he) may have a semblance of Holiness; but indeed it shall be the destruction and undoing of the same.

KING. Moreover, in one of the principal Histories of France, called Les illustrations de Gaules, Whosoever pleads may there read it as it standeth, with six leaves afore the end of the same; how the Author with deep sorrow lamenteth the Ordinance that decreed first, Priests to live unmarried, shewing and that amply, the miseries that have ensued in France thereby, imputing it unto Celiste the Pope, of whom he maketh a doleful mention in meter, whereof the first I yet remember, and it is thus, O Sancte Calixte, totus mundus odit te, &c. O holy Calixte, all the world hateth thee. Which followeth in writing to all that lust to behold therein. But what need I to make longer Transits hereof, so far as you do daily both hear and see, what foul abomination ariseth in every corner, of this pitious Law made of men that would presume to be wiser than God, thinking (as we ever do) that either he would not, or else for lack of wisdom he could not give us a sufficient Law or way, to direct our life and conversation, to come to the joy and resting place of him promised, and so of us longed and looked for. Whereby we both be far unreasonable in so deeming of him after our unwise way, and he much dishonoured. The which I beseech him to help. Amen.

Answer to the fifth Article. Free will to deserve, joy or pain. ¶ Unto the fifth, where ye do ask, whether I believe that whatsoever is done of man, whether it be good or ill, cometh of necessity; that is (as you continue) to wit, whether man hath free will so that he may deserve joy or pain? I say (as I said at the beginning) that unto the first part of your Riddle, I neither can, nor will give any definitive answer, forasmuch as it surmounteth my capacity, trusting that God shall send hereafter other that shall be of better learning and wit than I, to indite it. As concerning the second part, whereas you do interpret; that is to say, whether man hath free will or no, so that he may deserve joy or pain; as for our deserving specially of joy, I think it very little or none, even when we do the very Commandments and Law of God, and that am I taught by our Saviour in St. Luke, where he saith thus, Which of you, quoth he, having a Servant that hath eared your Land, or fed your Beasts, will say unto him when he cometh home out of the field, go thy way quickly, and sit down to thy meat; and rather will not say unto him, make ready my Supper, sewing me therat till I have made an end thereof; and afterward take thy self meat and drink. Think you that he is bound to thank his Servant which thus shall do his Commandment? I trow (saith he) nay. Even so you, saith he, when you have done all things to your Commandment, say yet you be unprofitable Servants, and have done that which you were bound to do.

Merits not to be esteemed. In which words you may clearly see, that he would not have us greatly esteem our merits, when we have done that is commanded by God, but rather reckoning our selves to be but Servants unprofitable to God, forasmuch as he hath no need of our well-doing for his own advancement, but only that he loveth to see us do well for our own behoof: and moreover, that when we have done his bidding, we ought not to so magnify, neither our self, nor our own free will, but laud him with a meek heart, through whose benefit we have done (if at any time we do it) his liking and pleasure; not regarding our merit, but his Grace and Benefit: Whereby only is done all that in any wise is to him acceptable. And thus if we ought not to attend our merits in doing the Commandment of God, much less should we look for merit, for observing of our own inventions or traditions of men, unto which there is no benefit in all Scripture, which Paul calleth the word of Truth and of Faith, promised.

Observing of Gods works worketh in us no merit. But here may be objected against me, that the Reward is promised in many places to them that do observe the Precepts of God. That I affirm to be very sooth. Notwithstanding such Reward shall never be attained of us, except by the Grace and Benefit of him which worketh all things in all Creatures. And this affirmeth well Saint Augustine, Saint Ambrose, Augustinus, with other, as ye may see every where in their Works, and especially in the Treatise called Unio dissidentium, wherein he entreateth de gratia & meritis. And of St. Augustine I remember two or three right notable Sentences concerning the same. One is in the ninth Book of his Confessions, in this form, Vae etiam laudabili vitæ bonum, si remota misericordia discentia eam. Quia vere non exquiris delicta *vehementer, fiducialiter speramus aliquem locum apud te invenire indulgentie. Quisquis autem tibi enumerat vera merita sua, quid tibi enumerat nisi munera tua? O si cognoscerent se omnes, & qui gloriatur in domino gloria-retur: Voe be to the life of men, be they never so holy, if thou shalt examine them, setting thy mercy aside. Be-cause thou dost not exactly examine the faults of men, therefore we have a vehement hope and trust to find some place of mercy with thee. And whosoever recounteth unto thee his merits, what other thing doth he recount but thy benefits? O would to God all men would see and know themselves, and that he which glorieth, would glory in the Lord. Again, in the first Book he saith thus unto God: Namquid inopi es & gaudes lucris? Namquid avarus & usuras exigis? Supererogatur tibi ut de-beas? & quis habet quicquam non tuum? Reddi debita nulli debent, domas debita nihil perdunt. Doth any man give that he oweth not unto thee, that thou shouldst be in his debt? and hath any man ought that is not thine? Thou rendrest debt, and yet owest to no man. Thou forgivest debt, and yet lovest nothing. And therefore his usual prayer was this, Domine da quod jubet, & jube quod vis, Lord give that thou commandest, and command what thou wilt.*

Also in the Book called Manuale Augustini, or de contemplatione Christi, he saith in this wise, Tota spes mea est in morte Domini. Mors ejus meritum meum, refugium meum, salus mea, & resurrectio mea. Meritum meum, misericordia Domini. Non sum meritis inopi quoniam illa misericordia Domini non defuerit. Et si misericordia Domini multæ, multus ego sum in meritis. All my hope is in the Lords death. His death is my merit, my refuge, my health, and my resurrection. My merit is the mercy of the Lord. I am not without merit, so long as the Lord of mercy shall continue. And if the mercies of the Lord be great and rich, then am I also great and rich in merits.

And to conclude, they be Christs own Merits and good Works (as saith Saint Ambrose well nigh every where) that he worketh in us, which he doth reward and crown, and not ours, if one should look narrowly upon the things and speak properly. Howbeit, they yet nevertheless are ours by him, forasmuch as his merciful bounty imputeth his goods to be ours. So that in this, I wot not how other do mean, which lust to sell their Merits unto their Neighbours that happily have scarce enough for themselves: but I do wholly deem and believe, according as the Scripture with these holy Doctors and such other do teach, willing that men ever for good doing should not so much (as the common people doth) regard their merit or reward, for that it is not the thing that ingendred the love of God in us, but rather maketh men to honour God in a fervile fashion, and for the love of themselves, in doing works for love of reward, or for dread of pain, more then because it so pleaseth God, and liketh him: whereas if we regarded first, yea and altogether, that it is our duty to do well (which is the keeping of his Commandments) and that so we should content his pleasure, reward should undoubtedly ensue good deeds, although we refused no whit the fame, as heat followeth evermore the fire unseparate there from. And thus we should serve God with hearty love as Children, and not for meed or dread, as unloving thralls and servants.

Concerning free-will, I mean altogether as doth Saint Augustine, that of our selves we have no liberty or hability to do the Will of God, but are subject unto sin and thralls of the same, Conclusi sub peccato, & vœmandati sub eodem; Shut up and fold under sin, as witnesseth both Esay and also Paul: but by the Grace of God we are rid and set at liberty, according to the portion that every man hath taken of the same, some more, some less.

¶ Whereas in your sixth demand, you do enquire whether the Sacrament of the Altar be a Sacrament necessary unto Salvation, and whether after the consecration of the Bread and Wine done by the Priest, as by the Minister of God, there is the very Body and Blood of Christ in likeness of Bread and Wine, neither can he will answer one word, otherwise than I have told since I was delivered into your hands. Neither would I have answered one whit thereunto, knowing so much at the first as now I do, till you had brought forth some that would have have accused me to have trespassed in the same, which I am certain you cannot do, bringing any that is honest and credible.

Answer to the seventh Article. ¶ As concerning the other six Sacraments, I make you that same answer that I have done to the Sacrament of the Altar, and none other. That is, I will say nothing until some men appear to accuse me in the same, unless I know a more reasonable cause than I have yet heard, why I should do so. But as touching the form and fashion, I shall answer willingly so far forth as any rudeness will serve; I hold well that such as be duly elect Ministers in the Church ought to baptize, except necessity require otherwise: and that the form used in the Church is in mine opinion not uncommendable. Nevertheless it should edifie much more, if it were uttered in the vulgar Language, and cause people in the Baptism of Children more effectually to thank God for his Institution and high benefit thereby repented.

Baptism to be in the vulgar Tongue. Answer to the eighth Article. In like condition do I also deem of ministration in all the other, that it should be expedient to have them ministered openly in the vulgar Language, for the edifying of the people. As concerning the form used in Matrimony, I like it right well, and think it commendable, saving in all Countries lightly Judas hath set in his foot over far, and taken in hand to sell his Master, accompanied with Simon Magnus, saying, What will you give me if I deliver unto you Christ? This is the saying of all them that require, without any lawful authority, in some places twelve pence, in some six pence, in some more, in some less, but in every place lightly some money when a couple should be married: and this they call The Churches Right. Moreover, that they will not suffer Marriage to be solemnized at all times of the year, I think it standeth not with Christs Rule, but rather is against the same: and that they will not suffer the Banes upon all Holy-days to be proclaimed, unless a Dispensation for money be purchased therefore. All this God forbiddeth. Finally, like as no money ought to be given for this, no more should any be taken for any other. But the contrary is seen, which is great pity, yea even at the receiving of the Sacrament of the Altar, Priests every where use to claim somewhat, and in some parts of the West-Country, no less than two pence of every Pole.

Answer to the ninth Article. As touching Priesthood in the Primitive-Church, when vertue bare (as ancient Doctors do deem), and Scripture in mine opinion recordeth the same) most room, there were no more Officers in the Churches of God, than Bishops and Deacons; that is to say, Ministers, as witnesseth beside Scripture full openly, Asterius in his Commentaries upon the Epistles of Paul, whereas he saith, That those whom we call Priests were all one and none other but Bishops, and the Bishops none other but Priests, men ancient both in age and learning, so near as they could be chosen. Neither were they instituted and chosen as they be now adays, with small regard of a Bishop or his Officer, only appointing them if they can contrive a Collect; but they were chosen not only of the Bishops, but also with the consent of the people among whom they should have their living, as sheweth Saint Cyprian; and the people (as he saith) ought to have power to choose Priests that be men of good Learning, of good and honest report: but alack for pity, such Elections are now banished, and new fashions brought in. Which if we should confer with the form of the Election shewed of Christ by his Apostle Paul, we should find no small diversity, but all turned upside down. To conclude, I say, the order or state of Priests and Deacons was ordained by God, but Subdeacons and Conjurers, otherwise called Exorcistes and Accolites, which we call Benei and Collects, were instituted by the invention of men. And this you may find in the Law, Dist. 21. and other places where it is written, Subdiaconatus tempore Apostolorum non fuit sacer, Subdeaconship in the time of the Apostles was no holy Order.

Answer to the tenth Article. As touching ear-Confession, I say, that the common fashion now used was never ordained by Christs Law, that is, written in the Bible, neither can you prove by any authority of the same, that we ought to confess all our offences particularly, with the circumstances of all and of every such, to any man. Again, for the maintenance of this which I have said, you shall know that Chrysostome standeth stiffly with me, in his Commentaries upon the Epistle to the Hebrews, in a Homily also that he maketh upon the Psalm Miserere, and moreover in a Sermon that he maketh, De Penitentia, belide many other Treatises, wherein he continueth ever one, testifying in semblable wise.

In like manner doth one of your principal Doctors, writing upon your Canon-Law, named Panormitanus, testify that it is made by the Law of man, and not of God, in cap. Omnis utriusque sexus. In the Book also called Historia tripartita, you shall find how it was first instituted (as I remember) and after undone again, because of a huge Villany committed with a Woman by a Minister of the Church, thorow Confession.

Also it is mentioned in the end of the first Dist. de Penitentia, how the Greek Church, whom I think you do not note to be Heretics, will not yet hitherto allow it. There are also many reasons brought forth, both to prove that Confession made to a Priest should not be necessary, and also that Confession made unto God should suffice, concluding in this wise, Quibus auctoritatibus, &c. I could bring forth other that be yet living, men of summounting and excellent literature, which exactly by many and mighty, both authorities and reasons, do shew and confirm this my saying to be just: but I keep silence, and will not name them, lest I should bring them in hatred. Notwithstanding I never said, we will say, but that men feeling themselves aggrieved in Conscience with some great temptation, had need to go unto such whome they know and trust to be of stedfast Credence, and to have good skill in the Law of God, opening their grief unto them, to the intent they may know, thorow counsel, some ease and remedy thereof.

But in this I mean not that they ought to go unto their Curate, or to any other Priest, whose Credence they deem not all truly, or their counsel not sage, but to any other whatsoever he be, whom they know most sufficient in properties above-shewed, when their Curate doth lack them. And this thing is most behoveable, when men needing counsel be void of knowledge in Christs Law, that they cannot find therein remedy themselves. For the Doctrine of Christ, if it were well known, containeth remedies for all infirmities and maladies of the mind, so that men by spiritual knowledge might cure themselves.

To the other part of your question, where you do ask whether a Priest in cases unto him limited may loose a Sinner confessed and contrite for his sin, injoining him wholesome penance? I say that only Christ looseth a Sinner which is contrite, by his word and promise, and the Priest doth nothing but shew and declare the word: Neither doth declaration or ministry of the Priest any whit avail for to loose any person, unless he that should be loosed give Credence unto the Word ministered and shewed by the Priest, which word or promise of Christ is called The word of Reconciliation or Atonement making betwixt God and man. And this testified St. Paul in the second to the Corinthians, where he saith in this wise, God hath reconciled us unto him through Jesus Christ. See how it is God that looseth us from sin, which is to make Reconciliation or Atonement betwixt us and him, and that through Christ whom he caused to die for the same purpose. And he (quoth St. Paul) hath ordained us Ministers of the said Atonement. See how Christs Apostles called not themselves the Authors of binding and loosing, but Ministers; For he (that is to wit God) reconciled the World unto him, forgiving their sins. Where you may know what reconciling is. And hath committed (saith Paul) unto us to be Messengers of the same Word, or sayings of atonement or reconciling.

Also that the Power, whereby men are loosed from sin, is not the Priests power, you may know by the vulgar saying, which is right true; yea and with leisure, I doubt not but that I can shew the same in the Decrees, which is thus, Solus Deus remittit peccata, Only God forgiveth and pardoneth us of our sins. And this was preached at Pauls Cross the Sunday next after the Epiphany last, the Bishop of London sitting by, the Preacher speaking after this form, treating of this Text, Ecce agnus Dei qui tollis peccata mundi, Behold the Lamb of God.

I could bring forth other that be yet living, men of summounting and excellent literature, which exactly by many and mighty, both authorities and reasons, do shew and confirm this my saying to be just: but I keep silence, and will not name them, lest I should bring them in hatred. Notwithstanding I never said, we will say, but that men feeling themselves aggrieved in Conscience with some great temptation, had need to go unto such whome they know and trust to be of stedfast Credence, and to have good skill in the Law of God, opening their grief unto them, to the intent they may know, thorow counsel, some ease and remedy thereof.

But in this I mean not that they ought to go unto their Curate, or to any other Priest, whose Credence they deem not all truly, or their counsel not sage, but to any other whatsoever he be, whom they know most sufficient in properties above-shewed, when their Curate doth lack them. And this thing is most behoveable, when men needing counsel be void of knowledge in Christs Law, that they cannot find therein remedy themselves. For the Doctrine of Christ, if it were well known, containeth remedies for all infirmities and maladies of the mind, so that men by spiritual knowledge might cure themselves.

The second part of the question, whether a Priest looseth a Sinner. Christ, and not the Priest, looseth the Sinner.

2 Cor. 5.

Christ only looseth us from sin. The Apostles use the Authority of binding and loosing, but Ministers.

This saying is taken out of Pauls Lambard, and cited in the Decrees.

KING God which taketh away the sins of the World. In that, said the Preacher, testimony is given of Christ to be a Lamb, it is shewed that he was an innocent man. But in that it is said, That he taketh away the sins of the World, is shewed that he was God, alledging there for the confirmation of this part of his purpose, the vulgar saying above said by me, Solus Deus remittit peccata. And the same Proposition, or another equal with the same, wth Saint Chrysostome in an Homily that is made upon this Text of St. Matthew, Vocabitur nomen ejus Jesus, &c. His Name shall be called Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins. Alfo Saint Chrysostome, in opere imperfecto, upon this Text, Va vobis Scribae & Pharisei, qui clauditis Regnum Celorum, &c. Who be unto you Scribes and Pharisees, because ye shut up the Kingdom of Heaven before men, &c. As near as my remembrance doth serve me, or else in some other place, but in the same

Mat. 1. Book (as I suppose) he affirmeth that the Keys of Heaven are the Word and Doctrine of God. This witnesseth moreover Saint Gregory, I trow, in his Book called Pastoralia, or else it is an Epistle that he writeth ad Episcopum Constantinopolitanum, in these words, Clavis aperiens est sermo correctoris, qui increpando culpam detegit, quam saepe nescit qui perpetravit. The Key of loosing is the word of the corrector, who rebuking doth disclose the fault, which many times he knoweth not that committeth the same.

Mat. 23. The Keys of binding and loosing in the word of God, Greg. in p^{er}son.

Acts 26. Saint Ambrose, agreeing to the same, faith, Verbum Dei dimittit peccata. The Word of God forgiveth sin. But shall we then say, that Gods Ministers do not bind and loose? I say no, not as the authors of so doing, but they do loose and bind in like manner, as it is said of Paul in the Acts of the Apostles, where our Saviour spake unto him in this manner: I shall (said our Saviour) deliver thee from the People and Nations, unto whom I send thee, that thou shouldest open their eyes, that they may be converted from darkness to light. Here Paul is said to open the eyes of mens hearts, albeit to speak properly, it is God that do doth; and therefore David prayeth unto him, Revela oculos meos. Open mine eyes, O Lord. And in like manner it is spoken of John Baptist in the first of Luke, That he should go before Christ in the spirit and power of Elias, and turn the hearts of the fathers to their Children, and the unbelieveurs to the wisdom of the righteous. Albeit to turn mens hearts, and to work in them belongeth to God. But so use we to speak, Metonymice. As if your Lordship had defined me to be excommunicate, and thereupon should send a commandment to the Parson of Knoll to declare the same, the people would say that the Parson of Knoll proclaiming your commandment, had accused me; but yet doth he not properly curse me, but you rather, when he in pronouncing the same, doth your act and commandment, rather than his own.

Phil. 119. Touching cases limited to Priests and Ministers, for loosing from sin or binding in the same, I do know no such things shewed in Scripture, which is the perfect way of our life. Neither can any man, I suppose, shew by authority thereof, that one should have more or less limited him than another. And if you can or will thereby teach it me, I shall thank you for your doing, and pray God to requite you.

Luke 1. Concerning enjoying of Penance, I know of none that men need to admit, nor you to put or enjoy the same, except it be renovation of living in casting apart old vice, and taking them unto new virtue, which every true penitent intendeth, or ought to intend verily by the grace and assistance of our Saviour Christ, to shew and perform.

Answer to the 11th Article. Unto the eleventh Article I say, That grace is given unto them that duly receive the Sacraments of Christ and his Church, but whether by them or no, that I cannot define; for God sendeth his grace where he pleaseth, either with them, or without them, and when he pleaseth: so that it is at his arbitrement, and how and when. Moreover, many a lewd person receiveth the Sacraments, that are destitute of grace, to their confusion. So that I cannot affirm that the Sacraments give grace; yet in due receipt of the Sacraments, I suppose, and think that God giveth unto them grace that so take them, as he doth unto all good, even without them also.

¶ Whereas in your twelfth Article you do ask, Whether all things necessary unto salvation are put in holy Scripture, and whether things only there put be sufficient, and whether some things upon necessity of salvation, are to be believed and observed, which are not expressed in Scripture: This is the question, as great learned men have shewed me, whom I do count my friends, sith the time I appeared at your Lordships assignment before Mr. Dr. Lesse, and Mr. Mellings with other, in your Chappel of Lambeth, when these questions were first propounded, this I say is the question which (as they told me) is the head: whole content of all other objected against me. Yea, this is both the helm and rudder of all together, and that which doth contend right fore to impugn: but love of the truth (wherewith in this point I reckoned me well fenced) would not suffer me to apply and yield to their will, thinking quod Sanctum est veritatem praeferre amicitiae; that the truth ought to be preferred before all friendship and affinity; and also, Si dextra manus scandalizet, delebat praefata dextera & abijci, si dext. right hand offendit, it ought to be cut off and cast away.

But touching an answer unto this question, I suppose verily, that if I had Saint Cyprian's Works by me, I should not need to shew any other answer in this than he hath shewed aforetime, waiting upon this saying of Saint John, Sunt & alia multa quae fecit Jesus. There are many things more which Jesus did. Notwithstanding, so much as every man at all seasons cannot have what he would, and therefore must make other shift, such as he may: I say, as I suppose the first part of your question to be very true, and therefore to be affirmed, that is to wit, that all things needful for mans salvation be mentioned and shewed in holy Scripture, and that the things only there put be sufficient for the regiment of spiritual living, and mans souls health. And in this shall you find both the ancient Doctors standing with me; and moreover, the suffrage of holy Wit, whose authority is of most sovereign and infallible steadfastness.

Look what S. Jerome faith upon this Verse, Domini narrabit in scripturis populum, The Lord shall rehearse it, when he writeth up the people. S. Ambrose also in a Treatise, De Paradiso, doth shew likewise, where he bringeth this Text of Paul, written in the 2d to the Corinthians, I am afraid lest it may by some means be brought to pass, that as the Serpent deceived Eve through subtilty, so your minds may be corrupt from the simple verity that is in Christ. And also in his Commentaries upon the Epistle to the Colossians, upon this Text, In Christ Jesus is all treasure of wisdom, and in divers other places of the same work.

Saint Chrysostome also in his Commentaries upon Paul 2 Tim. 3. declaring this saying, Omnia scriptura divinitus inspirata, &c. The whole Scripture given by inspiration of God, &c. And in his Book called Opus imperfectum, unperfected, I wot not precisely upon what Text, but there you shall find, that he would have a true Preacher of Gods law not swarving therefrom, neither on the right hand, neither on the left, but keeping thereafter, according to the teaching of Solomon: for he that should thereunto add or withdraw, should enterpise, as faith S. Chrysostome, to be wiser than God. These or else such like words doth he say. I will be deemed by the Book brought forth, because my remembrance cannot retain perfectly all such things.

Saint Cyprian maintaineth well the same in an Epistle that he writeth ad Cecilium fratrem, which I would to God were in English, that all men might learn the devout goodnes in it contained. In the same he teacheth clearly, how we ought to hear Christ only, and his learning, not regarding ne attending to the traditions of men, like as he doth also in many other places.

Scriptures, how many needs it hath.

The Word sufficient for all our direction

Scripture sufficient to salvation, without any other addition.

Psal. 25. truth. And again, the Prophet willing us to do as he did, faith in this manner, Adhesi testimonio tuis Domine, noli me confundere: I have cleaved to thy testimonies, O Lord, confound me not. In like manner the said whole Psalm warneth us; yea, all the Scripture biddeth us stick fast to the steady and true Word of God, saying, that he is verax, & via ejus veritas: omnis autem homo vanitas & mendax: For he is true, and all his ways are truth, but all men are vain and liars. For that is the sure foundation which cannot fail them that ground thereupon, as reporteth Christ; Every one, faith he, that heareth my words, and doth them, is like to a wise man that buildeth upon a sure foundation. And there ought to be none other foundation to Christian men, but only the undoubted truth of Jesus to build our faith upon, and direct our living thereafter, as sheweth Saint Paul, saying Fundamentum aliud nemo, &c. Other Foundation can no man lay, than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ. And likewise in the Epistle unto the Ephesians, where he faith, Eam non estis hospites & advene, sed concives sanctorum, & domestici Dei, &c. Now ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but Citizens with the Saints, and of the Household of God.

And in the same Epistle, Saint Paul, dilating of Christs beneficence, sheweth how that he ordained in the Church divers Officers, to the edifying of Christian people, that he calleth Christs body, until all we may come unto the unity of Faith, which cometh by following of one Doctrine which is Christs, whereby we may grow to be perfect men, and that we should not be here like to children, carried about with every wind of Doctrine, by deceit and wilfulness of men that study to deceive us.

In like form doth he warn us in his Epistle to the Hebrews, that we should not be carried about as the wind with divers and strange Doctrines, but continue in that which ever continueth like and all one, agreeable for all men in all parts, and that at all times; not being changeable as mens Constitutions be, whereof look what one doth counsel, or ordain to be of effect, another annulls the same, according as mens minds do always alter and are full unsteady. Neither do such pertain unto all men; for the Greeks, with other (whom the Pope, no none of his people will yet deny to be of Christs Church) will in no condition admit such, neither for men to live after them, nor to believe them as pertaining to their faith. But they allow well the Doctrine that persevereth every one, and is immutable, as sheweth Saint Paul, saying, Jesus Christ yesterday and to day is all one, and so ever shall be. He is white Bread, without any fower leaven of Pharisical Traditions; vinity without guile, light without any darkness, the very straight way that hath neither hook ne crook. From this ought we not to turn, neither upon one hand ne other unless we will go from him that is our felicity and anchor of safety.

But what should I more intreat of this, except I would recite all Scriptures, which in every part is full of admonitions, exhorting and warning us to cleave fast unto this way, which is the Doctrine of the Gospel? which God I beseech him grant us all both to know and love, taking heed that in no wise we be seduced therefrom by Laws and Doctrines of men. Look also into Colestians, Chap. 2. and in the Epistle to Timothy and Titus. So that I conclude, In holy Scripture to be contained sufficiently enough of Doctrine, for the regiment and salvation of our souls; and this, because learned men do call the head Article laid against me, I would that all men should well note it, and record my saying therein hereafter, whatsoever shall betide of me; for the truth is so indeed, that hereupon hangeth the summe of all. Therefore I shall recite it once again; I say, That in holy Scripture the Doctrine there only contained, is sufficient for the salvation of Christian mens souls; God give us grace we may know it, to build our faith stedfastly upon the same, in working thereafter.

As touching the later part of your question, I say, That there are many things both to be observed, and to be believed, that are not expressed in Scripture; as the Civil Laws of Princes and Commonalties, ordained for civil regiment of the body, and all other, so that they be not hurtful to faith or charity, but helpful to the same. I reckon that we ought to keep them, not only for fear of punishment, but also for Conscience sake, although such ordinances be not expressly and particularly in Scripture expressed, for they are generally therein contained and spoken of.

Moreover, if you mean by this word expressed, that which in Scripture is clearly shewed out, and appeareth evidently to every Reader or hearer that hath but a mean understanding, so do I affirm that there are some things which a man ought to believe, although they be not of him expressly understood: As I have ever believed that the Virgin Mary was and is a perpetual Virgin, and that the same might be gathered by the Scripture. But if by this word expressed, you mean comprehended or contained (as methinks the mind of him that wrote the demand should be) so that he meaneth by this question thus: whether any thing ought to be observed and believed, which is not contained in Scripture, and that upon necessity of salvation; then I say, that there is nothing either to be observed, or to be believed upon necessity of salvation, which is not contained in Scripture, and mentioned in the same, either generally or specially. Yet do I not deny but other things are to be believed, as I believed that Doctor Warham, was Archbishop of Canterbury, ere ever I saw your Lordship, and I believe verily who was my Father and Mother, albeit I had none intelligence when they begot me, and such like; and yet in such points, although a man have not stedfast belief he may be saved.

¶ To the thirteenth Article, where you do ask whether I believe that Purgatory is, and whether that souls departed be therein tormented and purged? I say that there is a Purgatory in this world, and that doth the Scripture, and also the holy Doctors call the fire of tribulation, through which all Christians shall pass, as testifieth Saint Paul in the second Chapter of the second Epistle to Timothy, whose testimony is full notable and true, albeit that few do know it, and fewer peradventure, will believe it. Mark you the words, good people, and know, that they be his, and not mine. They be thus, All that will live godly in Jesus Christ, shall suffer persecution. In this Purgatory do I now reckon my self to stand; God send me well to persevere unto his honor. Of this speaketh also Saint Peter in these words which pertain to the instruction of all Christian people; Virgine Dei custodimini per fidem ad salutem, qua in hoc parata est ut pateat in tempore supremo, in quo oculatis nunc, ad breve tempus afflictis in variis experimentis si opus sit, quo exploratio fidei vestre multo pretiosior auro quod perit, & tamen per ignem probatur, reperitur in gloriam

KING riam & honorem. To (quoth he) are preferred
Hm. 3. through the power of God by faith unto salvation, which is prepared to be revealed in the last time, wherein ye now rejoice, though for a season (if need require) ye are sundry ways afflicted and tormented, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than gold that periseth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto laud, glory and honour, at the appearing of Jesus Christ, &c. Other Purgatory know I none, that you can prove by Scripture, unless it be by one place of the same, which well examined, I trow, shall make but little against me, for the maintenance of any other than I have shewed.

But whatsoever they brought against me, I trust that holy Doctors shall by their interpretation sustain the part, the which I do take upon me, making answer for me sufficient, so that you shall say, it is no new thing which I have or shall speak; yet that you should see even now somewhat written of ancient Doctors concerning the same, I shall shew you what I have read in Saint Augustine's first in a Sermon that he maketh De Ebrietate, in this wise saying, Nemo se decipiat fratres; duo enim loca sunt, & tertium non est visus. Qui cum Christo regnare non meruit, cum Diabolo oblique ulla dubitatione peribit. That is to say, Brethren, let no man deceive himself, for there be two places, and the third is not known. He that with Christ hath not deserved to reign, shall without doubt perish with the Devil. In another also that he maketh, De vanitate huius seculi, it is said thus: Scitote vos, quod cum anima a corpore avellitur, statim in Paradiso pro meritis bonis collocatur, aut certe pro peccatis, in inferni tartarus precipitatur. Eligite modo quod vultis, aut perpetualliter gaudere cum Sanctis, aut sine fine cruciari cum impiis. Which is to say, Know you that when the soul is departed from the body, it is committed, for his good deeds, put in Paradise, or else thrown headlong into the Dungeons of Hell for his sins. Choose ye now which ye list, and purpose while ye be here in this life, either to joy perpetually with the Saints, or else to be tormented without end among wicked sinners. Thus saith holy Augustine.

To make an end, I hope surely, that by the aid of our Saviour, I shall come to Heaven, and reign with Christ, ere that I shall feel any Purgatory, beside that I have and shall sustain in this life. And he that believeth not steadfastly any other to be, shall yet be saved as well (and God woteth whether better or no, but I think no whit less) as such as teach the people, or suffer them to be taught, that in going from this station to that, from one Altar to another, they shall cause souls to be delivered: yea, and as well as such as say, that a man, being buried in a Gray Friars Frock, shall so have remission of the third part of his sins, as is granted in a Bull unto the said Religion, and such like. For Saint Augustine shall make with me in his Book called Enchiridion, after he hath confuted the opinion of some that in the Church of Christ living in mischief, ungraciously, taking thereof no repentance, did yet falsely deem that they should be saved through the cleansing of Purgatory, where he concludeth thus: Such a thing after this life to be, saith he, is not incredible, but whether it be so or no, doubt may be thereof moved, or a question demanded. The same words doth he again recite in a Book called Quaestiones ad Dulcium, or Dulcium, I wot not whether it is called, and there he entreateth the same more copiously; and would I might see the place once again.

To this agreeth Saint Paul, writing thus to the Corinthians, Omnes nos manifestari oportet coram Tribunali Christi, ut reportet quicque ea qua sunt per corpus, juxta id quod fecit, sive bonum, sive malum. For we must all appear before the Judgment Seat of Christ, that every man may receive the things which are done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or evil. And again, where he writeth unto the Hebrews, I trow it be said in this wise, Memores sitis vincitorum, tanquam una cum illis vincti: eorum qui affliguntur veluti ipsi quoque versantes in corpore. Remember them that are in bonds, even as though you were bound with them: be mindful of them which are in affliction, as if ye were also afflicted in the body.

¶ To the fourteenth Article, where you ask whether holy Martyrs, Apostles and Confessors departed from this world, ought to be honoured, called upon, and prayed unto? I answer, as touching the honouring of them, with the very words of Saint Augustine, in his Book, De vera Religione, in his last leaf, where he saith thus: Non sit nobis religio cultus hominum mortuorum: quia si pie vixerunt, non sic habentur, ut tales querant honores, sed illam a nobis coli volunt, quo illuminante letantur meriti sui nos esse consortes: honorandi sunt ergo propter imitationem non adorandi propter religionem. Si autem male vixerunt, ubicunque sunt, non sunt colendi. Again, a little after the same, he saith, Nam id ipsum actum est temporali dispensatione ad salutem nostram, ut naturam humanam ipsa Dei virtus, & Dei sapientia incommutabilis, & consubstantialis patri & coeternus suscipere dignaretur, per quam nos doceret, id esse homini colendum, quod ab omni creatura intellectuali & rationali colendum est: hoc est, ipsos optimos Angelos, & excellentissimos Dei ministeria velle credamus, ut unum cum ipsis colamus Deum, cuius contemplatione beati sumus: neque enim & nos videndo Angelum beati sumus, sed videndo veritatem, qua ipsos etiam diligimus Angelos & his congratulamur.

Nec invidemus quod ea parationes, vel nullis mortuorum interdependentibus perficiuntur, sed magis eos diligimus, quoniam & nos tale aliquid sperare a communi Domino iussi sumus. Quare honoramus eos charitate, non servitute: nec eis templa construimus. Nolunt enim se ipsi honorari a nobis, quia nos ipsi cum bonis sumus, Temple sumus Dei esse doceremur. Recte itaque scribitur, hominem ab Angelo prohiberi ne se adoraret, sed unum Deum, sub quo ille esset & confiteretur. This saith S. Augustine, handling the same matter a little after more at large.

The content of this unto you I expound, that know no Latine, for I covet that all persons should know both my thought in this, and all manner of doing, to the intent that all persons I would have true report and testimony, whatsoever shall betide me. Saint Augustine in these words would have, that we should worship no men departed, be they never so good and holy, for they seek no such honour, but would have us to worship God alone; no, nor yet no Angel, no honour the same, but only in the imitation of them, following their good acts in our living, as they followed our most merciful God while they were alive, not building Churches in the name or honour of them, for they would have no such honour done unto them; it is to them no pleasure, but contrariwise. No, the Angels will not that we should build any Churches in reverence of them; but would that with them we should honour the original, maker, and performer of all. They refuse all honour, saving that which is called honor charitatis, which is nothing else, but to be loved. Thus saith Saint Augustine. Which love we shall testify in following their good acts, by helping the poor or helples with alms and mercy, and dealing truly in word and deed, according to our state and calling, both towards God and Man; which is no light matter to them, that do consider the thing well. But whosoever shall truly and duly follow that trade, shall feel it (I dare say) as the burthen of Christs Cross was unto him, right weighty and grievous when he bare it, to Calvary; saving that we need not to fear, for he hath promised to be with us in tribulation, to rid us from the same. For the Prophet David saith, Cum ceciderit Iustus non collidetur, quia Dominus supponit manum suam.

Mat. 11. suam. That is, to wit, When a just person beginneth to fall, he shall not be born flat down to be broken, for the Lord shall put his hand under him to rear him up again. And in the Gospel he biddeth, Venite ad me omnes qui laboratis & onerati estis, & ego reficiam vos. That is to say, Come you unto me all that do travel and are sore charged, and I shall comfort or refresh you. Take my yoke upon you, learning of me that am soft and meek minded, and you shall find ease thereby in your souls, for my yoke is easy, and my burthen is light. See you here how he is ever ready to support them that for truth shall sustain the chargeable and fore vexations put upon them of the World, which cannot endure the truth to prevail, and the untruth to be disclosed.

Invocation. As touching Invocation, That is, to wit, a calling upon them, we have in Scripture, how we should call upon Almighty God in all necessities and tribulations. As in the Psalms every where, as in this, Psal. 50. Call upon me in time of your tribulation, and I shall deliver you. Mark how he saith here, call upon me, appointing neither Saint Thomas, ne Master John Shorn. And also in another place, The Lord is nigh unto them that call upon him, that call upon him truly, and with that he sheweth who calleth truly upon him, saying thus, He shall do the will or desire of them that reverence him, and shall hear graciously their prayer, and make them safe, for the Lord loveth all that love him, and all sinners shall be destroyed.

Psal. 4. And thus used the holy Prophets, Patriarchs, Apostles, and other good faithful people in old time, in all tribulation and anguish, to resort unto the head Fountain, which is of grace infinite, as is shewed in other places in this wise; In my trouble I called upon the Lord (saith David) and he heard me graciously: when I was troubled, I cried unto the Lord, and he mercifully heard me. Also I lift mine eyes unto the Mountains; but from whence shall help come unto me? Mine help (quoth he) shall come from the Lord that made both Heaven and Earth. I read the first of these Verses in form of interrogation, following Saint Augustine, which (as I remember) interpreteth it in this wise. If I recite not authorities in all places in the most perfect form, I would pray you somewhat to pardon me, for you know that I want Books, and have not them lying by me. Notwithstanding, I am certain, I shall not decline much from him. The Hills toward the which David did lift up his eyes, were Saints and holy men, of whom when he could not have his mind satisfied, he turned another way, saying, From whence shall help come unto me? Anon he remembering himself better, fixed unto God himself, of whom incontinent he obtained the accomplishment of his will, and so witnessed the same for our instruction saying, Mine help is of the Lord, or cometh from the Lord, which made Heaven and Earth. This interpretation (as near as I remember) is after the mind of Saint Augustine; And I suppose verily, that it is not contrary unto the mind of God, ne disagreeing with the sequel of Scripture.

3. Also in this wise it is reported in the New Testament by authority deduced out of the Old, where it is written, Every one that calleth upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. And mark how, cum energia, it is said, upon the name of the Lord, without any sending of us, either to Saint Christopher, (though he be painted never so stout) either to Saint Patrick's Purgatory in Ireland, or to Saint James in Galicia, in the year of Grace, or yet to any other Saint or place; but he would have us that we should call upon Almighty God, and upon his name, for the love that he beareth to Christ, who is always our Advocate before our Father, to purchase mercy for our sins; and not for our sins only, quoth Saint John (who is the Writer of this saying and testimony) but also for the sins of all the World. Saint Augustine upon the same noteth, that Saint John in that place saith, We have an Advocate, and that Christ is Advocate for him like as he is for all other to purchase mercy for him, like as he doth for all other that shall be saved; and that Saint John will not be known for our Advocate, but that Christ should be taken for Advocate of all.

Saint Bede (as I remember) upon the same, maketh as much for this purpose, as doth Saint Augustine, or well more; so that by course of Scripture we are taught to resort for all aid and relief (as I have said) unto the head Spring and Fountain of all comfort and mercy, as Saint Paul calleth him, the Father of all mercies, and of all comfort, which is ready to comfort us in all tribulation: Which (as the Psalm reporteth) healeth all our infirmities, and taketh mercy upon all our iniquities. For he is sweet (as is said in another place) and gentle, and many mercies are laid up for all those that call upon him. Yet he sheweth us no where, I trow, of benefits that we shall purchase by praying unto Saints departed; and if any person can or will vouchsafe to teach me that, by some authority of Scripture, I would think my self highly beholding to him, whatsoever he were, either great or small, young or old; but I ween it cannot be.

I have made truly long search, yet could I never find any such substantial teaching; howbeit, I offer my self ever to learn, and know that my rude wit, foolish youth, unexpert experience, and feeble discretion had need of good instruction as much as any other. Howbeit I see (thanked be God) that sometime he sheweth some sparkle of light and wisdom to children, hiding the same from other that are reputed of higher prudence; so that the World thereby many times is brought into admiration, seeing such facts done by God before their face, and laugh thereat sometime with indignation, as the Pharisees did at the blind man whom Christ had restored to sight, where they said to him, Thou John 9. Caiiff wast born blind for thy sins, and wilt thou teach us that are a great multitude of high officers of the Temple, and Doctors to teach the Law? As who would say, It becometh thee full ill. Yet we ought not to marvel greatly at such doing, for so much as Saint Paul, in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, Chapter 1. sheweth of the like practice done in his time, and that he writeth for the instruction of all Ages after ensuing, so that it appertaineth (like as all the holy Scripture doth) as well to our time, as it did to that it was first written in. The Doctrine of Christ Cross, that is, to wit, of the New Testament, is to them that perish, folly, (saith he) but to us that obtain thereby salvation, (meaning thereby to such as believe) it is the might or power of God; for it is written (saith he) by the Prophet Esay, That God sometime, said, he would destroy the wisdom of the wise, and the understanding or learning of the learned would he throw away and despise.

KING This Prophecy alleged, Paul thought to be authority sufficient to dissuade the Corinthians from the foolish affiance, vain-glory, or opinion that they had in men, whom they peradventure over-highly esteemed for their offices or solemn titles. So that he proceedeth forth in the same; Where are ye now (quoth he) the worldly wife, the Scribes, that is to say, Doctors, and such other like Officers, Hath not God shewed the wisdom of the world to be foolish and unawoory? For after that by the wisdom of God (which is shewed in Scripture, I suppose) the world hath not studied to know God, by wisdom is hath pleased God now to save them that believe through the foolishness of preaching. He calleth the Word of God foolish preaching, not because it was foolish, for afore he called it godly wisdom, but he spake after the opinion of them that set little or nought thereby, esteeming it as Eso's Cock did the precious stone, and as Swine do Pearls.

After long process in the same matter, he concludes thus: Brethren (saith he) you see your calling, how that not many wise men after the flesh are called to the belief of the Gospel, nor many mighty men, nor many of noble Parentage, but those that be fools after the estimation of the world, hath God chosen to confound the wise, &c.

Therefore I say (as I said afore) that thanks be to God, albeit I am (as I shewed before) void of such great prudence that other be well ended with, yet I see partly now their great reasons be not very substantial, whereby they contend by the treaty of reason, when authority faileth them, to shew that weought to pray to Saints departed, to be Mediators for us to Christ. And amongst other, this is one that they lean much upon, bringing it forth so usually, that common people well nigh altogether harp upon the same; some favouring it, other contrariwise esteeming it of no value.

The reason is this; If when one should desire to come to the speech of our Sovereign to obtain some boon of him, need it were, first to purchase the favour of his Chamberlains, or some other like Officers to bring him to the Kings presence, for else he may wait long in vain, until he be full a cold, ere that he shall speak with his Grace, and much less is he like to obtain his petition. In like wise it fareth (as they say) betwixt God and us; of whom, if we would purchase any benefit, we must first break unto the Saints departed, making them our friends to go betwixt God and us, as Mediators, and intercessors. But such (with their leave I would speak it) I think are deceived, in that they resemble God and the King together. For though the King be a full gracious Prince (as I hear by common report he is) yet is he not in graciousness to be conferred with God; and though he were as gracious as might be, yet hath he not the knowledge that is in God, for God knew of all things before the beginning of the World, and is every where, to see not only our outward dealing, but also all secret thoughts of all mens hearts; so that benedeth no Mediators to inform him of our desires, as the King doth need. And he is full of infinite mercy, that I may as lightly, or as soon obtain of him that which is for my behoof, as I should win by praying holy Saints to be intercessors to him for me.

Therefore I passing such apparent reasons, take me to the ensample of Antiquity, I mean of the Patriarchs, Prophets, and the Apostles, and authority of Scripture, which teach that we need not to fear, but may boldly resort unto Christ himself, and his holy Father, sofar as he bids us in these words and other like, so to do, saying, Come unto me all ye that travel, are vexed and sore charged, and I will refresh and ease you. Mark how he biddeth us to resort unto himself, and that without fear. For he and his Father, which are all one, giveth abundantly of all goodness unto all men, and upbraideth no man for their unworthiness. But if we intend to obtain of him, we must, all doubtfulness (as I said before) put apart, with a sure confidence of his mercy, ask of him that we would have; so that I leave unto other what they list to do, praying Jesus that we all may lust for that is most pleasing to him.

But I think concerning my self, that according to Christs own commandment I may without any doubt casting, resort in all incumbrances, to seek ease thereof, even unto himself and to his blessed Father. Therefore he biddeth us when we should pray, to say after this fashion, Our Father which, &c. For there is no creature, no creature, that ever were or be, that have more, nor so much, neither of might, whereby cometh ability to give help; ne of mercy and tendernes, which should make them willing in proportion agreeable with ability; ne of knowledge, that should teach to minister both the other, as is our Lord God, which not only is Almighty, all-merciful, and all-wise, but also infinite in all these glorious properties, so that undoubtedly he can, will, and best knoweth how to relieve and succour us in all necessity and anguish. To whom be honour without end for ever, Amen.

One thing yet I will shew you in this case; of which I was once advertised by a great learned man, who (as I suppose) is now living. I will not name him, lest I should perhaps cause any displeasure to be conceived against him through my relation. The thing was this, I will (quoth he) pray unto Saints, but that shall be when I think that God either cannot, or will not give me my petition. But that (as I shewed in the Convocation-house) shall never be I hope. And therefore it is to me needs to seek any further about, standing in such trust and belief, as I hope I have found upon Gods sure promise.

¶ To the fifteenth Article, where you demand whether the Saints in Heaven, as Mediators, pray for us? I say, That I believe Saints in Heaven do pray for us; for I suppose they know that all men generally living upon earth, be wrapped in manifold miseries, like as they also were, their souls being imprisoned within their bodies, being mortal. Albeit I think they know not what particular miseries men upon earth be intangled and clogged with, as sheweth Augustine, or else some other (as I think rather) under his name, in a certain work, saying, in this wise, Ibi sunt spiritus defunctorum, ubi non vident quacunq; aguntur aut eveniunt in ista vita hominum. Quomodo ergo vident tumulos suos, aut corpora sua, utrum abjecta jaceant an sepulta? Quomodo inter sunt miseria vivorum? cum vel sua ipsi mala patiuntur, ista talia miseria contraxerunt, vel in pace requiescant, ubi mala nulla nec patiendi nec compatiendi sustinent, liberati ab omnibus malis que patiendi & compatiendo cum hic vivunt, sustinebant. The summe herof is, That souls departed feel, nor know of no particular miseries sustained of men living in this World, whereby they should need to take either patience, or else compassion after their decease. Yet, sofar as they know in general, that all men living are clad with frailty, and their charity is not diminished after they be hence departed, but created; therefore I believe verily, that they do pray for us as petitioners, but not as Mediators, so far forth as I can see. For Scripture useth to speak but of one Mediator, which I think signifieth a maker of peace, or atonement betwixt God the Father and Man. Record I take of Paul, which in the Epistle to Timothy, Chapter 2, saith, Unus est Deus, Unus est & Mediator Dei & Hominum, Homo Christus Jesus, qui dedit semetipsum redemptionem pro omnibus. Erasmus translateth it, coordinator Dei & hominum. That is to say, There is one God, & one Mediator or Peacemaker betwixt God and Man, the Man called Christ Jesus, which gave himself for the redemption of all.

Thus I say, I believe Saints in Heaven do pray for us as Petitioners, but not as Mediators. Yea, all the Saints, I ween, do pray, and long that the Day of Judgment may soon come, according to the saying of St. Paul, Solicita creatura expectatio revelationem filiorum Dei expectat. The fervent desire of the creature waiteth when the Sons of God shall be revealed. And again, Omnia creatura congemiscit, & nobiscum parturit usque ad hoc tempus. Every creature groweth with us, and travaileth in pain together unto this present; which shall be for the accomplishment of glory, both to them and all other elect of God, to be his Children and Co-inheritors with Christ.

¶ In the sixteenth Article, where you demand, whether I believe that Oblations and Pilgrimages may be devoutly and meritoriously done to the Sepulchres and Relicks of Saints? I say, That what they may be I cannot perfectly tell; for God can so work, that unto those whom he hath chosen to be inheritors with him, all things shall turn to a good conclusion, as faith Saint Paul to the Romans, in this wise, Unto those that love God all things shall well succeed and work together for their furtherance in goodness: Of whom it is written in the Psalm, Blessed is that Nation that hath the Lord for their God, the people whom he hath chosen to be his inheritors: Yea, their evil deeds shall not hurt them, but come well to pass for the increase of virtue. For as it is said in the Epistle, Cui minus remittitur, minus diligitur. To whom less is forgiven, he loveth less. And again, it hurteth not Onesimus, that he ran away from his Master Philemon, but God wrought, that by occasion thereof he met with Paul, which converted him to the faith of the Gospel, who before was without belief. Therefore, whether they may be done meritoriously or no, I will not define, God woteth. But this I say, That God did never institute any such thing in the New Testament, which is the verity and rule of all Christian people to follow and believe, Yea, that only is of perfect purity, and none other, but as it is agreeable and hath ground of the same. And like as we have no certain Doctrine institute of Christ, neither his Disciples, teaching us thusto do; no more is there any merit appointed of him therefore, as I shewed afore, where I told my mind of our merits.

Moreover, where ye put Pie, which I call devoutly, very true devotion (that is called in Latin Pies) is that which hath annexed therewith divine promises for this present life, and for that which is to come, as witnesseth Paul, 1 Tim. 4. which is nothing else but the observation of Christs Law, that in the Psalm, for the pureness thereof is called Argentum igne examinatum, purgatum septuagies, Silver tried often, and many times through the fire. It hath no chaff in it, as have Mens Traditions, but is pure and clean. Wheat, as sheweth Jeremy, writing in this wise, Quid paleis ad triticum? Propter hoc ego ad Prophetas, dicit Dominus, qui furantur verba mea unusquisque a proximo suo, & seducunt populum meum in mendaciis suis, & in erroribus suis: What is the chaff to the Wheat? Therefore behold, I will come against the Prophets, faith the Lord, that steal my Word every one from his neighbour, and deceive my people in their lies and in their errors. And this devotion is that which Saint James calleth the pure Religion of Christ, saying, Pure and immaculate Religion before God the Father is, to visit fatherless Children and Widows in their vexation. Whereby he meaneth all needy people that are succourless and helpless, with our counsel and other alms, according to our ability, whensoever we see them in need and distress.

The other part of this Religion shewed by St. James, is, That a man should keep himself clean from the World; and that do they which be not affectionate so unto any thing therein, but that they have the things of the world, or occupy the same by true dealing, so that they can find in their heart to depart from them when God shall please or charity so requireth.

Thus doing, we shall follow the exhortation of blessed Paul, which writing to the Corinthians, faith thus, Brethren, the time is short: this remaineth, that they which have Wives should be as they had them not; and those that weep should be as they wept not; and those that buy, as if they were without possession; and they that occupy this world, as though they occupied it not; for the fashion of this world passeth away. And this meaneth none other thing, but that we should not love ne dread any worldly thing, passing measure or inordinately, but God above all things, and all other things in him or for him; and he that thus doth, fulfils the commandment of Christ spoken to the rich man in the Gospel, where he faith, Go and sell all that ever thou hast, and come follow me. For he hath sold away all that ever he hath, that surely intendeth for the love of Christ to help the Poor with all that he may, Voluntat reputatur pro factis, The will is accepted for the deed, as is commonly said. And this saying both of James, and also of the Evangelist, I think verily belongeth to all Christian men that they should perform it, none except, neither lay man, ne woman (as we use to say) but to them as well as to any whom we call religious.

As concerning the Relicks and Tombs of Saints, I have said to your Lordship afore, what I do think of the Milk of our Lady, the Bloud which they say is at Hails, Norwich, and other places, with such other, whereof I trust you do what ought to be done. And I beseech God you may do therein as your office doth require, so shewing example to other Prelats to follow your Lordship in good doing, as is comely for a Primat to do; remembering always, as Paul faith, the time is short, and therefore it were good to set to hand in time.

Finally, Holy Moses when he died, would be so buried, that no man should know which was his Grave, as it is witnessed in the Book of Deuteronomy; and that (as the Expositors testify) was, because the Jews, which were prone to new fangled worshipping, should not fall into Idolatry, worshipping him as God, for the great and manifold Miracles that were wrought by him while he was alive.

To conclude, I say, It is no point of my belief, to think that Oblations and Pilgrimages at Saints Graves and Relicks, are meritorious works, ne yet, that there is any devotion in so doing. That is godly which is instituted by Scripture. If you think contrary, I would desire to know for mine instruction, what part of Scripture should make therefore against me.

¶ In the seventeenth, where you do ask, Whether the Fast in Lent, and other appointed by the Common Law, and received in common usage of Christian people (unless necessity otherwise requireth) are to be observed? I say, that in mine opinion they are to be observed, and fasting discreetly done is commendable, for so shall a man avoid sloth, and be the more ready to serve God, and also his neighbours, and thereby tame the rebellion of carnal concupiscence, according to the saying of the Poet, Sine Cere & Baccho friget Venus, without Wine and good fare, lust waxeth cold. And as St. Hierome, Venero mero astutus spernat in libidinem, The body enflamed with Wine burleth out into lust.

Yet shall not the breaking of these Fasts make a man to do deadly sin, except in his mind be some other malicious affection therewith annexed, as rashness of mind, despiteful, or such like, forsooth as no positive law of man, made without foundation of Scripture, may bind any person, so that in breaking of such, he shall therefore sin deadly. And of this sort made by man, is the Fast of Lent, and other days ordained in your Laws without authority of Scripture, which willett us to fast perpetually, eating and drinking but when need requireth (not for any voluptuousness, as many, that recount themselves great fasters, I fear have done) yea, and that sparsely, foreseeing always that our stomachs be never cloyed with drunkenness or surfeiting, as is commanded by our Saviour in Luke; but contrariwise, after the fashion rather of a certain Prince that is mentioned (I trow) in Valerius Maximus, that never rose from his Meals meat with a full stomach, but rather somewhat empty, or hungry; which, as the story testifieth, caused him to live so wonderful a long season, that a man could unneath think it possible for ones life to be so prolonged, had not such a notable Author reported it.

And (to tell the truth) I suppose the Prelats should better have persuaded the people to pure fasting by instant preaching of the Word of God, and fatherly exhortations, than by ordaining of so fore a multitude of laws and constitutions; for the nature of man is well described by Horace, saying, Nititur in vestitum semper, cupimusque negata: Look what is forbid, that we most desire, and always cover the things that be denied us. And in another Proverb, Fanis plus equo tenus rumpitur, The Rope by overmuch straining bursteth asunder. According to this said a good old Father in Cambridge. I remember his saying well yet. He was an old Doctor of Divinity; when a Legat came into England at a time, and he, with certain Bishops, had ordained, that the dedication of all Churches through England (as I remember) should be kept holy and solemnized upon one day, and Priests should

Y KING should have their Gowns made close before, with such other like Ordinances, he refuted, not condescending to have them put in execution, when his Diocesan required him; declaring how this multitude of Laws pleased him not: For we had enough and abundantly before: adding this reason, Adam being in Paradise had but one Law to observe, and yet he brake it: What other thing then shall this multitude do (quoth he) but multiply transgression? For when a Faggot is bound over-haite, the bond must break.

God therefore I beseech him send us of the sweet dew of his Heavenly Doctrine, to moisten and supple the earthly ground of our hearts, that we may grow like fashioned unto him, putting apart our old Adam, with all his dissimulation and painted shew, that is much caused by humane Laws and Constitutions, and putting on Christ, that is the very truth, and the way directing men to the same, Amen.

Unto the eighteenth, where you ask, Whether it be laudable and profitable that worshipful Images be set in Churches for the remembrance of Christ and his Saints? I say, that I know of no Images that ought to be worshipped, specially made by the hand of men: for the Psalm saith, Confusion or shame be upon them that worship and make obeisance unto carved Images, and that glory in their pictures. Moreover, Saint Augustine in his Book, De Vera Religione, saith thus, Let us not have devotion in worshipping the works of men. Or else thus, Let us not be bound to worship the works of men; for the workmen are more excellent than the things which they make, whom notwithstanding we ought not to worship. The Latin is thus, Non sit nobis Religio humanorum operum cultus, meliores enim sunt ipsi artifices qui talia fabricantur: quos tamen colere non debemus.

Lactantius also makes strongly with the same; I cannot without Book recite his saying, for he teacheth largely of the same matter. Origen also, contra Celsum, (I trow) will likewise testify; where (as I remember) he concludeth, saying, That he would have no Goldsmiths nor Gravers in a Communality, for they do but little profit or none thereto.

And Saint Gregory that was chief, either inventor that Images should be set in Churches, or else maintainer thereof, would not, as I have read, (I trow it is in an Epistle which he writeth ad Seruum) have them worshipped.

And as concerning the exciting of mens memory, I would suppose that if Christs Doctrine were so shewed and opened that people might clearly understand it (and that is the principal office of Prelates and Curates to do, by diligent teaching thereof) I think verily we should have little need of any other Images, than that which should by wholesome Doctrine be shewed unto us by word of mouth and writing, Quoniam nihil tam efficax ad commonefaciendum Discipulos, quam circa eos: No thing is so effectual to excite the remembrance of Disciples, as the lively voice of good teachers; as it is testified both by common report, and also by the sentence of Learned men.

So that I suppose if this lively Doctrine of God had aforetime been aptly and diligently opened unto the people, as Curates ought to have done, we should have such profit thereby, that we should not need to contend for setting up or taking down of other dumb stocks, and liveless stones, carved or made by men; and if Prelates would begin to ferre out Christs word (which alas for pity is not looked upon, but rather trodden down and despised, so that many are not ashamed to say, I will have no more learning in Christs Law than my Predecessors; for they that magnifie it must be fore punished, and taken for Heretics, with such other grievous words) if this Doctrine were yet let up in Churches, I say, and truly opened, that all men might have their judgment thereby reformed and made clear, I think we should not greatly need the profit that cometh by Images made of men, to excite our remembrances to live Christianly.

For that word which came from the breast of Christ himself, and was written of other that wrote and spake by the suggestion of his Spirit, the Holy Ghost, sheweth full perfectly his blessed Will, which is the true and certain Image of his mind and device. If this therefore were diligently inculcate, I think we should be transformed anew, according to the mind of Paul, which writing to the Colossians, saith thus, See that you live not one to another, after that now you have put off the old man with his works, and have put upon you the new man, which is transformed and renovate after the knowledge and image of him that made us. Yea, thus should we all be Docti a Deo, taught of God, as is said in John, and all should know God both small and great, according to the promise recited in the Hebrews; yea, thus should we be reformed to goodness, that we should have the image of God carved in our hearts full expressly. For every man is transformed into the fashion of virtuous things, that he is accustomed to read and hear. And therefore it were a great grace, if we might have the word of God diligently and often spoken and sung unto us in such wise, that the people might understand it. Yea, then it should come to pass, that Christians should sing Spiritual Psalms sitting at their works, and the Husbandman at his Plough, as wilteeth Saint Hierome.

Yea, this holy Image of Christ, I mean his blessed Doctrine, doth appoint us also to consider the works made by the hand of God, such as no man can make like, whereby, as saith Saint Paul, writing to the Romans, The invisible power and Divinity of God is known and seen by the creation of the World, of such as will consider his works that are therein by him made. Look in the Psalm, Psal. 145. Laudate Dominum de Caelis, Celi enarrant, &c. Praise ye the Lord from Heaven. The Heavens declare the Glory of God. With others. And these two Images, Gods Works and his Doctrine, have, e're any Images made by men were set up in Churches, well and sufficiently instructed the Primitive Church, and should yet instruct us well, if they were well considered; so that we should not need to fore to contend for setting up of other made by men. Whereby I have perceived much harm to arise, and no great profit; nor the Scripture maketh not for them but rather contrary. As concerning which matter, I would your Lordship would please to read the Epistle of Baruch once again, writing of the same matter.

Unto the nineteenth, where you ask, whether I believe that Prayers of men living do profit souls departed, and being in Purgatory? I made answer in the thirteenth Article.

Unto the twentieth, where you do ask, whether men merit and deserve both by their fasting, and also by other deeds of Devotion? I have shewed what I do think thereof, in the fifth demand.

In the one and twentieth, where you do ask, whether I do believe that men prohibited of Bishops to preach, as suspect of Heresie, ought to cease from preaching and teaching, until they have purged themselves of suspicion, afore an higher Judge? I say, that men may be wrongfully suspected of Heresie, either because they never thought to believe such Errors, as men by false suspicion do deem them to favour; or else, when men as well of high estate, as of low, by sinister judgment may think that to be error, which is the very truth. And of this speaketh Esay, We be to them, quoth he, that call the light darkness, and the darkness light; the truth falsehood, and the falsehood truth. As the Bishops and the Priests, with their Orator Tertullus, called Paul, saying thus before a Judge called Felix, unto whose Court they brought him to be condemned to death, We have, quoth they, gotten here a pestilent fellow, a sower of sedition or discord among all the Jews of the world, and a bringer up of the Sect of the Nazarens, which was also minded to have polluted our Temple, &c. This is to call by perverse judgment, truth falsehood. And thus did their Predecessors speak of the Prophets, yea, and of Christ himself, calling him a seducer and preacher of Heresie: which is written for our instruction. And men being thus suspected (as I would none were) ought in no wise therefore to cease neither from preaching, nor teaching.

Ensamble of this we have in the Acts of the Apostles, where is shewed, that when Peter and John had done a miracle upon a man that had been lame from his nativity (whom by the power of Christ they healed, and caused caused to go where he pleased) the people hearing of this, came running about Peter and John. Peter seeing this, did exhort the people in a Sermon, that they should not think him and his fellow Saint John, to have done this wonderful thing by their own power or holiness, but by the virtue of Christ, whom they and their head-rulers had slain.

While they were thus speaking with the people, there came upon them the Priests and Officers of the Temple, accompanied with the Sadducees, being fore displeased that they should enterprise to teach the people, and preach that men should arise from death by the Name of Christ, whom they had caused to be crucified, and therewith they laid hands upon them, and put them in ward until next day. The next day they sent for the Apostles before them, demanding by what power, and in whose name they did this miracle? Peter made answer, if you, quoth he, that are head rulers over the people, lust by examination to know by what means we did it, we would you should all know, that we did it through the Name of Christ Jesus of Nazareth, whom you did crucifie: but God did cause him to arise again. In the virtue of his Name doth this man, that afore was lame, now stand afore you here both whole and sound. For Christ is that head corner-stone, whom you cast away, which should have builded the people faith upon him, neither is there any Salvation without him.

Peter and the Apostles prohibited by the Pharisees to preach Christ.

Acts 4.

These great men seeing that Peter spake so freely, and that he, with his fellow John, were simple men, without any pompous apparel, or great guard of servants, being like idiots, and men unlearned, wondered thereat. At the last they did command them to depart out of their Council-house, whiles they should continue more largely of the matter. Afterward they called the Apostles afore them again, commanding them that they should no more preach, ne teach in the Name of Jesus. But the Apostles answered, saying, I beseech you judge better. Ought we to obey you more than God, or no? For certainly we must needs testify of those things which we have both heard and seen. Then the head Priests threatening them fore, did give them strait charge not to break their Precept, and to did let them go, not knowing any cause why they might punish them; for they feared lest the people would have taken part with the Apostles, for the people gave glory unto God for the miracle shewed by them.

Peter disobeyed the Precept of the Pharisees.

Peter delivered out of prison.

Acts 5.

Notwithstanding all these great threats, Peter wrought Miracles still amongst the people, doing them to know that glory therefore ought to be given to Jesus, by whose Power and Name they were done. Wherewith the hearts of the people melted for joy; so that they followed after the Apostles whithersoever they went.

The Primate of the Priests hearing of this, and all that were about him repleat with indignation, laid hands upon the Apostles, putting them in the common Prison. But the Angel of God in the night opened the Prison-doors, and brought them out, saying, Go you into the Temple, and stand there preaching unto the people all the words of life. That is to say, Christs Doctrine; and so they did early in the morning. Then came forth the chief Priest, and they whom he used to have about him, and called a Council, in which were all the Priests of Israel, or Ancients of Israel. So they sent unto the Prison-house to have the Apostles brought forth before them. When their servants came thence, they returned to their Masters, saying, We found the Prison fast shut round about in every part, and the keepers watching at the doors without full diligently. But when we had opened the Prison, we could find no body within.

Then as the High Priests and Officers of the Temple heard this, they were in a great perplexity, doubting what would thereof come. Then came one unto them and shewed them, saying, Behold the men that ye put in Prison are standing in the Temple, preaching unto the people. Then went they thither, and brought the Apostles with them without any violence; but they were afraid lest the people would have beaten them down with stones.

Then they caused the Apostles to be brought into their Council-house, the High Priest beginning his Proposition against the Apostles in this form: Have we not straitly commanded you (said he) that you should not preach in the Name of Christ? And see, you have filled all Hierusalem with your Doctrine. Will you bring this mans blood upon us, that we should unrighteously have caused him to suffer death? Then answered Peter and the other Apostles, saying, We ought to obey God more than any man. The God of our Fathers hath raised Jesus from death, whom you did slay, hanging on a tree. Him notwithstanding hath God raised, and by his power advanced to be our King and Saviour: by whom shall be given to all Israel, that will take repentance, forgiveness of sin.

These great Rulers hearing this, their hearts were therewith cloven asunder, and they consulted together to slay the Apostles. But one good man among their multitude advised them otherwise, whose advice they did approve. Then they called the Apostles again afore them, causing them to be scourged, and charged them no more to preach in the name of Jesus, and so did let them depart.

Then went they away out of the Council, rejoicing that God had made them worthy to suffer such rebukes for his Names sake. But yet they never ceased to teach and preach of Jesus Christ, every day in the Temple, and in all houses that they came into. This is written in the fourth, fifth, and sixth of the Acts of the Apostles, and for our instruction, doubt you not; for such practice is shewed in all ages. So that hereby you may see, when men be wrongfully suspected or infamed of Heresie, and so prohibited by Bishops to preach the Word of God, that they ought for no mans commandment to leave or stop, though they do never purge themselves afore them, for such will admit no just purgation many times, but judg in their own causes, and that as they lust, which methinks, is not at all comely. Therefore in the old Law the Priests and other Judges do sit together, hearing of matters that were in controversy.

Yet this I think reasonable, that a man justly and not causeless suspected, and namely if he be so found faulty of Heresie, ought to cease from preaching, after he is inhibited, until he have made his Purgation before some Judge. But in my rude opinion, it were necessary and convenient that our heads should not be over ready of suspicion, and so inhibiting men approved, from preaching, especially in this season, when the people do suspect them to do it more for love of themselves, and maintaining of their private lucre, or honour, than to do it for love of God, or maintenance of his honour.

In the two and twentieth, where you demand whether I believe that it is lawful for all Priests freely to preach the Word of God or no, and that in all places, at all places, and to all persons to whom they shall please, although they be not sent: I say, that Priests are called in Scripture by two distinct words, that is to wit, Presbyters & Sacerdotes. The first is to say, ancient men, Seniors, or Elders, and by that word or vocable are the Secular Judges, or such like head Officers, sometime also signified, as we read in Daniel, that they were so called which defamed and wrongfully accused Susanna: that this is seldom, and nothing so customable as those to be called Presbyteri, which are set to be Prelates in the Church to guide the same by the word of God and his blessed Doctrine, that is the rod of direction, and the foundation of Christs Faith. And Priests thus called Presbyteri, in the Primitive Church (what time were but few traditions and ordinances to let us from the strait trade or infirmation made by Christ and his Apostles) were the very same and none other but Bishops, as I shewed you in the first part of mine answer, by the authority of St. Hierome.

Paul also recordeth the same right evidently in the first to Titus, in this form: I left thee Titus (quoth blessed Paul) behind me in Crete, that thou shouldst set in due order such things as lack, or be not else perfectly framed, and that thou shouldst set Priests in every Town, like as I did appoint thee, if any be without reproach, or blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful children, not given to riot, or that be not unruly, for so ought a Bishop

Answer to the 12 Article.

Priests whether they ought to preach, that they be not sent.

Bishops or Presbyteri all one.

Priests have two names set in Scripture Presbyters & Sacerdotes.

Titus 1.

Bishop

KING I. Bishop to be, &c. These are not my words, but Saint Paul's in the Epistle to Titus. Where you may see that a Priest called Presbyter, should be the same that we call a Bishop, whom he requireth a little after, to be able by wholesome Doctrine of Gods Scripture, to exhort the good to follow the same Doctrine, and if any shall speak against it, to reprove them thereby. And mark ye how he would have a Bishop (otherwise called an ancient man or a Priest) to make exhortation by holy Scripture, and thereby to reprove them that shall speak against the truth, and not to condemn them by might or authority only, or else by traditions of men made in General Councils. And as many as are in this wise Priests, which are commonly called Presbyteri (otherwise Bishops) such as in the Church are set to take Cure of souls, and to be spiritual Pastors, ought to preach freely the Word of God in all places and times convenient, and to whomsoever it shall please them, if they suppose and see that their preaching should edifie and profit.

And whereas you add this Particle; Though they were not sent; I say, that all such are chosen to be Preachers, and therefore. For of this speaketh St. Gregory in his Pastorals, in this wise; Prædicationis quippe officium suscipit, quisquis ad sacerdotium accedit: Whosoever taketh Priesthood upon him, taketh also upon him the Office of preaching. Yea, your Law reporteth in like manner, Distinct. 43. where it is thus said, A Priest ought to be honest, that he may show honesty both in words and conditions. Wherefore it is said in the Canticles, The cheeks of the Sponse, that is, to wit, of Preachers, are to be compared to a turtle Dove.

Where is moreover added, He must also have the gift of teaching, because (as faith S. Hierome) innocent conversation, without speech or preaching, how much it is available by example giving, so much doth it hurt again by silence keeping; for Wolves must be driven away by barking of Dogs, and by the Shepherds staff, which (as the Glo's sheweth) signifieth preaching, and sharp words of the Priest. And this I understand of gods as should be Priests elect both by God and Men, in such Church, whose office is to preach.

authority.

And though many of them which now do minister in the Church, and are elect by Bishops, otherwise than after the manner of Christs Institution, and the form of the Primitive Church, neither do, nor can preach; yet ought not the multitude of such to be laid for an authority against me, or other, that are compelled to shew the truth and right ordinances of the Apostles, that was used aforetime in the Primitive Church: God bring it in again. Neither ought we for the negligence of Bishops, which have chosen such an ignorant multitude, whereby the principal duty of Priests is grown out of knowledge, when we do shew you thereof, to be so enforced by a Book-Oath, and therefore noted as Heretics, imprisoned and burned.

Sacredot.

Other he called Priests in the New Testament, by this word Sacerdotes, that is to say, I think, Sacrificers. And thus as Christ was called Rex & Sacerdos, King and Priest, so be all Christian men in the New Testament (as is testified Apoc. 1.) by Christ made Kings and Priests. The words in the Apocalyp be thus, To Jesus Christ which hath loved us, and washed us from our sins through his blood, and made us Kings and Priests unto God, even his Father unto him be glory and rule for ever and ever. Amen.

Bede upon

Thus faith S. John, speaking of all Christian people. In like manner it is said, 1 Pet. 2. where he writeth unto all Christian men, You, quoth he, be a chosen Generation, a royal Priesthood, an holy People. S. Bede expounding the same (as my remembrance doth serve) hath testified plainly with me. And S. Augustine, I wot well, in divers places recordeth that all Christian men be so called, Regale Sacerdotium. And likewise doth Faber, in his Commentaries upon the same place. Whosoever looketh upon the Treatise called Unio dissidentium, shall find a multitude of ancient Fathers sayings, declaring the same.

How all men are Priests.

But this may yet seem a strange thing and a new, that all persons should be called Priests, and that in Scripture, which cannot lie. Truth it is indeed, it may seem strange to divers, as it did to me and many other, when we read it first; because we never read he heard of the same before; and so did Christs Doctrine and his Apostles seem new to his Audience, when he himself preached.

Albeit he yet proved his doings and sayings by authority of the Law and Prophets, as is shewed in the first of the Romans, where Paul reporteth; That he was chosen afore to be a Minister of the Gospel that was promised before by the Prophets. And our Saviour telleth the same in St. John, saying to the Jews, Think you not, quoth he, that I shall accuse you before my Father. There is one to accuse you, which is Moses, in whom ye do trust. But if ye believed Moses, you should certainly believe me, for he writeth of me, &c. Likewise a little above, he biddeth them search the Scriptures, for they make report of him.

But although these sayings do seem new, for lack that we have not had old familiarity with Scripture, and usage in reading the same (God amend and help it, when it shall please him) yet truly so standeth it written as I have said, and so it is interpreted by the Doctors above named, and so was it preached of a certain Doctor also of Divinity in London, the second day of Advent last past, in this sentence. I wote not whether these were the self words or no. The Church, quoth the Doctor, is nothing, else but the Congregation of faithful people: as you all, quoth he to the people, are of the Church, as well as I, or any other, if you be of God. And likewise we and all men are Priests, but yet are not all alike ordained Ministers, said he, to consecrate the Body of Christ in the Church. Thus said the Preacher: whom when I see opportunity, I dare be bold to name. And these I say ought not all to preach openly in general Conventions or Assemblies, neither can they, but they rather should come to learn: yet privately are they bound for instruction of their servants, children, kinsfolks, and such like, to speak that should be for the destruction of vice, and increase or upholding of virtue, whensoever time and place requireth, as sheweth St. Paul, saying in this wise, You that are Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath or anger, but bring them up in the Doctrine and Discipline of the Lord.

In the three and twentieth, where you do ask, whether I believe that it is lawful for lay-men of both kinds, that is to wit, both men and women to sacrifice and preach the Word of God? I say, that it is meet for none, in mine opinion to preach openly the Word of God, except they be chosen and elect to the same, either by God, or solemnly by men, or else by both, and therefore St. Paul calleth himself in all his Epistles, an Apostle of God, that is to wit, a messenger of God. And to the Galatians he writeth thus, Paul an Apostle, not sent of men, nor by man, but by Jesus Christ. Also to the Romans, How shall men preach truly, quoth he, except they be sent?

Notwithstanding, I say this, both by supposition of Gods Law, and also of Laws written in the Decrees, that in time of great necessity lay-people may preach, and that of both kinds, both men and women, as you may see in the Epistle to the Corinthians, where he faith, That it is a shame for a woman to speak in a multitude or congregation. Yet in another place he faith, That every woman praying or prophesying, having nothing upon her head doth dishonour her head.

To this accords the Prophecie of Joel recited Act. 2. Joel 2. where in the person of God it is said thus, I shall pour out of my spirit upon all flesh, and both your sons and your daughters shall prophesie. Thus did Anna the Prophetess, daughter of Panneel, give praise unto Christ in the Temple, and spake of him to all men of Jerusalem, that looked after the redemption of Israel.

This also doth yet speak unto us in the Scripture the Virgin Mary, by the Song which she made, that is daily recited in the Church, called Magnificat. Yea Stephen also being no Priest, but a Deacon, made a wonderful good Sermon, Act. 7. This also willett your Decrees, Dist. 9. de Confe. where it is thus said, A woman although she is learned and holy, may not presume to teach men in the Congregation, ne Baptize, except necessity requireth. So that where need is, I shall add this, but not without the mind of him that wrote the Law, like as a woman may baptize, so may she teach the Word of God, or preach, as is declared more plainly, Cap. 16. Quest. 1. & in Glossa. 11. Cap. ad iudicium. Distinct. 18. And I beseech God, that for lack of true and well learned Officers such necessity do not come now upon us, that such shall need to take upon them to preach.

There is a learned man, which in a Dialogue that he maketh betwixt a rude Abbot and a Gentlewoman having skill in learning, jesteth, but with pretty earnest (as his manner is) and giveth a watch-word touching somewhat my purpose. It is in the end of the Dialogue. The Gentlewoman answering the Abbot for that he had partly checked her, because she was quick in utterance of learning. Sir, smooth life, if you continue therein so dull as you have done, and daily do, the world perceiving it (as they begin to grow quick in fiddle) it is to be feared, lest they will set you beside the Saddle, and put us in your rooms.

As concerning Sacrifice-doing, (do I understand by the word which you do use, Libare, not knowing else what it should mean) I say that it is lawful for all men and women to do Sacrifice, of what sort soever they be: but I mean not by Sacrifice doing, to say Mass, as Priests used to do, thereunto appointed: but like as Christian people be Sacerdotes, that is to say, Sacrificers, as is shewed afore, so ought they to offer, and do offer Spiritual sacrifices, as writeth Saint Paul to the Romans, saying, I beseech you brethren, for the love of God mercy, that you will give your body a living (Sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, being a reasonable worshiping). In that he faith our body should be a sacrifice, he would have it flain: for that was the manner, that all beasts that were wont to be sacrificed, should be flain flit. But he joyneeth therewith, Living; saying, Give your body to be a living (Sacrifice). So that he would we should continue to live in this body to Gods pleasure, but fleeing the evil lusts and appetites thereof, and so flail our worshipment be reasonable, if we do die, give unto our reason overmuch of the Brinot whereby it may run at riot, in following fleshy concupiscence, and wicked vanity or arrogancy, as when men will take in hand to devise, by their own wit, a more godly way of living than is institute by Christ (which is the wisdom of his Heavenly Father) saying that his is not sufficient enough for us to follow. Of whom it is said by the Elay 29. Prophet Elay in these words, This people approach near unto me, and bowdown me with their lips, but their heart is far from me: but they do worship me in vain, teaching Doctrines that are laws or precepts of men.

Rom. 12 Then Paul proceedeth shewing of this Christian sacrifice, saying, And apply not your selves unto the fashion of this world, but be ye transformed by renovation of your mind, that you may know what is the will of God: what is good, acceptable, and righteous before him. See how he would have us do this sacrifice, and mortifie our lusts, in refusing the corrupt fashion and behaviour of the world, altering our minds by a new way, by knowing the Will of God, and following after the same.

Another manner of sacrifice which he requireth, is sacrifice of that we should always offer unto God the sacrifice of praise, Psalm 134. that is to wit, the fruits of our lips, that Ofsee calleth Tributus Labiorum, giving laud unto his name; and that we Ofc. 14. should not forget to do good, and to be beneficial to our Heb. 13. neighbours: For in such sacrifice (saith he) God hath delighted.

Thus I say, that by plain suffrage of your Law in the Decrees, and also of Scripture, lay-persons in necessity and in time of need may lawfully preach or shew the Word of God, and also do sacrifice; but I think, except great need require, they ought not so to do.

Thus have you herein my mind: which if it be not firm and substantial, I will yet reform it when any better is shewed, as I will also do in all other things; for I am not in this yet fully certified. Albeit methink the Decrees do pass evidently with me.

Excommunication. Excommunication is a spiritual censure consisting of others.

To ¶ The twenty-ath where you do ask, Whether Excommunication, denounced by the Pope against all Heretics, do oblige and bind them before God? I say, Th^t it bindeth them before God, if they be lawfully denounced, that is, if they be in very deed, as they be named, and if he denounce them so to be out of his own proper head or affection only, but with the consent of other gathered with him in Christs name, for the behoof of Christs Church: For so used Saint Paul, when he did Excommunicate the man of Corinth, which had full horribly defiled his mother-in-law, as appeareth I Cor. 5.

Mat. 18. ¶ And the same form declareth the Gospel, Mat. 18.

in these words, If thy brother hath trespassed against thee, go and reprove him betwixt thee and him alone. If he will bear thee thou hast won thy brother. If he will not hear thee, take one or two with thee, that in the report of two or three every thing may be assured. If he will not hear them, thrust him into the congregation. If he will not follow the mind of the congregation, let him be unto thee as a Pagan, or a notable Infidel. For verily I say unto you, whatsoever you shall bind upon earth, shall be bound in Heaven. So that such Excommunication ought to be done (as methinketh) by the Congregation assembled together with their Pastor, whose advice they ought principally to cleave and follow, if he be virtuous and godly.

And thus it is convenient to be done. For the Pope is made of flesh as well as other men, and therefore he may sometime judge awry, cursing the blessed, and blessing the cursed. And likewise may other Prelates, judging the Christian to be Hereticks, and Hereticks Christian. Of whom it is also written in the Prophesie of Ezechiel, Mortificabant animas que non moriuntur, & vivificabant Ezek. 13 animas que non vivunt: They flew the souls of them that should not die, and gave life to the souls that should not live. As did the Pharisees when they did call Christ out of the Vineyard, which signifieth the Church, Mat. 21. Mat. 21. And as our Saviour prophesied in the nineteenth of John, saying unto his Disciples, There shall be (quoth he) some that shall Excommunicate you: yea, and the time shall come, that whosoever shall flay you, shall think to do honour to God; and this shall they do unto you, because they do neither know my Father nor me. These words were written in the Gospel of John. 19. Whereby you see, that for lack of knowledge of God, which is taught and feen by the light of Scripture, Christ prophesied how lewd men should lewdly Excommunicate the good, yea and flay his true servants, thinking through such facks to please God, and to do him good service.

Wherefore I end, O Lord, I beseech thee, the knowledge of thee to be dilated upon earth, which Ouse bewaileth fore, seeing it absent, whereby mens judgments may be rectified, and so do accordingly to the leading of the same.

¶ In the five and twentieth, where you do ask whether every Priest is bound to say daily his Mattens and Evening-Prayer, according as it is ordained by the Church, or whether he may leave them, unaid, without offence or deadly sin ? I say that Prayer in Scripture is much commended, and many great and unmeasurable benefits are shewed to ensue thereupon, that men should the more lustily give themselves thereto. With prayer doth Saint Paul bid us to fight in divres places, continuing in the same against our ghostly enemies. A figure of this is read in Exod. 17 verses, when the Israelites fought in battel against a Nation of Infidels ; I trow their Captain was called Amaaleck, Moses stood upon a mountain to behold what should be the conclusion, and lifting up his hands prayed that it might well succed with the Israelites, but in long holding them up, at last his fervor began to grow cold and faint, and his hands lagged downward, and ever as his hands grew heavy (which signifieth that his affection in praying abated and waxed cold) the Infidels prevailed, but as he kept them heaved upward (whereby was meant intensive prayer of a devout mind) he purchased victory to the Israelites. Aaron and Hur, which indited the Law to the people, and were thereof the Interpreters, stood with Moses ; which always as they did fee his arms to faint, did uphold them, so that finally the victory came unto Israel.

By Moses is signified, as few great Clerks, Devotion : By Aaron and Har, the knowledge of Gods Doctrine. Which two things (Devotion I mean, and Knowledge) all men had need to have present with them : for Devotion doth elevate the mind to God : but knowledge doth sustain or uphold the same, that it may with courage continue not falling down, but so alway doth incense and kindle it, that it mounteth up into the presence of our Heavenly Father, where they favour together far more sweetly than any fumigation either of Juniper, Incense, or whatsoever else, be they never so pleasant, do favour in any mans nose.

Therefore Saint Paul seeing how necessary the knot of these two, Devotion and Knowledge of Gods Will, was, which is shewed in Scripture (as teacheth Saint Cyprian in these words, The Will of God, faith he, is that which Christ hath taught and wrought) Paul, I say, seeing this wished to be excommunicate and separate from God, to have the Jews come to the knowledge of Christs Church, which is the only right way to salvation, for whom he prayed right studiously, as appeareth a little after, in the tenth Chapter to the Romans, saying, I bear them record, that they have a zeal and devotion to God, but not according to the knowledge of Christs Doctrine, &c. Where you may clearly see how the Jews (as St. Paul, which is no lyer, recordeth here) had a zeal and devotion to God, but they lacked knowledge therewith. Moses was amongst them, but Aaron was away: whose absence pained Paul so fore, that he ravished with exceeding charity, wished no small harm unto himself upon condition that the multitude of them might be holpen, and have better judgment, even to be separated from God.

in saying of Mattens, yea rather contrariwise he sheweth disliking, and so he doth also in his Exposition of Psalm 1. Beatus vir, where the Text maketh agreeably for the same: it is written in this wise, Blessed is the man that hath not gone after the counsel of the wicked, and hath not stood in the way of sinners, ne sit in the chair of pestilence but hath his will in the Law of God, and shall misse or be occupied in it both day and night.

A great promise put of God to such blessed exercise, which we may call right devotion, or true godliness. For Paul defining godliness, saith thus, Pietas ad omnia iustitiae est, ut quas promissiones habetis praesentis vitae & futurae. That is, to wit, Godliness is profitable unto all things, for that hath annexed thereto promises of this life present, and of the life to come.

They are condemned you wot well, and I perhaps shall have a little less favour because I tell the truth freely, for such things are called offensive. But would God, that all persons so thinking, would remember what answer Christ made unto his Disciples in the 15th of Matthew, when they came to him, and warned him to beware, saying, Tu know that the Pharisees are offended, hearing such words spoken. I will leave out Christs answer, lest I should be thought over free and plain in taxing or uttering of abusive, and speak no further.

Mat. 15.

A like demand, with answer therunto annexed, shall you find in the eleventh of Luke, where Christ would not refrain to speak any deal more easily. Therefore I beseech them that deem me (God wot whether righteously, or no) slanderously, to revise the said places, and then counsel me to do that shall be most expedient, to follow, if their charity will so require. Yet would I that all people should know that I do not reprove that saying of the fifteen Ours, which (so far forth as my remembrance doth serve) is a very good prayer, or such like prayers; ne would I that any person should think me to disallow any secret sayings; for such, not only present with you, but even from hence absent, have I commended in earnest speaking, and so intend to do by the assistance of Gods grace. Nevertheless such vain promises I do abhor, as be with them annexed, with the upholders of the same. For such do cause vain confidence in the people, withdrawing and seducing them from the right belief of the Gospel (which Christian men ought only to build their faith upon) unto new inventions of vanity. S. Paul calleth such, old womens tales, where he writeth unto Timothy, bidding him to beware of them, and to throw them away.

And this I say again, That the Mattens-saying hath no more promise of God made to the sayers, than hath the other above named, for they were infinite by the fantasie or mind of men, and not by the rule of Scripture. Neither do I think the Priests which will truly follow the rule of God written in the Bible, ought so to be charged or incumbered with saying of them, that they thereby should be hindered from the study of that, which know belongeth principally both to their owne souls sal-

To this accordeth that is written in Luke, whereas our Saviour speaketh to all his Church signified in the person of St. Peter. Peter, quoth he, I have prayed that thy faith should not fail, and thou being converted, go then about to confirm thy brethren. So that he would have Peter established first in faith of his sure Doctrine, and then to go forth as he did, to teach other to be grounded in the same likewise. And thus ought all Priests to be called Presbyters, which will be Ministers in the Church; for so biddeth St. Peter in his first Epistle, in the last Chapter, saying thus, I beseech the Priests, quoth he, that are among you, I myself being a Priest, and a witness bearer of Christs afflictions, and also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed, see that you with all diligence do feed the flock of Christ, taking care of the same, not as if forced thereto, but willingly, not desiring filthy lucre, but with a loving mind; neither as men exercising dominion over the children or inheritors of God, but so that you be patterns or ensamples to the flock. See how he requirith of Priests, that they should spend all their diligence to feed Christs flock, and to shew good ensample of living, making no mention of long Mattens-saying, which then were not mentioned nor spoken of.

According to this, it is written in your Decrees after this form; ignorance, faith the Law (mark it well I beseech you all) is the mother of all errors. Which ought to be eschewed especially of Priests, that among the people of God have taken upon them the office of preaching: Priests are commanded to read holy Scriptures, as faith Paul the Apostle to Timothy, Give heed to reading, exhortation, and teaching, and continue always in the same. Let Priests therefore know Holy Scripture, and let all their labour be in preaching and teaching, and let them edifie all men both in knowledge of Faith, and in Discipline of good works. These be the words of the Law in the Decrees, Dist. 38. Wherefore you see how the Law lamenteth ignorance in all persons, for it is the original of all errors. God send us therefore the knowledge of his true Gospel. It biddeth that ignorance should be utterly eschewed, and principally of Priests, and labour and diligence should be bestowed all in reading of Scripture, and preaching the same, bringing in for the same purpose the saying of the Apostle, which willett it in like manner.

Moreover, it requirith that Priests should give all their study to edifie other in faith and virtuous living. Whereof I do gather both by the saying of the Prophet, that willett us to be studious in the Law of God day and night, and by the saying of the Apostle, which would have Timothy to be occupied ever in reading and teaching, and by the report of your own Law, which faith likewise, That a Priest ought to bestow all his labour in reading and preaching: so that a Priest set thus truly to study, that he may stablish himself in the faith of Christs Doctrine, intending after to help other with true preaching of the same, or doing other like deeds of charity, assigned in the Law of God, shall not offend deadly, if so spending his time, he omitteth to say Mattens, which is an Ordinance of men.

Nevertheless, concerning the huge multitude of such as be now made Priests by negligent admission of Bishops, and their own presumption, that labour to be made Priests before they be any Clerks, and e're ever they know what is the very office of a Priest, do not fear to take upon them, if they may attain thereto, to be a Curate, they recke not of how many, so they may get a good lump of money, never minding after that the study of Scripture, after they are come to Dominus vobiscum: for such I do think long Mattens to be needful, to refrain them from other enormities that they should else run into. Of which you may be weary to see the experience thereof daily arising. Yea, and if such would be content to admit it, I would every one Mattens were as long to them as five, except they could bestow their time better.

¶ In the six and twentieth where you do ask, whether I believe that the Heads or Rulers by necessity of salvation are bound to give unto the people Holy Scripture in their Mother-language? I say that I think they are bound to see that the people may truly know Holy Scripture, and I do not know how that may be done so well, as by giving it to them truly translated in the Mother-tongue, that they may have it by them at all times to pass the time godly, whensoever they have leisure thereto, like as they have in France under the French Kings priviledge, and also the priviledge of the Emperor, and so do I know that they have had it these fifty four years in France at the least, and it was translated at the request of a King called, I trow, Lewis, as appeareth by the priviledge put in the beginning of the Book.

In like manner have they it in Flanders, Printed with the priviledge of the Emperor, in Almain also and Italy, and I suppose through all Nations of Christendom. Likewise hath it been in England, as you may find it in the English story called Polychronicon. There it is shewed how when the Saxons did inhabit the Land, the King at that time, which was a Saxon, did himself translate the Psalter into the Language that then was generally used. Yea I have seen a Book at Crowland-Abbey, which is kept there for a Relick, the Book is called Saint Guthlakes Psalter, and I weene verily it is a Copy of the same that the King did translate for it is neither English, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, nor Dutch, but somewhat sounding to our English, and as I have perceived since the time I was last there, being at Amwerp, the Saxon Tongue doth sound likewise after our, and it is to ours partly agreeable. In the same story of Polychronicon is also shewed, how that Saint Bede did translate the Gospel of John into English, and the Author of the same Book promised that he would translate into English all the Bible, yea and perhaps he did so, but I wot not how it cometh to pass all such things be kept away. They may not come to light, for there are some walking privily in darkness, that will not have their doings known. It is no lyke that is spoken in the Gospel of John, Omnis qui male agit, odit lucem: All that do naughtily hate the light, and will not have their doings known. And therefore they keep down the light strongly; for that opened and generally known, all wrongful conveyance should anon be disclosed and reprov'd, yea and all men should see anon, whether those that hold against unrighteousness, being therefore sometime horribly infamed and slandered, named Heretics and Schismatics, were in deed as they be called or not.

Yea moreover, I did once see a Book of the New Testament, which was not unwritten by my estimation on this hundred years, and in my mind right well translated after the example of that which is read in the Church in Latin. But he that shewed it me said, he durst not be known to have it by him, for many had been punished aforetime for keeping of such, and were convicted therefore of Heresie.

Moreover, I was at Pauls Crofs, when the New Testament Imprinted of late beyond the Sea, was first forefended, and truly my heart lamented greatly, to hear a great man preaching against it, which shewed forth certain things that he noted for hideous errors to be in it, that I, yea, and not I, but likewise did many other think verily to be none. But (alack for pity) malice cannot say well. God help us all, and amend it.

So that to conclude, I think verily it would be profitable and expedient, that the Holy Scriptures were delivered, by authority of the Head-rulers, unto the people, truly translated in the vulgar Tongue, in like manner as it is in all other Countries. And whereas you add, whether they be bound by necessity of salvation to deliver it to the people, I will not so narrowly touch that point now; but I say that they are bound by right and equity to cause it to be delivered unto the people in the vulgar Tongue, for their edifying, and consolation which the people by Gods grace should gather thereof, that now it is like they want, and are destitute of.

¶ In the seven and twentieth, where you do demand, Whether it be lawful for the Rulers, for some cause, upon their reasonable adviement, to ordain that the Scripture should not be delivered unto the people in the vulgar language? All men may here see, that whosoever devised these questions, thought not contrary (whatsoever they will yet say) but that it is good for the people to have the Scripture in the vulgar tongue, and that they thought that if so saying could not be well reprov'd; and therefore are layed out all these additions, as it were to snare and trapme in: Whether the heads be bound, and that by necessity of falsivation, to deliver it to the People: and whether, for opportunity of time, they may ordain to refrain it for some cause, and by some reasonable adviement of them taken. Sed frustra jacturæ ante oculos pennatorum, But without cause you spread the Net before the eyes of the Birds or Fowls. I shew you plainly, that notwithstanding all these things, in mine opinion it was not well done to inhibit it, and worse, that the Bishops have not fith amended it, if so be they could, that the People might have it to use and occupy veruolently.

And here I will add one reason. The Scripture is the spiritual food and sustentance of mans soul. This is shewed to be true in many places of Scripture: like as other corporal meat is the food of the body. Then if he be an unkind Father that keepeth bodily meat away the space of a week or a month from his children; it should seem that our Bishops be no gentle Pastors or Fathers, that keep away the food of mens souls from them (specially when other do offer the same) both months, years, and ages. Neither do I see any opportunity of time or reasonable adviements that should cause it to be withdrawn and taken away, but the contrary rather, for it is reasonable, convenient, and needful for men to eat their meat ever when they are right hungry, and blessed are they that hunger and thirst after the word of God, which teacheth to know him and to do his pleasure at all times; for that we do crave every day in our Pater Noster, saying, Give us Lord our ther I believe that the Pope may make Laws and Statutes to bind all Christian men to the observance of the same, under the pain of deadly sin, so that such Laws and Statutes be not contrary to the Law of God? I say that it may be true that is written in the Decrees, that is to wit, I say whether they bind to deadly sin, or not. I say that the Pope may make Laws bind all Christian men, for the Greeks and the Romanians will (as you do know full well, never admit them, but do refuse them utterly; so that I do not find that his Laws may bind all Christian men.

Finally, I cannot see that he hath authority to make Laws, binding men to the observance of them under pain of deadly sin, more than hath the King or the Emperor: And to say sooth, I say, (as I have said afore) I think verily that the Church was more full of vertue before the Decrees or Decretals were made (which is not very long ago, but in the time of Constantine, if it be true that is reported in the Decrees, Dist. 15. Cap. Canonis generalium) than it hath been since: God repair it, and restore it again to the ancient purity and perfection.

¶ In the thirtieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe that the Pope and other Prelats, and their deputies in spiritual things, have power to Excommunicate Priests, and Lay people that are inobedient and sturdy from entering into the Church, and to suspend or lett them from ministrations of the Sacraments of the same: I think that the Pope and other Prelats have power to Excommunicate both Priests and Lay men, such as be rebellious against the Ordinance of God, and disobedient to his Law: For such are sundred from God, afore the Prelats do give sentence, by reason of their sin and contumacy, according as it is said in Esaiah by Almighty God: Teu sine quo tu he, do make division betwixt you and me. And the Prelats by right judgment, should pronounce of sinners as they do find them, as that is to pronounce such to be Excommunicate of God, and unworthy to Minister any Sacraments, or to be conversant with Christian folk that will not amend. For thus biddeth Paul, 1 Cor. 5. 1 Cor. 5. If any amongst you called a brother, shall be a glutton, or a covetous person, or a worshipper of images or idols, or a Raylor, or a Drunkard, or an Excommunicator, see that with such you eat no meat. Such ought to be put out of the Church, and not be suffered to come within it.

I am not certain that Prelats have any such power: And though they had. I doubt whether charity should permit them to shew it forth and execute it without singular discretion. For in Churches ought the word of God to be declared and preached, through the which the sturdy coming thither and hearing it, might soon be smitten with Compunction and Repentance, and thereupon come to amendment. This confirmeth well a Law made in the Council of Carthage, which is this: A Bishop ought to prohibit no person to come into the Church, and to hear the Word of God, whether he be Gentle or Jew, or Heretick, until the Mass time of them that are called Catechumens. De Consecr. distinct. 1.

Moreover, where you speak of Prelats Deputies, I think such be but little behoovable to Christs flock. It were necessary and right, that as the Prelats themselves will have the Revenues, Tithes, and Oblations of their Benefices, they themselves should labour and teach diligently the word of God therefore, and not to thrust the labour from one unto another till all be left (pity it is) undone. Such doth S. John call Fures & latrones. Thieves and Murderers, although they make never so goodly a worldly shew outward, and bear a stout port.

This I say, that the Pope and other Prelats have power to Excommunicate rebels against Gods Ordinance, and to suspend them from receiving or ministrating the Sacrament: But I am not sure, that they have power to suspend them from out of Churches, especially when Gods Word is there preached, unless the sinners be so fore desperate, that they scorn the same. And I would that every Prelate receiving his living of Benefices, should himself work in the same, specially in true preaching of Christs Doctrine, witho it winding his own neck out of the yoke, and charging therewith other called Deputies or Vicars, Curates, and such like. For God would have every man to get his

¶ In the one and thirtieth, where you ask, Whether Faith only, without good works, may suffice unto a man fallen into sin after his Baptism, for his Salvation and justifying? I say, that it is the usage of Scripture to say, Faith only doth justify, and works Salvation, afore a man do any other good works: and that is shewed by many authorities both of Scripture, and also of many holy Fathers, in a Treatise called, Unio dissidentium, which I would to Christ, as it is in French, and other Languages, we had it truly translated into English. And truly I do think in this matter (like as is shewed by many authorities of holy Fathers) that a man fallen into sin after Baptism shall be saved through Faith, and have forgiveness by Christs Patience, although he doth no more good deeds thereafter: As when a man having short life, lacketh leisure to exercise other deeds of mercy. Notwithstanding, true Faith is of such virtue and nature, that when opportunity cometh, it cannot but work plentifully deeds of charity, which are a testimony and witness bearer of mans true Faith. This declareth Saint Augustin upon John: I trow it is where he expoundeth this Text: Si diligitis me, praecepta mea servate: If ye love me keep my commandments. Whereas within a little after he speaketh in this wise, Opera bona non faciunt iustum, sed justificatus facit bona opera. That is to say, good works make not a just or a righteous man, but a man once justified doth good works.

¶ In the two and thirtieth, where you ask, Whether a Priest marrying a Wife, and that without the Dispensation of the Pope, begetting also Children of her without slander giving, do sin deadly? I say, that he doth not so much offend as those which in Wales (as I have heard say) and also in many parts beyond the Sea, or rather in all places, do give openly dispensations, for money to Priests to take Concubines: Neither doth he offend so much as the purchasers of such Dispensations: For they on every hand do clearly commit Fornication and Adultery, utterly forbidden by Gods Law; and the Priest of whom speaketh your demand, offendeth but mans Law, if he do that. For in the Decrees it is written, I wien it be in a Glof, and certainly I wot not whether it be in the Text or no, I can lightly turn it to having a Book. The sentence is thus; Presbyter fornicans est plus puniendus quam uxorem ducent. That is to say, A Priest doing Fornication ought to be punished more than one which hath married a Wife. Finally, I think such a Priest as before is named in your demand, sinneth not deadly.

Priests as well Latine as Greeke, permitted alike in the Scripture.

¶ In the three and thirtieth, where you ask, Whether a Latine Priest, after he hath taken the Order of Priesthood, being fore and oft troubled and stirred with prickings of lust and lechery, and therefore marrying a Wife for a remedy of the same, do sin deadly? I say that a Latine Priest and a Greeke Priest is all one before God, if they follow both one rule of Christ, left to us in holy Scripture; neither doth Christ put any such difference, but the one hath by that rule the same liberty that another, and no more nor less, for there is the same God in Greece, that is here, and hath left one way for us to live after, both here and there. And therefore, I cannot see by his Law, but that a Latine Priest may marry, as well as they do. And if the Greeks should not follow Christs Law in believing the same, and living there after, you would call them Hereticks. But that will not the Pope have done. Wherefore seeing they do let Priests marry, affirming it may so be done by the Law of God, and yet are not reputed Hereticks, why should other men that say the same be called Hereticks, or be therefore burned? Therefore following the Law of God, I make the same answer of a Latine Priest, that I made before of all Priests, that a Priest, not having the gift of chastity, is bound to marry, for avoiding Fornication.

¶ In the thirty fourth, where you ask, Whether ever I prayed for John Wickliffe, John Hus, and for Hierom of Prague condemned of Heresie in the Council of Constance, or any one of them, with they dyed, and whether I have openly or secretly done any such deeds of charity for them, affirming them to be in Bliss and saved? I say, that I never prayed for any of them, so far forth as I can remember. And though I had, it followeth not, that in so doing I should be an Heretick. For you wot well, that there is a mighty great Country called Bohemia, which yet do follow (as men say) that same Doctrine, which John Hus, and Hierom of Prague taught their Ancestors, whom (as I trow) neither the Pope nor you do recount Hereticks and Infidels.

¶ In the thirty fifth, where you ask, Whether I have recounted and said them or any of them to be Saints, and worshipped them as Saints? I say that in secret and hid things which I do not perfectly know, I follow the Counsel of Saint Paul, which biddeth that we should not judge over soon, but to abide (unless the things which we should pass upon, be the more evident) unto the coming of the Lord, which shall illuminate and shew forth clearly things, that now lie hid in darkness. Therefore hitherto have I neither judged with them, nor against them, but have resigned such sentence to the knowledge and determination of God, whose judgment I wot infallible.

And whereas you say, they were condemned of Heresie in the Council of Constance: If so the Council did right, God shall allow it, I doubt not, and that shall suffice to have commendation of him: So that it is not need to ask of me whether the Acts of the same are commendable or no? Neither can I give any direct answer thereto; for I do not verily know them. And though I had, yet am not I verily persuaded, that I, because the Council hath condemned them, must therefore believe them to be damned: For a Council, as I wien, may sometime slip beside the right truth; but what that Council did in condemning them, I time slip away. Cannot precisely say; God woteth. Yea, and that one singular person may judge more rightly, than a great multitude assembled in a Council, appeareth by Gods Law, and by the Law of man. Experience herof may you see by the Council that is spoken of in the eleventh of John, where is shewed, that after our Saviour had restored Lazarus to life, the Bishops and Pharisees then were gathered together in a Council, saying; What shall we do? Truth it is that this man Jesus doth many Miracles, and if we suffer him thus, all the world will believe him; whereupon the Romans will come, and put us out of Jerusalem, our dwelling place, and destroy our Nation. At which time Caiphas did arise, shewing forth his sentence, which the whole Council did admit.

Joh. 11.

In like wise is shewed, Acts the fifth, wherein a Council of the Bishops and Priests assembled to know what punishment should be done unto Christs Apostles, because they preached in the name of Christ, contrary to the precept of them (for they before had commanded the Apostles no more to speak in Christs name) there among a thred multitude of them gathered together, did rise a certain man, called Gemaliel (a pitiful thing verily to see but one good man in such a great Convocation or Council of Priests, that should be the lights of virtue to all the people) which Gemaliel was a Doctor of the Law, and had in good reputation among the people; much like he was, as seemed to me, to Doctor Collet, sometime Dean of Pauls in London, while Gemaliel he lived. I may come no nearer to name some other of our time, lest I should be thought offensive. This Gemaliel did bid the Apostles go aside for a while out of the Council, or Convocation House; and so he spake unto the other Priests or Bishops in the Council thus; You men of Israel (quoth he) take heed to yourselves what ye shall do unto these men the Apostles: for afore this time have risen one called Theudas, and after him another named Judas of Galilee; which have turned the people after them, and in conclusion they perished, and all they that followed after them vanished away. And now, quoth he, I say unto you, refrain from hurting these men the Apostles, and let them alone, or suffer them. For if the enterprise and work that they have made be of men, undoubtedly it shall perish, and be foredone: but if, quoth he, it be of God, you cannot

The Council

KING cannot foredo it. And this I tell you, said Gamaliel, lest you should be found to strive and fight against God.

Councils may and do

Unto this sentence of Gamaliel, did all the other of the Convocation or Parliament agree, so that they called the Apostles of Christ afore them, causing them to be scourged and charging them, no more after to preach of Christs name, and so did let them depart. This was undoubtedly done in the name of our Saviour and his Apostles, and caused to be written for our comfort and learning; for the Holy Ghost knew afore, that like practice should come in the later time of the world, which we are in. Whereby you may clearly see, that Councils do not always decern with Christ, but sometime they may do against him. And therefore said David, Non sedis cum concilio vanitatis, & cum inique agentibus non introibo: Odi Ecclesiam malignantium, & cum impiis non sedabo: sed Iacobus inter innocentes manus meas, &c. I did not (quoth David) sit with the Assembly or Council of vain doers, or liars, and will not go in amongst them that work iniquity: For I hate the Convocation of them that are malicious or malignant, and amongst the wicked will not I sit: But I will wash my hands among innocents, &c.

Councils may and do
right.
Also in another Psalm he writeth thus; Dominus dissipat concilia gentium, reprobat concilia populum, & concilia Principum: Concilium autem Domini in aeternum manet, &c. The Lord, quoth he, doth destroy or annihilate the Councils of the Gentiles, he reproveth the Councils of the People and of Rulers. But the Counsel or device of the Lord endureth ever, and the purpose of his mind abideth unto the World of Worlds. For that purposedoth S. Peter in the Acts of the Apostles alledge this verse out of the Psalm; Quare fremuerunt gentes, &c. Why did the Gentiles rage, and the people imagin vain things, &c. Like unto this is written, Elsiah the first. Also you may see in the Councils of the Pharisees above shewed, that one singular person may sometime perceive a thing more than a generality or a multitude: For only Gamaliel did see better what was behoveable, than could all the other there congregate.

Palms 2. of the Palm; Quare fremuerunt gentes, &c. Why did the Gentiles rage, and the people imagin vain things, &c. Agreeable unto this we find in the Decrees, Disposit. 31. where it is written, that the Council of Nice, willing to correct or amend the life of men of the Church, ordained Laws called Canons or Rules. And as they treated upon such Ordinances, some thought it expedient to bring in a Law that Bishops, Priests, Deacons and Subdeacons, should not lie with their Wives whom they had married afore they were consecrate into the order. With that acrole Papinianus a confessor of Christ, and gainfayd it, testifying that marriage was an honourable thing; saying also, that it is chastity for a man to lie with his own proper Wife. And so he perwaded the Council, that they should constitute no such Law: affirming, that it was a fore matter that they were minded to do, which should be either to the Priests, or else to their Wives an occasion of Fornication: And this was Papinianus reason. The words of the Canon proceed thus.

chastity standeth not by singleness of life, but purety of Manner.
This declared Papinianus, he never being married, nor having experience of Marriage, and the Council commended his sentence, making no Statute in this matter, but put it to every mans Freewill and liberty, without any enforcement or necessity. These words stand, as I have recited them unto you, written in the Decrees, albeit they are somewhat otherwise rehearsed in Historia tripartita, as I have shewed before in the fourth Article. Upon this, that Papinianus did thus resist and prevail against all the other Council, doth the Gloſs note in the same Law; that one singular person may gainfay or speak against an universal generality, having a reasonable cause on his side. Suffrage also of the same have we in Abbot Panorimianus, where he saith thus: I would (quoth he) rather believe one lay person, bringing in for him authority of Scripture, than an universal Council, that ordaineth or defineth a thing without Scripture.

Finally, I say, that I never recounted them neither Saints nor Devils, but resigned the judgment thereof to God; neither have I in earnest reported them the one, or the other; neither have done unto them particular worship, so far forth as I can remember.

In the six and thirtieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe, hold, and affirm that every General Council, and the Council of Constance also do represent the Universal Congregation or Church? I say, that whatſuch Councils do represent I cannot certainly tell, and therefore believe neither yea nor nay; neither can I therefore make any affirmation, pro or contra, with this demand or against it: and no marvel: For I know of no Scripture to certifie me of the same, nor yet any sufficient reason. And me thinketh this (under correction I speak) that Councils might represent (albeit I know not whether they do or no) the Universal Church, not being yet the same, as I wrote well they neither are nor were. For the Church I do take to be all those that God hath chosen or predestinate to be inheritors of eternal Bliss and Salvation, whether they be Temporal or Spiritual, King or Subject, Bishop or Deacon, Father or Child, Grecian or Roman. And this Church spreadeth through the Universal World, whereas any do call for help truly upon the name of Christ: and there do they ever most grow and assemble commonly, whereas his blessed Word is purely and openly preached and declared; for that is the relief of mans soul, whereunto all men, loving their souls health, lust to resort and seek (as all things do naturally seek after that which should nourish and prolong their life) for in it is shewed that righteousness, which whosoever doth thirst after, and is a hungered for, shall come in the Kingdom of Heaven. Of this may well the Proverb in the Gospel (although it be applied to the judgment of God when he shall appear in the general doom) be verified, Whereſoever is a dead Carrion, thither will soon be assembled Eagles: That is to wit, whosoever is declared, by the courſe of Scripture, the benefits and commodities granted to us by Christs death, thither will men seek and flie, to know how they may enjoy and attain them, which I beseech him to grant us, Amen.

C In the seven and thirtieth, where you do ask, Whether I believe that the same thing which the Council of Constance, representing the Universal Church, hath approved, and doth approve for the maintenance of Faith and souls health, is to be approved and holden of all Christian people; and that which the same Council hath condemned and doth condemn to be contrary to Faith and good Manners, ought of the same Christian people to be believed and affirmed for a thing condemned? I say, that whatsoever the same Council or any other have approved, being approbation or allowance worthy, is of all Christian people to be likewise approved, holden and allowed. And again, whatsoever the same or any other hath condemned, being reproof and condemnation worthy, because it is hurtful to Faith or good living, I say, the same ought of all Christian people to be condemned and reprov'd. But this summounteth my knowledge, to discern in what wise their judgment passed; whether with right or unright, because I did never look upon their Acts, neither do I greatly covet to do: Wherefore I refer the determination to them that have better advised their doings, and thereby have more skill in them than I.

C In the eighth and thirtieth you demand, Whether the condemnations of John Wickliff, John Hus, and Hierom of Pague, done upon their Persons, Books and Documents, by the Holy General Council of Constance, were duly and rightfully done, and so for such, of every Catholic-like person, whether they are to be holden and surely to be affirmed? I answer, That it passeth my knowledge, and I cannot tell; thinking surely, that though I am ignorant of the same, so that I cannot discuss the thing determinately, yet my Christendom shall be therefore nevertheless, and I and all Christian men may well suspend our sentence, being thereof ignorant, affirming neither the one nor the other, neither yea nor nay.

C In the thirty ninth you ask, Whether I believe, hold, and affirm, that John Wickliff of England, John Hus, of Bohemia, and Hierom of Prague, were Hereticks, and for Hereticks to be named, and their Books and Doctrines to have been, and now be perverse, for the which Books and pertinacity of their persons, they are condemned by the Holy Council of Constance for Hereticks? I say Anſwer to the 41 Article. ¶ In the Forty firſt, where you ask, Whether I believe that it is lawfull at the commandment of a Judge, to make an Oath to ſay the truth, or any other Oath in a caſe convenient, and that alſo for purgation of Infamy? I anſwer, that I never ſaid the contrary, but that I think and have thought it lawfull to give an Oath afore a Judge, to ſay the truth, if the Judge ſo require, and that by requiſite lawfull and convenient. As when a thing is in Controverſie betwixt two perſons, and thereupon they ſue unto a Judge for ſentence; when the Judge can none otherwiſe bolt out the truth, he may require an Oath. As when the two Women which contended before Solomon, to avoid the crime of Murder, which the one had committed in oppreſſing her Child to death, and would have put the ſame upon the other, if Solomon could not by his wiſdom otherwiſe have inveſtigated the truth, he might, I ſuppoſe, to come by the more certain information of the thing, have cauſed one of them, or both, ſeeking it expedient for him, to ſwear; wherein the Women had been bound to obey him: But Judges have need to be ſpare in requiring of Oaths. For in cuſtomable, or oft Juſtices, creepeth in alway betwixt times ſome perjury, as ſheweth Chriſtoſtom in words ſembleable to theſe, and thing pretious, through oft haunt or occupying, loſe their eſtimation. And ſo reverent Oaths, unadviſedly required for every triſle uſually, do cauſe men to regard little for making of them, yea, and I fear to break them.

Therefore in Almain, they have made of late (as I have heard ſay by credible perſons, which have come from thence) many notable Ordinances for the Commonwealth within a while, and amongst other this is one: If a man be ſet for to enter Plea againſt another in any Town, the Peers thereof afore whom all Actions are uſed to be debated, hearing ſuch a Plea entered, ſhall call the parties privately together, before they come into an open Court. And the matter examined, they ſhall exhort them to let the Plea ceaſe without further proceſs, ſhewing them the great damage both godly and worldly, coming of waging the Law, and the great eaſe and commodity that is in agreement and concord. Which exhortation they uſe to ſwear with ſo great gravity, and fatherly love (ſuch wonders are wrought where the Goſpel hath free paſſage) that very few will Commence Plea. And though any Plea be Commenced, through ſuch ſage admonition it falleth lightly to Sequeltration and Arbitrement of Neighbours, who do ſet their ſutures at unity, ere the matter do come to diſcuſſion in open Court.

The life and manner of the Germans in cauſes judicial. ¶ Fruit of the Goſpel in Germany.

In Germany few controversies come to the open Court, but commonly are compounded at home.

Notwithſtanding, if ſome be ſo waywardly minded (as in a multitude all are not one mans Children, and therefore unlike of intent) that they will needs proceed and follow the Law, they ſhall be heard to ſpeak their matters in open Court, and taught how the matter is moſt like to proceed, and Counſelled with new exhortation to ſtop their proceſs. If they will not be perſwaded, and then the Judges ſeeing the matter ſo ambiguous, that they cannot give perfect ſentence therein, except by virtue of an Oath made by one of the parties, they be firſt better certified: Then will they ſhew the ſame before the ſuters, declaring what a chargeful thing it is to give a ſolemn Oath for love of winning, ſome worldly profit: And how (unleſs ſuch as ſhall make it, be the better ware to eſchew the ſame) they ſhall (beſide an evil example giving to a multitude) work themſelves happily thame or diſhonour.

Upon this, they ſhall give a reſpite until a certain day appointed. So that in the mean while the ſuters may take deliberation thereof, what is beſt to be done. If after this they will not thus reſt, at the day appointed ſhall they come forth into a common place, and the great Bell of the City ſhould to be rung, whereby the people ſhall be warned, what they are about to do: and the people aſſembled, the Judges ſhall in full chargeable and lamentable wiſe charge the parties, under the virtue of their Oath, to make true relation of that ſhall be demanded.

So that by reaſon of ſoberly and fatherly exhortations made of the Judges or Peers of the Town, and perſwaſion of Neighbours, and for avoiding Gods diſpleaſure and thame of men, there is little ſutes in Courts; and if at any time any be made, they be lightly ſtopped. So that Jury and Swearing is well excluded, and need not much to be required.

This I have ſhewed, becauſe it pitieth me to hear and ſee the contrary uſed in ſome of our Nation, and ſuch alſo as name themſelves ſpiritual men, and ſhould be head Miniſters of the Church; who incontinent as any man cometh before them, anon they call for a Book, and do move him to ſwear, without any longer reſpite yea, and they will charge him by virtue of the contents in the Evangelically, to make true relation of all that they ſhall demand him, he not knowing what they will demand, neither whether it be lawfull to ſwear them the truth of their demands, or no; for ſuch things there be that are not lawfull to be ſworn.

As if I were accuſed of Fornication, and none could be found in me: Or if they ſhould require me to ſwear to bewray any other that I have known to offend in that vice, I ſuppoſe it were expedient to hold me ſtill, and not to follow their will; for it ſhould be contrary to charity, if I ſhould ſo ſwear to bewray them that I need not, and to whom, perhaps, though I have known them to offend, yet truſting of their amendment, I have promiſed before to keep their fault ſecret without any diſcloſing of the ſame. Yea, moreover, if ſuch Judges ſometimes, not knowing by any due proof that ſuch as have to do afore them are culpable, will enforce them by an Oath, to detect themſelves in opening before them their hearts; in this ſo doing, I cannot ſee that men need to condeſcend to their requests. For it is in the Law (but I wot not certainly the place) thus: Nemo tenetur prodere ſemeticipſum, that is to ſay, No man is bound to bewray himſelf. Alſo in another place of the Law it is written, Cogitationis poenam nemo paſſiatur, no man ſhould ſuffer puniſhment of men for his thought. To this agreeth the common proverb, that is thus: Cogitationes libera ſunt a reſtrigilibus. That is to ſay, Thoughts be free, and need to pay no Toll. So that to conclude, I think it lawfull at the commandment of a Judge, to make an Oath to ſay the truth, ſpecially if a Judge requireth an Oath duly, and in lawfull wiſe, or to make an Oath in any other caſe convenient, and that alſo for purgation of infamy, when any infamy is lawfully laid againſt a man.

In the two and fortieth, where you ask, Whether a Chriſtian perſon deſpiſing the recit of the Sacraments of Confirmation, extreme Unction, or ſolemnizing of Matrimony do ſin deadly? I ſay like of the recit of them, as I have ſaid before of the ſelf things, and none otherwiſe.

In the three and fortieth, where you ask, whether I believe that Saint Peter was Chriſts Vicar, having power on Earth to bind and looſe? I ſay, that I do not perceive clearly what you mean by this term Vicar; for Chriſt never called Peter nor none other ſo in Scripture. If you mean thereby, that after the departing hence of Chriſt, when he was riſen from death in his immortal body, and ſo ſitted into Heaven, whereas he remaineth ſitting upon the right hand of his Father, that he ſo being away from hence, Saint Peter occupied his room; then, I ſay, it is not untrue but Peter in a manner (which I ſhall ſhew hereunder) was his Vicar; and like as Peter was his Vicar, even ſo was Paul and the other Apoſtles, and the one on leſs than the other, if it be true that Saint Cyprian doth write, which is alſo conſenting to Scripture, he ſaith thus; That Chriſt ſpoke unto Peter ſaying: I ſay, quoth our Saviour, that thou art Peter, and upon this rock of Stone ſhall I build my congregation, and the gates of Hell ſhall not overcome it. To thee will I give the Keys of Heaven, and what things thou ſhalt bind upon Earth, the ſame ſhall be bound alſo in Heaven: And whatſoever thou ſhalt looſe upon Earth, ſhall be looſed alſo in Heaven. And to him after his reſurrection doth Chriſt ſay, Feed my Sheep.

And albeit that he gave equal power unto all his Apoſtles after his Reſurrection, and ſaith, Like as my Father ſent me, ſo do I alſo ſend you: Take you the holy Ghoſt: if you ſhall retain to any man his ſins; they ſhall be retained. If you ſhall remit to any man his ſins, to him they KING they shall be renounced. Nevertheless, because he would declare unity, he ordained by his authority, the original of the same unity beginning of one. The other Apostles truly were the same that Peter was, indited with equal parting both of honour, and authority or power, but the beginning cometh of one, that the Congregation should be shewed to be one. Those are the words of Saint Cyprian, in a Treatise that is called, De simplicitate Prælatorum; wherein you may see that Christ made all the Apostles of equal honour and like authority. Notwithstanding, because he would testify the unity of his Church or Congregation, he spake, as it were, only unto Peter, when he said, Feed my sheep. And, I shall give thee, Peter, the Keys of Heaven: But in so saying, though the words seem spoken to Peter only, yet they were spoken unto him, in that he sustained the general person of all the Church, being, as it were, a common Speaker for the same. So that in speaking to him, Christ spake unto all other the Apostles unto whom also he gave all the same authority that he gave unto Peter: as you may see both in these words of Cyprian, and also the same is clearly shewed out of Saint Augustin in divers places, but no where more plainly in a few words, than in a Treatise called De Agone Christiano.

To this accordeth well that which was written of Paul, Gal. 2. Ab his qui videbantur aliquid esse, quales aliquando fuerunt, nihil mea refert, &c. Of those Apostles (quoth Paul) which seemed to be of authority I was not taught (what they were in time passed it sheweth me nothing) God regardeth not the exterior appearance of man) nevertheless, they which appeared to be of price shewed me no learning, nor gave me no Counsel. But contrary, when they had seen that the Gospel of Uncircumcision was committed unto me, like as the Evangel of Circumcision was unto Peter; for he that was mighty in Peter concerning the Apostleship towards the Jews was mighty also in me toward the Gentiles. Therefore when James, Peter, and John, which appeared to be as Pillars, knew the Grace given me; they gave unto me and Barnabe their right hands in signs of fellowship to be their partners, so that we should exercise the Office of Apostles among the Gentiles, as they did among the Jews. Wherein you may clearly see, that Paul took no instruction of them, which seemed to be in high authority, and that Peter, James, and John, which were noted Principals, took Paul and Barnabas to be their Mates and Fellows; which they would not have done (as I suppose) if they had known that God had granted unto them a Prerogative singular, to excel Paul, and to be his Sovereign: But according to the Prerogative of God granted, they might have falsely shewed it, and enjoyed the same; like as they did rejoice in other benefits granted to them of God, to be Ministers in his Church for the edifying of the same. And as Saint John calleth himself the Disciple loved of his Master Jesus, and testifieth, how that unto him, Christ hanging upon the Cross, did commit his blessed Mother.

Moreover, if these three Apostles, James, Peter, and John, should have by humility left out to make mention of their Prerogative, when they took Paul and Barnabas into their fellowship, yet it is to be thought that Paul, which never useth any inordinate Arrogancy, writing the words above said for the magnifying of his own privilege and authority given him of God, would not have suppressed and passed over their Primacy unpoken of, with whom he maketh here comparison: For then it might be thought he were envious, to pick away authority from other to himself unlawful; that cannot so be. Moreover, he saith a little after the words afore rehearsed, that he reproved Saint Peter even before his face. Whereupon Saint Hieron expounding the same Epistle, faith (as I remember) that Paul would not have been bold so to do, except he had known himself equal to Peter.

In the words also of Paul above written this might be noted, as serving to my purpose, that Peter had no preeminence or primacy above the other, for James is named after him: Which Paul would not have done (I think) knowing Peter to be James superior. Therefore he making no such variety in order, put James afore, saying, And James, Peter and John, that appeared the Principals, quoth he, gave unto me and to Barnabe their right hands in sign of fellowship. Yet notwithstanding Paul loved good order, I suppose, as well as any that now are, which contend so sore for superior Rooms and preeminence, claiming to be the Apostles Successors. I would it were so much for the Commonwealth of Christian people, as it is suspect that they do it for vain-glory and worldly lucre. According to this you shall find, Acts the Eleventh, where is shewed, that after Peter by instinct of the Holy Ghost, had gone unto one of the Gentiles, called Cornelius, a petty Captain, having the governance of an hundred men, teaching him the ways and Doctrine of Christ, and Baptizing him and other with him assembled, being, like as he afore was, Pagans; the Apostles and other Christian brethren that were in Jewry, hearing thereof, when Peter came to Jerusalem, they which held upon Circumcision made none obedience unto him, (albeit I think verily he had more holiness than ever had any Pope) as the Emperor is said to do to the Pope at his Coronation, falling down to kiss the Popes feet, or to hold the Popes Stirrop while he mounteth upon his Horses back, according to the form of Law written: I am not certain, whether in the Decrees, or else the Decretals, or in both rather (for such Ordinances are inviolable, and worthy to be principally Recorded) but they reasoned for and disputed both against Saint Peter and also his doing, saying: You have gone amongst them that you ought not have had to do with, nor to have meddled among them, that are men unclean, because they are uncircumcised, yea, and that is more, you have eat and drunk with them. Peter mildly and coldly made answer again, rehearsing all the manner of his doing in order; shewing that he was so instructed to do by mighty and clear Revelations of God, and not by his own fantasy and pleasure.

Which answer being heard, the other that afore had made sore objections against him (which were both of the Apostles, and other Christian brethren) were content, holding their peace without any more complaining, and gave glory therefore to God, saying: Then God hath granted also unto the Gentiles to take repentance, and so to come to eternal life. Wherein you may see, that the other Apostles were as bold with Peter, as before is shewed of Paul, to dispute against him. Neither were they therefore by Peter, reproved of inobedience. He did not allege any preeminence or authority to rebuke them for their complaining: As one would say, why should you that are my Sheep control me, that am the Head of the Church and your Pastor, or Christs General Vicar, having both jurisdiction Temporal and Spiritual; with such other like? But shewed them it was the Will of God, that he had done, going to the Gentiles to tell them of eternal life, which God pleased to give to them as well as to the Jews. In token whereof the Holy Ghost did sensibly come among them, and so were they baptized.

Thus may you see, that if Peter were the Vicar of Christ, even so likewise was Paul, and all the other Apostles. And I do not think contrary, but that Peter, and all other of the Apostles, were Christs Vicars, if you mean by this word Vicar, a Deputy, or such like, for to preach his Evangel, (which is an Office of all other most Sovereign) to Minister Sacraments, and to do other such divine service in Gods Church. And thus were they worthy to be called (as the Scripture nameth them) Christs true Apostles, Bishop, Priests, Legats, or any such like. Which authority was given them by Christ after his resurrection, when he said unto them these words, Peace be amongst you. Like as my Father hath sent me, so do I Luk. 24. send you. Take you the Holy Ghost: Whose sins (never you shall forgive, are forgiven them: and whose sins (never you shall retain, are retained): And the same authority did they receive, when Christ spake unto all the Church, after the mind of Saint Augustin and other, in Peter, saying, Peter, Feed my Sheep.

¶ In the four and fortieth, where you ask, whether I believe, that the Pope ordinarily chosen for a time (his proper name being expressed) be the Successor of Peter; I say, that it seemeth to me a thing of no great value, whether a man believe so or no, I cannot see that it should be

Pope may be a Successor of Peter.

The Pope may succeed in Saint Peters seat or Office, and do the same duly and diligently feeding Christs flock, and shewing vertuous example of living to the same, and so doing, he may and ought to be thought and named a true successor of Saint Peter. And thus is your Lordship Saint Peters successor, performing the conditions afore said, with other like properties requisite to your order and duty; yea, and as many other as do truly their duty, and duly the Office of a Bishop. And otherwise may not the Pope be called the Successor of Peter, because he is entred into Saint Peters Office, not regarding to that is requisite for the same, nor following the trace of vertue, but the contrary. And then he is wrongfully named, if at any time such be, which is not possible. For what should men call Peters Successors, that play the Pagans, and follow with the Conditions of Caiaphas, Simon Magus, or Judas? Such verily, if any be, cannot rightly claim to be Peters Successors, no more than the might may claim to be Successor of the day; for Peter was never so minded, nor taught them so. Yea, they ought rather to be called Peters Adversaries, for so much as they do not his will that is shewed by his own Acts and writings, but work against the same. Of such may be said, Non sanctorum filii sunt, qui tenent loca sanctorum, sed qui exercent opera eorum. That is to say, they are not all Saints children, that occupy the rooms of Saints, but they are their children that exercise their works. Yea, of such may be said, that which is written of Saint Hierom: All Bishops (quoth he) are not Bishops; mark you well Peter, but mark also Judas: Behold Stephen, but behold Nicolas. Ecclesiastical dignity maketh not a Christian man. Cornelius the Centurion, being yet a Pagan, was made clean through the benefit of the Holy Ghost. Contrariwise, Daniel being a Child, condemneth Priests or ancient men. It is no easie thing, faith he, to stand in the room of Peter and Paul, and to keep the seat of them now reigning with Christ: For unfavoury fait is nought worth else, but to be thrown out of the doors, and troden down of Hogs. This faith Saint Hierom.

Aug.

Whereunto agreeth well S. Augustin. Every one (quoth he) that faith unto you, Pax vobis, ought not to be heard, or to be believed a Dove. Crows be fed of dead Carion, and so is not a Dove, but the liveth by the fruits of the Earth. Her living is pure, innocent, and hurtless. Whereby you may see, that ill Bishops are no Bishops, and that they which follow not Saints in vertuous living, are not the Successors of Saints, but unfavoury fait, that is, neither of the Church, nor shall come in Heaven to reign there with Peter and Paul, but be thrown out with great contempt. For God knoweth a Dove from a Crow, and an innocent liver from a devourer of Carion. But such as declare and shew good deeds as the Saints did, be their Children and Successors, and shall with them reign in Heaven.

Pope Is Successor of Peter, and how not.

So that to conclude, I say, That the Pope ordinarily chosen is the Successor of S. Peter, following Saint Peters godly living. And else, except he study to do diligently, that he may be so called worthily, it shall be but a vain name. For rather may he else be reputed an Image of the Pope, or of a Bishop, according as such be called of the Prophet; O Pastor & Idolum, O Idol Shepherds.

In the five and fortieth, where you ask, Whether ever I have promised at any time by my Oath, or made any confederacy or league with any person or persons, that I would always hold and defend certain conclusions or Articles seeming to me and to my Complices right and Consonant unto the Faith? And will that I should certifye you of the course and form of the said opinions and conclusions by row, and of the Names and Simames of them that were to me adherent, and promised to be adherent in this behalf; I say, that I do not remember that ever I made pact or confederacy with any person or persons, nor made any promise by Oath, that I would always hold and defend any conclusions or Articles, seeming to me and other right and Consonant to the Faith, unless it hath chanced me to say in this form; That I would never with the aid of God forsake, neither decline from the truth, neither for fear, nor yet for love of man or men.

Thus I have perhaps said in some time, or some place, because I have indeed so intended, and do intend, Gods grace assisting me. But I cannot yet tell you, whether I have so said or no, nor to what persons, nor at what time, neither in what place: neither do I reckon me to have any complices, but such as do love me, and I them, for God and in God. And those do I reckon all them that are or will be truly Christian, in calling upon Christs name. And concerning opinions or conclusions, I can tell you of none other than I have shewed: The sum whereof I reckon and think utterly to be concluded in two propositions, which both are written in the New Testament.

{ KING
HAB. 2. }

All the opinions of John Lambert ingrossed in two propositions.

The first, The Acts of Apostles in this wise: Christus est caput angeli, nec est in alio ququam salu- The first Proposition. Non enim aliud nomen sub celo datum est inter homines, in quo oporteat nos salvari fieri. That is to say, CHRIST is the Head Corner stone of our faith, whereupon it should be set and grounded, neither is salvation in any other, for there is no other name under Heaven given amongst men wherein we may be saved. This is one of the propositions, wherein is ingrossed or comprehended my saying, which Saint Paul doth thus otherwise explicate: CHRIST is made of Gods our wisdom, our right reason, our parents, our satisfaction, and our redemption. And in another place; There is no other foundation, that any man may put, except that which is already put, that is CHRIST JESUS.

The first Proposition.

I Cor. I.

The other proposition is written of the Prophet Esaias, and recited of our Saviour in the Evange of Matthew, in these words: Men do worship me in vain, teaching doctrines and precepts of Law human. Of this writeth Paul very largely in divers places, and every where well nigh. Amongst other, Colossians the second, where he warneth the Colossians to take heed that no man do spoil them, to steal them away by Philosophy or vain deception, according to the constitutions of men, and Ordinances of this world.

The second Proposition. Gal. 2.9.

Thus I do certifye you of all the opinions and conclusions which I intend or have intended to sustain, being contained in the two propositions above written. Other hold I none, but such as are mentioned in the Creed, both that is sung at Mass, and also in the other Creed that all people say every day. Finally, that you require to know of the names and Simames in order particularly of them, that be to me adherents, or that have promised me to be adherent in this part; I say, that I know of none particular that I remember, without I should note unto you a great multitude, which you may know and hear of (I suppose) through all Regions and Realms of Christendom, that do think likewise, as I have shewed. I ween the multitude mounteth high unto the one half of Christendom; and more should do likewise, by a great fort within a while, I doubt not, but that our Ghostly enemy labourerh amain to have knowledge of the truth suppressed, and letteth that it cannot come abroad to be seen. I say therefore again, I know of no particular adherents, nor of any that hath promised me to be in these matters. And though I did; I would not (except I know not that charity so required, which I do not find yet hitherto) detect, nor bewray any one of them, for no mans pleasure: For I am bound to obey God above men. Who be with us, and grant the Truth to be known. Amen.

John Lam-

These answers of John Lambert, to the five and forty Articles above expressed, were directed and delivered to Doctor Warham Archbishop of Canterbury, as it appeareth, about the year of our Lord 1532, at what time the said Lambert was in custody in the Archbishops house at Oxford, being there destitute of all help and furniture of Books, as by his own word is to be gathered. But, for the providence of God wrought for Lambert, that within short space after, Anno 1533, the said Archbishop Warham died: Whereby it seemeth that Lambert for that time was delivered. In this mean while Doctor Crammer was sent over in Embassage, with the Earl of Wiltshire, Doctor Stokess, Doctor Kern, Doctor Benet, and other learned men, to the Bishop of Rome lying then at Bonony, to dispute the matter of the Kings Marriage, openly, first in the Court of Rome, then in the Court of the Emperor. [KING] there appeared to dispute with him, in these two Propositions: First, That no Man, Jure Divino, could or ought to Marry his Brothers Wife. Secondly, That the Bishop of Rome by no means ought to dispence to the contrary. But of this more copiously we will intreat (the Lords Grace permitting) in the sequel of our Story, coming to Doctor Cranmer's life.

After the death of William Warham, succeeded in that See the said Doctor Cranmer. Lambert in the mean season being delivered, partly by the death of this Archbishop, partly by the coming in of Queen Anne, returned unto London, and there exercised himself about the Stocks, in teaching Children both in the Greek and Latin Tongue. And forasmuch as Priests in those days could not be permitted to have Wives, he left his Priesthood, and applied himself to that Function of Teaching, intending shortly after also to be free of the Grocers and to be married. But God, who disposeth all Mens purposes after the secret pleasure of his own Will, did both intercept his Marriage, and also his Freedom, and Married him to his Son Christ Jesus, as now consequently followeth to be declared.

Thus then after that John Lambert now had continued in this Vocation of Teaching, with great commendation, and no less commodity to the Youth; it happened this present year 1538, he was present at a Sermon, in St. Peters Church at London. He that preached, was named Doctor Taylor, a Man in those days not far disagreeing from the Gospel, and afterward in the time of King Edward was made Bishop of Lincoln, and at last in the time of Queen Mary was deprived from the same, and so ended his life, among the Confessors of Jesus Christ.

When the Sermon was done, Lambert, having gotten opportunity, went gently unto the preacher to talk with him, and uttered divers Arguments wherein he desired to be satisfied. All the whole matter or controversie was concerning the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ. Taylor, excusing himself at that present for other business, willed him to write his mind and to come again at more leisure.

Lambert was contented, and so departed. Who within a while after, when he had written his mind, came again unto him. The sum of his Arguments were ten, which he comprehended in writing, approving the truth of the cause, partly by the Scriptures, and partly by good Reason, and by the Doctors. The which Arguments, although they came not all unto our hands, yet such Men as were present at those Affairs reported them to be of great force and authority. And of a few which were born away in memory, the first reason was this which followeth, gathered upon Christs Words, where it is said in the Gospel, This Cup is the New Testament.

And if, faith he, these words do not change neither the Cup, neither the Wine corporally into the New Testament, by like reason it is not agreeable that the words spoken of the Bread should turn the Bread corporally into the Body of Christ.

Another Reason was this: That it is not agreeable to a Natural Body to be in two places or more at one time: wherefore it must follow of necessity that either Christ had not a natural Body, or else truly, according to the common nature of a Body, it cannot be present in two places at once, and much less in many, that is to say in Heaven and in Earth, on the right hand of his Father, and in the Sacrament.

Moreover, a Natural Body cannot be without his form and shape, conditions and accidents, like as the accidents and conditions also cannot be without their subject or substance. Then forasmuch as in the Sacrament there is no quality, quantity, or condition of the Body of Christ, and finally no appearance at all of Flesh; who doth not very plainly perceive that there is no transubstantiate Body of his in the Sacrament? And to reason by the contrary; all the proper conditions, signs and accidents whatsoever they be, pertaining to Bread, we do see to be present in the Sacrament, which cannot be there without the subject; therefore we must of necessity confess the Bread to be there. He added also many other allegations out of the Doctors. But to be short, this Taylor the preacher, whom I speak of before, willing and desiring, as is supposed, of a good mind to satisfy Lambert in this matter, amongst other whom he took to Council, he also conferred with Doctor Barnes. Which Barnes, although he did otherwise favour the Gospel, and was an earnest preacher; notwithstanding seemed not greatly to favour this Cause, fearing peradventure that it would breed some let or hindrance, among the people, to the preaching of the Gospel, which was now in a good forwardness, if such Sacramentaries should be suffered: he perswaded Taylor by and by to put up the matter to Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury. And hereby we may see it truly verified, which William Tyndal, before writing to John Frisib, did note in Doctor Barnes, saying, That Dr. Barnes will be hot against you, &c.

Upon these Originals Lambert's quarrel first began, and was brought unto this point, That through the sinister doing of many it began of a private talk to be a publick and common matter. For he was sent for by the Archbishop, and brought into the open Court, and forced to defend his Cause openly: for the Archbishop had not yet favoured the Doctrine of the Sacrament, whereof afterward he was an earnest professor. In that disputation it is said, That Lambert did Appeal from the Bishops to the Kings Majesty. But howsoever the matter was, the rumor of that Disputation was by and by spread throughout the whole Court.

I told you before, how that King Henry for two years past, shewing the part of an hard Husband, had beheld Queen Anne his Wife. Which Deed did not only greatly displease the German Princes (who for that only cause had broken off the League with him, Anno 1536.) but also many other good Men in England.

Moreover, how that within a while after Abbies began to be subverted, and all their goods to be confiscated and given abroad. For which Causes, but especially for the late abolishing of the Bishop of Rome, the Commons had conceived a very evil Opinion of him, inasmuch as the seditious sort rebelled against him.

At that time Stephen Gardiner then Bishop of Winchester was in Authority amongst the Kings Counsellors, who as he was of a cruel nature, so was he no less of a subtil and crafty wit, ever gazing for some occasion how to let and hinder the Gospel: albeit a long time he was not so greatly esteemed with the King, that he could much prevail to achieve his conceived purpose: But at length, upon this matter advising himself, he thought he had apt occasion and opportunity to accomplish his desire. Neither did he forelack the occasion ministered, but went straight unto the King, privily admonishing him, and with rare flattering words giving him most pernicious counsel; declaring how great hatred and suspicion was raised upon him almost in all places.

First, for abolishing the Bishop of Romes Authority, then for subversion of the Monasteries, and also for that the Divorce of Queen Katherine, was yet fresh in Mens minds: and now the time served if he would take it, easily to remedy all these matters, and pacifie the minds of them which were displeased and offended with him, if only in this matter of John Lambert he would manifest unto the People how stoutly he would resist Heretics; and by this new rumor he would bring to pass, not only to extinguish all other former rumors, and as it were with one Nail to drive out another, but also should discharge himself of all suspicion, in that he now began to be reported to be a favourer of new Sects and Opinions.

The King giving ear more willingly, than presently of goddilly, to this Syrene, immediately received the wicked counsel of the Bishop, and by and by sent out a General Commission, commanding all the Nobles and Bishops of his Realm to come with all speed to London, to assist the King against Heretics and Heresies, which the King himself would sit in Judgment upon.

These preparations made, a day was set for Lambert, where a great Assembly of the Nobles was gathered from all parts of the Realm, not without much wonder and expectation in this so strange a case. All the Seats and Places were full of Men round about the Scaffold.

By and by the golly Servant of Christ, John Lambert, was brought from the Prison with a Guard of Armed Men, even as a Lamb to Fight with many Lyons, and placed right over against where the Kings Royal Seat was.

The Nobles and Bishops assembled to Lambert's Disputation.

Lambert brought before the Kings Dispute.

so that now they tarried but for the Kings coming to that place.

At the last the King himself did come as Judge of that great controvertie, with a great guard, clothed all in White, and covering by that colour and dissembling severity of all bloody Judgment.

On his right hand fate the Bishops, and behind them the famous Lawyers, clothed all in Purple, according to the manner. On the left hand fate the Peers of the Realm, Justices, and other Nobles in their order; behind whom fate the Gentlemen of the Kings Privy Chamber. And this was the manner and form of the Judgment, which albeit it was terrible enough of it self to abash any innocent, yet the Kings look, his cruel countenance, and his brows bent unto severity, did not a little augment this terror, plainly declaring a mind full of indignation far unworthy such a Prince, especially in such a matter, and against his humble and obedient a subject.

When the King was set in his Throne he beheld Lambert with a stern countenance, and then turning himself unto his Counsellors, he called forth Doctor Day, Bishop of Chichester, commanding him to declare unto the People the causes of this present Assembly and Judgment.

The whole effect of his Oration tended in a manner to this purpose: That the King in this Session would have all States, Degrees, Bishops, and all other to be admonished of his will and Pleasure, that no Man should conceive any sinister Opinion of him, that now the Authority and Name of the Bishop of Rome being utterly abolished, he would also extinguish all Religion, or give liberty unto Hereticks to perturb and trouble the Churches of England, without punishment, whereof he is the Head. And moreover, that they should not think that they were Assembled at that present, to make any Disputation upon the Heretical Doctrine; but only for this purpose, that by the industry of him and other Bishops, the Heretics of this Man here present (meaning Lambert) and the Heresies of all such like should be refuted or openly condemned in the presence of them all.

When he had made an end of his Oration, the King standing up upon his Feet, leaning upon a Cushion of White Cloth of Tissue, turning himself toward Lambert with his Brows bent, as it were threatening some grievous thing to him, said these words: Ho, good Fellow what is thy name? Then the humble Lamb of Christ humbly kneeling down upon his Knee, said, My name is John Nicholson, although of many I be called Lambert. What (said the King) have you two names? I would not trust you, having two names, although you were my Brother.

Lambert. O most noble Prince, your Bishops forced me of necessity to change my name. And after divers Prefaces and much talk had in this manner, the King commanded him to go unto the matter, and to declare his Mind and Opinion, what he thought as touching the Sacrament of the Altar.

Then Lambert, beginning to speak for himself, gave God thanks, which had so inclined the heart of the King, that he himself would not disdain to hear and understand the controversies of Religion; for that it happeneth oftentimes, through the cruelty of the Bishops, that many good and innocent Men in many places are privily Murdered and put to Death without the Kings knowledge.

But now forasmuch as that High and Eternal King of kings, in whose hands are the hearts of all Princes, hath inspired and stirred up the Kings mind, that he himself will be present to understand the causes of his Subjects, specially whom God of his Divine goodness hath so abundantly endued with so great gifts of judgment and knowledge, he doth not mistrust but that God will bring some great thing to pass through him, to the setting forth of the Glory of his Name.

Then the King, with an angry voice, interrupting his Oration; I came not hither, said he, to hear mine own praises thus painted out in my presence, but briefly go to the matter, without any more circumstance. Thus he spake in Latin.

But Lambert being abashed at the Kings angry words, contrary to all Mens expectation, stayed a while, considering whether he might turn himself in these great straits and extremities.

But the King being hasty, with anger and vehemency said, Why standest thou still? Answer as touching the Sacrament of the Altar, whether dost thou say, That it is the Body of Christ, or wilt deny it? And with that word the King lifted up his Cap.

Lambert. I answer with St. Augustine, That it is the Body of Christ, after a certain manner.

The King. Answer me neither out of St. Augustine, neither by the authority of any other, but tell me plainly, whether thou saist it is the Body of Christ or no? These words the King spake again in Latin.

Lambert. Then I do deny it to be the Body of Christ. The King. Mark well, for now thou shalt be condemned even by Christs own words, Hoc est corpus meum.

Then he commanded Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury to refute his Assertion: who, first making a short Preface unto the Hearers, began his Disputation with Lambert, very modestly, saying, Brother Lambert, let this matter be handled between us indifferently, that if I do convince this your Argument to be false by the Scriptures, you will willingly refuse the same; but if you shall prove it true by the manifest Testimonies of the Scripture, I do promise, I will willingly embrace the same.

The Argument was this, taken out of that place of the Acts of the Apostles, where as Christ appeared unto St. Paul by the way: disputing out of that place, that it is not disagreeable to the Word of God, that the Body of Christ may be in two places at once, which being in Heaven was seen of St. Paul the same time upon Earth; and if it may be in two places, why by the like reason may it not be in many places?

In this manner the Archbishop began to refute the second Argument of Lambert, which, as we have before said, was written and delivered by the said Lambert unto the Preacher: for the King had first Disputed against his first Reason.

Lambert answered unto this Argument, saying, That the Minor was not thereby proved, that Christs Body was dispersed in two places, or more, but remained rather still in one place, as touching the manner of his Body. For the Scripture doth not say, that Christ being upon the Earth did speak unto Paul: But that suddenly a light from Heaven did shine round about him, and he falling to the ground heard a voice, saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? I am Jesus whom thou persecutest, &c. Here this place doth nothing let but that Christ, sitting in Heaven, might speak unto Paul, and be heard upon Earth: for they which were with Paul verily heard the voice, but did see no Body.

The Archbishop on the contrary part said, Paul himself doth witness, Acts the six and twentieth, that Christ did appear unto him in the same Vision.

But Lambert again said, that Christ did witness in the same place, That he would again appear unto him, and deliver him out of the hands of the Gentiles: Notwithstanding we read in no place that Christ did corporally appear unto him.

Thus, when they had contended about the Conversion of St. Paul, and Lambert to answering for himself, that the King seemed greatly to be moved therewith, and the Bishop himself that disputed, to be intangled, and all the Audience amazed, then the Bishop of Winchester, which was appointed the sixth place of the Disputation, fearing lest the Argument should be taken out of his mouth, or rather being drowned with malice against the poor Man, without the Kings commandment, observing no order, before the Archbishop had made an end, unharmedly kneeling down to take in hand the Disputation, alleged a place out of the twelfth Chapter of the Corinthians, where St. Paul saith, Have I not seen Jesus? And again in the fifteenth Chapter: He appeared unto Cephas: and afterwards unto James, then to all the Apostles, but last of all be appeared unto me as one born out of due time.

KING Hereunto Lambert answered, he did nothing doubt but that Christ was seen, and did appear, but he did deny that he was in two or in divers places, according to the manner of his body.

Winchester Then Winchester again, abusing the Authority of Paul, repeated the place out of the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, and the Fifth Chapter, And if so be we have known Christ after the flesh, now henceforth know we him so no more, &c.

Lambert answered, That this knowledge is not to be understood according to the sense of the body, and that it so appeared sufficiently by St. Paul, which speaking of his own Revelation, saith thus: I know one, whether in the body or without the body, God knoweth, which was rapt into the third Heaven, and I know not whether in the body or without, God knoweth. Whereby, even by the testimony of St. Paul, a Man shall easily gather, that in this Revelation he was taken up in spirit into the Heavens, and did see those things, rather than that Christ came down corporally from Heaven, to shew them unto him: especially, for that it was said of the Angel, That even as he ascended into Heaven, so he should come again. And St. Peter saith, Whom it behoved to dwell in the Heavens. And moreover appointing the measure of time he addeth, Even until that all things be reformed, &c. Here again, Lambert, being taunted and rebuked, could not be suffered to prosecute his purpose.

After the Bishop of Winchester had done, Tenfel Bishop of Durham took his course, and after a long Preface, wherein he spake much of Gods Omnipotency, at the last he came to this point, saying, that if Christ could perform that which he spake, touching the converting of his Body into Bread, without doubt he would speak nothing, but that he would perform.

Lambert answered, That there was no evident place of Scripture, wherein Christ doth at any time say, That he would change the Bread into his Body: and moreover, that there is no necessity why he should do so. But this is a Figurative speech, every where used in the Scripture, when as the name and appellation of the thing signified is attributed unto the sign. By which Figure of speech, Circumcision is called The Covenant, the Lamb the Pasover, beside fix hundred such other.

Now it remaineth to be marked, whether we shall judge all these, after the words pronounced, to be straight-way changed into another nature. Then again began they to rage afresh against Lambert, so that if he could not be overcome with Arguments, he should be vanquished with rebukes and taunts. What should he do? he might well hold his peace like a Lamb, but bite or bark again he could not.

Next orderly stepped forth the valiant Champion Stokesley Bishop of London, who afterward, lying at the point of death, rejoiced, boasting, that in his life time he had burned fifty Hereticks. This Man amongst the residue, intending to fight for his Belly, with a long profection promised to prove, That it was not only a Miracle of Divine Work, but also that it did nothing at all abhor from Nature. For it is nothing difsonant from Nature, the substance of like things (saith he) to be often times changed one into another. So that nevertheless the accidents do remain, albeit the substance it self, and the matter subject be changed. Then he declared it by the example of Water boiling so long upon the Fire until all the substance thereof be evaporate. Now (saith he) it is the Doctrine of the Philosophers, that a substance cannot be changed but into a substance: wherefore we do affirm the substance of the Water to pass into the substance of the Air; notwithstanding the quality of the Water, which is moistness, remaineth after the substance is changed; for the Air is moist even as the Water is.

When this Argument was heard, the Bishops greatly rejoiced, and suddenly their countenance changed, as it were assuring themselves of a certain triumph and victory by this Philosophical transmutation of Elements, and like as it had been of more force than Christophers argument, which passed all manner of solution.

Lambert answer was long looked for here of all Men. Who as soon as he had obtained silence, and liberty to speak, first of all denied the Bishops assumption, that the moisture of the Water did remain after the substance was altered. For albeit (saith he) that we do grant with the Philosophers, the Air to be naturally moist; notwithstanding it hath one proper and a divers degree of moisture, and the Water another. Wherefore, when as the Water is converted into the Air, there remaineth moisture, as you do say, but that is not the moisture of Water, but the proper and natural moisture of the Air. Whereupon there is another Doctrine amongst the Philosophers, as a perpetual rule, That it can by no means be, that the qualities and accidents in natural things should remain in their own proper nature, without their proper subject.

Then again the King and the Bishops raged against Lambert, inasmuch that he was not only forced to silence, but also might have been driven into a rage, if his Ears had not been acquainted with such taunts afore. After this the other Bishops, every one in his order, as they were appointed, supplied their places of disputation.

There were appointed ten in number, for the performing of this Tragedy, for his ten Arguments, which (as before we have declared) were delivered unto Taylor the Preacher. It were too long in this place to repeat the Reasons and Arguments of every Bishop; and no less superfluous were it to do, especially forasmuch as they were all but common reasons, and nothing forcible and such as by the long use of disputation have been beaten, and had little in them either worthy the hearer or the reader.

Lambert in the mean time being compassed in with so many and great perplexities, vexed on the one side with checks and taunts, and pressed on the other side with the authority and threats of the personages; and partly being amazed with the Majesty of the place in the presence of the King, and especially being wearied with long standing, which continued no less than five hours, from twelve of the Clock, until five at night, being brought in despair, that he should nothing profit in this purpose, and seeing no hope at all in speaking, was at this point, that he chose rather to hold his peace.

Whereby it came to pass that these Bishops, which last of all disputed with him, spake what they listed without interruption, save only that Lambert would now and then alledge somewhat out of St. Augustine for the defence of his cause; in which Author he seemed to be very prompt and ready. But for the most part (as I said) being overcome with weariness and other griefs, he held his peace, defending himself rather with silence than with Arguments, which he saw would nothing at all prevail.

At the last, when the day was passed, and Torches began to be lighted, the King minding to break up this pretended disputation, said unto Lambert: in this wise, What saith thou now (quoth he) after all these great labours which thou hast taken upon thee, and all the Reasons and Instructions of these learned Men; Art thou not yet satisfied? Wilt thou live or die? What saith thou? Thou hast yet free choice.

Lambert answered; I yield and submit my self wholly unto the Will of your Majesty. Then, said the King, commit thy self unto the hands of God, and not unto mine.

Lambert. I commend my Soul unto the hands of God, but my body I wholly yield and submit unto your Clemency. Then said the King, if you do commit your self unto my Judgment, you must die, for I will not be a Patron unto Hereticks; and by and by turning himself unto Cromwel, he said, Cromwel, read the Sentence of Condemnation against him. This Cromwel was at that time the chief friend of the Gospellers. And here it is much to be marvelled at, to see how unformally it came to pass in this matter, that through the petulosity and crafty counsel of this one Bishop of Winchester, Satan (which sometimes doth raise up one Brother to the destruction of another) did here perform the Condemnation of this Lambert by no other Ministers, than Gospellers themselves, Taylor, Barnes, Cromwel and Cromwel, who afterwards, in a manner, all suffered the like for the Gospel's sake; of whom (God willing) we will speak more hereafter.

This undoubtedly was the malicious and crafty subtilty of the Bishop of Winchester, which desired rather that the sentence might be read by Cromwel, than by any other; so that if he refused to do it, he should likewise have incurred the like danger. But to be short, Cromwel, at the Kings commandment taking the Schedule of Condemnation in hand, read the same: Wherein was contained the burning of Hereticks, which either spake or wrote any thing, or had any Books by them, repugnant or disagreeing from their the Popish Church and tradition touching the Sacrament of the Altar: also a Decree that the same should be set upon the Church-Porches, and be read four times every year in every Church throughout the Realm, whereby the worshipping of the Bread should be the more firmly fixed in the hearts of the People. And in this manner was the condemnation of John Lambert. Wherein great pity it was and much to be lamented, to see the Kings Highness that day so to oppose and let his power and strength so fiercely and vehemently, in assisting to many proud and furious adversaries against that one poor silly Soul, to be devoured; whom his Majesty with more honour might rather have aided and supported, being so on every side oppressed and compassed about without help or refuge, among so many Wolves and Vultures, especially in such a cause tending to no derogation to him nor his Realms, but rather to the necessary reformation of sincere Truth and Doctrine decayed. For therein especially, consisteth the honour of Princes, to pity the miserable, to relieve the oppressed, to rescue the wrongs of the poor, and to tender and respect the weaker part, especially where right and truth standeth with him: which if the King had done that day, it had been, in my mind, not so much for the comfort of that poor persecuted Creature, as it would have redounded to the immortal renown of his Princely estate to all posterity.

But thus was John Lambert, in this bloody Session, by the King judged and condemned to death; whose judgment now remaineth with the Lord against that day, when as before the Tribunal Seat of that great Judge both Princes and Subjects shall stand and appear, not to judge, but to be judged, according as they have done and deserved. Ex testimonio cuiusdam antiqui, A. G.

And thus much hitherto of Lambert's Articles, Answers, Disputations, and his condemnation also. Now to proceed further to the Story of his Death.

Upon the day that was appointed for this holy Martyr of God to suffer, he was brought out of the Prison at Eight of the Clock in the morning unto the House of the Lord Cromwel, and so carried into his inward Chamber, whereas it is reported of many, that Cromwel desired of him forgiveness, for that he had done. There at the last, Lambert being admonished that the hour of his death was at hand, he was greatly comforted and cheered, and being brought out of the Chamber into the Hall, he saluted the Gentlemen, and fate down to breakfast with them, shewing no manner of sadness or fear. When as the breakfast was ended, he was carried straightway to the place of Execution, where he should offer himself unto the Lord a Sacrifice of sweet favour, who is blessed in his Saints, for ever and ever, Amen.

As touching the terrible manner and fashion of the burning of this blessed Martyr, here is to be noted, that of all other which have been burned and offered up at Smithfield, there was yet none so cruelly and piteously handled as he. For after that his Legs were consumed and burned up to the stumps, and that the wretched Tormentors and enemies of God had withdrawn the Fire from him, so that but a small Fire and Coles were left under him, then two that stood on each side of him, with their Halberds pitched him upon their Pikes, as far as the Chain would reach, after the manner and form as is described in the Picture hereunder following. Then he lifting up such Hands as he had, and his Fingers ends flaming with Fire, cried unto the People in these words, None but Christ, none but Christ; and so being let down again from their Halberds, fell into the Fire, and there ended his life.

Thus ye have heard by what craft and subtilty this good Man was entrapped, and with what cruelty he was oppressed: so that now remaineth nothing but only his punishment and death, which the drunken rage of the Bishops thought should not be long protracted.

During the time that he was in the Archbishops Ward at Lambeth, which was a little before his Disputation before the King, he wrote an excellent Confession or Defence of his Cause to King Henry.

Wherein he first mollifying the Kings Mind and Ears with a modest and sober Preface, declared how he had a double hope of Solace laid up, the one in the most high and mighty Prince of Princes, God; the other next unto God, in his Majesty, which should represent the Office and Ministry

KING Ministry of that most High Prince in governing here upon Earth; after that, proceeding in gentle words, he declared the cause which moved him to that which he had done.

The Apology of John Lambert unto the King. And albeit he was not ignorant how odious this Doctrine would be unto the People, yet notwithstanding because he was not also ignorant how desirous the Kings mind was to search out the Truth, he thought no time unmeet to perform his Duty, especially forasmuch as he would not utter those things unto the ignorant multitude, for avoiding of offence, but only unto the Prince himself unto whom he might safely declare his mind.

The Preface of John Lambert unto the King. After this Preface made, he entering into the Book confirmed his Doctrine touching the Sacrament by divers Testimonies of the Scriptures; by the which Scriptures he proved the Body of Christ, whether it riseth, or ascendeth, or sitteth, or be conversant here, to be always in one place.

Then he, gathering together the minds of the Ancient Doctors, did prove and declare by sufficient Demonstration, the Sacrament to be a Mystical matter. Albeit he so ruled himself in such temperance and moderation, that he did not deny, but that the Holy Sacrament was the very Natural Body of our Saviour, and the Wine his Natural Blood; and that moreover his Natural Body and Blood were in those Mysteries, but after a certain manner, as all the Ancient Doctors in a manner do interpret it.

After this Protestation thus made, he inferreth the Sentence of his Confession, as here followeth:

A Treatise of John Lambert to the King.

A Treatise of John Lambert upon the Sacrament unto the King. Christ is so ascended Bodily into Heaven, and his Holy Manhood thither so assumpt, where it doth sit upon the right hand of the Father; that is to say, is with the Father there remanent and resident in Glory, that by the infallible Promise of God, it shall not or cannot from thence return before the general Doom, which shall be in the end of the World. And as he is no more corporally in the World, so can I not fee how he can be corporally in the Sacrament, or his Holy Supper. And yet notwithstanding do I knowledge and confesse, that the Holy Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood is the very Body and Blood in a certain manner, which shall be shewed hereafter with your Graces favour and permission, according to the words of our Saviour, Instituting the same Holy Sacrament, and saying, This is my body which is given for you. And again, This is my blood which is of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.

Mat. 26. But now for approving of the first part, that Christ is so bodily ascended into Heaven, and his Holy manhood so thither assumpt, &c. than do the infallible Promise of God he shall not, or cannot any more from thence bodily return before the general Doom, I shall for this allege first the Scriptures, following the Authorities of old Holy Doctors, with one consent testifying with me. Besides this, I need not to tell, that the same is no other thing, but that we have taught to us in these Three Articles of our Creed, He ascended into Heaven, and sitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty, from thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. For Christ did ascend bodily, the Godhead which is infinite, un-circumscribable, replenishing both Heaven and Earth, being immutable, and unmovable, so that properly it can neither ascend nor descend.

Scriptures affirming the same.

Acts 1. The Scriptures which I promised to alledge for the confirmation of my said Sentence, be these: He was lifted up into Heaven in their sight, and a cloud received him from their eyes: and when they were looking up into Heaven, they saw two men, &c. Here it is evidently shewed, That Christ departed and ascended in a visible and circumscrip Body. That this departing was visible and in a visible Body, these words do testify: And when they were looking up: Why stand ye here looking up into Heaven? And, even as ye have seen him, &c. That Secondly it was in Body, I have afore proved; and moreover the Deity is not seen, but is invisible, as appeareth:

To God only invisible, &c. And, He dwelleth in the inaccessible light which no man hath nor may see, &c. Therefore the Manhood and Natural Body was assumpt, or did ascend. That Thirdly it was in a circumscrip Body, appeareth manifestly in this: First, That his Ascension and Bodily departing caused them to look up. And 2dly, That he was lifted up; that is to wit, from beneath or from below. And Thirdly, That a Cloud received him, whereas no Cloud nor Clouds can receive or embrace the Deity, &c.

I am fain to leave out other evident Arguments for the same purpose, lest I should be over prolix and tedious. If doth there also follow in like form, how the Angels made answer to the Disciples, saying: Ye men of Galilee, Why stand ye gazing into Heaven? This Jesus which is taken up from you into Heaven, shall so come again, as ye have seen him going up into Heaven. Here we see again, that Jesus is assumpt, or taken away into Heaven. And then it must be from out of the World, according to that we read, John 16. I went forth from the Father, and I came into the World. I leave the World again, and I go unto the Father: That is not else, but as he came from the Father of Heaven into this World, in that he was Incarnate and made Man, for his Godhead was never absent, either from Heaven, or yet from Earth; even so should his Manhood leave the World again, to go to Heaven. Moreover, in that it is said, So shall he come, is plainly testified, that he is always, and now corporally absent.

Finally, It is shewed further, after what manner he shall come again, by these words, Even as ye have seen him going up into Heaven. Which is not else, but as you did visibly see him ascend or go away to Heaven, a Cloud embracing him and taking him from among you: even so shall you visibly see him to come again in the Clouds, as we read, Matth. 26. You shall see the Son of Man to come in the Clouds of Heaven. And again, Matth. 24. And they shall see the Son of man. Such other Texts have we full many, declaring my Sentence to be Catholick and True. Of which I here shall briefly note some places, and pass over them, knowing that a little rehearsal is sufficient to your noble wisdom. The places be, Mark 16. Luke 24. John 13, 14, 16, and 17. Rom. 8. Ephes. 1, and 2. and 2 Cor. 6. Heb. 8, 9, 10, and 12, and 1 Thess. 4. and 1 Pet. 2. Which all do testify, that Christ hath Bodily forsaken the World, departed from it unto his Father, ascending into Heaven, sitting still upon the right hand of the Father above all Dominion, Power and Principality, where he is present Advocate and Intercessor before his Father, and that he shall so Bodily come again, like as he was seen to depart from hence.

Nothing can better or more clearly testify and declare, what is contained in the Sacrament of Christs Holy Body and Blood, than do the words of the Scripture, whereby it was Instituted. Mark doth agree with Matthew, so that in a manner he reciteth his very words. And no marvel it is. For as the Doctors do say, The Gospel of Mark is a very Epitome or Abridgment of Matthew. I shall therefore write the relations of them touching the Institution of this Sacrament together. The Relation or Testimony of Matthew is this: As they were eating, Jesus took Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake and gave to his Disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my Body. And taking the Cup, and giving thanks, he gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of this, for this is my Blood of the New Testament which is shed for many, for the remission of sins. And I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the Vine, until that day, that I drink it new with you in the Kingdom of my Father.

The Testimony or Relation of Mark, is this, *And as they did eat, Jesus took the Bread, and when he had given thanks, he brake it and gave it to them, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body. And he took the Cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it to them, and they all drank of it, and he said unto them, This is my Blood of the New Testament which is shed for many. Verily, I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the Vine unto that day that I drink it new in the Kingdom of God. Luke 22. Sacrament. His relation or report is this: When he had taken Bread, and given thanks, he brake it, and gave to them, saying, This my Body which is given for you, do this in remembrance of me. Likewise also after Supper he took the Cup, saying, This Cup is the New Testament in my Blood which is shed for you.

1 Cor. 11. And his Testimony doth follow next, agreeable to Luke, and it is thus: For I have received of the Lord that which I also have delivered to you: That our Lord Jesus Christ, in the same night in which he was betrayed, took Bread, and when he had given thanks he brake it, and said, Take, eat, this is my Body which is broken for you: this do ye in remembrance of me. After the same manner he also took the Cup when he had Supped, saying, This Cup is the New Testament in my Blood, this do as oft as ye drink it, in the remembrance of me: for as often as ye shall eat this Bread, and drink this Cup, ye shall shew the Lords death till he come. By these Testimonies shall I declare my Sentence to your Grace, which I conceive of the Holy Sacrament of Christs Blessed Body and Blood, and in all points of difficulty shall I annex the very interpretation of the old holy Doctors and Fathers, to shew that I do not ground any thing upon my self. Thereafter shall I add certain Arguments which I trust shall clearly prove and justify my Sentence to be True, Catholick, and according both with God and his Laws, and also with the mind of holy Doctors.

My Sentence is this: That Christ ascended into Heaven, and so hath forsaken the World, and there shall abide, sitting on the right hand of his Father, without returning hither again, until the general Doom; at which time he shall come from thence, to Judge the dead and the living. This all do I believe done in his Natural Body, which he took of the Blessed Virgin Mary his Mother, in the which he also suffered Passion for our safety and redemption upon a Cross; which died for us, and was buried: in which he also did rise again to life Immortal. That Christ is thus ascended in his Manhood and Natural Body, and so assumpt into Heaven, we may soon prove; forasmuch as the Godhead of him is never out of Heaven, but ever replenishing both Heaven and Earth; and besides that, is infinite and interminable or uncommunicable, so that it neither can properly either ascend or descend, being without all alteration, and immutable, or unmovable.

So that now his Natural Body being assumpt from among us, and departed out of the World, the same can no more return from thence unto the end of the World. For as Peter witnesseth, Acts the third; Whom the heavens must contain until the time that all things be restored which God had spoken by the mouth of all his holy Prophets: since the World began. And the same doth the Article of our Creed teach us, which is, From thence (i. from Heaven) shall he come, to judge the quick and the dead. Which time Paul calleth the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, 1 Tim. 6.

1 Tim. 6. Seeing then this Natural Body of our Saviour, that was born of his Mother Mary being a Virgin, is all whole assumpt into Heaven, and departed out of this World; and so as saith St. Peter, He must remain in Heaven until the end of the World, which he calleth, the time when all things must be restored; This I say, seen and believed according to our Creed and the Scriptures, I cannot perceive how the Natural Body of him can contrariwise be in the World, and so in the Sacrament. And yet notwithstanding is this true, That the Holy Sacrament is Christs Body and Blood, as after shall be declared.

BUT first for the establishing of my former purpose, That the Natural Body of our Saviour is so absent from this World, and ascended into Heaven, that it can be here no more present unto the general Doom; I would beseech your Grace to consider the ruind and sentence of the old holy Doctors, in this purpose or matter, how agreeable they testifie with that which is before shewed. Amongst whom we have first St. Augustine, writing thus to Dardanus: Proinde quod ad verbum attinet,

August. ad
Dardanus.

Creator est Christus; omnia enim per ipsum facta sunt. Quid vero ad hominem, &c. Therefore as concerning the World, Christ is the Creator, all things are made by him. But as touching Man, Christ is a Creature made of the seed of David, according to the Flesh, and ordained according to the similitude of Men: Also because Man consisteth of two things, the Soul and the Flesh; in that he had a Soul, as was pensive and sorrowful unto death; in that he had Flesh, he suffered death. Neither when we call the Son of God Christ, we do separate his Manhood, nor when we call the same Christ the Son of Man, we do separate his Godhead from him. In that he was Man, he was conversant upon the Earth, (and not in Heaven, where he now is) when he said; No Man ascendeth up into Heaven, but he which descended from Heaven, the Son of Man which is in Heaven. Although in that respect that he was the Son of God he was in Heaven, and in that he was the Son of Man, he was yet in the Earth, and as yet was not ascended into Heaven; likewise, in that he is the Son of God, he is the Lord of Glory; and in that he is the Son of Man he was Crucified. And yet notwithstanding the Apostle saith, And if they had known the Lord of Glory, they would never have Crucified him. And by this, both the Son of Man was in Heaven, and the Son of God, in that he was Man, was Crucified upon Earth. Therefore as he might well be called the Lord of Glory, being Crucified, when as yet that suffering did only pertain unto the Flesh; so it might well be said, This day thou shalt be with me in Paradise, when according to the humility of his Manhood in his Flesh, he lay in the Grave; and according to his Soul he was in the bottom of Hell that same day. According to his Divine immutability, he never departed from Paradise, because he by his Godhead is always every where. Doubt you not therefore that there is Christ Jesus according to his Manhood, from whence he shall come. Remember it well, and keep faithfully thy Christian Confession: for he rose from the dead, he ascended into Heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of the Father; neither will he come from any other place, but from thence to judge the quick and the dead. And he shall come as the voice of the Angel beareth witness, as he was seen to go into Heaven; that is to say, in the self-same form and substance of Flesh, whereunto undoubtedly he gave Immortality, but he did not take away the nature thereof: according to this form of his Flesh he is not to be thought to be every where. And we must take heed that we do not so affirm the Divinity of his Manhood, that we thereby take away the truth of his Body. For it is not a good consequence, that that thing which is in Christ should be in every place as God. For the Scripture saith very truly of us, That in Him we live, move and have our being; and yet notwithstanding, we are not in every place as he is; but that Man is otherwise in God, because that God is otherwise in Man, by a certain proper and singular manner of being: for God and Man is one Person, and only Jesus Christ is both. In that he is God, he is in every place; but in that he is Man, he is in Heaven.

By which words of holy Augustine, your Grace may evidently see, that he testifieth and teacheth the Blessed Body or Flesh of Christ to be no where else than in Heaven. For to it being assumed or ascended into Heaven, God, as he saith, hath given Immortality, but not taken away Nature. So that by the Nature of that Holy Flesh or Body, it must occupy one place. Wherefore it followeth, According to this form; that is to wit, of his Flesh, Christ is not to be thought to be in every place. For if Christ should in his Humanity be every where diffused or spread abroad, so should his Bodily Nature, or Natural Body be taken from him: And therefore he saith, For we must beware that we do not so affirm the Divinity of Man, that we do take away the Humanity of his Body. But in that he is God, so is he every where, according to my words before-written; and in that he is Man, so is he in Heaven. And therefore it is said, For God and Man is one Person, and only Jesus Christ is both. He, in that he is every where, is God: but in that he is Man, he is in Heaven.

KING And yet do we read agreeable to the same matter, more largely in the same Epistle, by these words, Christum Dominum nostrum unigenitum Dei Filium, equalem patri, eundemque hominis Filium, quo major est Pater, ut ubique totum presentem esse non dubites tanquam Deum, & in eodem Templo Dei esse tanquam inhabitantem, &c. Thou shalt not doubt Christ our Lord, the only Son of God, equal with his Father, and the same being the Son of Man, whereby the Father is greater, is present every where as God, and is in one and the same Temple of God as God, and also in some place of Heaven as concerning the true shape of body.

This shew clearly, that for the measure of his very body he must be in one place, and that in Heaven, as concerning his manhood, and yet every where present in that he is the eternal Son of God and equal to his Father. Like testimony doth he give in the thirtieth Treatise that he maketh upon the Evangelij of John. These be his words there written, Dum seculum finitur, sursum est Dominus, sed etiam hic est veritas Domini, &c. Until the world be at an end the Lord is above, but here is the truth of the Lord also; for the Body of our Lord in which be rose must be in one place, but his truth is abroad in every place. The first parcel, that is, until the worlds end, is so put, that it may join with the sentence going before, or else to these words following, The Lord is above, &c. And so should it well accord to my sentence before shewed, which is, the Lord is so bodily ascended, that in his natural body he cannot again return from Heaven until the general Doom.

But howsoever the said clause or parcel be applied, it shall not greatly skill; for my sentence notwithstanding remaineth full steadfast: Inasmuch as the Scripture doth mention but of two advents or comings of Christ, of which the first is performed in his blessed Incarnation, and the second is the coming at the general Doom. And furthermore, in this Article of our Creed, From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead, is not only shewed wherefore he shall come again, but also when he shall come again: So that in the mean while, as the other Article of our Creed witnesseth, He sitteth at the right hand of God his Father, that is nothing else to say, than he remaineth in glory with the Father. Furthermore, even as I have before rehearsed the foresaid authority of Austen, to have I read in his Quinquagesima upon a Psalme, of which I cannot now precisely note or name the number. And the same words doth he also write in the Epistle to Saint Hierom. So that we may know he had good liking in it, that he so commonly doth use it, as his usual Proverb, or By-word.

In the same is also testified that this blessed Body can be but in one place, so that it being now, according to the Scripture and Article of our Belief or Creed, in Heaven, it cannot be in Earth: and much less can it be in so innumerable places of the Earth, as we may perceive that the Sacrament is. Thus although the Body of our Saviour must be in one place, as he writeth agreeably to the saying of Peter, Whom the Heavens must receive until the time of the restitution of all things; Yet as the words following make mention, Veritas autem ejus ubique diffusa est. But his verity is scattered every where. This verity of Christ, or of his Body, I do take to be that he in other places doth call Virtus Sacramenti, the Virtue of the Sacrament. As in the five and twentieth Treatise upon John we find thus written, Aliud est Sacramentum, aliud virtus Sacramenti. The Sacrament is one thing, and the virtue of the Sacrament is another thing. And again, Si quis manducaverit ex ipso, non moritur, sed qui pertinet ad virtutem Sacramenti, non qui pertinet ad visibile Sacramentum, &c. If any man eat of him, he dieth not, but he meaneth of him, which doth appertain to the virtue of the Sacrament, and not of him which pertaineth to the visible Sacrament. And to declare what is the virtue of the Sacrament, that I count to be the truth of the Lord or of his body, he saith, Qui manducat intus, non foris, qui manducat in corde, non qui premit dente: He which eateth inwardly in Spirit, not outwardly; he that eateth in heart, and not he which cheweth with teeth.

So that finally, this truth of the Lord or his Body, which is dispersed every where abroad, is the spiritual profit, fruit and comfort, that is opened to be received every where of all Men by Faith in the verity of the Lord, that is to wit, in the very and true promise or testament made to us in the Lords Body that was crucified and suffered death for us, and rose again ascending immortal into Heaven, where he sitteth, that is, abideth on the right hand of his Father, from thence not to return until the general Doom or Judgment. This bodily absence of our Saviour is likewise clearly shewed in the fiftieth Treatise that he maketh upon John; where he doth expound this Text, Ye have the poor always with you, but ye shall not always have me with you, to my purpose, that thereby I count and hold mine opinion to be rather Catholic, than theists that hold the contrary. Finally, the same doth he confirm in his Sermons of the second and third Series of Easter; and so many places besides, as here cannot be recited, the number of them is so passing great.

With him consenteth full plainly Augustinus in his second Book to Thrasimundus, writing in this wise, Unus idemque homo localis ex homine, qui est Deus immensus ex patre. Unus idemque seculum humanam substantiam, absens Caelo cum esset in terra, &c. One and the same man being local in that he is man, which is God Almighty of the Father. One and the same according to human substance, being absent from Heaven when he was in the earth, and leaving the earth when he ascended up into Heaven. But according to his divine and Almighty substance, neither departing from Heaven when he descended from Heaven, neither leaving the earth, when he ascended into Heaven. The which may well be known by the undoubted saying of our Lord himself: which that he might the better shew his humanity occupying a place, said unto his Disciples: I ascend up unto my Father and your Father, unto my God and your God. Also when he had said of Lazarus: Lazarus is dead, he adjoynd, saying: And I am glad for your sakes, that you may believe, because I was not there. But shewing the greatness of his Divinity, he said to his Disciples: Behold I am with you unto the end of the World. For how did he ascend into Heaven, but because he is local and true man? And how is he present to his faithful, but because he is Almighty and true God, &c. In this manner doth he proceed forth, speaking much, full agreeable to my sentence, which is now over-long here to write. But what can be said more plainly in so few words making for me?

First he saith, that Christ being a Man, is as concerning his manhood local, that is to say, contained in one place. And to expresse that more clearly, he addeth to it, saying, He is one and the same according to his human substance, absent from Heaven when he was in Earth, and leaving the Earth when he ascended into Heaven. Whereas he hath a contrary Antithesis for the godly nature, to shew forth the first point the more effectually. The Antithesis is thus: But according to his divine and incomparable substance, neither leaving Heaven when he descended from Heaven, neither forsaking the Earth when he ascended into Heaven. Whereby is also confirmed that I said; Christ did descend and ascend, as touching his humanity, but not in his Deity, which is immutable and unmoveable; as we may perceive by that he here doth call it Almighty substance. Furthermore, to shew that Christ (as touching his human and natural body, is local) and in one place, he alledgeth, and that right justly, two Texts of Scripture: The first is; I ascend to my Father, &c. And the second is of Lazarus; I am glad for your sakes, &c.

Finally, he maketh this demand; But how did he ascend into Heaven, but because he is a local and very man? Whereby we may see, that by this sentence Christ could not ascend, except he had been local, that is, contained in one place, and so very man. And that is according to Saint Augustine, writing as is above shewed; And he shall so come (as the Angel witnesseth) even as you have seen him go up into Heaven, that is to say, in the same form and substance of his flesh. According to this form he is not spread abroad in every place; for we must beware that we do not so esteem his Divinity, that we thereby do take away the verity of his body. So that they both do testify, and that very plainly, that Christ could not have ascended, except he had been local, that is to wit, contained in one place, and very man, and that if he were not local, he could not be a man. Wherefore Saint Augustine saith further, Ad Dardanum, Spatiallocorum tolle corporibus, & nusquam erunt, & quia nusquam erunt, nec erunt; That is to wit, Take away locality, or occupying of place from bodies, and they shall be no where: and because they shall be no where, they shall have no being at all.

We therefore coveting to find Christ or his natural Body, should seek for him in Heaven, where his natural manhood is sitting on the right hand of his Father. So willeth us Saint Ambrose, in the tenth Book which he writeth upon Luke, speaking of Christs humanity asumpt in this wise; Ergo, non supra terram, nec in terra, nec secundum carnem te quærere debemus, si volumus te invenire, &c. Therefore we ought not to seek thee upon the earth, nor in the earth, neither according to the flesh, if we will find thee: for now according to the flesh we do not know Christ. Furthermore, Stephen did not seek thee upon the Earth, when that he did see thee standing on the right Hand of God the Father. But Mary, which sought thee upon the Earth, could not touch thee. Stephen touched thee because he sought thee in Heaven. Stephen amongst the Jews saw thee being absent, &c.

Thus we must seek for the natural Body of Christ, not upon the Earth, but in Heaven, if we will not be deceived. And that doth he more largely then in the same Treatise, speaking thus of the verity of Christs Body; Quomodo non corpus quiesceret, in quo manebant insignia vulnerum, vestigia cicatricum, quæ Dominus palpanda obtulit; &c. How could it come to pass; that the body could not rest in the Sepulcher, in which the tokens of the wounds and scars did appear, which the Lord himself did offer to be touched (in which doing he did not only establish the Faith, but also augmented devotion); Because he would rather carry up into Heaven the wounds received for us, and would not put them away, that he might present to God the Father the price of our liberty: such a one the Father doth place at his right hand, embracing the triumph and victory of our salvation, &c.

Gregory also in an Homily of Pentecost, saith, agreeable to the other in these words, Quando non maneret apud eos, qui ascensus celos, promittit dicens: Ecce ego vobiscum sum omnibus diebus usque ad consummationem sæculi, &c. When was it that he did not tarry with them, which ascending up to Heaven, promised, saying, Behold, I am here with you continually until the end of the World? But the word Incarnate tarrieth and also goeth away. It departeth in body, and tarrieth in Divinity. And therefore he saith, that he tarried with them: even he which was ever present with them by his invisible power, and now departed by his corporal vision. In like wise doth he testifie in the Homily of Easter-day.

With these doth Bede accord in an Homily of Easter in which he declareth this Text, John 16. A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again, a little while and ye shall see me. And also in an Homily of the Vigil of Pentecost. And who can otherwise say or think knowing the Scripture and our Belief, but that the natural Body of Christ is so asumpt into Heaven all whole, that it must there abide without returning, until the general judgment? Notwithstanding, seeing this is the chief point whereupon I seek to establish my sentence in this matter of the holy Sacrament, that Christs holy and natural Body is so asumpt into Heaven, that there it must remain all whole without returning until the general Doom; I will yet, with the permission of your grace, add one or two Arguments deduced out of the Scriptures, to declare further my sentence to be faithful and Catholick.

Arguments out of Scripture.

CHRIST is his I. A S Christ was enclosed and so born about in the Womb of his Mother, being a Virgin undefiled, and after was born into this World, and put in a Manger, and so he growing in age, did abide in divers places, but in one after another, sometime in Galilee, sometime in Samaria, sometime in Jury, sometime beyond, sometime on this side of Jordan, and consequently he was Crucified at Jerusalem, there being inclosed and buried in a grave, from whence he did arise, so that the Angels testified of him, He is risen, and is not here, Matthew 28. and as at the time appointed, after his resurrection, he was asumpt, or lifted up into Heaven from the top of the Mount of Oliver, in the sight of his Disciples, a cloud compassing him about: Even so shall he come from the same Celestial place corporally, as they did see him to depart out of the one place corporally, according to the testimony of the Angels, Acts 1. So that in this we may undoubtedly find that Christ, as touching his manhood, cannot be corporally in many and divers places at once, and so to be corporally in his natural Body in Heaven, and also in Earth, and that it is moreover in so many parts of the World, as Men have affirmed.

Neither doth the Scripture require that we should spoil Christ of the property of Mans nature, which is to be in one place; whom the same Scripture doth perpetually witness and teach to be Man, and so to confound the condition of his bodily nature with the nature divine. Paul doth teach, that Christ in his manhood was made in all points like unto his Brethren, sin excepted: how then can his body be in more places at once, unlike unto the natural property of the bodies of us his Brethren? But here do some witty Philosophers, say, rather Sophisters than Divines, bring in to the annulling of Christs humanity, a similitude of Mans soul, which being one, is yet so all whole in all our whole body, that it is said to be all whole in every part of the body. But such should remember, that it is no convenient similitude which is made of things different and diverse in nature, such as be the soul and body of Man, to prove them to have like properties. This is as if they would prove Christs Body to be of one nature and property with his soul, and that things naturally corporal were not most diverse from Creatures naturally spiritual.

Furthermore, if so it might be, that the body or flesh of Christ were merely spiritual, and full like unto the substance of Angels, yet it could not in this wise follow, that his body could be every where, or in divers places at once. Wherefore such subtilties are to be omitted, and the trade of Scripture should well like us, by which the old Doctors do define, that the Body of Jesus, exalted or asumpt into Heaven, must be local, circumscript, and in one place, notwithstanding that the verity, spiritual grace, and fruit that cometh of it, is diffused and spread abroad in all places, or every where. How could Christ corporally depart out of this World, and leave the Earth, if he in the kinds of Bread and Wine be not only corporally contained and received, but also there revived, kept and enclosed? What other thing else do these words testifie, John the thirteenth? But Jesus knowing that his hour was come, that he should pass out of this World to his Father, &c. And in like form, Luke the four and twentieth, And it came to pass, that as he blessed them, he departed from them, and was carried up into Heaven: What do they signifie, if Christ went not verily out of this world, his natural Body being surely asumpt into Heaven?

They do therefore undoubtedly declare, that Christ, being very God and very Man, did verily depart out of this world in his natural body, his humanity being asumpt into Heaven, where he remaineth sitting in Glory with the Father: Whereas yet his Deity did not leave the world, he depart out from the earth. Paul doth say, Philippians the second, that of two things he wist not which he might rather chuse, that is to wit, to abide in the flesh for preaching the Gospel, or else to be dissolved from the flesh, seeing that to abide with Christ is much and far better. By the which Paul doth manifestly prove, that they be not presently with Christ, which yet do abide mortal in the flesh. Yet they be with Christ in such wise, as the Scripture doth say, that the believing be the Temple of Christ. And as Paul doth say, 2 Cor. 13. 5 Cor. 13. Do you not know your selves that Jesus Christ is in you? In which sense he also promised to be with us unto the end of the world. Christ therefore must be otherwise in that place, in which the Apostle desired to be with him, being dissolved, and departed from his body, than he doth abide either in the Supper, or else in any other places of the Churches. He therefore doth undoubtedly mean Heaven, which is the Paradise of perfect bliss and glory:

KING whereas Christ being a Victor, Triumpher, and Conqueror over death, sin and Hell, and over all creatures, doth reign and remain corporally. Thus do I trust that your Grace doth see my sentence thus far forth to be right, Catholick, Christian, and faithful, according to holy Scripture, to holy Fathers, and the Articles of our Christian Belief. Which sentence is this: Christs natural Body is so assumpt into Heaven, where it sitteth or remaineth in glory of the Father, that it can no more come from thence, that is to wit, from Heaven return, until the end of the World; and therefore cannot the same natural Body natural be here in the World, or in the Sacrament: for then should it be departed or gone out of the world, and yet be still remaining in the world. It should then be both to come, and already come, which is a contradiction, and variant from the nature of his manhood.

The natural Body of Christ cannot be both in heaven and earth locally.

The second part of this matter.

NOW my sentence in the second part of this matter is this (if so be your Grace shall please to know it, as I year poor and unworthy, but full true subject would with all submission and instance beseech you to know it) I grant the holy Sacrament to be the very and natural Body of our Saviour, and his very natural Blood, and that the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour is in the Sacrament after a certain wise, as after shall appear: for so do the words of the supper testify, Take, eat, this is my body which is given for you. And again, Drink ye all of this; this is my blood which is of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sin. Of which words, seeing on them dependeth a great trial and proof of this matter, and that for the interpretation of them is and hath been all the controverſie of this matter, I therefore shall shew the interpretation, that holy Doctors have made of them, that, as to me seemeth, be full worthy credit.

First, we find in the second Book of Tertullian, which he writeth against Marcion, Ipse Christus nec panem reprobavit, Christus did not reprove the bread, because it doth represent his body. This Marcion, against whom Tertullian doth thus write, did erroneously reprove all creatures as evil. Which thing Tertullian doth improve by the Sacrament, saying as is above written, Christ did not reprove the bread, which representeth his body. As who would say; if Christ had judged the Bread evil, then would he not have left it for a sign or Sacrament to represent his blessed Body. Agreeable to the same doth he also say in the fourth Book made against the said Marcion in these words, Christus acceptum panem & distributum Discipulis, corpus suum illud fecit, &c. Christ made the same bread which he took and distributed to his Disciples, his body, saying: This is my body, that is to say, the figure of my body. But it could not have been a figure, unless it were the body of a very true thing indeed. Furthermore, a void thing, which is a phantasm, could not receive a figure or a form. This Marcion had an erroneous opinion, that Christ had no natural Body, but a Body phantasmal. Which Error or Hurtle, this famous Doctor Tertullian doth improve by the holy Sacrament, saying, as afore is written, That the Sacrament is a figure of Christs body: Ergo, Christ had a very and true body. For the thing which is vain and phantasmal can receive no figure. So that in both places we may clearly perceive his interpretation of these words, This is my body: which interpretation is not new, but authentick, or full ancient, like as is the writer. And this interpretation do I the rather allow, because none of the old Doctors, which followed him, did ever reprove him therefore, but rather have followed it, as appeareth by holy Augustine. In the preface upon the third Psalm, doth the said Augustine highly commend the wonderful sufferance of Christ, which so long did suffer and forbear Judas, as if he had been a good and an honest Man: whereas notwithstanding he did know his Traiterous thoughts, when he received him to the Feast or Supper, in which he did commend and deliver to his Disciples the figure of his body and blood. The words of Anſen in Latin be these:

Thereto becometh a figure of Christs Body.

This is my body expounded.

The passion of Christ in suffering Judas.

Augustine. The Sacrament is a figure of the Body of Christ.

In Historia novi Testamenti, ipse Dominus nostri tantum & tam admiranda patientia orat; quod illum simul portulit tanquam bonum, &c. In the History of the New Testament, the patience of our Lord was so great, and so to be marvelled at, because he suffered Judas so long as a good man, when he knew his thoughts when he received him to the Feast, in the which he did commend and deliver the figure of his body and blood to his Disciples.

The same holy Doctor also writing against Adamantius, saith thus, Non enim dubitavit Dominus dicere, hoc est corpus meum, cum daret signum corporis sui; For the Lord did not doubt to say, This is my body, when he gave a sign of his body. And for a further declaration, in the same Chapter, he saith, Sic enim sanguis est anima, quomodo perra erat Christus, &c. For the blood is so the soul, as the rock was Christ. Notwithstanding he doth not say, that the rock did signifie Christ: but he doth say, that the rock was Christ.

Expresly doth Augustine here call the sign of Christs Body, his Body, plainly interpreting these words, This is my body, as both he and Tertullian did before.

Moreover, he taketh these three sentences, This is my body, the soul is the blood, and Christ was the stone, to be of one Phrase, and to be like speeches, or to be expounded after one fashion. And this Text, The rock was Christ, doth he commonly thus expound: The rock did signifie Christ, as appeareth, Lib. 18. de Civitate Dei, Cap. 48. Also in the Book of Questions upon Genesis, and in the Book of Questions upon Leviticus, handling the 18th Chapter of Job, and in his Sermon of the Annuntiation of our Lady.

In like manner also Saint Jerome expounded it in the small Scholies, written upon the first Chapter of the first Epistle to the Corinthians, and all other Writers with one consent, so far as I can read; and so doth the Text require it to be expounded. For Christ was not a natural fone, as all men may well perceive, and yet was he the very true stone figuratively, as Lyra saith, Solet res que significat nomine rei quam significat, nominari: The thing which signifieth is wont to be called by the name of the thing which it doth signifie. And so is the stone signifying Christ, called Christ, which thereby is signified. And as he doth approve this Text, The stone was Christ, likewise doth he expound, The blood is the soul, with the which he doth knit this Text, This is my body, to be figuratively expounded, as they be. According to this doth the holy Doctor write, Psal. 50. Nisi quis manducaverit carnem meam, non videbit vitam eternam, &c. Unless a man do eat my flesh, he shall not see eternal life. They understood that very foolishly, and conceived the same carnally; and that our Lord would out away lumps or pieces of his body, and give to them. And they said; This is an hard saying. But they were hard of belief, and not the saying. For if they had not been hard, but meek, they would have said to themselves: He speaketh not this without a cause, but because there is some bid Sacrament or mystery therein. They should have abdon wish him, ease of belief, and not hard, and then should they have learned of him that which other learned, that carried after they were gone away.

In this we may see, that our Saviour willeth his precious flesh to be eaten. But for the manner of eating, there is, and hath been much controverſie. The Jews of Capernaum were offended with Christ, when he said, he would have his flesh eaten: and except a man should eat his flesh, he could not come to life eternal. They supposed grossly, and understood him (if a man might so plainly speak it) butcherly, that he would cut our lumps and pieces out of his body, as the Butcher doth out of dead beasts, and so give it them to eat of, as Augustine doth here say. And upon this grose, or (as holy Augustine doth here call it) foolish and fleshly understanding, they were offended, and said to him; This is a sore or hard saying. They did shoot forth their bolt, and unwise saying over soon, and were offended before they had caute. They took that for hard and fore, which would have been passing pleasant and profitable to them, if they would have heard the thing declared thoroughly to the end.

And even so now that which in this matter may appear at the first blash, a sore, strange, and intolerable sentence, for as much as we have not heard of it before, but the contrary hath of a long time been beaten into our heads, and persuaded to our minds, yet by deliberation and indifference, and abiding a trial of that which at the first may appear fore and intolerable, shall (I trust) be found a sweet truth, to such specially as your Grace is, loving to hear and to know all truth. But the Capernaites were hard, as here faith Autime, and not the Word. For if they had not been hard, but soft and patient to hear, they would have laid in themselves, Christ faith not this without a cause, and there is some hidden mystery therein: and so by patient variance they should have known the truth, that they could not attain to for perverse hardness or haste, which is a great stop and let of true judgment. But the Disciples tarried patiently to hear further, and so did they know this speech of Christ to be the words life, that to the other, over readily departing from Christ, were words of death: For they took them literally and grossly; and the Letter (as Paul faith) slayeth.

But to shew what the Disciples remaining with Christ did learn, Saint Augustine doth consequently shew, by the words of the Gospel, saying, thus: Ille autem infruxit eos, & ait illis: Spiritus est qui vivificat, caro nihil prodest, &c. But he instructed them, and said unto them, The Spirit is that which giveth life, the flesh profiteth nothing. The words that I have spoken unto you are spirit and life. Understand you that which I have spoken, spiritually. You shall not eat this body which you see, neither shall you drink that same blood which they shall shed forth that shall crucify me. I have set forth to you a certain Sacrament or mystery, which, being spiritually understood, shall give you life. And although it be requisite that this be celebrated visibly, yet it ought to be understood invisibly. In this do we see, that both Christ and Augustine would have Christ's Words to be understood spiritually, and not carnally; figuratively, and not literally; and therefore doth he say, You shall not eat this body which you see, neither shall you drink that same blood which they shall shed forth that shall crucify me. And what else is this, but that Christ would his Body to be eaten, and his Blood to be drunken? But he would not his Body to be carnally eaten, which was materially seen of them to whom he spake; nor his material or natural Blood to be carnally drunken, which his crucifiers should cause to issue from his natural Body crucified, as faith Augustine; but he ordained and willed his Body and Blood to be spiritually eaten and drunken, in faith and belief that his Body was crucified for us, and that his Blood was shed for remission of our sins.

This eating and drinking is nothing but such true faith and belief as is shewed. Wherefore as Christ faith, He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath life everlasting. Even so doth he say, He that believeth in me hath life everlasting. And Saint Augustine agreeable to the same, treating upon John, doth say, At quid paradosim & ventrem? Crede, & manducasti, &c. Why dost thou prepare thy teeth and belly? Believe, and thou hast eaten. I do know that Christ ordaineth his Sacrament to be received and eaten, which is in a certain wise called his body, as after shall be more largely opened: but that same doth not feed the mind of them, except it be taken spiritually, and not corporally. Hebrews the thirteenth, It is good to establish the heart with grace, and not with meat.

And Saint Augustine assenting to the same, doth say in a Sermon, that he maketh upon these words, in the Gospel of Saint Luke: Lord teach us to pray, Panem dixit, sed Epousion, hoc est, supersubstantialium, &c. He said Bread, but supersubstantial Bread. This is not the Bread, which goeth into the Body: but that Bread which doth sacrifice the substance of our Soul. Our souls therefore, into whom nothing corporal can corporally enter, do not carnally receive the Body and Blood of our Saviour, neither did he ordain his blessed Body and Blood to be eaten and drunken: Although our souls cannot live, except they be spiritually fed with the blessed Body and Blood of him, spiritually eating and drinking them, in taking also at times convenient the blessed Sacrament, which is truly called his Body and Blood; Not that it is so really, but as is shewed by the interpretation both of Tertullian and Augustine, because it is a sign or figure of Christ's Body and Blood. And the signs or Sacraments do commonly, as faith Saint Augustine, both Ad Bonifacium, and in his Work, De Crinate

Dei, take their denomination of the things by them represented and signified.

But so much as some will object that Augustine in the words afore rehearsed doth not speak of eating the Sacrament; for the Text of the Scripture, upon the which he doth ground, is not spoken by eating the Sacrament, which Text is this, Unless a man may eat my flesh, &c. I answer, that true it is, he began of spiritual eating, and thereto serveth the Text recited. Nevertheless, he meaneth that Christ is not ordained to be eaten, either without the Sacrament, or in the Sacrament, but spiritually of the faithful: as more evidently doth appear by these words there following: Sacramentum aliquod vobis commendavi, quod spiritualiter intellectum vivificabit vos, &c. I have commended unto you a Sacrament, which being understood of you spiritually shall quicken you. Although it were necessary that the same should be celebrated visibly, yet notwithstanding it ought to be understood invisibly.

Here doth he shew that he meaneth of eating, not without the Sacrament only, but also in the Sacrament, and therefore he doth not only say, I have commended unto you a certain Sacrament, &c. But he addeth moreover, Although it is requisite the same to be celebrated visibly. How therefore can the eating of Christ, and the Sacrament thereof be visibly celebrate, but in the Manner, or in his Supper? Which is celebrate visibly in visible things of Bread and Wine: which cannot quicken or relieve us and our souls, except they be understood and so received spiritually.

Furthermore, as concerning the expolition of these words of the Supper, This is my body, &c. Saint Augustine writing to Bonifacius, faith thus. Sape ita loquimur, ut Pascha appropinquante, crastinum vel perendianum Dominum passionem dicamus, &c. We use oftentimes this manner of phrase, that when Easter doth approach, we name the day that cometh after, or the next day after that, the passion of the Lord, when as he notwithstanding had suffered before that many years; neither that passion was done but once for all. So truly do we say upon the Lord's day: This day the Lord hath risen, when so many years are past since he rose. Wherefore no man is so fond, that he will reprove us as liars, for this manner of speaking, because we call these days according to the similitude of those, in which these things were done: so that it is called the same day which is not the same, but by course of time of the year coming about, is like unto it: And also because that thing is said to be done that day through the celebration of the Sacrament, which was not done that day, but long before that time. Was not Christ once offered up in himself? And yet notwithstanding, he is not only offered up in the Sacrament, in the solemn Feast of Easter, but every day mystically for the people. Neither doth he make a lie, which being demanded, answereth, that Christ is offered up. For, if the Sacraments had not a certain similitude of those things whereof they are Sacraments, then should they be no Sacraments at all. By reason of this similitude or likeness, Sacraments oftentimes do receive the names of the self same things whereof they are Sacraments.

Therefore, as after a certain manner, the Sacrament of Christ's Body is the Body of Christ, and the Sacrament of Christ's Blood is the Blood of Christ: even likewise the Sacrament of Faith is Faith. For to believe, is none other thing, than to have Faith. And by this it is answered, that the very Infants have Faith, because of the Sacrament of Faith, and convert themselves unto God, because of the Sacrament of Conversion: for the very answer it self doth appertain unto the celebration of the Sacrament: as the Apostle speaketh of Baptism. For he faith, We are buried by Baptism into his death. He faith not, we have signified a burying, but he plainly faith, we are buried. Therefore he named the Sacrament of so weighty a matter or thing by no other name, but by the very name of the thing it self.

Nothing can be more plainly spoken, nor more agreeable to the natural understanding of the Texts of the Supper, and to the expolition afore shewed of Tertullian and of himself. For seeing that Christ is bodily in Heaven, and so absent from the Earth, it is needful to know, how the holy Sacrament, which he doth call his Body and Blood, should be his Body and Blood.

This holy Doctor Augustine therefore, doth this matter manifestly

How the Sacrament of the Body is the Body of Christ, &c.

Hath this a great blindness of true judgment. 2 Cor. 3.

The words of the Sacrament are to be understood spiritually.

The Body of Christ is not to be eaten carnally.

Aug. in Jo. 6.

Aug. in Sermon de verbis Lucæ.

The Sacrament truly called the Body and Blood of Christ.

KING manifestly and sincerely declare by other like speeches, and first by common speeches, and secondly by speeches of Scripture. The common speech is: we do, faith he, use often to say, that when Easter doth approach or draw nigh, to morrow or the next day is the Lords passion, whereas he did suffer afore many years past, and that passion was never but once done.

By Analogy of the Scripture, speeche must be expounded, one speech by another.

The second common speech is; and of that Sunday we say, That this day the Lord did rise from death, whereas so many years be yet past since the time he arose. Wherefore to conclude, he saith, No man is so foolish, that he will reprove us for so saying, or to say that we have lived, because we do call these days after the similitude of those in which these things were done. So that it is called the same day, not for that it is the self same, but by revolution of time like unto it. And the Resurrection is said to be done in the same day, through the celebrating of the Sacrament of that which is not done that day, but long time afore past.

Christ is offered in the Sacrament mystically, that is in remembrance of his oblation.

The third speech; Yet not Christ offered up once for all in his own person? Was is he nevertheless offered in the Sacrament mystically for the people, not only every year at the Feast of Easter, but also every day. Neither doth he lie, which when he is demanded, shall answer, that he offered or sacrificed. For if the Sacraments had not a certain similitude of those things of which they be Sacraments, then should they be no Sacraments at all. By reason of which similitude they do for the most part receive the denomination or name of those things signified. And therefore after a certain manner the Sacrament of Christs Body is the Body of Christ, and the Sacrament of Christs Blood is the Blood of Christ, and so also be the Sacraments of Faith called Faith.

Secundum quid ad simpliciter, alicuius affectu certam manent.

This doth he yet prove by another example of speech, which is this; It is none other thing to believe, than to have Faith. And therefore when answer is made that the Infants have Faith, which indeed have it not in full working, it is answered, That such have Faith for the Sacrament of Faith, and that they do convert themselves unto Faith for the Sacrament of Conversion. For the very answer it self doth pertain to the celebration of the Sacrament, &c. Thus doth it sufficiently appear, that as we use truly to call that Good-Friday, or the day of Christs passion, which is not indeed the day of Christs passion, but only a memorial thereof once done for ever: and as we use to call the next Easter day the day of Christs Resurrection, not because that Christ in the same day shall arise, but only for a memorial of his resurrection once done for ever, and that of long time passed.

The celebration of the Sacrament represents the oblation of Christs Body. The Sacrament of Christs Body is not Christs Body in deed, but in memorial or representation.

And Christ, being offered up once for all in his own proper person, is yet said to be offered up not only every year at Easter, but also every day in the celebration of the Sacrament, because his oblation, once for ever made, is thereby represented; Even so (saith Augustine) is the Sacrament of Christs Body the Body of Christ, and the Sacrament of Christs Blood the Blood of Christ in a certain wise or fashion. Not that the Sacrament is his natural Body or Blood indeed, but that it is a memorial or representation thereof, as the days before shewed be of his very and natural Body crucified for us, and of his precious Blood shed for the remission of our sins. And thus be the holy signs or Sacraments truly called by the names of the very things in them signified. But why so? For they (saith Augustine) have a certain similitude of those things whereof they be signs or Sacraments; for else they should be no Sacraments at all: and therefore do they commonly, and for the most part receive the denomination of the things whereof they be Sacraments.

A fallaxia in loquendo, a seculum quid ad simpliciter. The Pope argument. The Sacrament of Christs Body, is Christs Body; Ergo, the Sacrament is Christs Body really and substantially.

So that we may manifestly perceive that he calleth not the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood the very Body and Blood of Christ, but as he said before. But yet he saith in a certain manner or wise: Not that the Sacrament absolutely and plainly is his natural Body and Blood. For this is a false argument of Sophistry, which they call Secundum quid ad simpliciter; that is to say, that the Sacrament of Christs Body is in a certain wise the Body of Christ: Ergo, it is also plainly and expressly the natural Body of Christ. For such another reason might this be also: Christ is after a certain manner a Lyon, a Lamb, and a Door; Ergo, Christ is a natural Lyon, and a Lamb, or material Door. But the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood is therefore called his Body and Blood, because it is thereof a memorial, sign, Sacrament, token, and representation, spent once for our redemption. Which thing is further expounded by another speech that he doth here consequently alledge of Baptism; Sicut de ipso baptismo Apostolus dicit, &c.

The Apostle, quoth Augustine, saith not, we have signified burying, but he saith utterly, we be buried with Christ. For else should all false Christians be buried with Christ from sin, which yet do live in all sin. And therefore saith Augustine immediately thereupon, he called therefore the Sacrament of so great thing, by none other name than of the thing it self. Thus (O most gracious and godly Prince) do I confess and acknowledge, that the Bread of the Sacrament is truly Christs Body, and the Wine to be truly his Blood, according to the words of the institution of the same Sacrament; but in a certain wise, that is to wit, figuratively, sacramentally, or significantly, according to the explication of the Doctors before recited, and hereafter following. And to this explication of the old Doctors am I enforced, both by the Articles of my Creed, and also by the circumstances of the said Scripture, as after shall more largely appear. But by the same can I not find the natural Body of our Saviour to be there naturally, but rather absent, both from the Sacrament, and from all the world, collocate and remaining in Heaven, where he by promise must abide corporally, unto the end of the world.

The same holy Doctor, writing against one Faulstus, saith in like manner, Si Machabeus cum ingenti admiratione praefertur, quia escas quibus nunc Christiani licite utuntur, attingere noluerunt (quia pro tempore tunc Prophetico non licebat) quanto nunc magis pro Baptismo Christi, pro Eucharistia Christi, pro signo Christi, &c. If we do prefer with great admiration the Machabees, because they would not once touch the meat, which Christian men now lawfully use to eat of, for that it was not lawful for that time being then Propheticall, that is, in the time of the Old Testament: How much rather now ought a Christian to be more ready to suffer all things for the Baptism of Christ, and for the Sacrament of thanksgiving, and for the sign of Christ, seeing that those of the Old Testament were the promises of the things to be complete and fulfilled, and these Sacraments in the New Testament are the tokens of things complete and finished? The sign of

In this I note, that according to the explications before shewed, he calleth the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, otherwise properly named Eucharistia signum Christi, and that in the singular number, for as much as they both do signifie well-nigh or e things. In both then is testified the death of our Saviour. And moreover, he calleth them Indicia rerum completarum, that is to wit, the tokens or benefits that we shall receive by the belief of Christ for us crucified. And he doth call usually both the Sacraments signum Christi, in the singular number. And as the same Saint Augustine in his fiftieth Treatise upon the Gospel of Saint John teacheth, where he saith thus: Si bonus es, si ad corpus Christi pertineris, (quod significat Petrus) habes Christum, & in presenti & in futuro. In presenti per fidem, &c. If thou be good, if thou pertain to the Body of Christ, (which this word Petrus doth signifie) then hast thou Christ both here & present, and in time to come: here present through Faith, here present by the figure and sign of Christ; here present by the Sacrament of Baptism; here present by the meat and drink of the Altar, &c.

More there was that John Lambert wrote to the King, but thus much only came to our hands.

The death of Robert Packington.

Among other acts and matters passed and done this present year, which is of the Lord 1538, here is not to be silenced the unworthy and lamentable death of Robert Packington, Mercer of London, wrought and caused by the enemies of Gods Word and of all good proceedings. The Story is this; The said Robert Packington, H h 3 being being a man of substance, and dwelling in Cheepside, used every day at Five of the Clock, Winter and Summer, to go to pray at a Church then called Saint Thomas of Acres, but now named Mercers Chappel. And one morning amongst all other, being a great mytty-morning, such as hath seldom been seen, even as he was crossing the street from his house to the Church, he was suddenly murdered with a Gun, which of the Neighbours was plainly heard, and by a great number of Labourers standing at Soper-Lane end, he was both seen to go forth of his house, and the clap of the Gun was heard, but the deed-doer was a great while unsupied and unknown. Although many in the mean time were suspected, yet none could be found faulty therein, the Martherer so covertly was conveyed, till at length by the confession of Doctor Incent Dean of Pauls, in his death-bed, it was known, and by him confessed, that he himself was the Author thereof, by hiring an Italian, for forty Crowns 'or thereabout, to do the feat. For the testimony whereof, and also for the repentant words of the said Incent, the names both of them which heard him confess it, and of them which heard the witnesses report it, remain yet in memory, to be produced, if need required.

Doct. Incent
Dean of Pauls, mur-derer of Packington.

The cause why he was so little favoured with the Clergy, was this, For that he was known to be a man of great courage, and one that could both speak, and also would be heard: for at the same time he was one of the Burgeesses of the Parliament for the City of London, and had talked somewhat against the covetousness and cruelty of the Clergy, wherefore he was had in contempt with them; and was thought also to have some talk with the King, for the which he was the more had in disdain with them; and murdered by the said Doctor Incent, for his labour, as hath been above declared.

And thus much of Robert Packington, which was the Brother of Augustine Packington above mentioned, who deceived Bishop Tonhall, in buying the new translated Testament of Tindall. Whose pitious murder although it was privy and sudden, yet hath it so pleased the Lord not to keep it in darkness, but to bring it at length to light.

The burning of one Collins at London.

Collins with his Dog burned

Neither is here to be omitted the burning of one Collins, sometime a Lawyer and a Gentleman, which suffered the fire this year also in Smithfield, Anno 1538. Whom although I do not here recite as in the number of Gods pious Martyrs, yet neither do I think him to be clean separated from the company of the Lords faved Flock and Family, notwithstanding that the Bishop of Rome Church did condemn and burn him for an Heretic: but rather do recount him therefore as one belonging to the holy company of Saints. At leastwise this case of him and of his end may be thought to be such, as may well reprove and condemn their cruelty and madness, in burning so without all discretion this man, being mad and dilact of his perfect wits, as he then was, by this occasion as here followeth.

This Gentleman had a Wife of exceeding beauty and comeliness, but notwithstanding of so light behaviour and unchast conditions (nothing correspondent to the grace of her beauty) that the forsaking her Husband, which loved her intirely, betook her self unto another Paramour. Which when he understood, he took it very grievously and heavily, more than reason would. At the last being overcome with exceeding dolour and heaviness, he fell mad, being at that time a Student of the Law in London. When he was thus ravished of his wits, by chance he came into a Church, where a Priest was saying Mass, and was come to the place where they use to hold up and shew the Sacrament.

Collins being beside his wits, seeing the Priest holding up the Host over his head, and shewing it to the people; he in like manner counterfeiting the Priest, took up a little Dog by the legs and held him over his head, shewing him unto the people. And for this he was by and by brought to Examination, and condemned to the fire, and was burned, and the Dog with him, the same year of our Lord, in the which John Lambert was burned, 1538.

The burning of Cowbridge at Oxford, Anno 1532.

With this foresaid Collins may also be adjoined the burning of Cowbridge, who likewise being mad and beside his right senses, was either the same or the next year following condemned by Longland Bishop of Lincoln, and committed to the fire by him to be burnt at Oxford. What his Opinions and Articles were where-with he was charged, it needeth not here to rehearse. For as he was then a man mad, and destitute of sense and reason, so his words and sayings could not be found. Yea rather, what wife man would ever collect Articles against him, which said, He could not tell what. And if his Articles were so horrible and mad as Cope in his Dialogues doth declare them, then was he in my judgment a man more fit to be sent to Bedlem, than to be had to the fire in Smithfield to be burned. For what reason is it to require reason of a Creature mad or unreasonable, or to make Heresie of the words of a senseless man, not knowing what he affirmed?

Cowbridge

Oxford.

But this is the manner and property of this holy Mother-Church of Rome, that whatsoever cometh in their hands and inquisition, to the fire it must. There is no other way; neither pity that will move, nor excuse that will serve, nor age that they will spare, nor any respect almost that they consider, as by these two miserable Examples, both of Collins and Cowbridge it may appear. Who rather should have been pitied, and all ways convenient sought how to seduce the silly Wretches into their right minds again, according as the true Pastors of Israel be commanded by the Spirit of God, to seek again the things that be lost, and to bind up the things that be broken, &c. and not so extremely to brust the things that be bruised before. But to end with this matter of Cowbridge, whatsoever his madness was before, or however erroneous his Articles were (which for the fond Phantasies of them I do not express) yet as touching his end, this is certain, that in the midst of the flame, he, lifting up his head to Heaven, soberly and discreetly called upon the Name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and so departed.

William Leiton and Puttedew, Martyrs.

About the same time and year, or not much before, when John Lambert suffered at London, there was one Puttedew also condemned to the fire, about the parts of Suffolk: who coming into the Church, and merrily telling the Priest, that after he had drunk up all the Wine alone, he afterward blessed the hungry people with the empty Chalice, was for the same immediately apprehended, and shortly after burned, leaving to us an experiment, Quam parum sit tutum ludere cum Sanctis; as the old saying was then; but rather, as we may see now, Quam male tutum sit ludere cum impiis.

martyred.

To the other William Leiton, was a Monk of Aye in the County of Suffolk, and was burned at Norwich, for speaking against a certain Idol which was accustomed to be carried about the Processions at Aye; and also for holding that the Sacramental Supper ought to be administered in both kinds, about the year and time aforesaid.

IN the burning of another Suffolk-man, named N. Peke, dwelling sometime at Earlestonham, and burnt at Ipswich, somewhat before the burning of these aforesaid, thus I find it recorded and testified; That when as he being fast bound to a stake, and Furle set on fire round about him, was so torched, that he was as black as any foot, one Doctor Reading there standing before him, with Doctor Heyre and Doctor Springwell, having a long white Wand in his hand, did knock him upon the right shoulder, and said Peke recant, and believe that the Sacrament of the Altar is the very Body of Christ, Flesh, Blood, and Bone, after that the Priest hath spoken the words of Consecration over it, and here have I in my hand to absolve thee for thy misbelief that hath been in thee, having a Scrol of Paper in his hand. When he had spoken these words, Peke answered, and said, I dese it and thee also, and with a great violence he spit from him very blood, which came by reason that his Veins brake in his body for extrem anguish. And when the said Peke had so spoken, then Doctor Reading said, To as many as shall cast a stick to the burning of this Heretick, is granted forty days of pardon by my Lord Bishop of Norwich.

Of this Council of
read before.

IN the year last before this, which was of the Lord, 1537. it was declared how Pope Paul the Third indicted a general Council, to be holden at Mantua. Whereunto the King of England, amongst other Princes being called, refused either to come or to send at the Popes call, and for defence of himself directed out a publick Apology or Protestation, rendring iust and sufficient matter, why neither he would, nor was bound to obey the Popes Commandment. Which Protestation is before to be read. This Council appointed to begin the three and twentieth day of May, the year aforesaid was then stopped by the Duke of Mantua, pretending that he would suffer no Council there, unless the Pope would fortifie the City with a sufficient Army, &c. For which cause the Pope prorogued the said Council, to be celebrated in the month of November following, appointing at the first no certain place. At length he named and determined the City of Vincence (lying within the Dominion of the Venetians) to be the place for the Council. Whereunto when the King (the year next following, which is this present year of our Lord, 1538.) was requested by the Emperor and other States, to reform either himself, or to send; he again refusing (as he did before) sendeth this Protestation in way of defence and answer for himself, to the Emperor and other Christian Princes; the Copy and effect whereof hereunder followeth, and is this.

Henry the Eighth by the Grace of God, King of England and France, &c. saluteth the Emperour, Christian Princes, and all true Christian men, desiring Peace and Concord amongst them.

WHEREAS not long since, a Book came forth in our and all our Councils Names, which contained many causes why we refused the Council, then by the Bishop of Rome usurped Power, first indicted at Mantua, to be kept the three and twentieth day of May, after prorogued to November, no place appointed where it should be kept: And whereas the same Book doth sufficiently prove, that our cause could take no hurt, neither with any thing done or decreed in such a company of men addit to one Sect, nor in any other Council called by his usurped Power; we think it nothing necessary, so much the oit to make new Protestations, as the Bishop of Rome and his Courts, by subtilty and craft, do invent ways to mock the World by new pretended general Councils. Yet notwithstanding because that some things now occurred, either upon occasion given us by change of the place, or else through other considerations, which now being known to the World may do much good, we thought we should do but even as that love enforce us, which we owe unto Christs Faith and Religion, to add this Epistle. And yet we protest that we neither put forth that Book, neither yet we would this Epistle to be set before it, that thereby we should seem less to desire a general Council than any other Prince or Potentate, but rather to be more desirous of it, so it were free for all parts, and universal. And further, we desire all good Princes, Potentates, and people, to esteem and think, that no Prince would more willingly be present at such a Council

KING perils be in safeguard of our life? Well, in this one Act the Bishop of Rome hath declared that he hath none Authority upon places in other mens Dominions, and therefore if he promise a Council in any of those, he promisseth that, that is in another man to perform, and so may he deceive us again.

Now if he call us to one of his own Towns, we be afraid to be at such an Holis Table. We say, better to rise an hungred, than to go thence with our bellies full. But they say, the place is found, we need no more to seek where the Council shall be kept. As who saith, that what chanced at Mantua, may not also chance at Vincence: and as though it were very like that the Venetians, men of such wisdom, should not both foresee, and fear also that the wife Duke of Mantua seemed to fear. Certes, when we think upon the state that the Venetians be in now, it seemeth no very likely thing, that they will either leave Vincence their City to so many Nations, without some great Garrison of Souldiers, or else that they, being else where so fore charged already, will now nourish any Army there. And if they would, doth not Paul himself grant it should be an evil President, and an evil example to have an armed Council?

Howsoever it shall be, we most heartily desire you, that ye will vouchsafe to read those things that we wrote this last year touching the Mantuan-Council. For we nothing doubt, but you, of your equity, will stand on our side against their subtilty and frauds, and judge (except we be deceived) that we in this bulletins, neither gave so much to our affections, neither without great and most just causes refused their Councils, their Censures and Decrees.

Whether these our Writings please all men, or no, we think we ought not to pass much. No, if that which indifferently is written of us, may please indifferent Readers, our desire is accomplished. The false censure and mistaking of things by men partial shall move us nothing, or else very little. If we have said ought against the deceits of the Bishop of Rome, that may seem spoken too sharply, we pray you impute it to the hatred we bear unto his Vices, and not to any evil will that we bear him. No, that he and all his may perceive that we are rather at strife with his Vices, than with him and his: our prayer is, that it may please God at the last to open their eyes, to make soft their hard hearts, and that they once may with us (their own glory set apart) study to set forth the everlasting Glory of the ever-living God.

Thus, mighty Emperor, fare you most heartily well, and ye Christian Princes, the Pillars and fate of Christendom, fare ye heartily well. Also all ye, what people soever ye are, which do desire that the Gospel and Glory of Christ may flourish, fare ye heartily well.

As the Lord of his goodness had raised up Thomas Cromwel to be a Friend and Patron to the Gospel; so on the contrary side Satan (which is Adversary and Enemy to all good things) had his Organ also, which was Stephen Gardiner, by all wiles and subtil means to impeach and put back the same. Who after he had brought his purpose to pass in burning good John Lambert (as ye have heard) proceeding still in his crafts and wiles, and thinking under the name of Heresies, Sects, Anabaptists, and Sacramentaries, to exterminate all good Books, and faithful Professors of Gods Word out of England, so wrought with the King, that the next year following, which was of our Lord, 1539. he gave out these Injunctions, the Copy and Contents whereof I thought here also not to be pretermitted, and are these.

¶ Certain other Injunctions set forth by the Authority of the King, against English Books, Sects, and Sacramentaries also, with putting down the Day of Thomas Becket.

Anno 1539. First, That none, without special Licence of the King, transport or bring from outward Parts into England any manner of English Books, neither yet sell, give, utter, or publish any such, upon pain to forfeit all their Goods and Chattels, and their Bodies to be imprisoned, so long as it shall please the Kings Majesty.

Item, That none shall print, or bring over any English Books with Annotations or Prologues, unless such Books before be examined by the Kings Privy-Council, or others appointed by his Highness, and yet not to be put thereto these words, Cum Privilegio Regali, without adding, Ad imprimendum solum: Neither yet to imprint it, without the Kings Privilege be printed therewith in the English-Tongue, that all men may read it. Neither shall they print any translated Book, without the plain name of the Translator be in it, or else the Printer to be made the Translator, and to suffer the fine and punishment thereof at the Kings pleasure.

Item, That none of the Occupation of Printing shall within the Realm Print, Utter, Sell, or cause to be published any English Book of Scripture, unless the same be first viewed, examined, and admitted by the Kings Highness, or one of his Privy-Council, or one Bishop within the Realm, whose name shall therein be expressed, upon pain of the Kings most high displeasure, the loss of their Goods and Chattels, and Imprisonment so long as it shall please the King.

Item, Those that be in any Errors, as Sacramentaries, Anabaptists, or any other, that sell Books having such Opinions in them, being once known, both the Books and such persons shall be detected and disclosed immediately unto the Kings Majesty, or one of his Privy-Council, to the intent to have it punished without favour, even with the extremity of the Law.

Item, That none of the Kings Subjects shall reason, dispute, or argue upon the Sacrament of the Altar, upon pain of losing their lives, goods, and chattels without all favour, only those excepted that be learned in Divinity: they to have their liberty in their Schools and appointed places accustomed for such matters.

Item, That the holy Bread and holy Water, Procession, kneeling and creeping on Good-Friday to the Crofs, and Easter-day, setting up of Lights before the Corpus Christi, bearing of Candles on Candlemas-day, Purification of Women delivered of Child, offering of Cistomes, keeping of the four Offering-days, paying their Tythes, and such like Ceremonies, must be observed and kept till it shall please the King to change or abrogate any of them. This Article was made for that the people was not quieted and contented (many of them) with the Ceremonies then used.

Finally, All those Priests that be married, and openly known to have their Wives, or that hereafter do intend to marry, shall be deprived of all Spiritual Promotion, and from doing any duty of a Priest, and shall have no manner of Office, Dignity, Cure, Privilege, Profit, or Commodity in any thing appertaining to the Clergy, but from thenceforth shall be taken, had, and reputed as Laypersons, to all purposes and intents; and those that shall after this Proclamation marry, shall run in his Graces indignation, and suffer punishment and imprisonment at his Graces will and pleasure.

Item, He chargeth all Archbishops, Bishops, Archdeacons, Deacons, Provofts, Parsons, Vicars, Curates, and other Ministers, and every of them in their own persons, within their Cures diligently to preach, teach, open, and set forth to the people, the Glory of God, and truth of his Word, and also considering the abuses and superstitious that have crept into the hearts and stomachs of many, by reason of their fond Ceremonies, he chargeth them upon pain of Imprisonment, at his Graces pleasure, not only to preach and teach the Word of God accordingly, but also sincerely and purely, declaring the difference between things commanded by God, and the Rites and Ceremonies in their Church then used, lest the people thereby might grow into further suspicion.

Item, For as much as it appeareth how clearly, that Thomas Becket, sometime Archbishop of Canterbury, stubbornly withstanding the wholesome Laws established against the Enormities of the Clergy, by the Kings Highness Noble Progenitor King Henry the Second, for the Commonwealth, felt and tranquillity of this Realm, of his forward mind fled the Realm into France,

No Books to be translated without the name of the Translator.

English Books of Scripture forbidden to be printed.

Against Seditious commentaries.

None to dispute of the Sacrament.

Holy Bread and holy Water, with other Rites of the Church abolished.

Married Priests punished.

Distinction to be taught between things commanded of God, and Ceremonies uncommanded.

Thomas Becket noted of stubbornness.

and to the Bishop of Rome, maintainer of those Enormities, to procure the abrogation of the said Laws (whereby arose much trouble in this said Realm) and that his death, which they truly called Martyrdom, hapned upon a Rescue made, and that (as it is written) he gave opprobrious words to the Gentlemen which then counselled him to leave his stubbornness, and to avoid the commotion of the people, risen up for that Rescue, and he not only called the one of them Bawd, but also took Tracy by the bosom, and violently shook him, and plucked him in such manner, that he had almost overthrown him to the pavement of the Church, so that upon this Fray, one of their company perceiving the same, strake him, and so in the Throng Becker was slain: and further, that this Canonization was made only by the Bishop of Rome, because he had been both a Champion to maintain his usurped Authority, and a bearer of the iniquity of the Clergy.

The Becker is Rebel rather than a Saint.

For these, and for other great and urgent causes, long to rectify, the Kings Majesty, by the advice of his Council, hath thought expedient to declare to his loving Subjects, that notwithstanding the said Canonization, there appeareth nothing in his life and exterior conversation, whereby he should be called a Saint, but rather esteemed to have been a Rebel and Traytor to his Prince.

Therefore his Grace straitly chargeth and commandeth, that from henceforth the said Thomas Becker shall not be esteemed, named, reputed, and called a Saint, but Bishop Becker, and that his Images and Pictures thorow the whole Realm shall be plucked down and avoided out of all Churches, Chappels, and other places, and that from henceforth the days used to be festival in his name, shall not be observed, nor the Service, Office, Antiphons, Collects, and Prayers in his name read, but rather put out of all their Books; and that all their Festival-days already abrogated, shall be in no wise solemnized, but his Graces Ordinances and Injunctions thereupon observed, to the intent his Graces loving Subjects shall be no longer blindly led and abused to commit Idolatry, as they have done in times past, upon pain of his Majesties Indignation, and imprisonment at his Graces pleasure.

The Canonization of The Becker
raised.

Finally, his Grace straitly chargeth and commandeth, that his Subjects do keep and observe all and singular his Injunctions made by his Majesty, upon the pain therein contained:

Here followeth how Religion began to go backward.

The variable changes and mutations of Religion in King
days.

TO many which be yet alive, and can testify these things, it is not unknown, how variable the state of Religion stood in these days; how hardly and with what difficulty it came forth, what chances and changes it suffered. Even as the King was ruled and gave ear sometime to one, sometime to another, so one while it went forward, at another season as much backward again, and sometime clean altered and changed for a season, according as they could prevail which were about the King. So long as Queen Anne lived, the Gospel had indifferent success.

The course of the Gospel interrupted by malicious Enemies.

After that she, by sinister instigation of some about the King, was made away, the course of the Gospel began again to decline, but that the Lord then stirred up the Lord Cromwel, opportunely to help in that behalf. Who, no doubt, did much avail, for the increase of Gods true Religion, and much more had brought to perfection, if the pestilent Adversaries, maligning the prosperous glory of the Gospel, by contrary practising had not craftily undermined him and supplanted his virtuous proceedings. By the means of which Adversaries it came to pass after the taking away of the said Cromwel, that the state of Religion more and more decayed, during all the residue of the Reign of King Henry.

Queen Anne
and Cromwel.

Among these Adversaries above mentioned, the chief Captain was Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester; who with his Confederates and Adherents, disdaining at the state of the Lord Cromwel, and at the late marriage of the Lady Anne of Cleve (who in the beginning of the year of our Lord, 1540, was married to the King) as also grieved partly at the dissolution of the Monasteries, and fearing the growing of the Gospel, sought all occasions how to interrupt these happy beginnings, and to train the King to their own purpose. Now what occasion this wily Winchester found out to work upon; ye shall hear in order as followeth.

The KING
Hes. 8.

It happened the same time, that the Lord Cromwel, for the better establishing of sincere Religion in this Realm, devised a Marriage for the King, to be concluded between him and the Lady Anne of Cleve, whole other Sister was already married unto the Duke of Saxony. By this Marriage it was supposed that a perpetual League, Amity and Allie should be nourished between this Realm and the Princes of Germany, and so thereby godly Religion might be made more strong on both parts against the Bishop of Rome, and his tyrannical Religion. But the Devil, ever envying the Prosperity of the Gospel, laid a stumbling-block in that clear way for the King, to stumble at. For when the Parents of the Noble Lady were communed withall for the furtherance of the said Marriage, among others of her Friends whose good will was required, the Duke of Saxony her Brother in law misliked the Marriage, partly for that he would have had her bestowed upon some Prince of Germany more nigh unto her Sister, and partly for other causes, which he thought reasonable. Whereupon it followeth that the slackness of the Duke in that behalf being espied, crafty Winchester, taking good hold-fast thereon, so alienated the Kings mind from the Amity that seemed now to begin and grow between the Duke and the King, that by the occasion thereof he brought the King at length clean out of credit with that Religion and Doctrine which the Duke had then maintained many years before.

The King
brought out of credit with the Doctrine of the German Princes.

This wily Winchester with his crafty fetches partly upon this occasion aforesaid, and partly also by other pestilent persuasions creeping into the Kings ears, ceased not to seek all means how to work his feat, and to overthrow Religion, first bringing him in hatred with the German Princes, then putting him in fear of the Emperor, of the French King, of the Pope, of the King of Scots, and other foreign Powers to rise against him; but especially of civil Tumults and Commotions here within this Realm, which above all things he most dreaded by reason of Innovation of Religion, and dissolving of Abbeys, and for abolishing of Rites, and other customs of the Church, sticking so fast in the minds of the people, that it was to be feared lest their hearts were or would be shortly stirred up against him, unless some speedy remedy were to the contrary provided: declaring moreover what a dangerous matter in a Commonwealth it is, to attempt new alterations of any thing, but especially of Religion. Which being so, he exhorted the King for his own safeguard, and publick quiet and tranquillity of his Realm, to see betime, how and by what policy these so manifold mischiefs might be prevented. Against which no other way or shift could be better devised, than if he would shew himself sharp and severe against the new Sectaries, Anabaptists, and Sacramentaries (as they called them) and would also set forth such Articles, confirming the ancient and Catholick Faith, as whereby he might recover again his Credence with Christian Princes, and whereby all the World besides might see and judge him to be a right and perfect Catholick. By these and such like crafty Suggestions the King being too much deduced and abused, began to withdraw his defence from the Reformation of true Religion, supposing thereby to procure to himself more safety both in his own Realm, and also to avoid such dangers which otherwise might happen by other Princes, especially seeing of late he had refused to come to the general Council at Vinence, being thereto invited both by the Emperor, and other foreign Potentates, as ye have heard before. And therefore although he had rejected the Pope out of this Realm, yet because he would declare himself nevertheless to be a good Catholick Son of the Mother-Church, and a Withstander of new Innovations and Heresies (as the blind opinion of the World then did esteem them) first he stretched out his hand to the condemning and burning of Lambert, then after England. a Synod or Convocation of all the Archbishops, Bishops, and other learned of the Clergy of this Realm, to be in like manner assembled.

The Act of the Six Articles.

The six Articles. In which Parliament, Synod, or Convocation, certain Articles, Matters, and Questions, touching Religion, were decreed by certain Prelates, to the number especially of six commonly called The six Articles (or The Whip with six strings) to be had and received among the Kings Subjects in pretence of Unity. But what Unity thereof followed, the groaning hearts of a great number, and also the cruel death of divers both in the days of King Henry, and of Queen Mary, can so well declare, as I pray God never the like be felt hereafter.

The Doctrine of these wicked Articles in the bloody Act contained, although it be worthy of no memory amongst Christian men, but rather deserveth to be buried in perpetual oblivion, yet for that the office of History compelleth us thereunto, for the more light of Posterity to come, faithfully and truly to compile things done in the Church, as well one as another: this shall be briefly to recapitulate the sum and effect of the foresaid six Articles, in order as they were given out, and hereunder do follow.

The first Article.

Transub-stantiation. The first Article in this present Parliament accorded and agreed upon, was this, That in the most blessed Sacrament of the Altar by the strength and efficacy of Christs mighty word (it being spoken by the Priest) is present really, under the form of Bread and Wine, the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and that after the Consecration there remaineth no substance of Bread or Wine, or any other substance, but the substance of Christ, God and Man.

The second Article.

The Sacrament in both kinds excluded. Secondly, That the Communion in both kinds is not necessary ad salutem, by the Law of God, to all persons:
 and that it is to be believed, and not doubted of, but that in the Flesh, under form of Bread, is the very Blood, and with the Blood, under form of Wine, is the very Flesh as well apart, as they were both together.

The third Article.

Thirdly, That Priests, after the Order of Priesthood received as afore, may not marry by the Law of God.

The fourth Article.

Adultery, and fornication above the age of one and twenty years, exempted. Fourthly, That the Vows of Chastity or Widowhood, by man or woman made to God advisedly, ought to be observed by the Law of God; and that it exempteth them from other liberties of Christian people, which without they Priests only might enjoy.

The fifth Article.

By the la-ies of the private Masses, in secret, the helping of Souls in Purgatory. Fifthly, That it is meet and necessary, that private Masses be continued and admitted in this English Church and Congregation: as whereby good Christian people, ordering themselves accordingly, do receive both godly and goodly consolation and benefit: And it is agreeable also to Gods Law.

The sixth Article.

The sixth Article. Sixthly, That Auricular Confession is expedient and necessary to be retained and continued, used and frequented in the Church of God.

After these Articles were thus concluded and consented upon, the Prelates of the Realm craftily perceiving that such a foul and violent Act could not take place or prevail, unless trait and bloody Penalties were set upon them, they caused through their accustomed practise to be ordained and enacted by the King and the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and the Commons in the said Parliament, as fol-loweth.

The Penalties upon the six Articles.

That if any person or persons within this Realm of The pen- England, or any other the Kings Dominions, after the alties upon twelfth day of July next coming, by word, writing, the six Ar- imprinting, cyphring, or any otherwise, should publish, ticles.
 preach, teach, say, affirm, declare, dispute, argue or hold any Opinion, that in the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, under form of Bread and Wine (after the Consecration thereof) there is not present really the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, conceived of the Virgin Mary, or that after the said Consecration there remaineth any substance of the Bread or Wine, or any other substance but the substance of Christ, God and man, or after the time above-said, publish, preach, teach, say, affirm, declare, dispute, argue or hold Opinion, That in the Flesh, under the form of Bread is not the very Blood of Christ, or that with the Blood of Christ, under the form of Wine, is not the very Flesh of Christ, as well apart, as though they were both together: or by any of the means above-said, or otherwise, preach, teach, declare, or affirm the said Sacrament to be other substance than is above-said, or by any mean contemn, deprave, or despite the said blessed Sacrament: that then every such person so offending, their Aiders, Comforters, Councillors, Consenters and Abettors therein (being thereof convicted in form under written, by the Authority above said) should be deemed and adjudged Hereticks, and every such offence should be adjudged manifest Herein; and that every such Offender and Offenders should therefore have and suffer judgment, execution, pain and pains of death by way of burning, without any Abjuration, benefit of the Clergy, or Sanctuary, to be therefore permitted, had, allowed, or suffered; and also should therefore forfeit and lose to the Kings Highness, his Heirs and Successors, all his or their Honors, Manors, Castles, Lands, Tenements, Rents, Reversions, Services, Possessions, and all other his or their Hereditaments, Goods and Chattels, Farms and Freeholds, whatsoever they were, through any such offence or offences committed or done, or at any time after, as in any cases of High Treason.

The Penalty of the last five Articles.

And as touching the other five Articles following, the Penalty devised for them was this, That every such person or persons that do preach, teach, obstinately affirm, uphold, maintain, or defend, after the twelfth of July the said year, any thing contrary to the same: or if any being in Orders, or after a Vow advisedly made, did marry, or make Marriage, or contract Matrimony, in so doing should be adjudged as Felons, and lose both life, and forfeit goods, as in case of Felony, without any benefit of the Clergy, or Privilege of the Church or of the Sanctuary, &c.

Item, That every such person or persons, which after the day, afore-said, by word, writing, printing, cyphring, or otherwise did publish, declare, or hold opinion contrary to the five Articles above expressed, being for any such offence duly convicted or attainted, for the first time, besides the forfeit of all his Goods and Chattels, and Possessions whatsoever, should suffer imprisonment of his body at the Kings pleasure: and for the second time, being accused, presented, and thereof convicted should suffer as in case afore-said of Felony.

Item, If any within Order of Priesthood, before the time of the said Parliament, had married or contracted Matrimony, or vowed Widowhood, the said Matrimony should stand utterly void and be dissolved.

Item,

Item, That the same danger that belonged to Priests marrying their Wives, should also redound to the Women married unto the Priests.

Inquisition upon the six Articles.

Furthermore, for the more effectual execution of the premises, it was enacted by the said Parliament, That full authority of Inquisition of all such Heresies, Felonies, and Contempts, should be committed and directed down into every Shire, to certain persons specially thereunto appointed; of which persons three at the least (provided always the Archbishop, or Bishop, or his Chancellor, or his Commissary to be one) should sit four times at least in the year, having full Power to take Information and Accusation, by the depositions of any two lawful persons at the least, as well as by the Oaths of twelve men, to examine and enquire of all and singular the Heresies, Felonies, and Contempts above remembered, having also as ample Power to make Process against every person or persons indicted, presented, or accused before them; also to hear and determine the forefaid Heresies, Felonies, Contempts, and other Offences, as well as if the matter had been presented before the Justices of Peace in their Sessions. And also that the said Justices in their Sessions, and every Steward or Under-Steward, or his Deputy, in their Lawdays, should have power by the Oaths of twelve lawful men to enquire likewise of all and singular the Heresies, Felonies, Contempts, and other Offences, and to hear and determine the same, to all effects of this present Act, &c.

A bloody Inquisition.

Provided withall that no person nor persons thereupon accused, indicted or presented, should be admitted to challenge any that should be expellèd for the trial of any matter of cause, other than for malice or envy; which challenge should forthwith be tried in like manner, as in cases of Felony, &c.

Provided moreover that every person that should be named Commissioner in this Inquisition, should first take a corporal Oath, the tenor of which Oath here ensueth.

The Oath of the Commissioners.

YE shall swear, that ye to your cunning, wit and power, shall truly and indifferently execute the Authority to you given by the Kings Commission, made for Correction of Heresicks and other Offenders mentioned in the same Commission, without any favour, affection, corruption, dread or malice, to be born to any person or persons, as God ye help and all Saints.

The Oath given to the Commissioners, to be taken upon true Christianity. Stat. An. 31. Reg. Hen. 8.

And thus much briefly collected out of the Act and Originals, which more largely are to be seen in the Stat. Anno 31. Reg. Hen. 8. concerning the six Articles, which otherwise for the bloody cruelty thereof, are called The Whip with six strings, set forth after the death of Queen Anne, and of good John Lambert, devised by the cruelty of the Bishops, but specially of the Bishop of Winchester, and at length also subscribed by King Henry. But herein as in many other parts more, the crafty policy of the Bishop appeared, who like a lurking Serpent, most slyly watching his time, if he had not taken the King coming out upon a sudden, there where it was (I spare here to report as I heard it) it was thought and affirmed by certain, which then were pertaining to the King, that Winchester had not obtained the matter easily to be subscribed as he did.

These six Articles above specified, although they contained manifest Errors, Heresies, and Absurdities against all Scripture and Learning, (as all men having any judgment in Gods Word may plainly understand) yet such was the miserable adversity of that time, and the power of darkness, that the simple cause of Truth and of Religion was utterly left desolate, and forsaken of all Friends. For every man seeing the Kings mind so fully addicted upon politick Respects, to have these Articles pass forward, few or none in all that Parliament would appear, which either could perceive what was to be defended, or durst defend what they understood to be true, save only Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, who then being married (as is supposed) like a constant Patron of Gods cause, took upon him the earnest defence of the Truth, oppressed in the Parliament, three days together disputing against those six wicked Articles, bringing forth such Allegations and Cranmer stood openly in the Parliament against the six Articles.

Authorities, as might easily have helped the cause, Nisi pars major vicisset, us saepe solet, meliorem. Who in the said Disputation, behaved himself with such humble modesty, and with such obedience in words towards his Prince, protesting the cause not to be his, but the Cause of Almighty God, that neither his Enterprize was misliked of the King; and again, his Reasons and Allegations were so strong, that well they could not be refuted. Wherefore the King (who ever bare special favour unto him) well liking his zealous defence, only willed him to depart out of the Parliament-house into the Council-Chamber, for a time (for safeguard of his conscience) till the Act should pass and be granted: which he, notwithstanding, with humble protestation refused to do.

KING Hen. 8.

Cranmer willed to depart out of the Parliament-house for his conscience.

Cranmer refused to go out of the Parliament against his conscience.

After the Parliament was finished, and that matter concluded, the King considering the constant zeal of the Archbishop, in defence of his Cause, and partly also weighing the many Authorities and Reasons whereby he had substantially confirmed the same; sent the Lord Cromwell (which within few days after was apprehended) the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, and all the Lords of the Parliament, to dine with him at Lambeth: where they signified unto him, that it was the Kings pleasure, that they all should, in his Highness behalf, cherish, comfort, and animate him, as one that for his travel in that Parliament, had declared himself, both greatly learned, and also a man discreet and wise; and therefore they willed him not to be discouraged in any thing that was passed in that Parliament contrary to his Allegations.

Cranmer comforted again by the King.

He most humbly thanked first the Kings Highness, for his singular good affection towards him, and them for all their pains; adding moreover, that he so hoped in God, that hereafter his Allegations and Authorities should take place to the Glory of God, and Commodity of the Realm. Which Allegations and Authorities of his, I will were among us extant to be seen and read. No doubt but they would stand, in time to come, in great good stead for the overthrow of the wicked and pernicious Articles aforesaid.

Allegations against the six Articles.

IN the mean while, sofar as the said heretical Articles are not so lightly to be passed over, whereby the rude and ignorant multitude hereafter may be deceived in the false and erroneous Doctrine of them any more, as they have been in times past, for lack of right instruction, and experience of the ancient state and course of times in our fore-Elders days; I thought therefore (the Lord thereunto assisting) so much as antiquity of stories may help to the restoring again of Truth and Doctrine decayed, to annex hereunto some Allegations out of ancient Records, which may give some light to the convincing of these new-fangled Articles and Heresies above touched.

Allegations against the six Articles.

And first, as touching the Article of Transubstantiation, wherein this Parliament doth enact that the Sacrament of the Altar is the very natural Body of Christ, the self same which was born of the Virgin Mary; and that in such sort as there remaineth no substance of Bread and Wine, after the Priests Consecration, but only the Body and Blood of Christ, under the outward forms of Bread and Wine: First here is to be noted, that this monstrous Article of theirs, in that form of words as it standeth, was never obtruded, received, or holden either in the Greek Church, or in the Latin Church, universally for a Catholic; that is, for a general Opinion or Article of Doctrine, before the time of the Lateran-Council at Rome, under Pope Innocent the Third, Anno 1216.

The Article of Transubstantiation.

And sofar as it hath been a common perswasion amongst the most sort of people, that this Article, in the form of words as here it standeth, is and hath been ever since Christ his time a true Catholic and general Doctrine, commonly received and taught in the Church, being approved by the Scriptures and Doctors, and consent of all Ages unto this present time; To the intent therefore that the contrary may appear, and the people may see how far they have herein been beguiled, we will here (Christ willing) make a little stay in our story, and examine this forefaid Article by true Antiquity and course of Histories, to try whether it be a Doctrine Old or New.

Anno 1219.
The Article of the Sacrament consisteth in two parts.

Now therefore for the better discussing of the matter, let us first orderly and distinctly advise the words of the Article. The contents of which Article consists in two parts or members. In the first whereof is noted to us a preference of a thing which there was not before. In the second, is noted a privation or absence of a thing which there before was present.

Two things present in the Sacrament: the thing that representeth, and the thing represented.

(The Under)
The presence of the natural Body of Christ well expounded may be, granted in the Sacrament.

The Article of the Sacrament agreeth not with itself.

The Body of Christ cannot be in the Sacrament of his Body.

The accidents of the Body cannot be in the Sacrament of Christ's natural Body. Sacraments if they had no similitude with the things which they represent, they were no Sacraments. Aug. ad Bonif. Epist. 23.

The Preference is noted by these words of the Articles, where it is said, that in the blessed Sacrament, by the words pronounced, is present the natural Body and Blood of our Saviour under the forms of Bread and Wine: so that in these words, both the Sacrament and the natural Body is imported necessarily to be present. For else, how can the natural Body of Christ be present in the Sacrament under the forms of Bread and Wine, if the Sacrament there were not present itself? or how can a thing be said to be in that which is not there? wherefore by these words both the Sacrament, and also the Body must necessarily have their being and presence, the one being in the other. And this preference both of the Sacrament and of the Body may right well stand together; the Sacrament to the outward eyes and mouth of man, the Body of Christ to the inward eyes of faith and mouth of the Soul.

And therefore touching these propositions in this Article (In) and (Under), if question be asked in what is the Body of Christ, it may be well answered, in the Sacrament to the eyes of our Faith, like as the outward Sacrament is also present to the outward eyes of the Body. Again, if the question be asked under what is the Body of Christ? It may be well answered, under the forms of Bread and Wine, so as the Doctors did take the forms to mean the outward Elements and Natures of the Sacrament, and not the Accidents.

And thus, to the first part of the Article, being well expounded, we do assent and confess the same to have been the true Catholick Opinion approved by the ancient Doctors and consent of all times, even from the first institution of this Sacrament.

But as concerning the second member or part of the Article, which taketh away all preference and substance of Bread from the Sacrament; to that we say, that first it standeth not with their own Article. Secondly, that it standeth not with the Doctrine of Scripture. Thirdly, that it standeth not with Antiquity, but is merely a late invention.

And first, that it agreeth not with their own Article, it is manifest. For whereas in the former part of their Article they say, that the natural Body of Christ is present in the blessed Sacrament, under the forms of Bread and Wine, how can the natural Body of Christ be present in the Sacrament, if there remain no Sacrament? Or how can any of the Body remain, if there remain no substance of Bread which should make the Sacrament? For how can the Body of Christ be in that thing, which is not? or how can the Sacrament of the Body have any being, where the substance of Bread hath no being? For first, that the Body itself cannot be the Sacrament of the Body, evident of it self.

Secondly, that the accidents of Bread without the substance of Bread cannot be any Sacrament of Christ's Body, certain it is, and demonstrable by this Argument.

Argumentum à definitione.
Ca. A Sacrament is, that beareth a similitude of that thing whereof it is a Sacrament.

meff. Accidents bear no similitude of that thing which is there signified.

res. Ergo, Accidents can in no wise be a Sacrament.

Whereupon upon this Argument being thus concluded, upon the same this also must needs follow.

Argument.

Da. In the Sacrament of the Lords Body, the thing that representeth must needs bear a similitude of the thing represented.

ri. The substance of Bread in the Sacrament, is only that which beareth the similitude of Christ's Body.

i. Ergo, The substance of Bread must needs be in the Sacrament.

And therefore, by this demonstration it is apparent, that these two parts in the Article aforesaid are evil couched together, whereof the one must needs defile the other. For if the first part of the Article be true, that the natural Body of Christ is present in the Sacrament; under the forms of Bread and Wine, and seeing the Sacrament wherein the Body of Christ is present; must needs be the substance of Bread, and not the accidents only of Bread, as is above proved, then the substance of Bread cannot be evacuated from the Sacrament; and so the second member of the Article must needs be false.

Or if the second part be true, that there is no substance of Bread remaining, and seeing there is nothing else to make the Sacrament of the natural Body of Christ, but only the substance of Bread, so far as the accidents of Bread can make no Sacrament of Christ's Body, as is above shewed; then taking away the substance of Bread, the first part of the Article must needs be false, which faith, that the natural Body of Christ is present in the Sacrament, so far as the substance of Bread being evacuated, there remaineth no Sacrament, wherein the Body of Christ should be present. Secondly, that it disagreeeth from the whole order and course of the Scriptures, it is sufficiently explained before in the Treatise of John Lambert upon the Sacrament, as also in sundry other places in this Volume besides. Thirdly, that the said Article of Transubstantiation is no ancient or authentic Doctrine in the Church publicly received; but rather is a novelty lately invented, reaching not much above the age of three or four hundred years, or at most about the time of Lanfrancus, Anno 1070, it remains now to be proved.

Wherein first may be joyned this issue, that this monstrous Paradox of Transubstantiation was never induced or received publicly in the Church, before the time of the Lateran Council, under Pope Innocentius the third, An. 1216. or at most before the time of Lanfrancus, the Italian, Archbishop of Canterbury 1070.

In which time of Lanfrancus, I deny not but that this question of Transubstantiation began to come in controversy, and was reasoned upon, amongst certain Learned of the Clergy. But that this Article of Transubstantiation was publicly determined or prescribed in the Church for a general Law or Catholick Doctrine of all men, necessarily to be believed, before the time of the foresaid Innocentius the third, it may be doubted, and also by Histories of time proved to be false.

And though our Adversaries seem to alledge out of the old Doctors certain speeches and phrases, which they wrest and wring to their purposes; wherein they say, Phrases of That the Bread is called, is believed, and is the Body of Christ, that of Bread is made the Body of Christ, and the Sacrament that the Bread is changed, altered or converted to the Body of Christ, or is made to be his Body, that the Creatures be converted into the substance of the Body and Blood of Christ, that the Bread and Wine do pass into the divine substance, with such other like Sentences; and bear themselves brag upon the same, as though this Doctrine of Transubstantiation stood upon the consent of the whole Universal Church, of all Ages and Times, of Nations and People, and that the Judgment of the Church was never other than this: yet if the old Doctors Sayings be well weighed, and the discourse of falsity pretended Antiquity for their Transubstantiation, that this prodigious Opinion of Transubstantiation hath no such ground of consent and antiquity as they imagine; nor yet that any Heretic or Treason was made of denying of Transubstantiation before the time of Innocentius II, or at the furthest of Lanfrancus, as is aforesaid, about the which time Satan the old Dragon was prophesied by the Apocalyp to be let loose, to seduce the World.

For probation whereof, first I will begin with the time of Tertullian and of Augustine, which both do teach the Sacrament to be a figure, a sign, a memorial, and representation of the Lords Body, and knew no such Transubstantiation, and yet were no Traytors nor Heretics.

Neither was St. Ambrose any Heretic or Traytor, where he writeth these words, Ut sint quæ erant, & in aliud convertantur, &c. Which words Lanfrancus could not answer unto any other wise, but by denying them to be the words of Ambrose. Gelasius was Bishop of Rome, and lived about five hundred years after Christ, and speaketh of a transmutation of the Bread and Wine into

The reference to these verses: the Sacrament and the Body of Christ consist in this, that as the bread and Wine give nourishment to our outward life, so the Body and Blood of Christ do nourish unto spiritual life. The express presence in the Sacrament and the Transubstantiation cannot stand together. The Article of Transubstantiation disagreeeth from the Scriptures. The Doctrine of Transubstantiation is but a late Opinion, and standeth with no Antiquity.

Lanfrancus was an Italian and Bishop of Canterbury about the year of our Lord 1070.

Innocentius the 3. was B. of Rome, An. 1215.

The Papists pretend Antiquity for their Transubstantiation.

the Divine nature; but there expounding himself, he declared what he meant by that mutation, so that he expressly sheweth the elements of Bread and Wine, notwithstanding, to remain still in their proper nature, with other words more, very plain to the same effect. Unto the which words Contareus in the assembly of Katibone could not well answer, but stood silent.

Theodoretus second. Dist. contra Eutychem.

Theodoretus likewise, speaking of the visible Symbols, hath these words: ἡμῶν τὰς τῶν τῶν ἀσώτων ἰστίαν. ἡ τὴν ἡμῶν τὴν τὴν αἰσθητήν (1.) After the sanctification they remain in their former Substance, figure, and form.

Irenaeus.

Irenaeus where he saith, That the Bread broken, and the Cup mixt, after the vocation of God, cease to be common Bread any more, but are the Eucharist of the Body and Blood of Christ; And Explicating his words more plainly, addeth moreover, That the Eucharist consisteth in two things, one being earthly which is Bread and Wine; the other heavenly, which is the Body and Blood of Christ, &c. declareth in these words both his own Opinion plainly, and also teacheth us what was then the Doctrine of his time.

Hesychius
lib. 20 in Levit. ca.

Hesychius also, who was five hundred years after Christ, where he speaketh of the said mystery, Quod simul panis, & caro est (1.) Which he saith to be both Flesh and Bread; declareth thereby two Substances to be in the Sacrament. By the which we have to understand, that Transubstantiation in his age was not crept into the Church; and yet neither Hesychius nor Treafon therefore was ever laid to his charge for so saying.

Anno 100.
Emilius
de confecta.
dist. 2. Quis corpus.

Emilius, comparing a man converted unto Christ by regeneration, unto the holy mysteries converted into the Body and Blood of our Lord, expresseth plainly, Quod in exteriori nihil additum est, & totum in interiori mutatum est: That is; That outwardly nothing is changed, and that all the change is inward, &c. Wherin (no doubt) he spake against this Article, and yet no man in all that age did accuse him therefore to be either Heretic or Traitor.

Here might be added the words of Fulgentius, Hic calix est novum Testamentum; (id est) hic calix quem vobis trado, novum Testamentum significat. (1.) This Cup is the New Testament; That is, this Cup which I deliver unto you signifieth the New Testament.

Bede also, who lived about the year, 730. writing upon the one and twentieth Psalm, hath these words; Edent pauperes, &c. pauperes, id est, mundi contemptores edent quidem realiter, si ad Sacramenta referantur, & transubstantiantur eternaliter, qui intelligent in pane & vino visibiliter sibi propositum, invisibile scilicet corpus verum, & sanguinem verum Domini, quae verus cibus & verus potus sunt, quo non venter distenditur, sed mens saginatur, &c. That is, Poor men, to wit, despisers of the world, shall eat indeed really, if it be referred unto the Sacraments, and shall be filled eternally, because they shall understand in Bread and in Wine, being visibly set before them, a thing invisible, to wit, the true Body and true Blood of the Lord, which are true meat and true drink, wherewith not the belly is filled, but the mind is nourished.

And thus in these words of Bede likewise is to be understood, That no Transubstantiation as yet in his time was received in the Church of England.

Long it were to stand upon all particulars; Briefly, to conclude; the farther the Church hath been from these our later days, the purer it was in all respects, and especially touching this barbarous Article of Transubstantiation. We will now draw more near our own time, coming to the age of Bertramus and of Haymo, who were about the year of our Lord, 810. under Carolus Magnus.

Haymo.
Anno 810.

By whome writing it is evident, that the Church was infected as yet no such fantasy of Transubstantiation, neither did any almost dream of taking away the Substance of Bread from the Sacrament. For although Haymo, Remigius, Rabanus, and other which lived in that age, do attribute to the Sacrament, that honourable name, and reverence (as we also do) of the Lords Body and Blood; they exclude not form thence all Substance of Meal and Bread, and leave the bare accidents, as our new-come Catholics do, as by the words of Haymo do appear. Where he, following the words of Bede, sheweth also the cause, why it is so called by the name of the Lords Body; Quia (saith he) panis corpus confirmat, ideo ille corpus Christi congruenter nuncupatur: Vinum autem quia sanguinem operatur in carne, ideo ad sanguinem Christi refertur. That is, because Bread confirmeth the heart of man, therefore it is called conveniently the Body of Christ, and because Wine worketh Blood in the flesh of man, therefore it is referred to the Blood of Christ. What can be more effectually spoken to prove the Substance of Bread there to remain? For take away the Substance of Bread and Wine, what is in the accidents left, that can confirm mans heart, or ingender Blood in the flesh? And therefore seeing there must needs something remain, that must be referred to Christs Body and Blood in that Sacrament, it either must be the Substance of Bread and Wine, or else it can be no Sacrament. And furthermore, speaking of the visible things which are sanctified, how and whereunto they be converted, he saith; that by the Holy Ghost they passed to a Sacrament of the Lords Body.

And likewise the same Haymo in another place, speaking of the fruits of the earth, that is, of Corn and Wine, declareth, how our Saviour maketh of them an apt mystery, converteth them to a Sacrament of his Body and Blood, &c. Lib. 7. in Ecclesiast. Chap. 8.

Haymo lib.
7. in eccl.
c. p. 8.

Bertramus likewise, as he lived in the same age, so in like sort he shewed his opinion therein, to the like effect as Haymo did. For as Haymo writing in these words declareth, quia aliud est Sacramentum, aliud virtus (sacramenti: Sacramentum enim videri percipitur, virtute sacramenti interior homo [satiatur]. That is, the Sacrament is one thing, and the virtue of the Sacrament is another thing; For the Sacrament is received with the mouth, but with the virtue of the Sacrament the inward man is satisfied.

Anno 810.
Bertram. lib.
de corpore
misti.

So after like manner, Bertramus, according to the same, thus writeth, Ille panis, qui per Sacerdotis ministerium Christi corpus efficitur, aliud exterius humanis sensibus ostendit, & aliud interius fidelium mentibus clamat, &c. That is, the Bread, which by the ministry of the Priest is made the Body of Christ, doth import one thing outwardly to the senses of man, and another thing it speaketh to the minds of the faithful. Outwardly it is Bread, the same it was before, the same form is pretended, the colour appeareth, the same taste remaineth. But inwardly there is another matter far more precious, and more excellent, because it is heavenly, which is the Body of Christ, that is seen, not with the outward eyes of the flesh, but with the sight of a faithful mind, &c.

We will not now proceed to the Testimony of Rabanus Maurus, Bishop of Mentz, and Scholar sometime of Alcuinus in Paris, an English man: who living also in the same age with Haymo and Bertramus (which was almost eight hundred years after Christ) giveth the like Testimony of this Doctrine in his Book of Institutions: where he asking why the Lord would give the mysteries of his Body and Blood then under such things as might be kept and reserved whole with great honour? thus he answereth again; The Lord (saith he) would rather that the Sacraments of his Body and Blood should be received with the mouth of the faithful, and made to be their food, than by the visible action the invisible effect might be shewed: For like as material meat outwardly nourisheth and quickeneth the Body, so also the Word of God inwardly nourisheth and strengtheneth the Soul. For man liveth not only by Bread, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God.

Rabanus
Maurus B. de Moribus
Anno 800.
Rabanus de sacramentis
c. 1. cap. 21.

And after followeth; For this Bread and drink signifyeth the eternal Society of the Head and of the Members together.

And again; For the Sacrament is one thing, and the virtue of the Sacrament is another thing. The Sacrament is received with the mouth, with the virtue of the Sacrament the inward man is nourished. For the Sacrament is turned to the nourishment of the Body, but by the virtue of the Sacrament the dignity of eternal life is gotten.

Wherefore

Anno 1219. Wherefore like as the same is turned into us when we eat of it, so also are we turned into the Body of Christ, when we live obediently and godly, &c.

Who (saith not by these words of this Bishop, what form of Doctrine was then in the Church received concerning this Article of the Sacrament, much divers from this our gross opinion of Transubstantiation?

With the same Rabanus also accordeth another of the like standing and Doctrine also called Christianus Druthmarus; who writing upon Matthew; The Wine (saith he) doth cheer and cheereth the Blood; and therefore not inconveniently the Blood of Christ is figured thereon; for whatsoever proceedeth from him to us, it cheereth us with true gladness, and increaseth all goodness unto us.

And a little before the said Druthmarus saith, The Lord gave to his Disciples the Sacrament of his Body to the remission of sins, and keeping of charity; that they always remembering his doing, might do that in figure which he should do for them. This is my Body (saith he) that is, in Sacrament. This Druthmarus lived also in the time of Carolus Magnus, as witnesseth Abbas Spaynehemensis.

After Bertramus was Joannes Scotus, or else, as some call him Joannes Frigena, a man well accepted with Carolus Calvus, and afterward with Lodovicus Balduus, about the year of our Lord, 880. He wrote a Book, De corpore & sanguine Domini, so affirming therein, and teaching as he knew that Bertramus had taught a little before in France. This Book the Pope caused to be condemned in Vercellensis Sydono, Of the life and conversation of this J. Scotus, and also of his death, read before.

In the year of our Lord, 950. lived Odo, Archbishop of Canterbury in whose time it appeareth, in the Catholics own confession, that many Priests then affirmed, that the Bread and Wine, after consecration, did remain in their former Substance, and that the said mysteries were only a figure of the Body and Blood of Christ, as we find it witnessed by Osborne himself, who did write the lives of Odo, Dunstan and Elphege, at the bidding of Lanfrank Archbishop of Canterbury, as reporteth Edmerus, Anselmus Chaplain. The words of Osborne be these: Hoc fere tempore, quidam Clerici, maligno errore seducti, asserere conabantur, panem & vinum quae in Altari ponuntur, post consecrationem in priori substantia manere & figuram tantummodo esse corporis & sanguinis Christi, &c. That is, About this time (saith Osborne, writing in the days of Lanfrank) certain of the Clergy, being seduced by wicked error, did hold and maintain that Bread and Wine, which are set upon the Altar, after the Consecration do remain in their former Substance, and are but only a figure of the Body and Blood of Christ, &c. And no doubt but at that time the common opinion of most of the Clergy was so, that the Sacrament was the Body and Blood of Christ, and that the Substance of Bread and Wine, notwithstanding, were not Transubstantiated, as the Romish Catholics do now teach. But this is the guise of these men, that in their Writings and Stories, still they diminish the better number, whereby their Faction may seem ever to be the bigger, and therefore to extenuate the common Opinion then received in the Church, he inferreth mention of certain of the Clergy, &c.

And as he saileth in the number of these Clergy men, which then held against Transubstantiation, so he upholdeth the same with as lying a miracle. Which miracle he feigned to be wrought the same time, for the conversion of the said Clergy men by the Blood dropping out of the Host at Mass, as Odo was breaking the Host over the Chalice. At the sight whereof, first Odo himself (saith he) wept for joy, seeing his petition accomplished which he so earnestly prayed for.

Secondarily, all those Clergy men (saith he) which before believed not this Transubstantiation, by and by were converted, and blessed the Archbishop that ever he was born, desiring him to pray again, that the Blood might return to his former shape, and straight it was done. And this was the miracle; which seemeth as true as that which William Malmebury writeth of the said Odo, how by his prayers he caused a Sword to come flying from Heaven into Eschepanis Scabberd, when he had lost his own, as he would fight against Analanus; or else, as that miracle where the said Odo is said to cover and defend the Church of Canterbury, that no drop of rain could touch it so long as the roof thereof was in making. Ex Wil. Malm. vide supra.

In the which so miraculous a miracle many things are to be marvelled. First, I marvel, that at this great miracle of the Archbishop in the Cathedral Church, amongst so many singing men, we read of no Te Deum there to be sung after the doing thereof.

Secondly, I marvel that those Priests and Clerks which then denied Transubstantiation, were suffered to be so near the Archbishop at his Mass, and that they were not committed rather to ward like Hereticks and Traitors, if this Article of Transubstantiation had been then such a Catholick Doctrine, and so publicly received in the Church, as they say it was.

Thirdly, I marvel, seeing the time of miracles is expired, we having the Scriptures to guide us, why the Archbishop would seek to Miracles and Apparitions to convert men, rather than to the Law and Prophets, according as we are commanded, especially having no such examples of all the old Doctors, which in confutation of so many erroneous Opinions, yet never sought to such miracles or blind means.

Fourthly, I marvel much at the discrepance in telling this Tale, between Osborne and the other, which since have written Legends of Odo. For whereas Osborne, speaking of certain Priests, nameth no place, but leaveth the matter at large; and speaking absolutely, quidam Clerici; all other which have since written the Legends of Odo, do tell this Tale against certain Priests of Canterbury; adding to the words of Osborne, quidam Clerici Cantuarienses. But to convict the falsehood of them all, as well of Osborne as of the rest, there is a Legend of the life of Odo, and of Osuald together, more ancient than this of Osborne, written (as it may seem) in the time of Elfricus Archbishop of Canterbury, and Elphege then Bishop of Winchester, wherein mention is made indeed of this miracle, but after another sort than this of Osborne, and to another purpose than to disprove certain Priests, infected with that error, from the opinion before declared: Which is only brought to shew the holiness of Odo, as commonly the manner of Legends is to do. So that in this old Legend it is thus reported, that when this Miracle was done, Odo disclosed the matter unto many Priests of England that were in that error, as Osborne would, sed vocat proximum fidelem Servum, qui cominus erat, & miraculum secretum demonstrat, &c. That is, he called unto him a certain faithful Servant which was near about him, and shewed unto him the miracle secretly; whereupon the Priest (saith the Legend) much rejoiced at the holiness of Odo, and desired him to make his prayer to Almighty God, that the Body might return again to the former shape, &c. Out of this old lying Legend of Osborne, and other likewise that followed him, seemeth to have taken this Tale, so that out of the error of one (as the manner is) springeth the error of a number more.

But this much more I marvel, why this miracle is not storied in Henry Huntington, which professedly writeth of such miracles; nor in Roger Hoveden, and such other; but only in such blind Legends, which commonly have no Substance of Verity, nor certainty of time, or writer, to know when and by whom they were written, and for the most part are stuffed with lying fictions, and prodigious fables.

Finally, if this miraculous fiction of Osborne were true; that for the converting of Priests of England, which would not believe Transubstantiation, this Blood did drop out of the Host (of which Blood peradventure came the Blood of Hales) and by the sight thereof the Priests effusion were all converted (as Osborne pretendeth) how then came it to pass, that after the time of Odo, in the days of Elfricus, which was after him Archbishop of Canterbury, the third from Dunstan, and fourth from Odo, not only the Priests of England, but also the Archbishop himself, were not yet brought to the belief of this Transubstantiation, but taught the very same Doctrine of the Sacrament then, which we do now: as most clearly appeareth both by the Epistles and Homilies of the fore said Archbishop Elfricus, which hereunder, for the more evidence (Christ willing) we will annex.

Reasons and proofs alleged against this miracle

Secondly, I marvel that those Priests and Clerks which then denied Transubstantiation, were suffered to be so near the Archbishop at his Mass, and that they were not committed rather to ward like Hereticks and Traitors, if this Article of Transubstantiation had been then such a Catholick Doctrine, and so publicly received in the Church, as they say it was.

Thirdly, I marvel, seeing the time of miracles is expired, we having the Scriptures to guide us, why the Archbishop would seek to Miracles and Apparitions to convert men, rather than to the Law and Prophets, according as we are commanded, especially having no such examples of all the old Doctors, which in confutation of so many erroneous Opinions, yet never sought to such miracles or blind means.

Fourthly, I marvel much at the discrepance in telling this Tale, between Osborne and the other, which since have written Legends of Odo. For whereas Osborne, speaking of certain Priests, nameth no place, but leaveth the matter at large; and speaking absolutely, quidam Clerici; all other which have since written the Legends of Odo, do tell this Tale against certain Priests of Canterbury; adding to the words of Osborne, quidam Clerici Cantuarienses. This

This Elfricus, as saith Capgrave, in the life of Oswald Bishop of Worcester, was first Abbot of St. Albans, and after made Archbishop of Canterbury, about the year of our Lord 996. in the time of King Ethelred, and of Wulfstan Bishop of Seyburne. Elfricus also (as witnesseth William of Malmesbury, in vita Adelmi) was Abbot of Malmesbury. Furthermore the said William of Malmesbury, writing of Elfricus Archbishop of Canterbury, saith, that he was before Bishop of Wells, and after Bishop of Canterbury. So that Elfricus was Archbishop of Canterbury, it is out of all ambiguity. But now whether Elfricus which was Abbot (of whom we do here entreat) were the same Archbishop or not, by this diversity of Capgrave and Malmesbury, it may be doubtful. But whether he were or no, to this our present purpose is not greatly material, forasmuch as the said Elfricus and Elfricus, although they were divers persons, yet were they both in one Age, and lived in one time together.

Furthermore, the same Elfricus of whom now we speak, of what Calling soever he was, yet notwithstanding he was of such estimation and good liking in those days amongst the most learned, that for his learning, authority and eloquence, his Writings were accepted and authorized among the Canons and Constitutions of the Church in that time, as hereby may appear. For whereas the Bishops and Priests before the coming of William the Conqueror had collected a certain Book of Canons and Ordinances to govern the Clergy, gathered out of general and particular Councils, out of the Book of Gildas, out of the penitential Books of Theodorus Archbishop of Canterbury, out of the Writings of Egbertus Archbishop of Tork, out of the Epistles of Alcuinus, as also out of the Writings of the old Fathers of the Primitive Church, &c. among the same Canons and Constitutions be placed these two Epistles of the said Elfricus hereunder following, whereof the one was sent to Wulfstan Bishop of Seyburne, the other to Wulfstan Archbishop of Tork, as yet are to be seen in two Books belonging to the Library of the Church of Worcester, the one written in the old Saxons Tongue, entitled Bewerres Cmothe, the other for the most part in Latin, with this Title, Admonitio spiritualis Diocesis. Which Book of Saxon Canons and Constitutions sometime belonging to Wulfstan Bishop of Worcester, was given by him, as for a great Jewel to the Church of Worcester, as by the same Book appeareth.

Moreover, besides this Book of Worcester above-touched, there is yet extant also another like Book of Canons belonging to the Church of Exeter, wherein the same two Epistles of Elfricus be contained in the old Saxon Tongue, and also in the Latin, and prescribed yearly to be read to the Clerks and Priests of the Church; which Book in like manner was given to the Church of Exeter by Leofricus the first and most famous Bishop of that See.

Of this Elfricus further is to be understood, that he translated two Books of fourscore Sermons out of Latin into the Saxon Speech, used then orderly to be read in Churches on Sundays and other Festival-days of the year, as by his own words may appear, in the end of one of the said Books of Sermons, whose words be these:

Fela Fegere godsele we forlætað on thisum dithre, tha mæg awendan se wile; Ne durre we thaes boc na micle iwithor ge længan, thyles the heo ungemetod fy, and mannun æthreæt thurh hire micelnele asfinge;

We les pas! (saith he) many good Gospels which be that list may translate. For we dare not enlarge this Book much further, lest it be over great, and so be a cause of lathsome to men, through the bigness thereof, &c.

Also in another place he confesseth the same of himself; whose words in the Preface before his Grammar be these:

lc ælfric wolde thalifstan þoc awendan to Engliscum gecwode of tham steof crafte the is gehaten Grammatica synthan ic twa bec awende on hund cahtaitigum spellum.

80. Sermons translated by Elfricus into the English or Saxon Tongue.

I Elfric was desirous to turn into our English Tongue, from the Art of Letters called Grammar, this little Book, after that I had translated the two Books of 80 Sermons, &c.

Of his Epistles especially we read of four, which he wrote, one to the Monks of Egnesham, De consuetudine 1219. Manacherum. Another to Wulfstane Archbishop of Tork, wherein is touched the matter of the Sacrament. The third he wrote against Priests Marriage to one Sygebert, with whom there was a certain Anker abiding which defended the Marriage of Priests, affirming it to be lawful. The fourth he wrote to Wulfstan Bishop of Seyburne, touching the matter of the Sacrament. In the which Epistle, he taking occasion by a certain abuse in his time, which was, that Priests on Easter-day filled their Housel-Box; and so kept it for the space of a whole year, till Easter came again, for sick persons, writeth upon that occasion in these words, as follow in their own Saxon Tongue.

The Words of Elfricus written to Wulfstane Bishop of Seyburne, against Transubstantiation.

The same in English.

MEn shall reserve more carefully that holy Housel, and not reserve it too long, but hallow other of new for sick men always within a week or a fortnight, that it be not so much as hoary: for so holy is the Housel which to day is hallowed, as that which on Easter-day was hallowed. That Housel is Christs body not bodily, but ghostly. Not the Body which he suffered in, but of the Body of which he spake, when he blessed Bread and Wine to Housel the Night before his suffering, and said by the blessed Bread, This is my Body; and again by the holy Wine, This is my Blood which is shed for many in the forgiveness of sin. Understand now the Lord, who could turn that Bread before his suffering to his Body, and that Wine to his Blood ghostly, that the self same Lord bleaseth daily, thorow the Priests hands, Bread and Wine to his ghostly Body, and to his ghostly Blood.

After this Epistle above-prefixed, written to Wulfstan Bishop of Seyburne, concerning the Sacramental Bread, how it is not Christs Body, lichamlice, that is bodily; or (as we term it now) really; and also how the same ought not to be over-long kept in the Pix: here followeth further another Epistle of the said Elfricus written to Wulfstane Archbishop of Tork, both reprehending the said abuse above-touched, and also containing matter more at large against the Bodily presence in the Sacramental Bread. The Copy of this Epistle, both in his own Saxon and our English, here followeth:

Another Epistle of Elfricus against the Bodily presence; to Wulfstane Archbishop of Tork.

Some Priests fill their Box for Houel on Easter-day, and so reserve it a whole year for sick men, as though that Houel were more holy than another. But they do unadvisedly, because it waxeth hoary or altogether rotten, by keeping it so long space; and thus are they become guilty, as the Book witnesseth to us. If any do keep the Houel so long, or lose it, or Mice or other Beasts do eat it, see what the Penitential Book saith by this; So holy is altogether that Houel which is hallowed to day, as that which is hallowed on Easter-day. Wherefore I beseech you to keep the holy Body of Christ with more advice, for sick men, from Sunday to Sunday, in a very clean Box, or at the most not to keep it above a fortnight, and then eat it, laying other in the place. We have an example hereof in Moses Books, as God himself hath commanded in Moses Law, how the Priests should set every Saturday, twelve Loaves, all new baked, upon the Table, the which were called Panes propositionis; and those should stand there in Gods Tabernacle till the next Saturday, and then did the Priests themselves eat them, and set other in the place. Some Priests will not eat the Houel which they do hallow. But we will now declare unto you how the Book speaketh by them: Presbyter missam celebrans, et non audens sumere sacrificium, accusante conscientia, anathema est. The Priest that doth say Mass, and dare not eat the Houel, his Conscience ac-cuseth him, is accursed. It is less danger to receive the Houel, than to hallow it. He that doth twice hallow one Holt to Houel, is like unto those Heretics who do Christen twice one Child. Christ himself blessed Houel before his suffering; he blessed the Bread and brake it, thus speaking to his Apostles, Eat this Bread, this is my Body.

And again, he blessed one Chalice with Wine, and thus also spake unto them, Drink ye all of this, this is mine own Blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the forgiveness of sins. The Lord which hallowed Houel before his suffering, and saith, that the Bread was his own Body, and that the Wine was truly his Blood, halloweth daily by the hands of the Priest, Bread to his Body and Wine to his Blood, in ghostly mystery, as we read in Books. And yet notwithstanding that lively Bread is not bodily so, not the self same Body that Christ suffered in.
nor it at holy Wine is the Saviours Blood which was shed for us in bodily thing, but in ghostly understanding. Both be truly, that Bread is his Body, and that Wine also is his Blood, as was the heavenly Bread which we call Manna, that fed forty years Gods People. And the clear Water which did then run from the Stone in the Wilderness, was truly his Blood, as St. Paul wrote in one of his Epistles, Omnes patres nostri eandem escam spiritualem manducaverunt, et omnes eundem potum spiritualem biberunt, &c.
All our Fathers did eat in the Wilderness the same ghostly meat, and drink the same ghostly drink; they drank of that ghostly Stone, and the Stone was Christ. The Apostle hath said, as you have heard, that they all did eat the same ghostly meat, and they all did drink the same ghostly drink.
And he saith not bodily, but ghostly. And Christ was not yet born, nor his Blood shed when that the People of Israel did eat that Meat, & drank of that Stone. And the Stone was not bodily Christ, though he so said. It was the same mystery, as that is, in the old Law, and they did ghostly signifie that ghostly Houel of our Saviours Body which we consecrate now.

Besides these Epistles above prefixed of Elfricus to Wulfstan and Wulfstane, which fight directly against Transubstantiation, mention was touched also before of certain Sermons, to the number of 80, translated by the said Elfricus out of Latin into the Saxon, that is, into our English Tongue, as ye partly have heard before. Of which 80 Sermons, 24, were chiefly selected to be read, as instead of Homilies or Treatises unto the People: in such order, as the first 12 Sermons or Treatises, intreating of general matters, (as, De initio Creaturae, de augurio, de dis- judicio, unus confessoris, de vaniloquio et negligentia, de avaritia, de falsis diis, &c.) were appointed to be read at pleasure, and at the discretion of the Minister. The other 12 Sermons prescribed of proper Feasts, (as, De Annun- ciatione Mariæ, de Nativitate Domini, de Circumcisione, Domini, de Epiph-ania, de Purificatione Mariæ, Domini, de Quadragesima, Domini, de Palm-is, de Pascha, &c.) Whereof this testimony remaineth in the same Book yet to be seen, both in the Saxon Tongue, and also in the Preface of the later 12 Sermons in Latin, in these words following, In hoc codicello continentur serm. Anglice, quos accepimus de libris quos Abbas Anglice transulsi, &c.

Furthermore, as touching these 80 Sermons aforesaid, which Elfricus translated into English, here is to be understood, that in the said Sermons used then orderly to be recited to the People, there was one appointed to be read in the Sancto Pasche, that is upon Easter-day: which Sermon being translated by the said Elfricus, we have here exhibited both in Saxon Speech and English, to the intent that the Christian and indifferent Reader, perusing the same, may judge thereby how the fantastical Doctrine of Transubstantiation, in those days of Elfricus, and before his time, was not yet received nor known in the Church of England; for so much as the said Sermon, being in Latin before, doth leave unto us an evident Declaration, what was the common opinion of the Sacrament in the Church received, before that Elfricus did ever set hand to translate the same out of the Latin.

And though the Latin Copies and Exemplars of these the Latin aforesaid Sermons are not remaining in our Libraries, let that be no marvel to thee, loving Reader, but understand thereby the crafty packing of the Popes Clergy, who in the time of Lanfrancus and Pope Innocent, studying by all means how to prefer and further this their new-come Doctrine of Transubstantiation, did abolish and rafe out of Libraries and Churches all such Books which made to the contrary. And therefore because Lanfrancus, and other Italian Priests here in England, understood not the Saxon Books as they did the Latin, all that which they understood they made away. The Saxon Books, because they knew them not, they let remain: and this is the cause why our Latin Copies are now to be found. Which to be true, by 3 Reasons conjectural it may be possibly supposed.

First, for that these Saxon Sermons being translated out of the Latin (as ye have heard by the words of Elfricus already proved) only we see the Saxon Books reserved; of the Latin none doth appear.

Secondly, there is yet remaining one certain piece or fragment of an Epistle of Elfricus in the Library of Worcester. Wherein, so much as maketh against the matter of Transubstantiation, we found in the middle of the said Latin Epistle utterly rased out, so that no Letter nor piece of a Letter doth there appear. The words cut out were these; Non est tamen hoc sacrificium corpus ejus, in quo passus est pro nobis, neque sanguis ejus quem pro nobis effudit: sed spiritualiter corpus ejus efficitur & sanguis, sicut Manna quod de celo pluit, & aqua que de petra fluxit. Sicut Paulus, &c. i. e. Notwithstanding this Sacrifice is not the same Body of his wherein he suffered for us, nor the same Blood of his which he shed for us; but spiritually it is made his Body and Blood; as that Manna which rained from Heaven, and the Water which did flow out of the Rock. As Paul, &c. These words so rased out are to be restored again by another Saxon Book found in Exeter. By the rasing of which one place it may easily be conjectured what these practicers have likewise done in the rest.

Thirdly, by one Italian trick of Polydore Virgil in our days, the properties and doings of all other Italian Papists of elder time may partly be conjectured: for so I am informed by such as precisely will affirm it to be true, that when Polydore, being licensed by the King to view and search all Libraries, had once accomplished his story by the help of such Books, as he had compiled out of Libraries; in the end, when he had taken out what he would, like a true Factor for the Popes own tooth, he piled his Books together and set them all on a light fire. For what cause he so did I cannot certainly pronounce; but who so considereth well his Religion may shrewdly suspect him. For a probation whereof, this may serve for a sufficient trial; that whereas of all other Writers of Histories that have been in England, as of Fabian, Lanquet, Rassal, Mere, Leland, Bale, Pall, and such other, some of their Books which they then occupied yet remain in hands to be seen: only such Books as Polydore used, and which past his hands, what Englishman is he that hath seen or can they see one? Whereby it may well be thought the forcible information to be true. As also by this one Italian trick of Polydore may other Italians likewise be suspected, in making away such Latin Books within this Land as made not for their purpose. But forasmuch as those Latin Books be now abolished, and cannot be had, let us return to our Saxon Tongue again, and see what this Saxon Sermon of Elfricus's Translation doth say for Transubstantiation: the Copy whereof here ensueth.

 the holy Houfel, which giveth substance of life, that is of the ghostly might, and invisable doing. Therefore is that holy Houfel called a mytery, because there is one thing in it seen, and another thing understood. That which is there seen, hath bodily shape: and that we do there understand hath ghostly might. Certainly Christs Body, which suffered Death and rose from Death, never dieth henceforth, but is eternal and unpassible. That Houfel is temhowbeit, nevertheless after ghostly might it is all in every part. Many receive that holy Body, and yet notwithstanding it is so all in every part after ghostly mytery. Though some chew the lefs, yet is there no more might notwithstanding in the more part, than in the lefs, because it is whole in all men after the invisable might. This mytery is a pledge and a figure: Christs Body is truth it self. This pledge we do keep mystically, until that we be come to the truth it self, and then is this pledge ended. Truly it is, so as we before have said, Christs Body and his Blood; not bodily, but ghostly. But now hear the Apostles words about this mytery. Paul the Apostle speaketh of the old Israelites, thus writing in his Epistle to faithful Men.

 All our forefathers were Baptised in the cloud, and in the Sea, and all they did Eat the same ghostly meat, and drank the same ghostly drink. They drank truly of the stone that followed them, and that stone was Christ. Neither was that stone then from which the water ran, bodily Christ, but it signified Christ, that called thus to all believing and faithful Men. Whosoever thirsteth, let him come to me and drink, and from his bowels shall flow lively water. This he said of the holy Ghost, which they received who believed on him. The Apostle Paul saith, That the Israelites did eat the same ghostly meat, and drank the same ghostly drink, because that heavenly meat that fed them forty years, and that water which from the stone did flow, had signification of Christs Body, and his Blood, that now be offered daily in Gods Church.
 It was the same which we now offer, not bodily, but ghostly.

We said unto you ere while, that Christ hallowed Bread and Wine to Houfel before his suffering, and said, This is my Body and my Blood. Yet he had not then suffered; Now we eat but so notwithstanding he turned through invisable might the Bread to his own Body, and that Wine to his Blood which as hee before did in the Wilderness, before that he was born to be a Man, when he turned that heavenly meat to his flesh, and the flowing water from that stone to his own Blood. Very many did eat of that heavenly meat in the Wilderness, and drank the ghostly drink; and were nevertheless dead, as Christ said. And Christ meant not that death which none can escape, but that everlasting death which some of that folk deserved for their unbeli-ghostly mystery. As wife Augustine saith of it, If ye will understand of Christs Body, hear the Apostle Paul thus speaking, Ye truly be Christs Body and his Members. Now is your Mystery set on Gods Table, and ye receive your Mystery, which Mystery ye your selves be. Be that which ye see on the Altar, and receive that which ye your selves be. Again, the Apostle Paul saith by it, We many be one Bread and one Body. Understand now and rejoyce, many be one Bread and one Body in Christ. He is our Head and we be his Limbs; and the Bread is not of one Corn, but of many; nor the Wine of one Grape, but of many. So also we all should have one unity in our Lord, as it is written of the faithful Army, how that they were in so great an unity, as thoughall of them were one Soul and one Heart. Christ hallowed on his Table the Mystery of our Peace and of our Unity. He that receiveth that mystery of Unity, and keepeth not the bond of true Peace, receiveth no mystery for himself, but a witness against himself. It is very good for Christian men, that they go often to Houfel, if they bring with them to the Altar unguishness and inno- cency of heart; if they be not oppressed with sin. To an evil man it turneth to no good, but to destruction, if he receive unworthily that holy Houfel. Holy Books command that Water be mingled to that Wine which shall be for Houfel, because the Water signifieth the People, and the Wine Christs Blood, and therefore shall neither the one without the other be offered at the holy Mass, that Christ may be with us and we with Christ: the Head with the Limbs, and the Limbs with the Head. We should before have intreated of the Lamb which the old Israelites offered at their Easter time, but that we desired first to declare unto you of this mystery, and after, how we should receive it. That signifying Lamb was offered at the Easter. And the Apostle Paul saith in the Epistle of this present day, that Christ is our Easter, who was offered for us, and on this day rose from death.

The Israelites did eat the Lambs flesh as God command- ed, with unleavened Bread and wild Lettice; so we should, receive that holy Houfel of Christs Body and Blood without the Leaven of Sin and Iniquity. As Lea- ven turneth the Creatures from their nature; so doth sin also change the nature of man from innocency to un- cleanness. The Apostle hath taught how we should feast, not in the Leaven of the evilness, but in the sweet Dough of purity and truth. The Herb which they should eat with the unleavened Bread is called Lettice, and is bitter in taste: so we should with bitterness of unfained Re- pentance purifie our mind, if we will eat Christs Body. Those Israelites were not wont to eat raw flesh, and therefore God bad them to eat it neither raw nor foddren in Water, but roasted with fire. He shall receive the Body of God raw, that shall think without reason, that Christ was only Man like unto us, and was not God. And he that will after mans wisdom search the mystery of Christs Incarnation, doth like unto him that doth seeth Lambs flesh in Water, because that Water in this same place signifieth mans Understanding: but we should un- derstand, that all the mystery of Christs Humanity was ordered by the power of the Holy Ghost: and then eat we his Body roasted with fire, because the Holy Ghost came in fiery likeness to the Apostles in divers Tongues. The Israelites should eat the Lambs head, and the feet, and the purtenance, and nothing thereof must be left over-night. If any thing thereof were left, they did burn that in the fire; and they brake not the bones. After ghostly understanding we do eat the Lambs head, when we take hold of Christ Divinity in our Belief. A- gain when we take hold of his Humanity with love, then eat we the Lambs feet, because that Christ is the beginning and the end, God before all world, and Man beginning and the end of this world. What be the Lambs purte- nance, but Christs secret Precepts? And these we eat when we receive with greediness the Word of life. There must nothing of the Lamb be left unto the morning, because that all Gods Sayings are to be searched with great carefulness; so that all his Precepts may be known in understanding and deed in the night of this present life, before that the last day of the universal Resurrec- tion do appear. If we cannot search out thoroughly all the mystery of Christs Incarnation, then ought we to betake the rest unto the might of the Holy Ghost with true humility, and not to search rashly of that deep se- cretness above the measure of our understanding. They did eat the Lambs flesh with their loyns girt. In the Loyns is the lust of the Body, and he which will receive that Houfel shall cover or wrap in that concupiscence, and take with chastity that holy receipt. They were also shod. What be Shoes, but of the Hides of dead Beasts? We be truly shod, if we match in our steps and deeds the life of men departed this life, which pleased God with keeping of his Commandments. They had Staves in their hands when they did eat. This Staff signifieth a careful- ness and diligent overseeing. And all they that best know and can, should take care of other men, and slay them up with their help. It was enjoyned to the Eaters, that they should eat the Lamb in haste, for God abhorreth slothfulness in his Servants and those that he loveth, that seek the joy of everlasting life with quickness and haste of mind. It is written, Prolong not to turn unto God, lest the time pass away through thy slow tarrying. The Eaters might not break the Lambs bones. No more might the Souldiers, that did hang Christ, break his holy Legs, as they did of the two Thieves that hanged on either side of him. And the Lord rose from death found without all corruption: And at the last judgment they shall see him, whom they did most cruelly wound on the Cross. This time is called in the Hebrew Tongue, Pascha, and in Latin, Transitus, and in English a Pass- over, because that as on this day the People of Israel passed from the Land of Egypt over the Red Sea, from bondage to the Land of promise: so also did our Lord at this time depart, as saith John the Evangelist, from this world to his heavenly Father. Even so we ought to follow our Head, and to go from the Devil to Christ: from this unstable world to his stable Kingdom. Howbeit we should first in this present life depart from vice to ho- ly virtue, from evil manners to good manners, if we will after our Lent life go to the eternal life; and after our Resurrection to Christ. He bring us to his everlasting Father, who gave himself to death for our sins, to him be honour and praise of well doing, world without end, A- men.

And thus I suppose it standeth clear and evidently proved by court of all these Ages afore-recited from the time of Tertullian and Aufin unto the days of this El- fricus above-mentioned, and after him, that this now mi- racle of Transubstantiation was not yet crept into the heads of men, nor almost came in any question amongst learned men, nor was admitted for any Doctrine in the Church, at least for any general Doctrine of all men to be received, till a 1000 years compleat after Christ, that is, till that Satan began to be set at large, Apoc. 20. For Satan let at large. The matter of Transub- stantiation never called in question before the 1000 year after Christ.

Wherefore they that stand so much upon the antiquity of this Article, as a Doctrine which hath ever since think Tran- substantiation to be otherwise than a new Doctrine are ignorant of Histories and Anti- quity.

To proceed now further in this discussion of Antiquity, it followed, that after the time of Elfricus afore-said, this matter of Transubstantiation began first to be talked of, and to come in question among a few superstitious Monks; so that as blindness and superstition began more and more to increase, so the said gross Opinion still more and more, both in number and authority prevailed; in- somuch that about the year of our Lord 1060. the denying of Transubstantiation began to be counted Heretic.

And

1219.

And in this number first was one Berengarius a Frenchman and Archdeacon of Angou, which of all Christian men, which were read of, was first called and counted an Heretic for denying of Transubstantiation, and troubled for the same, as ye shall hear.

This Berengarius lived in the time of Pope Leo the ninth, Victor and Nicho. the second, which was about the year of our Lord 1060. Albeit I do find our Writers here in some discrepance. For the most of them do hold, that he first recanted under Pope Leo the Ninth, in the Council of Vercellense, and afterward again under Pope Nicholas the second, about the year, 1062. as it is to be gathered of Grattan, De consecrat. 2. Ego Berengarius, where he saith that Pope Nicholas did it about to Bps. and Archbishops the Copy of his Recantation.

Again by the Acts of the Council of Rome, it there appeared that the said Berengarius made this his said last Recantation under Pope Hildebrand, called Gregory the seventh. But this difference of times is no great matter to stand upon. The Truth of the Story is this; that when Berengarius had professed the truth of the Sacrament, and had stood in the open confession thereof, according to the ancient verity of the Doctrin received in the Church before, he was so handled with certain malignant and superstitious Monks, that what by evil intreaty, and what for fear of death death (such is the weak frailty of man) he began to shrink, and afterward did indeed recant the truth.

Of these Malicious Enemies against Berengarius, the chiefest troubler was Lanfrank, Abbot of Codune, afterward Archb. of Canterbury; Guimund Monk, likewise of the Abbey of Leofrede; and afterward Archb. of Aovergne, Algerus also Monk of Corbein; Fulbertus also Monk and Bishop; and Hildebrand sometime Monk of Cluniacke, and then Archdeacon of Turon, and afterward Bp. of Rome.

By these and such other Monks of the like Fraternity, the Error and Heresie of Transubstantiation began first to be defended, and parts piously in writing to be taken about the matter. Of the which sides and parts, the first that began to set up that Faction by writing seemeth to be Paschasius, who was a little before Berengarius about the time of Bertrame, and likewise Lanfrank the first that brought it into England.

On the contrary side again, the first that was openly impugned and troubled for denying Transubstantiation, was this Berengarius; with whom Lanfrank also was supposed at the first beginning to hold and take part, but afterward to clear himself he stood openly against him in the Council, and wrote against him.

It followed then in the Act of the Council, when the Synod of Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, and other Prelates were together assembled, the greater number (saith the story) did hold that the Bread and Wine were turned substantially into the Body and Blood of Christ. Notwithstanding, saith he, divers there were in the said Council which held the contrary with Berengarius, but at last were driven to give over. Berengarius among the rest, after he had long stood in the constant defence of the truth, at last relented to their wills, Confessing his Error where none was, and desired pardon of the Council. And this was (as seemeth to William Malmsbury) his first giving over. Who afterward returning to himself again after the death of Pope Leo, and prick with the sting of Conscience, was driven again to recognize the truth, which he before had denied.

The Pope (saith Malmsbury) perceiving this, would not leave him so, but sent into France, Hildebrand his Cardinal Chaplain (as meet a Mate for such a fear, as was in all Satans Court) and made him with a wany to come again Coram nobis; who so handled Berengarius, bringing him before the Face of the Council holden at Turon, that hee made him to say, Erravi, once against; against whom stood up in that Council Lanfrankus, and Guimundus afore said, impugning his assertion. And thus standeth the narration of W. Malmsbury. But by the Acts of Council of Rome appeareth another declaration, which is, that this later recantation of Berengarius should be at Rome under Hildebrand being then Pope, in the year of our Lord 1076. and in the Month of February, and that in the same Council holden in Ecclesia Solymorum, this recantation of Ego Berengarius, was made, and he enjoyed by the said Pope Hildebrand, upon his Oath, never hereafter to teach or dispute contrary to that faith of that Sacrament there holden, &c.

Again, Henry Bullinger in his Book, De Origine Erroris, following belike some other Author, expresseth the order of the afore said Recantation after this sort, and saith, that in the time of Leo the ninth, Anno 1051, there was a Roman Council, holden at Vercellense. In the which Council Lanfrank being then present, the Book of John Scotus was openly read, and there condemned. Alfo Berengarius was sent for, who, seeing the prejudicial proceeding of that Council, refused himself to come, but sent two Clerks, which openly there defended his cause and quarrel, and were for the same committed unto Prison. Such is the freedom of the Popes general Councils, with Prisons and violence to defend their Verities. Against the doings of this Council notwithstanding the Frenchmen stood stiff, both at Angou, and Turon, joining and confenting with Berengarius.

Not long after this died Pope Leo; and after him succeeded Pope Victory, by whom another Synod was kept at Florence, where the Acts and doings of the fore said Council of Vercellense were confirmed, and a Legate also appointed to be sent to Turon in France. This Legate was Hildebrand above mentioned, who, calling the Clergie of France together in a Synod, fell there in hand with the cause of the Sacrament. Berengarius, not being ignorant of these Roman Councils, so kept himself, that in all his actions he would give none other answer, but that he believed and confented with the Faith of the Catholick Church; and so for that time did frustrate the purpose of the Council, rather dealing the pretences of his Enemies, than freely confessing the simple truth.

Again after Victory, came Pope Nicholas the second, who congregating another Council at Rome, Anno 1058, sent for Berengarius there to appear, who being present argued what he could for the justness of his cause, but all would not serve: In the Popes general Councils such a stroke and mastery beareth Authority above Verity. Berengarius being thus born down on every side by might and superiority, when no remedy would serve, but he must needs recant again (for the Law of relapse was not yet in season) he desired to know what other Confession of the Sacrament the Pope would desire of him, besides that which he had there confessed.

Then Pope Nicholas committed that charge to Humbert a Monk of Lotharing and after a Cardinal, that he should draw out in formable words the order of his Recantation, after the percription of Rome, which he should read and publicly profess before the people. The form of which words is registred in the Decrees, De consecrat. Dist. 2. Ego Berengarius. The effect whereof is this, That he pretendeth with Heart and Mouth to profess, that he acknowledgeth the True, Catholick, and Apostolical Faith, doth execrate all Heresie, namely, that wherewith he hath lately been infamed, as holding that the Bread and Wine upon the Altar, after the consecration of the Priest remain only a Sacrament, and are not the very self Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, neither can be handled or broken with the Priests Hands, or chewed with the teeth of the faithful, otherwise than only by manner of a Sacrament: Consenting now to the holy and Apostolical Church of Rome be professed with Mouth and Heart to hold the same Faith touching the Sacrament of the Lords Majs, which the Lord Pope Nicholas with his Synod here present hath hold, and commandeth to be holden by his Evangelical and Apostolical Authority, that is, that the Bread and Wine upon the Altar after Consecration are not only a Sacrament, but also are the very true and self Body and Blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, and are sensibly felt and broken with Hands, and chewed with teeth: swearing by the holy Evangelists, that whosoever shall hold or say unto the contrary, he shall hold them perpetually accursed, and if he himself shall hereafter presume to preach or teach against the same, hee shall be content to abide the severity and rigour of the Canons, &c.

This Cowardly Recantation of Berengarius, as it offended a great number of the godly sort; so it gave to the contrary part no little Triumph, whereby ever since they they have taken the greater Courage to tread down the truth.

It happened shortly after this, that Hildebrand, the Popes grand Captain in the behalf of his Master Pope Nicholas, went in warfare against the Normans. Which war being finished, shortly after he set upon a new Voyage to fight for Pope Alexander, against Cadulus; which victory being also achieved, it was not long, but he put the new Pope Alexander beside the Cullion, and was made Pope himself: so that during the busy stir of these wars, the Popes Holiness had no leisure to attend the debating of this Controversie of the Sacrament.

At length when all was quieted, and Pope Hildebrand now was where he would be, his restless brain could not be unoccupied, but ere-long summoneth a new Council at Rome in the Church of Lateran, to revive again the old disceptation of Berengarius about the year, as some hold, 1079.

Romanus 3.

Thus Berengarius, being tossed by these Monks and Pharisees, was so confounded, and baited on every side, that partly for worldly fear straining him on the one side, partly for shame and grief of Conscience that he had now twice denied the truth on the other side, the man (as is of him reported) after these such turbulent tragedies, forsaking his goods, his studies, learning, and former state of life, became a labourer, and wrought with his Hands for living, all the residue of his life.

The true opinion and judgment of Berengarius of the Sacrament. Ex lib. Lanfranci Archiep. capit. contra Bereng.

To the opinion which Berengarius maintained touching the Sacrament (as by his own words in Lanfranks Book may appear) was this: The Sacrifice of the Church consisteth of two things: The one visible, the other invisible, that is, of the Sacrament, and of the thing or matter of the Sacrament. Which thing (which is to mean, the Body of Christ) if it were here present before our eyes, it were a thing visible and to be seen: but being left up into heaven, and sitting on the Right Hand of his Father, to the time of restoring of all things (as St. Peter saith) it cannot be called down from thence. For the Person of Christ consisteth of God and Man; the Sacrament of the Lords Table, consisteth of Bread and Wine; which being consecrate are not changed, but remain in their substances, having a certain resemblance or similitude of those things, whereof they be Sacraments, &c. Ex lib. Lanfranci.

By these words of Berengarius Doctrin, all indifferent Readers may see and judge, that he affirmed nothing but what was agreeable to the holy Scripture, believing with Saint Augustine, and all other ancient Elders of the Church, that in the holy Supper all faithful believers be refreshed spiritually with the Body and Blood of the Lord, unto everlasting life. Wherefore most impudently they do mis-report him (as they do many other besides) which falsely lay to his charge, as though his teaching should be, that in the sacred Supper of the Lord nothing else were received of the faithful, besides only the bare signs, which is the Bread and the Wine.

And now that you have seen the Doctrin of Berengarius, let us also take a view of the contrary teaching of Lanfrancus and his fellows, conferring and comparing together the institution on the one side with the institution of the other, to mark and consider which of them foundeth nearer to the truth of the Scriptures. The words of Lanfrank be these.

The gross opinion of Lanfrancus and the Papists, concerning the Sacrament.

I believe the earthly substances, which upon the Lords Table are divinely sanctified through the ministrations of the Priest, to be converted unspeakably, incomprehensibly, and miraculously by the operation of Gods mighty power, into the essence of the Lords Body, the outward form only of the thing; themselves and certain qualities reserved, and that for two respects: The one, lest the sight of the raw and Bloody Flesh might otherwise make men to abhor from eating thereof; the other, for that they which believe the thing they see not, might have the greater merit for their belief. The conversion of which earthly substances into the essence of the Lords Body notwithstanding, yet is the self-same Body of the Lord in heaven, and there hath his essential being at the Right Hand of his Father immortal, inviolate, perfect, undiminished, and uncorrupted: so that truly it may be affirmed, the self-same Body both to be received of us, and yet not the self-same. The self-same, I mean, as touching the essence, property, and virtue of his true nature: and yet not the self-same as touching the forms of Bread and Wine, and other outward qualities incurring to our outward senses, &c. And thus have ye the Confession of Lanfrank Archbishop of Canterbury.

From this Confession of Lanfrank, the opinion and assertion also of Guimundus Archbishop of Aversan doth nothing differ in grossness and impiety, but rather passeth the same, thus affirming and defending, That the Body of Christ is pressed, and torn with teeth, even like as it was felt and touched with the Hands of Thomas.

And moreover, the said Guimundus (if his Book be not rather counterfeited at Lovain) in the same place answering to an objection put out, that it is not lawful for Christ to be torn in pieces with teeth, doubteth not to pronounce that whether we take tearing for hard biting, or soft biting, it is not repugnant nor disagreeing, but that (by the will of God agreeing thereunto) the Body of Christ may be touched with Hands, bitten with Mouth, crushed, yea, and divided in pieces, with hard or soft pressing of the teeth: and that as he was bruised upon the Cross, according to the Prophet, saying, He was bruised for our iniquities, &c. So the same Body, for the health of the faithful may devoutly be torn and rent with their teeth, any thing to the contrary notwithstanding, &c. Guimund. lib. Sacrament. fol. 30. Judge now all good studious Readers, what is to be thought of this kind of Doctrine, and how this opinion cohereth with the intallible voice of Gods Word, saying, Exod. And of him ye shall not break a bone, &c.

This rude and mishapen Doctrin of these Monks concerning Transubstantiation, as ye have heard when and by whom it began first to be broached: so if you would now know by what learning and Scriptures they did confirm and establish the same, ye must here think and understand, how their chiefest ground and substance to persuade the people, was at this time certain miracles by them forged, and published both in their writings and preachings; whereof one was the fame of Odo above recited, which Osborn, or some other Monk in Legend invented of him, how he should shew unto certain the Host turned into the likeness of Flesh and Blood dropping into the Chalice for the conversion of those Clerks, which before would not believe it.

And another like Miracle is also told by the said Osborn of Dunstan in this order, how the said Dunstan appeared to a certain Lame Cripple in the night, willing him to resort unto his tomb, to have his limbs again restored. Which Cripple, according as he was willed, after he had there continued praying for health a long time, and could not obtain, began to return home again after long tarrying, without all hope of recovery. To whom the said Dunstan appearing again by the way, asked from whence he came, and whether he would. The Cripple answering, declared how he came thither upon hope of health, where he had long tarried and because he could find no recovery, therefore he now was returning home. To whom then said Dunstan; I am, saith he, Dunstan the fellow servant of all Gods servants, and have been occupied with certain necessary business, for the which I could not be present there with my Children. For Elfrick, said he, otherwise firnamed Bata, hath attempted to diliberit my Church, but I have so stopped him, that he could not prevail.

Many other fabulous miracles of the like stamp are rise in popish stories, counterfeited and forged under divers and sundry names, some referred to Gregory, some, to Paschasius, and to other more, which to recite all would fill a whole Sea full of lies and fables. Among many, one is thus invented of Paschasius. There was a Priest of Almann, saith he, named Plegildus, who did see and handle with his Hands visibly the shape of a Child upon the Altar, and so after he had embraced and kissed him, it returned again to the likeness of Bread, as he should come to the receiving thereof. This miracle when it was objected against Berengarius, he merily deriding the blind fable, answered in these words, Speciosa, inquit, pax nebulonis, ut cui oris preberet balium, et dentium inferret exitum. That is, A godly peace, quoth he, of a false warlet, that whom he kissed before with his mouth, by and by he goeth about to tear him with his teeth.

Another

a time entering into the Church, with another Christian Monk in mil-rade to prove Tran-substantia-on.

A Lad which was his play-fellow, saw upon the Altar a little Child broken and torn in pieces, and afterward by portions to be distributed among the People. Which fight when the young Jew coming home and told unto his Father to be true and certain, he was for the flames condemned to be burned. Thus he being inclosed in a house, and the door fast were he should be burned, he was found and taken out from thence by the Christians, not only alive, but also having not one hair of his head blemished with the flames about him. Who then being of the Christians demanded, how he was so preserved from the burning fire: there appeared, said he, to me a beautiful Woman sitting on a Chair, whose Son the Child was, which was before divided and distributed in the Church among the People, who reached to me her hand in the burning flame, and with her Gown Skirts kept the flame from me, so that I was preserved thereby from perishing, &c. Belike these Monks lacked Miracles among the Christians, when they were fain to borrow such figures of the Jews to prove their fained Transubstantia-tion.

And these commonly were then the Arguments of those Monks, wherewith they perwaded the People to believe their Transubstantiation. But to leave these Monks fictions, and to return again to Beregrarius, thus Malmesbury of him reports, that after he had once or twice recanted (as is aforesaid) yet notwithstanding this Doctrine of the Sacrament still remained in the mind of his hearers. And howsoever the Tyranny of the Pope did drive him through force to deny his Opinion, and wrought him much trouble, yet notwithstanding, after his death he lacked not his well willers. In the number of whom was Hilbertus Bishop Cornouanensis. Whole verses in commendation of his Master I thought here not unworthy to be preferred, being otherwise rare peradventure to be found in our Story Writers.

Although in this time of Berengarius, which was about the year of our Lord, 1060. (as yehave heard) this error of Transubstantiation began to grow in force and strength, by the supporting of certain Popish Monks above rehearsed, as Laufrancus, Gismundus, Algerius Hugo, Bishop of Lincoln, Fulbertus (of whom it is said in Stories, that our Lady gave him suck being sick with her own breasts) and such other; yet notwithstanding all this while the said Transubstantiation was decreed from no publick law, nor Doctrine to be holden by any general consent, either of the Church of Rome, or any other Council, before the Council of Laterane, under Pope Innocent the third, who in the year of our Lord, 1215. celebrating in the Church of Laterane a general Council of 1300. Bishops enacted there divers Constitutions, as of yearly Confection, and the Communion to be used of the whole multitude once a year through every Parish Church.

Item, for the recovery of the Holy Land, with Subsidy also to be levied for the same.

Item, for the establishing of the Books and Writings of Joachim Abbas, and also the Opinions of Almaricus afore mentioned; notwithstanding that the said Joachim did subscribe with his own hand, that he held the same Doctrine which was in the Church of Rome, and also submitted his Books to be presented to the See of Rome, there to be corrected or approved. And yet he was judged though not an Heretic, yet to be croneous, and especially in those Books which he wrote against Peter Lombard, called afterward the Master of Sentences.

In the said Council, besides divers other Constitutions and the Articles of the Creed there in order repeated, as appeareth, Extr. De summa Trinit. & Fide Catholica, Chap. 1. there was enacted, decreed, and established the Faith and Belief of Transubstantiation, in these words following.

There is one universal Church of the faithful, wherein some none can be saved, in the which Church the self-same Jesus Christ is both Priest and also the Sacrifice, whose Body and Blood are truly contained in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the form of Bread and Wine, the Bread being transubstantiated in the Body, and Wine into the Blood, by the power and working of God. So that to the accomplishing of this Mystery of unity, we might take of his, the same which he hath taken of ours.
 And this Sacrament none can make or consecrate, but that is a Priest lawfully ordained, according to the Keys of the Church, which Jesus Christ hath left to his Apostles, and to their Successors, &c.

Bishops in the year of our Lord above specified, under Pope Innocentius, and the Doctrine thereof intruded for an Article of Faith into the Church, necessarily to be believed of all men under pain of Heresie.

But yet all this while, notwithstanding that the Substance of Bread and Wine was now banished out of the Sacrament, and utterly transubstantiated into the Substance of Christs very Body and Blood ; yet was not this Body elevated over the Priests head, nor adored of the People till the days of Pope Honorius the third, succeeding after Innocentius, who by his Council likewise commanded Adoration and Elevation to be joyned with Transubstantiation; as one Idolatry commonly bringeth forth another.

Again,

Again, the Sacraments of the Lords Supper being now consecrated, transubstantiated, elevated, adored, yet it was not offered up for a Sacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead, nor for a remedy of the Souls in Purgatory, nor for a merit operis operati, sive bono metu meriti, &c. before that other Popes coming after added still new additions to the former inventions of their predecessors.

Oblation.

And thus have you the whole order and origine of these Idolatrous parts of the Mass described by their times and ages, which first began with Consecration, and the form thereof, which were words of the Canon. Then came Transubstantiation by Innocentius, and after Elevation and Adoration by Honorius, and last of all came the Oblation meritorious and propitiatory for the quick and the dead in remission of sins, Ex opere operato.

Which things being thus constituted by the too much usurped authority of the Church of Rome, shortly after followed Persecution, Tyranny and Burning among the Christians, first beginning with the Albigenses, and the faithful Congregation of Tholouse, near about the time of the said Innocentius, as is afore remembered.

And thus much for the first Article of Transubstantiation which (as you have heard) was not admitted into the Church for any general Doctrine of Faith, before the year and time above assigned of Pope Innocent the third: and therefore if any have been otherwise persuaded, or yet do remain in the same persuasion still of this Doctrine, as though it had been of a longer continuance then for the time above expressed, let him understand that by ignorance of Histories he is deceived: and for the more satisfying of his mind, if he credit not me, let him believe the words of one of his own Catholic fort. J. Duns I mean, who in his fourth Book writing of Transubstantiation, in what time and by whose authority it was first established, hath these words, which also are before mentioned: These words of the Scripture might be expounded more easily, and more plainly without Transubstantiation; but the Church did chuse this sense, which is harder, being thereto moved, as seemeth, chiefly because men should hold of the Sacraments, the same which the Church of Rome doth hold, &c. And further in the same place the said Duns expounding himself what he meant by the Church of Rome, maketh there express mention of the said Innocentius the third, and of this Council of Laterane &c.

And furthermore, to the intent that such as be indifferent seekers of the Truth may be more amply satisfied in this behalf, that this Transubstantiation is of no antiquity, but of a late invention: I will also adjoin to this Testimony of Joannes Scotus, the judgment and verdict of Erasmus lib. Annot. where he writeth in these words, In Synaxi transubstantiationem sero deservit Ecclesia. Dni satis erat credere sive sub pane consecrato, sive quocumque modo adesse verum corpus Christi, &c. That is, In the Sacrament of the Communion, the Church concluded Transubstantiation but of late days. The second Article.

Article of both kinds.

As touching the second Article, which debarreth from the Lay-people the one half of the Sacrament, understanding that under one kind both parts are fully contained, forasmuch as the world well knoweth that this Article is but young, invented, decreed and concluded no longer since, than at the Council of Constance, not past 200. years ago: I shall not need to make any long standing upon that matter, especially for that sufficient hath been said thereof before in our long discourse of the Bohemians Story.

The reasons and objections of the Papists against both kinds.

First let us see the Reasons and Objections of the Adversaries in refraining the Laity from the one kind of this Sacrament. The use, say they, hath been of so long continuance in the Church. Whereunto we answer, that they have no evident nor authentick example of any ancient custom in the Church which they can produce in that behalf.

Item, where they alledged the place of St. Luke where Christ was known in breaking of Bread, &c, citing Luke 24. moreover many of her places of Scripture, wherein mention is made of breaking of Bread: to answer thereunto, although we do not utterly repugn, but that some of these places may be understood of the Sacrament: yet that being granted, it followeth not therefore, that one part of the Sacrament was only ministered to the People without the other, when as by the common use of speech, under the naming of one part the whole action is meant. Neither doth it follow, because that Bread was broken among the Brethren, therefore the Cup was not distributed unto them. For so we find by the words of St. Paul, that the use of the Corinthians was to communicate not only in breaking of Bread, but in participating the Cup also, The Cup, saith he, which we participate, 1. Cor. 10. &c.

Also after the Apostles, in the time of Cyprian, of Jerome, of Gelasius and other successively after them, it is evident that both the kinds were frequented in the Church. First Cyprian in divers places declareth that the Sacrament of the blood was also distributed. How do we, saith he, provoke them to stand in the confession of Christ, to the shedding of their Blood, if we deny unto them the Blood of Christ when they prepare themselves to the conflict? Epist. 2. De laiciis Martyribus Scribitur.

The words of Jerome are plain. Priests, saith he, which Minister the Eucharist, and divide the Blood unto the People. Hieronymus in Sophon. cap. 3.

In historia tripartita, it was said to the Emperor Theodosius, How will you receive the Body of the Lord with such bloody hands, or the Cup of his precious Blood with that mouth, which have spoiled so much innocent Blood? in hist. tripart. lib. 9.

In the Canon of Gelasius, and in the Popes own Decrees, these words we read, We understand that be some which receive only the portion of the Lords Body, do abstain from the Cup of his sacred Blood: to whom we enjoin, that either they receive the whole Sacrament in both kinds, or else that they receive neither; for the dividing of the whole and one Sacrament cannot be done without great sacrilege, &c. So that this Decree of P. Gelasius being contradictory to the Council of Constance, it must follow, that either the Pope did err, or else the Council of Constance, must needs be a sacrilegious Council, as no doubt it was. The Council of Constance a sacrilegious Council.

The like Testimony also appeareth in the Council of Toletane, that the Laity did then communicate in both kinds, beside divers other old Presidents, remaining yet in the Churches both of Germany and also of France, declaring likewise the same. The forbidding of both kinds of the Sacrament hath no ground of ancient custom.

And thus it standeth certain and demonstrable by manifold probations, how far this new found custome differeth from all antiquity and prescription of use and time. Again, although the custome thereof were never so ancient, yet no custome may be of that strength to gainstand or countermand the open and expresse commandment of God, which saith to all men, Bibite ex hoc omnes, Drink ye all of this, &c.

Again, seeing the Cup is called the Blood of the New Testament, who is he that dare or can alter the Testament of the Lord, when none may be so hardy to alter the Testament of a man, being once approved or ratified?

Further, as concerning those Places of Scripture before alledged, De fractione panis; That is, Of breaking of Bread, whereupon they think themselves so sure that the Sacrament was then administered but in one kind: to answer thereunto, first we say it may be doubted whether all those places in Scripture De fractione panis, are to be referred to the Sacrament. Secondly, the same being given unto them, yet can they not infer thereby, because one part is mentioned, that the full Sacrament therefore was not ministered. The common manner of the Hebrew Phrase is, under breaking of Bread to signify generally the whole Feast or Supper: as in the Prophet Esay, these words Frangite esurienti panem suum, do signify as well giving Drink as Bread, &c. And thirdly, howsoever those places, De fractione panis, be taken yet it maketh little for them, but rather against them. For if the Sacrament were administered among them, in fractione panis (id est) in breaking of Bread, then must they needs grant, that if Bread was there broken, Ergo there

The Council of Constance a sacrilegious Council.

The forbidding of both kinds of the Sacrament hath no ground of ancient custom.

No custome may derogate from the Lords expresse commandment.

The Lords Testament ought not to be altered for any respect.

The Lords Testament ought not to be altered for any respect.

there was Bread, forasmuch as neither the accidents of Bread without Bread can be broken, neither can the natural Body of Christ be subject to any fraction or breaking by the Scripture, which saith, And ye shall break no bone of him &c. Wherefore take away the Substance of Bread, and there can be no fraction. And take away fraction, how then do they make a Sacrament of this breaking, whereas neither the Substance of Christs Body, neither yet the accidents without their Substance can be broken, neither again will they admit any Bread there remaining to be broken? and what then was it in this their fractione panis, that they did break, if it were not Panis (i.) Substantia panis quæ frangebatur? To conclude, if they say that this fraction of Bread was a Sacramental breaking of Christs Body, so by the like figure let them say that the being of Christs natural Body in the Sacrament is a Sacramental being, and we are agreed.

Another objection against both kinds.
Answer. Item, They object further and say, That the Church upon due consideration may alter as they see cause, in Rites, Ceremonies and Sacraments.

1 Order. Answer. The institution of this Sacrament standeth upon the order, example, and commandment of Christ. This order hetook: first he divided the Bread severally from the Cup, and afterward the Cup severally from the Bread. Secondly, this he did not for any need on his behalf, but only to give us example how to do the same after him, in remembrance of his death to the worlds end. Thirdly, beside this order taken, and example left, he added also an expresse commandment, Hoc facite, Do this: Bibite ex hoc omnes, Drink ye all of this, &c. Against this order, example, and commandment of the Gospel no Church nor Council of men nor Angel in Heaven hath any power or authority to change or alter, according as we are warned; If any bring unto you any other Gospel beside that ye have received, hold him accursed, &c.

Another objection against both kinds.
Acts 2. Item another objection: And why may not the Church (say they) as well alter the form of this Sacrament, as the Apostles did the form of Baptism? where in the Acts Saint Peter saith, Let every one be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, &c.

Answer. The Apostles changed not the form of Baptism. Answer. This Text saith not that the Apostles used this form of baptizing; I baptize thee in the name of Christ, &c. but they used many times, his manner of speech, to be baptized in the name of Christ, not as expressing thereby the formal words of baptizing, but as meaning this, that they would have them to become Members of Christ, and to be baptized as Christians, entering into his Baptism, and not only to the Baptism of John: and therefore although the Apostles thus spake to the People, yet notwithstanding when they baptized any themselves, they used (no doubt) the form of Christ prescribed, and no other.

Mans curiosity in magnifying his own devices above Gods. Item, Among many other objections, they alledge certain Perils and causes of weight and importance, as spilling, shedding, or shaking the Blood out of the Cup, or scouring, or else sticking upon mens Beards, &c. For the which they say it is well provided the half Communion to suffice.

Whereunto it is soon answered, That as these causes were no let to Christ, to the Apostles, to the Corinthians, and to the Brethren of the Primitive Church, but that in the publick Assemblies they received all the whole Communion, as well in the one part as in the other; so neither be the said causes so important now, to aduul and evacuate the necessary commandment of the Gospel, if we were as careful to obey the Lord, as we are curious to magnifie our own devices, to strain at gnats to stumble at straws, and to seek knots in Rushes, which rather are in our own fantasies growing, than there where they are sought.

In summa. Divers other objections and cavillations are in Popish Books to be found, as in Gabriel the difference made between the Laity and Priests, also the distinction used to be made between the priests Communion and the laical Communion. Where is to be understood, that when Priests were bid to use the laical Communion, thereby was meant not receiving under one kind, as Lay-men do now, but to abstain from consecrating, and only to receive as the Lay-men then did. Some also alledge certain special or particular examples, as of the Cup only serving for the Bread, or of the Bread only sent to certain sick folk for the Cup. And here they do infer the Story of Sacramentus, touching the Woman in whole mouth the Sacrament of Bread, which the only received without the Cup, was turned to a stone, &c. Other alledge other private examples likewise of Infants, aged men, sick Persons, men excommunicate, Phreneticks, or mad men, or men dwelling far off from Churches, in Mountains or Wildernesses, &c. All which private examples neither make any instance against the ancient custom of publick Congregations frequented from the Apostles time, and much less ought they to derogate from this expresse and necessary Precept of the Gospel, which saith to all men without exception, Hoc facite, &c. Bibite ex hoc omnes, &c.

Objections of private example make no instance against Publick usage and Doctrine of the Church. Commandment Sacramentum Communion Laicit. Hist. Eccle. lib. Cap. 5.

All respects must give place to the obedience of the word.

The third Article.

Private Masses, Trental Masses, and Dirige Masses, as they were never used before the time of Gregory, fix hundred years after Christ; so the same do fight directly against our Christian Doctrine, as by the definition thereof may well appear. The Mass is a work or action of the Priest, applied unto men for meriting of grace, Ex opere operato, in the which action the Sacrament is first worshipped, and then offered up for a Sacrifice for remission of Sins, à pena et culpa, for the quick and the dead. Of this definition as there is no part, but it agreeth with their own teaching; so there is no part thereof of which disagreeeth not from the rules of Christian Doctrine, especially these, as follow.

1. The first Rule is, Sacraments be instituted for some principal end and use, out of the which use they are no Sacraments. As the Sacrament of Baptism is a Sacrament of regeneration and forgiveness of Sins to the Person that is baptized; but if it be carried about to be worshipped and shewed to other, as meritorious for their remission and regeneration; to them it is no Sacrament.

2. No Sacrament or ceremony doth profit or conduce, but them only which take and use the same.

3. Only the death of Christ, and the work of his Sacrifice upon the Cross is to be applied to every man by faith, for salvation and health of his Soul. Beside this work alone, to apply any action or work of Priest or any other Person, as meritorious of it self, and conducive to Salvation, to Souls health, or to remission of Sins, it is Idolatry, and derogatory to the Testament of God, and to the Blood of Christ prejudicial.

4. To make Idols of Sacraments, and to worship dumb things for the living God, it is Idolatry; Fugite Idola, &c. 1. Cor. 10.

5. Every good work whatsoever it be that a man doth, profiteth only himself, and cannot bee applied to other men, Ex opere operato, to profit them unto merit or remissions, only the actions of Christ except.

6. No man can apply to another the Sacrifice of Christs death by any work doing, but every man must apply it to himself by his own believing. Fugisti ex fide susceperis, Habacuc. 2.

7. The Sacrifice of Christs Death doth save us freely by it self, and not by the means of any mans working for us.

8. The Passion of Christ once done and no more is a full and a perfect oblation and satisfaction for the Sins of the whole world, both original and actual: by the vertue of which passion the wrath of God is pacified toward mankind for ever, Amen.

9. The passion of Christ once done is only the object of that Faith of ours which justifieth us, and nothing else. And therefore whosoever setteth up any other object, beside that passion once done, for our Faith to apprehend and behold the same, teacheth damnable Doctrine, and leadeth to Idolatry.

The 1. Rule.

The 6. Rule.

The 7. Rule.

The 8. Rule.

The 9. Rule.

Against all these rules private Masses directly do repugne. For first, beside that they transgress the order, example, and commandment of Christ (which divided the Bread and Cup to them all) they also bring the Sacrament out of the right use whereunto principally it was ordained. For whereas the use of that Sacrament is principally instituted for a testimonial and remembrance of Christs Death, the private Mass transferreth the same to another purpose, either to make of it a gazing Idol, or a work of application meritorious; or a Sacrifice propitiatory for remission of sins, or a commemoration for Souls departed in Purgatory, according as it is written in their Mass Book, Pro quorum memoria corpus Christi sumitur. Pro quorum memoria sanguis Christi sumitur, &c. Whereas Christ saith contrary, Hoc facietis in meam commemorationem.

Furthermore, the institution of Christ is broken in this, that where the Communion was given in common, the private Mass suffereth the Priest alone to eat and drink up all, and when he hath done, to bless the people with the empty Cup.

Secondly, whereas Sacraments properly profit none but them that use the same, in the private Mass the Sacrament is received in the behoof not only of him that executeth, but of them also which be far off, or dead and in purgatory.

Thirdly, when by the Scripture nothing is to be applied for Remission of our sins, but only the Death of Christ, cometh in the private Mass as a work meritorious done of the Priest, which being applied to other, is available Ex opere operato, both to him that doth it, and to them for whom it is done ad remissionem peccatorum.

Fourthly, private Masses and all other Masses now used of the Sacrament make an Idol, of commemoration make adoration, in stead of a receiving make a deceiving, in place of fleeing forth Christs Death make new oblations of his death, and of a Communion make a single sole supping, &c.

Fifthly, whereas in this general frailty of mans nature, no man can merit by any worthiness of working for himself, the Priest in his private Mass taketh upon him to merit both for himself, and for many other.

Sixthly, it standeth against Scripture; that the Sacrifice and Death of Christ can be applied any otherwise to our benefit and justification, than by Faith. Wherefore it is false that the action of the Mass can apply the benefit of Christs Death unto us, Ex opere operato, sive bono metu utentis vel sacrificantis.

Seventhly, whereas the benefit of our Salvation and justifying standeth by the free gift and grace of God, through our Faith in Christ; contrarily, the application of these Popish Masses stoppeth the freeness of Gods Grace, and maketh that this benefit must first come through the Priests Hands, and his opus operatum, unto us.

The eighth contrariety between private Masses and Gods Word is in this; That where the Scripture saith, Vnica oblatione consummavit eos, qui sanctificantur in perpetuum, with one oblation he hath made perfect them that be sanctified for ever: against this rule the private Mass proceedeth in a contrary Doctrine, maketh of one oblation a daily oblation, and that which is perfectly done and finished now to be done again: And finally, that which was instituted only for eating and for a remembrance of that oblation of Christ once done, the Popish Mass maketh an oblation and a new satisfaction daily to be done for the quick and the dead:

To conclude, these both private and publick Masses of Priests turn away the object of our Faith from the Body of Christ crucified, to the Body of Christ crucified in their Masses. And where God annexeth the promises of justification but only to our Faith in the Body of Christ crucified; they do annex promise of remission a pana culpa, to the Body in their Masses Sacrificed, by their application; besides divers other horrible and intolerable corruptions which spring of their private and publick Masses, which here I leave to other at their leisure further to conceive and to consider. Now let us proceed to the other Articles following.

The fourth and fifth Articles of Vows and Priests Marriage.

AS we have discoursed before by stories and order of time the antiquity of the 3 former Articles above mentioned, to wit, of Transubstantiation, of the half Communion, and of private Masses: so now coming to the Article of Vows, and of Priests marriage, the Reader will like perchance to be satisfied in this likewise, as in the other before, and to be certified from what continuance of time these Vows and unmarried life of Priests have continued. Wherein, although sufficient hath been said before in the former process of this history, as in the life of Anselmus, also of Pope Hildebrand, &c. Yet for the better establishing of the Readers mind against this wicked Article of Priests marriage, it shall be no great labour lost, here briefly to recapitulate in the tractation of this matter, either what before hath been said, or what is more to be added. And to the intent that the world may see and judge the said Law and Decree of Priests single sole life, to be a Doctrine of no ancient standing here within this Realm, but only since the time of Anselmus, I will first alledge for me the words of Henry Huntington, lib. 7. de historia Anglorum here following.

Eodem anno ad festum Michaelistenuit Anselmus Archiepiscopus Concilium apud Londoniam: In quo prohibuit sacerdotibus Anglorum uxores antea non prohibitas. Quod quibusdam mundissimum visum est, quibusdam periculosum: ne dum mundicias viribus majores appetere, in immundicias horribiles ad Christiani nominis immundum deducere inciderent, &c. That is, The same year at the Feast of St. Michael, Anselme the Archbishop of Canterbury held a Synod at London: in the which Synod, he forefended Priests here in England to have wives, which they were not inhibited before to have. Which constitution seemed to some persons very pure and chaste. To otherform again it seemed very dangerous, lest while that men should seem to take upon them such chastity more than they should be able to bear, by that occasion they might happily fall into horrible filthiness, which should redound to the exceeding slander of Christian profession, &c.

Albeit I deny not but before the time also of Anselmus, both Odo, and after him Dunstan Archbishop of Canterbury, and Estelwald Bishop of Winchester, and Oswald Bishop of Worcester in the days of King Edgar, Anno 963, as they were all Monks themselves, so were they great Doers against the marriage of Priests, placing in Monks in Churches, and Colledges, and putting out the married Priests, as ye may read before. Yet notwithstanding neither was in many Churches, and also the Priests then married were not constrained to leave their Wives, or their Rooms, but only at their own choice. For so writeth Malmesbury in vita Dunstani: Itaque Clerici multarum Ecclesiarum, data opione vi aut amicum mutarent: aut loci cederent, &c. That is, Therefore divers and sundry Clerks of many Churches being put to their choice, whether to change their weed, or to part from their places, went their ways, &c. So also Elfricus after them (of whom mention was made before) was somewhat busie in setting forward the single life of Priests, and Lanfrancus likewise. But yet this restraint of Priests lawful marriage was never stably established for a Law here in the Church of England, before the coming of Anselme in the days of William Rufus, and King Henry the first, writing in these words Boldly I command by the Authority which I have by my Archbishoprick, not only within my Archbishoprick, but also throughout England, that all Priests that keep Women, shall be deprived of their Churches, and all Ecclesiastical Benefices, &c. as ye may read more at large before. Which was much about the same time, when as Hildebrand also at Rome began to attempt the same matter, as before hath been shewed, and also besides him were other Popes more, as Innocent the third, Pope Nicholas the second, and Calixtus the second, by whom the Act against Priests Marriage was brought at length to his full perfection, and so hath continued ever since.

Long it were and tedious to recite here all such constitutions of Councils provincial and general, namely, of the Council of Carthage and of Toledo, which seemed to work something in that behalf against the Matrimony of Priests.

Again, longer it were to number up the names of all such Bishops and Priests, which notwithstanding have been married since that time in divers Countries, as more amply shall be shewed (the Lord willing) in the sequel hereof. In the mean season, as touching the age and time of this devilish prohibition for Priests to have their Wives, this is to be found by credible proofs, and conferring of Histories, that in the year of our Saviour, 1067. at what time Pope Hildebrand began first to occupy the Papal Chair, this Oath began first to be taken of Archbishops and Bishops, that they should suffer none to enter into the Ministry, or into any Ecclesiastical Function having a Wife; and likewise the Clergy to be bound to promise the same.

And this was, as I said, about the year of our Lord, 1067. well approved and testified by course of Histories. Whereby appeareth the Prophecie of Saint Paul truly to be verified, speaking of these latter times, the first of Timothy the fourth, Where he writeth in these words, The Spirit speaketh plainly, that in the latter times there shall some depart from the Faith, harkening into Spirits of Error, and to Doctrines of Devils, forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which the Lord hath created to be taken with thanksgiving, &c.

In this Prophecy of St. Paul two things are to be observed; First the matter which he prophesieth of, that is, the forbidding of marriage, and forbidding of Meats, which God generally hath left free to all Men. The second thing in this Prophecy to be noted is the time when this Prophecy shall fall, that is, in the latter times of the World. So that this concurth right well with these years of Pope Hildebrand aforesaid, being a thousand years complete after the Ascension of our Saviour; so that they may well be called the latter times.

This Prophecy of Saint Paul thus standing, as it doth, firm and certain, that is, that forbidding of marriage must happen in the latter times of the world, then must it needs consequently follow thereby, that the married life of Priests is more ancient in the Church than is the single life, than the law I mean commanding the single life of Priests. Which may soon be proved to be true, by the true count of times, and search of Histories.

1. For first at the Council of Nice, it is notorious that this devilish law of marriage to be restrained was stopped by Paphnutius.

2. Before this Council of Nice, in the year of our Lord 180. we read of Polykrates Bishop of Ephesus, who dissenting from Pope Victor about a certain controversie of Easter day, alledgeth for himself how his progenitors before him seven together, one after another, succeeded in that Seet, and he now the eighth after them was placed in the same, using this his Descent of his Parents not onely as a defence of his cause, but also as a glory to himself.

3. Pope Symonius about the year of our Lord 390 wrote to the Priests of Spain about the same matter of putting their Wives from them, if his Epistle be not counterfeit. These Spanish Priests had then with them a Bishop of Terragon; who answering to Symonius in this behalf, alledged the Testimonies of Saint Paul, that Priests might lawfully retain their Wives, &c. To this Symonius replied again, (if his writing be not forged) most arrogantly, and no less ignorantly, reproving the Priest that was married, and for the defence of his cause, alledged this sentence of Saint Paul, Si secundum carnem vixeritis, moriemini. That is, If ye shall live after the flesh, ye shall die, &c. Whereby may appear not onely how they in Spain then had Wives, but also how blind these Men were in the Scriptures, which shewed themselves such and so great Advantages against Priests Marriages.

4. To be short, the further that we go, and the nearer that we come to the antient and Primitive time of the Church, the less antient we shall finde the deprivation of lawful Matrimony amongst Christian Ministers, beginning, if ye will, with the Apostles, their examples and Canons, who although they were not also married, yet divers of them were, and the rest had power and liberty to have and keep their Wives, witnessing Saint Paul, where he writeth of himself; Non habemus potestatem sororem mulierem circumducendi sicut & reliqui Apostoli? That is to say, Have we not power to lead about a Sister to Wife, as also the other Apostles have? Whereby it is to be seen, both what he might do, and what the other Apostles did. Also Clemens Alexandrinus, which was two hundred years after Christ, Lib. Strom. 7. denieth not, but that Paul was married being an Apostle, as well as Peter and Philip. And as the laid Apostles in their Doctrine admonish all men to marry that cannot otherwise do, saying unto every one being in danger of temptation, Vnusquisque suam uxorem habeat, ne tentet vos Satanas, &c. That is, Let every Man have his own Wife, lest Satan tempt you, &c. So likewise the same Apostles in their Canons (as in the Popes Decrees is cited) do precisely charge, that no Bishop nor Priest should sequester from him his Wife for any matter or pretence of Religion, saying, If any shall teach that a Priest for Religion sake ought to continent his own Wife, let him be accursed, &c.

As for the Gloss there in the margin, which expoundeth this word concerning for exhibiting things necessary for her sustentance, all the world may fee that to be a Gloss of meer Sophistry. And because I have here made mention of Clemens Alexandrinus, it shall not alie from my purpose impertinent, to infer the words of this worthy writer, wherewith he doth defend Priests lawful matrimony, against certain vain boasters of Virginity, in his time. Dicunt gloriose ipsi iactatores, se imitari Dominum, qui neque uxorem duxit, neque inmundum aliquid possedit, se magis quam alios Evangelium intellexisse gloriantes. That is, These glorious braggers do vaunt themselves to be the followers of the Lord, who neither had Wife, nor yet possessed any thing here in the world, &c. And it followeth, Eis autem dicit Scriptura, Deus superbis resistit, humilibus autem dat gratiam. Deinde nesciunt causam cur Dominus uxorem non duxerit. Primum quidem, propriam Sponsam habuit Ecclesiam. Deinde vero nec homo erat communis, ut opus haberet etiam adiutore aliquo secundum carnem, &c. To these the Scripture maketh answer, God will withstand the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Again they consider not the cause why the Lord took no Wife. First, he had his own peculiar Spouse, which is the Church. Moreover, neither was he as a common man, that he should stand in such need of a helper after the flesh, &c. And in the same Book a little after alledging against them that abhor Matrimony, he inferreth the words of Saint Paul, how that in the latter days, Some shall fall from the Faith, attending to spirits of Error, and to Doctrines of Devils, forbidding to marry, and to abstain from meats, &c.

Which place of Saint Paul, Clement here applieth not against the Novatians, and them that condemn Matrimony in general in all men, as naught; but he applieth it onely against such, as forbid marriage in parts, and namely in Priests, &c.

This Clement wrote after Christ two hundred years, and yet if we come downward to lower times, we shall find both by the Council of Gangren three hundred years, and also by the Council of Nice four hundred years after Christ, the same liberty, Priests marriage established and enacted as a thing both good and godly. The words of the Gangren Council these; Si quis dixerit Presbyterum conjugatum, tanquam occasione nuptiarum, quod offerre non debeat, & ab ejus oblatione ideo abstinere, anathema sit, &c. That is, If any do judge that a Priest for his marriage sake ought not to minister, and therefore doth abstain from the same, let him be accursed.

Moreover proceeding yet in times and Chronicles of the Church, we shall come to the sixth Council called Synodus Constantinopolitana, almost seven hundred years after Christ: the words of the which Council be alledged in the Decrees, and be these in Latine. Quoniam in Romani ordine canonis esse cognovimus traditum, eos qui ordinati sunt Diaconi vel Presbyteri, confiteri themselves to have no more copulation with their Wives, we following the ancient Canon of the diligent Apostles

Marriage from henceforth shall stand in force, in no case saith: Let him be accursed. By these Words of the Council recited, six things are to be noted.

ibid.

Six things in this Council are so noted.

1. First, how this Council calleth the Marriage of Priests lawful, contrary to these six Articles, and to a certain late English writer of our Country, entitling his Book against the unlawful Marriage of Priests.

2. In that this Council so followeth the Canons of the Apostles, and Constitutions of holy men; we have to understand what the censures both of the Apostles and determination of other holy men were therein.

3. If the Injunction of this Council, agreeing thus with the Apostles and holy men, stood with Truth, the contrary Canon of the Romans, and also of these six English Articles, must needs be condemned of error.

4. By this Council appeareth, that so long time, almost seven hundred years after Christ, this prohibition of Priests Marriage was not yet entered into the Orient
Church but very stoutly was holden out.

5. By the Roman Canon here mentioned, which began with Gregorius six hundred years after Christ, a little before this Council, it cannot be denied, but the Church of Rome began then to disserve, not only from the verity, but also from the unity of all other Churches following the Apostolick Doctrine, albeit the said Roman Canon at that time stood not long, but was shortly dis-annulled by the said Gregorius again, by the occasion of Infants Heads found in the fish Pond; whereof (Christ willing) more shall be spoken hereafter.

The crafty
packing of the Romans in the pre-facing and countering the Canons of Councils.

6. Sixthly here is to be noted and remembered the crafty false packing, and fraud of the Romans, which in the Latin Book of Councils, in divers new impressions have suppressed this Canon, because belike it maketh little with their purpose: playing much like with this, as Pope Sesimus, Bonifacius, and Celestinus played with the sixth Council at Carthage, which for their supremacy would have forged a false Canon of Nice had not the Council sent to Constantinople for the true exemplar thereof, and so proved them open liars to their faces.
So likewise this Canon above mentioned, although it be omitted in some Books, yet being found in the ancient and true written Copies, being alledged of Nilus a Greek Bishop of Thessalonica two hundred years before; and moreover being found and alledged in the Popes own Book of Decrees, Distind. 31. must needs convince them of manifest theft and falshood.

Dita 31.

Hildebrand and Celestinus first extored of ful Marriage.

Thus it may stand sufficiently proved, that the deprivation of Priests lawful Marriage all this space was not entered into the Church, neither Greek nor Latin, at least took no full possession before Pope Hildebrand's time, Anno Domini 1057. and especially Pope Celestinus time, Anno Domini 1120. which were the first open Extortors of Priests Marriage.

Aventinus, a faithful Writer of his time, writing of the Council of Hildebrand, hath these words: Sacerdotes illa tempestate publice uxores, sicut ceteri Christiani, habebant, filios procreabant, sicut instrumentis donati-um que illi Templis, Myitis, & Monachis fecere, ubi he nominatim cum conjugibus testes citantur & honesto vocabulo Presbyterisse nuncupantur, invenio. Caesar tunc &c. That is, in those days Priests commonly had Wives, as other Christian men had, and had Children also, as may appear by ancient Instruments and Deeds of gift, which were then given to Churches, to the Clergy, and to Religious Houses: In the which Instruments both the Priests and their Wives also with them (which were then called Presbyterisse) I find to be alledged for witnesses. It happened moreover the same time (saith Aventinus) that the Emperour, had the investing of divers Archbishopricks, Bishopricks, Abbeyes; and Nunneries within his Dominions. Pope Hildebrand disdaining against both these sorts aforesaid, that is, both against them that were invested by the Emperour, and also against all those Priests that had Wives, provided so in his Council at Rome that they which were promoted by the Emperour, into Livings of the Church, were counted to come in by Simony; the other, which were Married Priests, were counted for Nicolaitans. Whereupon Pope Hildebrand writing his Letters to the Emperour, to Dukes, Princes, and other great Prelates and Potentates, namely to Bertholdus, Zaringer, to Rudolphus of Suevia, to Welfon of Bavaria, to Adalberton, and to their Ladies, and to divers other to whom he thought good, also to Bishops, namely to Otto Bishop of Constance, with other Priests and Lay People, willed them in his Letters to refuse and to keep no Company with those Simoniacks and those Nicolaitan Priests (for so were they termed then) which had either any Ecclesiastical living by the Emperour, or else which had wives, to avoid their Masses, neither to talk, neither to eat nor drink with them, nor once to speak to them, nor to salute them, but utterly to shun them, as men execrable and wicked, no otherwise than they would chew the Plague or Pestilence.

Aventinus

Priests.Ex Aventino
Annal Boscor
lib. 5.

By reason whereof ensued a mighty schism and afflic-tion among the Flock of Christ, such as lightly the like hath not been seen: For the Priests went against their Bishops, the People against the Priests, the Laity against the Clergy: Briefly, all ran together in heaps and in confusion. Men and Women, as every one was set upon mischiefe, wickedness, contention, and avarice, took thereby occasion, upon every light suspicion, to resist their Minister, to spoyl the goods of the Church. The vulgar People contemned the Priests which had married Wives, despised their Religion, and all things that they did, yea, and in many places would purge the place where they had been, with holy Water, and burnt their Tithes. Also such was the mischief of them, that they would take the holy Mysteries which those married Priests had consecrated, and cast them in the dirt, and tread them under their feet: For so then had Hildebrand taught them, that those were no Priests, neither that they were Sacraments which they did consecrate. So that by this occasion many false Prophets rose, seducing the People from the Truth of Christ by forged fables, and false miracles, and fained glosses, wresting the Scriptures as served best for their own purposes. Of whom few there were that kept any true chastity. Many could make glorious boasts and brags thereof; but the greatest part under the shew and pretence of honesty and pureness of life committed Incest, Fornication, Adultery, every where almost, and no punishment was for the same, &c.
Thus much out of Aventinus. lib. 5. Annal.

To this Testimony of Aventinus above mentioned we will also adjoin the record of Gebnilius a writer of this our later time, and one also of their own crew, who doth testify that in the time of the Emperour Henricus the fourth, Anno 1057. the number of twenty four Bishops, both in Germany, Spain, and in France, were married, with the Clergy also of their Dioceses.

Of the which Spanish Bishops we read also in Ildorus, which wrote more then six hundred years after Christ (And the place also cited in the Popes Distinctions) in his Book De Clericorum vita, how they ought either to lead an honest chaste life, or else to keep themselves within the band of Matrimony, &c. Whereby is declared the single life of Priests either to be then voluntary or else their marriage not to be refrained as yet by any law.

Moreover, such Calixtin Priests as be now a days, counting Priests marriage as a new devise, and not standing with ancient times, let them look upon the decree of Pope Symmachus, and answer thereof to the Gloss Diff. 81. where it is written: Let Priests be all refrained from the conversation of all Women, except it be their Mother, Sister, or their own Wife, &c. Where the Gloss in the margin giveth a Note, saying, Hic loquitur secundum antiqua tempora.

Thus if either the voice of Scripture might take place with these men that be so rigorous against Priests marriage: or if the examples of the Apostles might move them (whom Saint Ambrose witnesseth to have been all married, except only Paul and John) or else if the multitude of married Bishops and Priests might prevail with them, here might be rehearsed.

That Terentian was a married Priest, as witnesseth Hierome.

Spiridion Bishop of Cyprus had Wife and Children.

Hilarie Bishop of Poyters was also married.

Gregory Bishop of Nissa.

Gregory Bishop of Nazianzum.

Propper Bishop of Rhegium.

Cheremon Bishop of Nilus.

All these were married Bishops.

Of Polycrates and his seven Ancestors Bishops, and married Men, we spake before.

Epiphanius, Bishop of Constantinople in Iustinians time, was the more commended, because his Father and Ancestors before him were Priests and Bishops married.

Hierome saith, That in his time, Plurimi Sacerdotes habebant matrimonia; That is, Many Priests were then married Men.

Pope Damasus reciteth up a great number of Bishops of Rome which were Priests Sons; as.

Silverius, Anno 544.

Dionysius, about the year 622.

Adrianus the second, about the year 873.

Felix the third, about the year 474.

Hilarius.

Agapetus, Anno 534.

Gelasius, 484.

Bonifacius.

Theodorus, whose Father was Bishop of Hierusalem about the year 634.

Iohannes the tenth, Anno Domini 924.

Iohannes the thirteenth, the Son of Leo a Priest, about the year 984.

Richard Archdeacon of Conventry.

Henry Archdeacon of Huntington.

Volusianus Bishop of Carthage.

Thomas Archbishop of York, Son of Sampson Bishop of Worcester.

And how many other Bishops and Priests in other Countries, besides these Bishops of Rome, might be annexed to this Catalogue, if our leisure were such to make a whole beader of them all?

In the mean time the words of Sylvius Cardinal, and afterward Bishop of Rome, are not to be forgotten, which he wrote to a certain Friend of his, which after his Orders taken was disposed to marriage. To whom the foresaid Sylvius answereth again in these words following: Credimus te utrum in iusto consilio, cum nequeas contrahere, conjugium queris: quamvis id prius cogitandum fuerat, antea quam initiaveris sacri ordinis.

Sed non sumus Dei omnes qui futura prospicere valeamus. Quando huc venimus est, ut legesistere nequeas, melius est nubere quam iri, &c. That is, We believe that you in so doing follow no sinner Counsel, in that you chuse to be married, when otherwise you are not able to live chaste, Albeit this Counsel should have come into your Head before that you entred into Ecclesiastical Orders. But we are not all Gods to foresee before what shall happen hereafter. Now so much as the matter and case standeth so, that you are not able to resist the Law, better it is to marry than to burn, &c.

All the premises well considered, it shall suffice I trust, though no more were said, to prove that this general Law and prohibition of Priests marriage, pretended to be so ancient, is of no such great time nor long continuance of years as they make it, but rather to be a late devised Doctrine, gendered by the Monks, and grounded upon no Reason, Law, nor Scripture, but that certain, which be repiners against the Truth, do wrack and wrest a few places out of the Doctors, and two or three Councils for their pretended purpose. Whose objections and blind Cavillations, I, as professing here but to write stories, refer to the further discussion of Divines, in whose Books this matter is more at large to be fought and searched. In the mean season, so much as appertaineth to the searching of times and antiquity, and to the conservation of such Acts and Mounments as are beehoveful for the Church, I thought hereunto not unprofitable to be adjoined a certain Epistle learned and ancient, of Volusianus Bishop sometime of Carthage, tending to the defence of Priests lawfull wedlock, which Aneas Sylvius in volusianus, descriptio Germanie, also Ilyricus in Catal and Melan, lib. de Conjugio, do father upon Huldericus Bishop of Augusta, in the time of Pope Nicholas the second: but as I find it in an old written example sent by John Bale to Matthew Archbishop of Canterbury, as it is joynd in the large Book, so it beareth also the same title and name of Volusianus Bishop of Carthage; joyning also withal another Latine Epistle, which perhaps hath not been seen in Print before. The Copies of both which Epistles, as being pertinent to the purpose present, hereunder ensue in form as followeth.

The Epistle in Latin of Volusianus, or as some think of Huldericus Bishop of Augusta, to Pope Nicholas, against the forbidding of Priests Marriage.

Epistola Volusiani Carthaginensis Episcopi ad Nicolaum Romanorum Episcopum.

Hæc est rescriptio Volusiani Carthaginensis Episcopi, in qua Pater Nicolaus de continentia Clericorum, non iuste, sed impie nec canonice sed inclementer tradit, ita respondit.

Nicolaus Domino & Patri pervigili, sanctæ Romanæ Ecclesiæ Provisor, Volusianus solo nomine Episcopus, amorem ut filius, timorem ut servus.

Um tua, Pater & Domine, decreta super Clericorum continentia nuper mihi transmissa à discretionis in-venire aliena, timor me turbavit cum tristitia. Timor quidem propter hoc, quod dicitur Pastoris sententia, sive iusta sive iniusta, timenda est. Timebam enim in scriptura audire, qui vel iuste vix obediunt sententiæ, ne iniustam concalcantes liberi, merita, importabili Pastoris prævaricatione præcipite obligarent. Tristitia vero vel compassio, dum considerabam, qua ratione membra cavere possent, capite suo tam gravi morbo laborante. Quid enim gravius, quid totius Ecclesiæ compassione dignius, quam te summæ Sedis Pontificem, ad quem totius Ecclesiæ spectat examen, à sancta discretionis vel minimum exorbitare? Non parum quippe ab hac devias, cum Clericos, quos ad abstinentiam conjugii moneri debebas, ad hanc imperiosa quadam violentia cogi volebas. Nunquid enim merito communis omnium sapientium iudicio hæc est violentia, cum contra Evangelicam institutionem, ac sancti Spiritus dissolutionem, ad privata aliquis decreta cogitur exequenda?

Cum Ergo plurima veteris ac novi testamenti suppetant exempla, sanctam (ut nosti) discretionem docentia, tue rogo ne grave sit Paternitati, vel pauca ex pluribus huic paginae interseri. Dominus quidem in veteri lege Sacerdoti conjugium constituit, quod illi postmodum interdixisse non legitur. Sed idem in Evangelio loquitur; 1. Cor. 2. niarum amplexus non abhorre; ne morbi hujus asper-sione ad usque pessimum convalescant, nimium status

runt. Num illud Apostolicum, non quique suam habet tie, vel eum qui de continuanda in Domino virginitate prefixit.

ferventem, ut omnem, qui tibi manus vel ore votum faciens continentia posita debitor apparet, aut ad votum exequendum ex debito constrigat, aut ab omni Ordine Canonica Autoritate deponat: & ut hoc viriliter implere sufficias, me omnesque mei ordinis viri desictutores habeatis non pigros. Verum ut hujus voti neces-sario omnino finis esse cogendas, audi Apostolum dicen-tem ad Timotheum: Oportet (inquit) Episcopum irreprehensibilem esse, virum uxoris virum. Quam ententiam ne quis ad solam Ecclesiam vertet, subjungit;
Qui autem domui suae praefectus nescit, quomodo Ecclesiae Dei diligantur habeati? Similiter, inquit, Diaconi sunt viri uxoris viri, qui filius sui bene praefectus, & suis domibus. Hanc autem uxorem ad sacerdotem benedicendam esse, Sancti Sylvestri Papa decretis sic te sufficienter docuisse. Hic & hujusmodi Sanctae Scripturae sententias, regule Clericorum scriptor non immerito con-cordans ait; Clericus fit pudicus, aut certe unus mari-tum vinculo federatus. Ex quibus omnibus veraciter colligit quod Episcopus & Diaconus irreprehensibiles notantur, si in mulieribus multis avidentur. Si vero unam sibi obtentu religionis asineant, utraque, scilicet Episcopus & Diaconus sine graduum differentia, hac Canonice damnetur sententia: Episcopus aut Presbyter uxorem praeterquam nequam sibi obtentu religionis abici-at, si vero & egerit, excommunicetur: & si perseve-raverit, deiciatur. Sanctus quoque Augustinus, sanctae differentiae non in eis; Nullum (inquit) tam grave delictum facinus esse, qui admittendum sit, ut deiciatur pejus.

Legimus præterea in secundo Synodici Ecclesiæ sacre libro historicæ, quid cum Tripartiti Nicænæ hæc eadem velle sanctæ decreta, ut videlicet Episcopi, Presbyteri, Diaconi, præ consecrationem à propriis usibus vel omnino abstinere, vel gradum disponentes; largiens in medio Paphnutius (ex illis Martyribus) quos Maximus Imperator, oculis eorum dextris oculis & sinistris iuris incisis, damnauit; contradixit, dicentibus confessum nullum, ac lapsum esse, hinc, conuincum cum propria nuxæ; perquisique Concilio, ne talem ponerent legem, grauem afferens esse causam, que aut ipsi, aut eorum coniugibus oculo fornicationis existeret. Et hæc quidem Paphnutius, licet nuptiarum experti, exposuit; Synodusque ejus sententiam laudauit. & nihil ex hac parte sancitum; sed hoc in unicuiqueque voluntate, non in præcæditæ dimissi.

Sunt vero aliqui qui S. Gregorium suae fidei summi adjucores; quorum quidam temeritatem iusto, ignoran-tiam doleo. Ignorant enim, quod periculum huius heresis doctrinam ad S. Gregorium faciunt, condigno poeniten-

Nolite iudicare, ut non iudicemini. Inde Paulus dixit Tu quis es, qui iudicas alienum servum? si Dominus sustinere illum. Cesset ergo Sanctitas tua cogere, quos tantum deberet admonere; ne privato (quod absit) præcepto tam veteri quam novo contrarius inveniaris testamētamentum. Nam, ut ait Sanctus Augustinus ad Donatum, solum est quod in tua iustitia perime[n]sus, ne non pro lenitatis Christianæ consideratione, sed pro immanitate facinorosi credas correndum: Quod te per ipsum Christum ne facias obsecramus, si enim peccata commissa sunt, ut superius qui peccasse panitent. Ipsi etiam Augustinus Augustini volumus te recordari, quod ait, Nihil nocendi sit cupiditate, omnia consulendi charitate: & nihil fiat immaniter, & nihil inhumantur. Idem de eodem, et timore Christi, in nomine Christi exhortor, quicunque non habetis temporalia, habere non cupitis: quicunque habetis, in eis non præsumitis.

Dico autem, ne si ista habetis, dampnami; sed si in istis præsumitis, dampnami: si propter talia magni vobis videamini, si generis humani oblationem communem propter excellentem unitatem obliviscimini. Quod nimium poculum deservitis ex illo fonte Apostolicæ ban-deræ predicationis; Solutus es ab uxore, nisi quære uxorem; aligatus es uxori, nisi quæres solutionem? Ubi 1 Cor. 7.
& subdit, Qui habent uxorem, sint tanquam non habeant; & qui utuntur mundo, tanquam non utantur.
Idem dicit de vidua, Cui vult nubat, tantum in Domino.
Nubere in Domino est, nihil in contrahendo commix-tum deo Dominus præbebat, attendere. Incertus quoque Hieronymus ait, Nolite consilare in verbis mendacii, dicentes, 1 Tim. 4.
Templum Domini, Templum Domini, Templum Domini est. Quod Hieronymus exponit, Potest (inquit) & hoc illis virginibus convenire, quæ faciunt pudicitiam suam impudens vultu: præferunt castitatem, quam aliud habeat conscientia, & necant illius Apollolis definitionem de virgine, ut sit sancta corpore & spiritui. Quid enim prodest corporis pudicitia, immo confusio, si ceteras virtutes, quæ Prebicus Sermo describit, non habuerit? Quæ quidem, quia te aliquatenus habere videmus, & quia discretionem, licet in hac re negligamus, in aliis tamen vicia tua constitutionibus esse comitis conferatam te cuius corrumptum non desuperamus. Est ideo non quantæ possimus gravitate, istam licet gravissimam negligentiam corporis vel iudicamus. Quamquam enim secundum vocabula quæ usus obtrivit, sit Episcopatus Presbyterio maior: tamen Augustinus Hieronymo minus est, & à minori quilibet non est refugenda corruptio est; præsertim cum i qui corripitur, & contra vertitur, & pro hominibus niti invenitur. Neque enim (ut ait Sanctus Augustinus ad Bonifacium,) quorumlibet dissolutio-nis quamvis Catholicorum & leodanorum curam, velut Scripturæ Canonica habere debemus: ut non liceat nobis scripta bonorificia quia illis debetur, aliquid in eorum lapsu improbare acque respuere, si forte invenimus quod aliter [sensimus] quàm veritas habet, divino adiutorio vel ab alio intellecta vel à nobis. Quid autem Ma-ritatis magis contrarium, quam hoc, quod cum ipsa veritas de continentia loquens, non unus hominis, sed omnium planè (non excepto numero propositum continen-tiae) dicat; qui potest capere, capias; isti [nescius] unde instrigati dicant, Qui non potest capere, seriatim anæstheticæ.

Quid vero per homines fieri potest? Solitudo? quid divina maledictionis obligatus, quam cum aliqui, vel Episcopi, videlicet, vel Archiepiscopi, in praecipites sunt in libidinem, ut neque adulteria, neque incestus, neque masculorum (proh pudor!) turpissimos amplexus sciant abhorre? casu Clericorum conjugia sibi dicant fettere? aut ea non vera iustitia compassione, sed falsa justitiae designatione, non ut conserjos regem con-sultis, sed ut servos iubeant ac cogant abstinere? Ad cujus imperii, ne dicam Consilii, tam fatuorum, tamque turpium addunt [suggerentem, ut dicunt; bene] ut pluribus oculis implicari, quam apertè in hominum vultu

Illud quoque rogami eos attendere, quod dominus dicit de muliere; Qui sine peccato est vestrum, primus in eam lapidum mittat, quasi diceret; Si lex jubet, si Moses jubet, jubeo & ego, sed competentes legis ministros exigo. Attendentes quod adducitis, attendite quaso & quid estis: sed ipsam, ut ait Scriptura, perspexeris, nulli unquam legem detraheris. Significaverit autem nobis de quibusdam eorum quod tanta apud se intumescant elatione, ut grigen Domini, pro quo boni pastores animas non dubitant ponere, isti verberibus etiam absque ratione presumant laniare. Quorum sententiam Sane Gregorius nimium deploratis ait. Quid fiet de ovibus, quando pastores lupi sumi? Sed qui vincitur, nisi qui sevit? Quis vero persecutorem judicabit, nisi qui dorsum suum ad flagellum patienter ministravit? Opera precium est ante, ut audiat, quod fructus tantum ecclesie Dei inducant scandalum, tantum clerici deprecantur, & ab ipsis Episcopis, & ab eorum infidelibus parantur. Nec enim eos infideles dicere dubitaverim, de quibus Paulus Apostolus dicit ad Timotheum; Quia in novissimis temporibus discedent quidam à fide, attendentes spiritibus erroris, & doctrinis demoniorum, in hypocrisis loquentium mendacium, & convitiantium habentium conscientiam, prohibentium numero.

Hic est autem, si diligenter inspicatur totius eorum manipulus xianorum, totius eventus infamia, ut dum clerici licetianus mulieris consortia, Pharisaeo devoti, quod absit, furore, relinquere cogantur, fornicatores, & adulteri, & aliorum pravitatum turpissimi ministri cum ipsis efficiantur. Qui hanc in ecclesia Dei heresim sicut ceteros ceterorum machinantur, ut videlicet illud impleretur quod Psalmista eis, utpote doctoribus erroris, taliter imprecatur; Obsecurentur oculi eorum ne videant, &c. Quia ergo nemo, à Apostolice, ignorat, quod si tu per tui decreti sententiam, tantam futuram esse pestilentiam solite discretionis claritate perspexisses, nunquam quorumlibet tam pravorum suggestionibus concessisses: debita tibi subjectionis fidelitate consulas, ut vel nunc ad tanti scandali ab Ecclesia Dei propugnationem evigiles; & quod noster discretionis disciplina, Pharisaeam ab oculis Dei exitus doctrinam, ne scilicet unica Sunamitis, adulterini diutius usa meritis, gentem sanctam, regale sacerdotium, per irrecuperabile à sponso, Christo videlicet, avellat avortum: dum nemo sine castitatis, non tantum in virginali flore, sed etiam in conjugalibus habitibus conjugatione, visurus sit dominum nostrum; qui cum Deo patre & spiritu sancto vivit & regnat per omnia secula seculorum, Amen.

As touching the antiquity of this Epistle above prefixed, it appeareth by the Copy which I have seen, and received of the above named Matthew Archbishop of Canterbury, to be of an old and ancient writing, both by the form of the Characters, and by the wearing of the Parchment, almost consumed by length of years and time.

And as concerning the authors thereof, the superscription (if it be true) plainly declareth it to be the Epistle of Volusianus Bishop of Carthage. Albeit, heretofore it hath commonly been taken and alleged by the name of Huldéricus Bishop of Augusta, and partly appeareth to be so, both by the Testimony of Aeneas Silvius, in Descriptione Germaniae, who in the said treatise affirmeth that Huldéricus, Bishop of Augusta, did constantly resist the Pope, abolishing the Marriage of Priests, &c. and also by the record of Illiricus, testifying that the said Epistle not only remaineth yet to this day in old Monuments, but also that he himself did see two exemplars of the same, both pretending the name of the said

Huldéricus to be the Author, notwithstanding this Copy here above prefixed beareth the Title not of Huldéricus Bishop of Augusta, but of Volusianus Bishop of Carthage in Africa, as you may see by the words of the preamble, laying, This is the rescript of Volusianus Bishop of Carthage, unto Pope Nicholas, concerning Priests not to be restrained from lawful Marriage, &c.

Furthermore, which Pope Nicholas, this was to whom these Epistles were written, it is not plainly shewed in the same, but that by probable conjecture it may be guessed rather to be Pope Nicholas the second, for so much as in his time Priests Marriage began somewhat earnestly to be called in, more than at other times before.

Now as touching the English of this Latin Epistle above exhibited, sofar as much as the same is before inserted, we will refer the reader unto the same place. Wherein if the translation of the English do shew any thing from the Latin here above prefixed, the cause was for that the Latin Copy which here we follow, came not before to our hands.

Another Epistle of the said Volusianus, concerning Marriage not to be restrained from Priests and Ministers of the Church.

Um sub liberi arbitrii potestate creati sumus, & non sub lege sed sub gratia, qualiter creati sumus vivamus. Vos qui continentis legem nobis invitis imponitis, liberi arbitrii nos potestate privatis. Quod nolumus velle, & quod volumus nolle cogendo imperatis & imperando cogitis; & legis vinculo, à quo ipsa gratia nos in libertatem liberati sumus, alligare, & spiritum servitutis iterum in timore accipere, ipsamque gratiam, sine qua nihil facere possumus, omnino evacuare statuitis ita ut (sicut ait Apostolus) ipsa gratia jam non sit gratia, et Deum non sit Dei donum; Et non ex Deo, sed ex homine, nec ex vocante, sed ex operante; eundem Apostolus dicat, Quia non est volentis neque currentis, sed Dei misericordia.

Nam cum sint tria principalia & quasi effectiva, per que omnis anima humana capax et compos rationis, quicquid spiritualis boni apprehendere et percipere potest, apprehendit et percipit, et sine quibus nihil profici capere possit; liberum arbitrium videlicet, Mandatum, et gratia (libero enim arbitrio bona à malis discernimus atque eligimus; mandato ad omnia faciendi provocamur ac incitamus; gratia promovemur et adjuviamur, liberum tamen gratia Domini et Magistris et quasi prepotens imperatrix et Regina est, ad cujus nutum cetera pendunt et ab ea vim et efficaciam expectant, et sine illa nihil praevalent, sed quasi stola et mortua, sicut materia sine forma, jacens et subsacens. Loco enim materia, secundum proportionem aliquam, liberum arbitrium possumus accipere non incongruè; Gratiam vero, loco formae; mandatum autem, quod medium est quasi instrumentum, ad utrumque respicere, quo summus artifex Dominus liberum arbitrium quasi solidam materiam ducit et promoveat, et formam gratiae illi componat. Et sicut materia sine forma est horrida et deformis: ita liberum arbitrium est horridum et deformis sine gratia superveniente, se movente et promovente, mandato medio quasi instrumentum (ut diximus) interveniente. Quod ergo forma in materia, hoc in libero arbitrio per quandam similitudinem est gratia: et quod materia sub forma, hoc idem est libera voluntas sub gratia. Et item quod est instrumentum ipsarum, hoc est mandatum ad utrumque istorum. Instrumentum namque sordidam materiam, et horridam atque asperam, obscuram, et quasi caecam emaculat et excolit, et claram, planam, ac lucidam, formam superveniente, reddit. Sic et mandatum, liberum arbitrium sordidum, nudum, horridum, asperum et incultum, obscurum et caecum, nudum, comit, lenit, et excolit, lucidat, et illuminat; sicut propheta dicit; preceptum Domini lucidum, illuminans oculos, splendore gratiae superveniente. Et sicut materia et instrumentum sine forma nihil valent, ita libera voluntas et mandatum sine gratia nihil virtutis habent. Quid enim liberum arbitrium vel mandatum sine gratia praeveniente et subsequente potest? Gratia namque ad liberum arbitrium mandatum quasi nuntium ac famulum mitti: mandatum liberum arbitrium provocat atque quasi sopitum excitat, ut ad bona facienda evigilet & exurgat, utique ei, quam peragere debeat, quasi ceco deducendo demonstrat. Quorum utrumque si à gratia deseritur, nihil omnino per se potest. Quod si conatur, deficit, non proficit, neque etiam efficit, vel perficit. Si præsumit, non assumit, sed potius totam operam & laborem frustra consumit. Cum enim mandatum, seu per hominem sive per Angelum mittitur, & etiam liberum arbitrium seu humano seu Angelico mandati nuntio commovetur, provocatur, & infruitur, nisi divina gratia comitetur, præveniat, & subsequatur, quid valebit? Quid nempe homini in paradisi posito mandatum quod audivit; Ex omni ligno paradisi comede, de ligno vero scientia boni & mali ne comedas? Nihil profus ad salutem, sed potius ad condemnationem. Quare? Quia gratia salvatrix & auxiliatrix deitur, quam ille, in ipsa suis viribus suis, contempsit. Aut quid valuit Israelitico populo in Eremo constituto, mandatum? Legit quod per Moysen acceptis, cui obediit neglexit? Aut quid profuit illi qui Dominum se qui suo arbitrio, & non illius vocatione præsumit dicens; Domine, sequar te quocunque ieris. Ex multis alijs divinis Scriptura locis novi & veteris Testamenti demonstrari potest quid neque mandatum, neque liberum arbitrium per se quicquam valet, nisi divina gratia præveniendo & subsequendo adjuvet. Cum igitur continentia bonum, imò omne bonum sit solius divine gratie donum, nec per mandatum, nec per liberum arbitrium comprehendatur, errant & frustra laborant qui se suis viribus illud apprehendere tentant. Illi etiam magis errant qui hoc in vitiis & nolentibus imperant, & non spontaneè sed coactè in Sacramentum Dei dona offerre suadent, nescientes aut obliti illius quod Dominus Moysi, & Moyses Domino præcepit dicens; Separate apud vos primitias Domino, quicquid voluntarius; ut bono animo offerat eas Domino. Quid est separare apud vos primitias Domino, nisi studiosa cogitatione & meditatione in cordibus nostris tractare, & cum dyabolo deponere & dividere, quid Domino de thesauro cordis nostri valeamus offerre? Si enim reticere offeras & non rectè divides, peccasti. Et quid est prono animo offerre, nisi quod ait Psalmista; Voluntariè sacrificabo tibi: Et Apostolus, Non ex tristitia aut necessitate; Hilariter datorem diligit Deus. Et Salomon; Bono animo gloriam reddo Domino, & in omni dato bilarem fac vul-tum tuum, & in exultatione sanctifica decimas tuas, & in bono oculo facito ad inventionem manuum tuarum. Et Apostolus Iacobus; Non amat Dominus (inquit) coacta servitia. Et, maledictus qui opus Domini facit negligenter; (id est) non curiose, neque voluntariè. Sicut nos ergo Dominus invitit aliquid offerre non jubet: ita vos invitos aliquos offerre aliquid cogere prohibet per eundem Moysen ubi ait; Ne facias Calumniam proximo tuo, nec vi opprimas eum. Calumniam proximo facere, est eum non compatiendo & miserando corrigere de peccato; sed designando & exprobando & detrahendo arguere & accusare, & non in spiritu lenitatis instruere, sed in spiritu asperitatis & austeritatis destruere, cum Apostolus dicat; si preoccupatus fueris homo in aliquo delicto, vos qui spirituales estis instruere huiusmodi in spiritu lenitatis, considerans teipsum ne & tu teneas. Vi opprimere proximum, est ultra vires suas aliquid exigere, & onus quod portare non potest imponere, imponitibus fortassis importabile, cum Dominus de Pharisæo ad Discipulos loquens, hoc eis prohibent dicens; Super Cathedram Moysi sedent Scribæ & Pharisæi, &c. Et Apostolus Petrus, Pœnite (inquit) qui in vobis est, gregem Domini, providenter, non coactè sed, penitentes, secundum Dominum; neque turpis lucri gratia sed voluntariè; neque dominantes in Clero, sed forma estote gregi ex animo. Hic Pastor Pastorem, Princeps Apostolorum, quid ceteri Pastores vel Apostoli debeant facere, quomodo gregem Domini sibi credunt tractare, aperte, et piè demonstrat atque insinuat, et quantum sollicitudinem et compassionem erga subditos habere oporteat, eis inculcat: et omnem potestatem tyrannicæ dominationis vel ambitum cupiditatis, quam quidam in subditis sibi exercent, ab eorum cordibus procul abluunt, et ex n. d. m. m. m. ad paucos subditorum debere, neque eis aliud, ipso potentia imperare, vel de pietatis admonere et obsecrare iuxta vires universales, quæque secundum Dominum, non secundum suæ volun-

tatis arbitrium vel potestatis imperium: et illis formam esse gregi debere, ut quid alijs imperant, ipsi priores faciant, & non minus exemplis, quam verbo proficiant. Ex animo (inquit) non ex imperio; ex voluntate, non coactione; ex charitate, non ex cupiditate. Sunt enim plerique qui zelo cupiditatis, non charitatis accensi alijs imperant quod implere non valent; et, dum lucrum animarum querere se simulant, lucrum potius terrenum captant. Quod bene Baalam Prophetia exprimit, qui Prophetia donum et benedicendi gratiam, quam Divinitus acceperat, non ad utilitatem aliorum, sed ad usum suæ cupiditatis vertit; et sicut nonnulli qui dum alios corrigunt, hoc zelo Dei facere se ostentant, et dum meliores alijs se videri volunt, hoc præsumptione quadam et temeritate agunt, et ideo in ipso præsumptionis suæ et temeritatis actu corruunt. De quibus dicit Apostolus: Qui zelum Dei habent sed non secundum scientiam. Zelum Dei secundum est scientiam habere, provide et consulte in divinis rebus aliquid agere. Quorum profectio Oza similitudinem gerit, Qui dum Arcam Domini, calcitrantibus bobus qui eam portabant, inclinatum parum per erigere voluit, mox dum ad eam manum tendens, mortuus cecidit. Arcam Domini calcitrantibus bobus inclinari, est legem Domini quam ipsi sacerdotes portare et tenere debent, ab eis non observantem contradicere, et quasi à recto statu in diversam partem flecti, quam Oza, qui adiutor Dei interpretatur, erigere tentat: quia sunt quidam Prælati, qui dum sacramento ordinem, ipsam legem divinam maligno excessu vel leviter à sua rectitudinis via quasi inclinare et in aliam partem flectere vident, eam inclinationem castigare et corrigere magis virtutis suæ ostentationem quam divina emulatione præsumunt; et quia hoc inconculse agunt, dum adiutores Dei videri appetunt, plerumque mortaliter in deterius cadunt. Sunt et alij qui nullam infirmitatis humane considerationem, nec ullam misericordie respectum et compassionis affectionem habent, et cum Apostolo dicere nescientes: Quis infirmatur et ego non infirmor? Dum se subditis, non conditione qua parat, sed auctoritate qua superiores sunt, conferunt, atque magistri vident, et plus præse quam prodesse cupiunt, illorum infirmitatem vi dominationis premunt, et eos sibi obedire compellunt. Quod nimirum illo facto figuratur, quod de Simone Cyrenæo in Evangelio legitur, quem angariaverunt persecutores Domini ut tollerent crucem ejus. Cujus etiam nomen bene figuræ convenienter aptatur. Simo namque interpretatur obedientem. Simo vero, id est, obediens; crucem Domini portare angariatur, cum subiectus quæ; à suis magistris vi dominationis vel auctoritatis, vel Anathematizati preliis, et eis obedire compulsi, crucem continentia patienter inviti: ipsam crucem quam portant, non amant, quia ipsam plus ad perniciem suam, quam ad salutem portant, nec ipsa cruce peccato moriuntur, sed potius ipsi peccato vivificantur: nam et alia peccata graviora exinde oriuntur. Inhibito enim naturali unius mulieris conjugio, surrepit non naturalis, sed contra naturam execrabilis Sodomitica fornicatio: surrepit illicita et damnable, non legitima sed contra legem aliena uxoris contaminatio, nec non etiam et meretricibus nefanda pollutio: quin etiam abominabilis omnibus parentalibus incestus vel aliarum multarum immunditiarum vel libidinum à Diabolo inventarum id genus, in quibus humana infirmitas periclitatur. Unde Lot de Sodomitico incendio angelo Domini educte creptus, et Uxor consortio viduatus, dum sit infirmitatis confusus ad montana non ausus est Angelo montem ascendere, ipse in Segor, parva civitate que juxta erat, elegit habitare, ipso Angelo præcipiente et sic ad eum loquente, Salva animam tuam, non respice post tergum, sed in monte salvum te fac, ne et tu simul pereas. Cui dicit Lot, Quæso Domine mi, quia invenisti servum tuum gratiam coram te ut salvares me: Non possum in monte salvari, ne forte apprehendant me malum et moriar. Est Civitas juxta hic ad quam possum fugere parvus, et salvabor in ea. Quid est quod Lot à Sodomis fugiens? præcipiente Angelo ut in monte salvaretur, montem affcendit, quia ibi mori timebat, nescit, sed Segor parvam caput civitatem juxta montem possum, ut in ea salvaretur ad habitandum elegit, nisi quicunque fidelium Sodomitica libidinis incendium et periculum evadere cupiens, dum celsitudinem virginalem non valet, et castitatis vitalis timet ascendere ne in ea periclitetur, ad conjugalem colam virum esse & cum viro non esse, neque peccatum est vel cum uxore esse, vel cum viro esse, mox subiungit dicens; Estimo ergo bonum esse propter instantem necessitatem; quoniam bonum est boni esse sic, &c.

Quid est propter instantem necessitatem? Quae est necessitas instantis, nisi infirmitas praesens? Vel necessitas instantis, est necessitas urgens & cogens praesens necessitas extiterit vel cogerit. Vel instantem necessitatem dicit illius temporis necessitatem & angustiam, quae tunc extabat & tum coegit ut talia scriberet, & eis sic indulgeret, causa scilicet vitanda fornicationis quae tunc temporis acciderat, & aliarum multarum fornicationum supradictarum quae accidere possent. Pro qua fornicatione hoc incepit, & sibi scribentibus rescriptis, & Corinthiis in superioribus huius Epistolae vehementer inuoluit, in hac verba proripit; Quid vultis? In virga veniam ad vos, an in charitate & spiritu mansuetudinis? Omnino audiat inter vos fornicatio, & talis fornicatio qualis nec inter gentes, ita ut uxorem patris sui quis habeat. Propter hanc ergo necessitatem vitanda fornicationis dico bonum esse homini sic esse, ut si continere non potest, nubat, vel uxorem accipiat. Quod exponendo subiungit; Aliquis est uxori? Noli querere solutionem. Soluitur ab uxore? Noli querere uxorem. Si autem acceperis uxorem, non peccasti: & si nupseris virgo non peccauit. Et hic iterum non imperando sed invitando & compatiendo se dixisse ostendit; Ego autem vobis parco, id est, infirmitati vestra cedo. Hoc itaque in potestate voluntatis unuscuiusque posuit utrum vellet eligere; nec se dicit cuiquam violentiam inferre, nec laqueum quocumque astringat & teneat, inire; consequenter subiungens, porro, hoc ad utilitatem vestram dico non ut laqueum vobis iniciam, sed ad id quod honestum est, & quod facultatem praebet Dominum obsecrandi. Hoc dicit illis quos ad continentiam superius hortatus fuerat, & qui consortio uxoriae conjunctionis impediti, vel solliciti esse volebant. Alijs vero ita dicit; Si quis autem turpem videri se existimat super virginem suam, quod sit supradicta, & ita oportet fieri; quod vult, faciat: non peccat si nubat. Et iterum, utrumque bonum esse, unum tamen melius esse concludendo confirmat. Legitur qui matrimonio coniungit virginem suam, bene facit, & qui non coniungit melius facit.

Quod concordatur superiori sententiae utriusque scilicet datae, in qua ait; Si acceperis uxorem non peccasti, & si nupserit virgo non peccauit. Si ergo virum acceperis uxorem, & virginem nubere, iuxta Apostolum, peccatum non est, & beatitudinem non auferit sed affert; & quia uterque bene facit, idem ambo beati: nec qui uxorem propter infirmitatem habemus, quid habendo peccamus? Aut si Apostolus unicuique propter fornicationem suam suam habere indulget & permittit, cur nos qui ex eadem massa sumus, & carnem peccati ex carne adde peccatricem traximus, & continere non possumus, propter eandem causam & secundum eandem indulgentiam uxores habere non permittitur, & habitas dimittere angustiamur? Aut itaque uxores nobis habere imitantes Apostolum permittit, aut nos ex eadem massa non esse docet, & aut nobis eandem indulgentiam, & permissionem non esse concessam ab Apostolo demonstrat. Quod opinor dicitur esse, quia hac indulgentia non fuit data ab Apostolo Clericis aut alijis nostri ordinis, sed solis Laicis. Quod ex verbis Apostoli, vel ex circumstantia Epistolae non potest defendi, cum nulla ibi certa distinctio vel denominatio habeatur personarum vel graduum seu professionum, nec ipse dixerit seu nominibus seu officiis, vel qui sibi scripserunt, vel de quibus, vel quibus ipse scribebat, nisi tantum generaliter omni Ecclesia Corinthiorum, sicut ipse in principio huius Epistolae his verbis demonstrat; Paulus vocatus Apostolus Christi Jesu per voluntatem Dei & Sathane. Frater Ecclesiae Dei quae est Corinthi, sanctificationis in Christo Jesu, vocatus sanctus, cum omnibus qui invocant nomen Domini. (Et post nonnulla alia quae compendij causa hic reijcimus, haud ita multum ad rem attinentia, subiungit mox ad hunc modum: Infirmitatem nostram vos considerare, ac misereri rogamus, & ne ei violentiam inferatis suppliciter imploramus. Nam sicut iam satis superius inculcavimus vobis, nullus ad continentiam inuitus debet compelli. Neque hoc genus virtutis ulli per Legem Dei necessario imperatum est, sed voluntaria

Unde gratia distinctionis non Moyses femoralibus vestire Aaron & filios eius iubetur, ut de prioribus dicitur: vestire ut Aaron fratrem tuum & filios eius cum eo: sed facies (inquit) femoralia linea ut operiant carnem turpitudinis sue. Ipsi (inquit) operiant carnem turpitudinis sue, tu femoralia Pontifici & filiis eius facies; tu castitatis regulam docebis; tu abstinendum ab uxore complexu eis qui Sacerdotio functuri sunt, intimabis; nulli tamen violentum huiusmodi continentiae iugum imponens; sed quicumque Sacerdotes fieri ac ministerio Altaris servare volunt, ipsi sua sponte uxori servi esse desistant. Quod ubi perferimus, argus suscepto semel continentiae proposito, ministros se Sanctuarii atque Altaris fore consenserint, aderit divina gratia, qua velut ceteris illis habitum Sacerdotibus congruum imponens, quomodo vivere vel docere debeant, abundanter insinuat. Qui sensu subsequenter quoque Domini verbis affirmatur, quibus post pauca subiungit; Cumque laveris partem cum filii aqua, induet Aaron vestimentis suis, id est, linea & tunica, & superhumerali, & rationali, quod fringes balteo, & pones tiaram, & oleum unctionis fundes super caput eius, atque hoc ritu consecrabitur. Filios quoque illius applicabis & induet tunicis lineis, cingisque Aaron Balteo, scilicet & liberos eius & imponens eis Mitras, eruntque Sacerdotes mei in religione perpetui. Namque hic de femoralibus a Mose accipiendis precipitur. Unde liquido constat, quod si hoc genere vestimenti ipsi prius Aaron ac filii eius induerant, & sic ad manus Mosis lavandi, induendi, ungendi, & consecrandi instrabant. Hic aperte ostenditur & docetur, nullis continentiae iugum invito imponendum, sed a Deo prompta & devota voluntate accipiendum. Quod & Dionysius Areopagita theosophus, id est, Deus sapiens, Pauli Apostoli Discipulus, & ab eo Atheniensium Archiepiscopus ordinatus, in Epistola quadam ad Pymtum Gnatiorum Episcopum missa, in qua plurima de nuptiis & castitate commemorat, sicut Ecclesiastica refert historia, monet, & precatur illum ne gravia onera discipulorum cervicibus imponat, neve fratribus necessitatem compulsae castitatis inducat, in qua nonnullorum periclitatur infirmitas. Atque Pymtus Dionysio rescriptis sententiam se consilii melioris, quod ipse dabat, amplecti. Hoc itidem & Paphnutius vir divinus atque castissimus, cum in Niceno Concilio (ut in Tripartita historia invenimus) patres qui ibi aderant, hoc interdicere Sacerdotibus voluissent, in medium eorum zelo humane infirmitatis commotus & consensu exurgens, hoc ne facerent rogavit, quin potius in voluntate unusquisque poneret exoravit, ne forte per hoc locum darent & occasionem adulterio & fornicationi. Hac namque cautela sancti viri in religione utebantur, ut cum de instructione & edificatione subditorum aliquid agerent, & eos ad meliorem vitam de divinis Praeceptis commoveri facerent, cum patientia & mansuetudine potius obedienda praeberent, quam cum potentia & austeritate imperarent, nullumque inviolatum sibi obsequium compellerent. Quorum vos exempla sequentes, qui eorum loca tenetis & nomen, ne nobis infirmis importabilem sarcinam quasumus imponatis, ne imprecatione dominica cum Pharisaeis & legisperitis suscipiamini, in qua ait: Vae vobis legisperitis, qui oneratis homines oneribus quos non possunt portare, & ipsi uno digito vestro ea non tangitis. Et ne clamor filiorum Israel ascendat ad Dominum propter duritiam eorum qui praesens operibus. Neque vos voleitis facere eunuchos qui de utero matris sic nati sunt, vel eos eunuchos qui violenter ab hominibus facti sunt, sed potius eos eunuchos, qui seipsos sua sponte eunuchizaverunt propter regnum caelorum: neve sacris Ordinibus & divino Mysterio, propter nos tantum, calumniam faciatis vel inferatis, qui propter nostram vitam improbam illud hominibus contemptibile facitis, dum eis hic a nobis illud audiant & percipiant, prohibitis: ac per hoc vitam improbam & infamam & odorem nostrum coram Pharaone & servis eius facere facitis. Quod vos non recte, si dici liceat (ne melle accipiatis) videretur nobis facere, & contra divinam auctoritatem & Canonice regulam hoc quod facitis esse: cum Dominus per legislatorem dicat; Turpi-
- tudinem matris tuae non reveles, & ignominiam ejus ne discoperias. Mater nostra Ecclesia est; Filiusque matris quique fidelium sunt. Cujus tamen mater appellatio maxima in Sacerdotibus est. Nam ipsi generant fideles & verbo predicationis & Sacramento baptismatis. An non mater erat quae dicebat; Filii mei quos iterum parturio? Turpido ergo & ignominia matris Galat. 4: nostrae reprehensibilis est actio Sacerdotalis vita. Qua turpido tunc revelatur, & ignominia discoperitur, cum Sacerdotalis vita publice infamatur. Quod vos nimirum facitis, qui fragilitatem nostram, quasi baculum latentem & coepertam (quia eam nullus ita cognoverat) baculis dissamatis, & propter eam divina mysteria vel ministeria aspernanda solcitis. Quasi ad ea pertinet pollutio aliena, & ea pollutat & commaculat immunditia nostra, cum Psalmogr. dicat, Lex Domini immaculata. aut quasi illa nostra contagione contaminantur, qui ea ex nostro ore & ex nostro officio adipiscuntur. Quod si, ut dicitis, esset, nequaquam Discipulus & turbis de Pharisaeis Dominus praeceperet; Omnia quaecumque dixerint vobis, servate & facite. Et rursum, si ita esset, nequaquam Dominus Judam, quem scire esse sciebat & proditorem suum futurum, cum discipulis aliis ad predicandum mitteret, neque potestatem signa faciendi & sanitatis donandi, neque ad Communionem Sacramentis canae eum admitteret. Et si immunditia nostra divina Mysteria & Ministeria & eorum capacitas & auditoris inficeret & deterioraret, nequaquam Dominus leprosum quem munderat, tangeret, neque ei osculum daret, & nequaquam cum Simone alio Leproso manducaret, & nequaquam a Maria peccatrice pedes suos oscularet, & lacrymis lavaret, & capillis tergi, & caput suum ungi permitteret. Hinc sacrorum Canonum veneranda auctoritas laxavit, nullum per iniquum tradita Sacramenti gratia minus firma videatur. Nam & baptismum (quod procul sit ab Ecclesia) sive ab adultero, sive a fure datum fuerit, ad percipiendam non minus pervenit salubritas. Quod vos illa quae sonant per columbam: Omnia malitiam vel maculam humanae pollutionis excludit, qua declaratur ac dicitur; Mut. 1: Hic est qui baptizavit, &c. Nam si visibilis solus istius radii cum per loca sedatissima transiunt, nulla contactus iniquatione maculantur; multo magis virtus illius qui istum visibilem solem fecit, nulla mysterii dignitate constringitur. Quicquid ergo ad hominum profectum quilibet in Ecclesia minister pro officio suo videtur operari, hoc totum continens implendo divinitus effectum. Ita ille, per quem Christus loquitur, Paulus affirmat, Ego plantavi, Apollo rigavit; sed Deus incrementum dedit. A Deo non queritur quis vel qualis praedicet, sed sic praedicet, ut invidios etiam bene de Christo predicare confirmet. Tanta est namque divina potentia gratia, ut per malos acquirat bonos, & per reprobos & improbos acquirat & colligat probos. His itaque auctoritatibus & aliis praedictis rationibus persuadi debetis, neque nos ad divini officii celebrationem arceret, neque illos, quorum nihil interest, ab ejus communione suspendere. Quod si mali sumus, nobis ipsi sumus, & plus nobis quam aliis nocemus; & quos fortasse malos conspiciatis, quid boni interius habeant ignoratis. Sunt enim plerique quos de inconvenientia iudicatis, qui continentiores sunt quam illi quos de continentia glorificatis. Qui habemus uxores, juxta Apostolum tanquam non habemus. Quam videlicet continentiam qua nobis non preest dare, grate nobiscum & pro nobis ut ille nobis donet, cuius hoc donum nobiscum esse, & sine quo nemo poterit continens esse. Alter enim illam habere non possumus nisi ex totis precordis illum oramus cuius hoc donum esse cognoscimus. Et hoc ipsum (inquit Salomon) Sap. 6: est sapientia, scire cuius hoc donum est, & quoniam super hoc nihil est.

FOrasmuch as we are created under the Power of Free-will, and not under the Law but under Grace, let us solve as we are created. You, which lay upon us the Law of Contineny against our will, to deprive us of the liberty of Free-will. You command us, and by commanding compel us to will that we would not, and not to will that we would do. You bind us to the Law, from the which by Grace we are made free: and you constrain us to receive the Spirit of Bondage again to fear; and go about to make the Grace of God of no effect, without the which we can do nothing; so that, as the Apostle saith, Grace is no grace, and the gift of God is not the gift of God; and not of God, but of man; not of him that calleth, but of him that worketh: whereas the Apostle saith, It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy.

And whereas there be three principal and effectual things, whereby every human Soul, indued with reason, apprehendeth and perceiveth whatsoever spiritual thing it is able to apprehend and perceive, and without the which it can perceive nothing; the which three things be these; to wit, Free-will, the Commandment, and Grace, (for by Free-will we discern and chooseth the good from the evil: By the Commandment we are provoked and stirred up to do all things: By Grace we are furthered and holpen to perform the same) yet of all these, Grace is the Lady and Mistress, and as a mighty Empress and Queen, upon whose beck the other do wait and give attendance, receiving of her both their strength and efficacy, and without her can do nothing, but remain as things of themselves dull and dead, much like as amongst the Philosophers their Materia without Forma being thereto adjoynd.

For in the stead of Materia, we may after a manner not unfully place Free-will; and in the place of Forma we may set Grace, and the Commandment (which is the mean between them both, as a certain Instrument) to have respect to both; whereby the principal Artificer, which is God, furthereth and setteth forward Free-will as a rude dull matter, applieth to it his Grace as the form thereof. And like as the said Materia without Forma is rude and shapeless, so Free-will is a thing rude and deform, if it be not holpen with Grace coming therunto, to move it and to further it, the Commandment coming as a mean between them both, in the stead of the instrumental Cause, as is before said. Therefore like as Forma is in respect of Materia, the like resemblance beareth Free-will in respect of Grace. And again, as Materia is in respect of Forma, the same also is Free-will in respect of Grace. And as the Instrument serveth between the aforesaid Materia and Forma, so doth the Commandment coming and working upon the said Materia being of it self ugly, rugged, and a thing without all shape and fashion, doth form it, shape, and polish it, and maketh it handfome, sightly, lightfome, bright and clear; even so likewise the Commandment coming and working upon Free-will, being of it self a thing rude, gross, unshapen and deformed, blind and obscure, doth clarify it, deck it, adorn it, beautifie and enlighten it through the brightness of Grace coming unto it, according to the saying of the Prophet, The Commandment of the Lord is bright and clear, giving sight unto the eyes.

And as the Matter and the Instrument without the Form can do nothing, even so Free-will and Commandment without Grace have no power to work. For what can either Free-will or the Commandment do, except they be holpen with Grace, both going before and following? For Grace fendeth the Commandment as a Messenger and Minister to Free-will; the Commandment provoketh Free-will and stirreth it up, as out of a sleep to do good works, and leadeth it as a blind man by the hand, teaching him the way wherein to go. Which both, if they be destitute of Grace, are able of themselves to do nothing. And if they begin, yet they proceed not, neither do they perform or accomplish any thing; and if they presume, it prospereth not, and is but labour lost. For where the Commandment cometh, either by Man or by an Angel, and also where Free-will is moved, provoked, and informed either by the motion of Man or Angel, yet unless Gods Grace go withal, preventing and following the same, what is it able to do? For when Man was put in Paradise, what availed him the Commandment which he heard, Thou shalt eat of every Tree of Paradise, but only of the Tree of Knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat. Which Commandment wrought not to his salvation, but to his condemnation. And why? because Grace, that faweth and helpeth, was wanting, which he presuming unjustly upon his own strength despised. Or what did the Commandment of the Law, given by Moses, profit the people of Israel in the Wilderness, which Law they refused to obey? Or what profit wrought it to him which presumed to follow the Lord of his own free will, and not of the Lords calling, saying unto him, Lord, I will follow thee. Whitherforever thou goest. By these, and many other places of holy Scripture, both of the Old and New Testament, it may be proved that neither the Commandment nor Free-will have power to work of themselves, unless they be holpen by Gods Grace preventing and following them.

Seeing therefore the gift of Contineny; as all other gifts be, is the gift only of Gods Grace, and cometh not by the Commandment nor by Free-will; they err therefore, and strive in vain, which labour to obtain it by their own power: And much more they also do err, which by force constrain men against their will therunto, moving them to offer gifts into the Sanctuary of God, not of their own accord, but by coercion, either not knowing, or else not remembering the saying of the Lord to Moses, Separate amongst you the first fruits unto the Lord, and let every man of his own voluntary and willing mind come and offer the same unto the Lord. What is this, to separate with you the first fruits to the Lord, but only to weigh and consider diligently in your hearts, and with discretion to lay down and separate unto the Lord, what we ought to present unto him out of the treasure of our heart? for if thou offer rightly, and dost not rightly divide, thou sinnest. And what is it to offer with a willing and ready mind, but as the Psalmist saith, I will offer Sacrifice unto thee willingly and cheerfully: And the Apostle 2 Cor. 9. saith, Not grudgingly or of necessity: For God loveth a cheerful giver. And Solomon saith, Give the Lord his glory with a good and free heart, and in every gift thou givest, shew a joyful countenance, and sanctifie thy thytes with gladness: and with a cheerful eye do all that thou takest in hand. And the Apostle 1 James saith, The Lord loveth not constrained service. And cursed be he that doth the work of the Lord negligently; that is, not carefully, and with a willing mind.

Wherefore, as the Lord willeth us not to offer any thing to him against our wills; so doth he forbid us to compel any man to offer any thing against their wills by the forced Moses, where he saith, Thou shalt not do thy Neighbour wrong, neither oppress him with violence. To do wrong to thy Neighbour, is to correct him for his sin, not of any compassion or mercy towards him, but to reprove him and to judge him, in disdain, upbraiding and rebuking him; not to inform him in the spirit of severity, but to destroy him in the spirit of bitterness and rigor, as the Apostle saith, If a man be taken in any fault, you that are spiritual inform such in the spirit of severity, considering thy self lest thou also be tempted.

To oppress our Neighbour with violence, is to exact any thing of him above his power, and to lay upon him more than he is able to bear, and more peradventure than they themselves are able to wield, which lay it upon him. Whereas the Lord, speaking of the Pharisees to his Disciples, forbiddeth them the same, saying, *The Scribes and Pharisees do sit upon the Chair of Moses, &c.* And the Apostle Peter, Feed, saith he, as much as in you lyeth, the Lords flock; providing for them, not by constraint, but willingly after a godly sort, and not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind, not as though ye were Lords over the Clergy, but be you as an example to the flock of good will.

This Shepherd of Shepherds, and Prince of the Apostles, doth plainly and evidently declare and insinuate what all other Pastors and Apostles ought to do: how to instruct the flock of the Lord committed unto them, and what great care & compassion of mind they ought to have towards their cure : and removeth far out of their hearts all power of tyrannical Lordship and all Ambition, which some do exercise with greediness upon those that are committed to their charge, and pronounceth, that they ought not to be Lords, but Fathers over their Flock: and not imperiously to command them, as exercising statelie Authority and Power upon them, but gently to admonish them and beseech them in the zeal of Piety, according to the strength of every person, after the Lord, and not after the affection of their own will, or ambitiously setting forth their own Power and Jurisdiction, and that they ought to be an example to the Flock, doing first themselves that thing which they command others, and so to teach them no less by examples than by words. Willingly, faith he, and not by constraint; of Charity, and not for greedy gain. For there be many, which being inflamed with affection, not of charity, but of covetous greediness and ambition, command others that which they are not able to accomplish, and while they pretend to seek the gain of Souls, they hunt and seek rather for worldly Lucre: which Balaam the Prophet did well expresse; who converted the gift of Prophecy, and the grace of Blessing which he had received of God, not to the profit of others, but to his own commodity.

And some there be, which whiles they correct others, they pretend to do with the zeal of God, and whiles they would seem to be better than other; this they do with a certain presumption and rashness, and so fall in their own presumption and temerity. Of whom the Apostle speaketh, Which have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge. To have a zeal of God according to knowledge, is to do any thing in Gods matters prudently and circumpectly. Of whom Ose beareth a type and resemblance. Who whiles that he went about with his hand to stay the Ark of the Lord, flaggering a little by reason of the kicking of the Oxen which carried it, fell down therefore dead. The Ark of the Lord to stagger or miscarry by the kicking of the Oxen, signifieth the Law of the Lord (which the Priests themselves ought to bear and hold up) to be contrariet of them in not observing the same, and to be turned out of the right course to the contrary part, which Ose, who is interpreted to be a helper of God, attempteth to hold up. For there be certain Prelats, which while they see the Order of Priesthood, by some enormity or excess, to strain the Law of God never so little out of the right course, and labour to redress and rectifie that disorder, rather by vain ostentation of their own strength, then for any pure zeal to God: while they thus presume inordinately to do, thinking to seem to be the helpers of God, many times do mortally fall, and incur thereby great danger and peril. Some other also there be, which having before their eyes no consideration of mans infirmity, neither being touched with any respect of mercy and compassion, nor knowing how to say with the Apostle, Who is infirm and I am not infirm? these, whiles they compare themselves to such as be under their charge, not in condition wherein they are equal, but in authority wherein they are superiours, and covet to be their Masters, and more to rule over them than to profit them, they oppress the weakness of them, by force and violence of Authority, and compel them to their Obedience; which is rightly figured by the Fact, which is read in the Gospel of Symon Cyrenensis, whom the Persecutors of the Lord constrained to take up the Cross of Christ. Whose Name also doth fitly agree with the same Figure: for Symon by Interpretation is called Obedient. Symon then, that is to say, the obedient man is forced to bear the Cross of the Lord, when as Subjects being constrained of their Masters, by the rigor either of Lordship or Authority, or fear of their Curse, and so compelled to obey them, are driven to sustain the Cross of Contineny against their wills; who neither do love the Cross which they bear, because they bear it rather to their destruction than to their health; neither by bearing the Cross do they unto sin, but by the bearing thereof are rather quickened unto sin: For thereof rise divers other more grievous sins. For by the inhibiting of lawful and natural marriage with one woman, riseth the unnatural and most execrable Sodomitical Fornication; riseth also the unlawful and damnable detrauing of other mens wives, riseth furthermore cursed and who, if filthy ness and pollution; and moreover riseth most abominable Incest against all Nature, with their own Kindred, with a heap of manifold other filthy abominations and lecherous pollutions, whereby the frail infirmity of man is brought no doubt into great peril.

Wherefore Lot being delivered from the burning of Sodom through the guiding of the Lords Angel, and bereaved of the fellowship of his Wife, whiles he considering his own Infirmity, durst not ascend unto the Mountain as the Angel bad him, did choose rather to dwell in Segor a little City near by, the Angel thus bidding him, and speaking unto him, Save thy Soul and look not behind thee, but save thy self in the Mountain, lest thou also perish. To whom Lot answered, I pray thee Lord, because thy Servant hath found such grace in thy sight that thou wilt save me, I cannot be saved in the Mountain, lest perhaps some evil take me, and I dye: There is a little City hereby wherunto I may fly and be saved in it.

Gen. 19.

What meaneth this, that Lot flying from Sodom by the commandment of the Angel, to be saved in the Mountain, would not ascend up to the Hill, fearing there to perish, but did choose rather to dwell in Segor, a small City near unto the Hill, there to be saved, but that every faithful man coveting to eschew the burning and danger of Sodomitical Lust, while neither he is able to mount up to the top of Virginitie, and also is afraid to ascend to the Mountain of the state of Widowhood, lest he perish therein, flyeth therefore to the state of Matrimony, which is a small Contineny in respect of the other two, and also near unto them both. For after those two kinds of Contineny, this Chastity is also proved to be laudable, and is not deprived of the reward of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Lot refusing to go up to the Mountain, a tale, what it meaneth.

The Chastity of matrimony, as near to Virginitie.

Unto this Chastity he is commanded to fly, which cannot otherwise contain, and to be saved in it, lest peradventure if he climb up to the Mount, he fall into inconveniency and perish therein: that is, lest if he shall attempt to obtain by his own strength the Contineny which is not given unto him of God, the evil of Incontinency, or Fornication, or of some of the other evils afore rehearsed, do fall upon him, and so he perish in them mortally. For there be many, who while they consider not their own Infirmity, and while they strive to achieve greater things than they are able to reach, in this their climbing, do fall headlong into worse inconveniency, and while they foolishly seek for great things, do lose the less, which before they seemed to have. Which we may well understand by the example of Lot afore said, who what time he left the small City Segor, which he chose before to inhabit, in the which he sought to be saved, went up to the Mountain, and there abiding, fell into the stoll Incest of his own Daughters, as the Scripture witnesseth, saying, Lot went up from Segor and remained in the Mountain, and his Daughters gave to their Father wine to drink that night: And the elder of them went and lay with her Father: which thing had not befallen him, if he had kept himself still in Segor, where he might have been saved at the bidding of the Angel, as he himself required. But because he forsook that which was granted to him of the Angel, and presumed to that upon his own will, contrary to the Precept of the Angel, which was not granted; therefore he fell into great danger of his Soul, and committed the grievous sin of Incest.

No otherwife doth it happen to many other, who while either they forsake the thing which is granted them of God, or ambitiously climb after that which is to them not granted, both they loose that which they had granted unto them, and fall into that which to them was not granted. For divers there be which while they forsake, either willingly or against their will, the married life which is to them lawfully permitted, and in which they might be saved, and strive with a presumptuous desire to lead a single life, both they lose that health and safety which they might have had in one, and incur great danger in the other: So that whereby they suppose most to gain, by the same they lose and fall into the Pit of greater Ruin. Which thing S. Paul, the Doctor of the Gentiles, well considering, and tenderly providing for the infirmity of the weak Corinthians, writing to him for counsel touching this matter, did write to them again in this wise, saying, As concerning the things whereof you wrote unto me, it is good for a man not to touch a woman. Nevertheless themselves to avoid Whoredom, let every man have his Wife, and let every woman have her Husband. Let the Husband give unto his Wife due Benevolence: likewise also the Wife unto her Husband. And a little after, withdraw not (saith he) your selves one from another, except it be with consent for a time, that you may give your selves unto Fasting and Prayer, and afterward come together again, lest Satan tempt you for your Incontinency. For as the Apostle saith, We cannot all do all things: and as the Apostle saith, It is not in him that willeth, nor in him that runneth, but in God that sheweth mercy. Also in another place, For to every one of us is given grace according to the measure of the gift of Christ. And that every one of us ought to keep, and not to transgress this measure, he teacheth anon after, saying, I wish that all men were as I myself am; but every man hath his proper gift of God, one after this manner, another after that.

1 Cor. 7.

And that we are to be kept within our compass and measure, and ought therewith to be content, he teacheth moreover as followeth, Let every man abide in that Vocation wherein he is called. And shortly after, for confirmation thereof, he repeateth the same again, and saith, Let every man wherein he is called, therein abide with the Lord. And because he perceived that the infirmity of man was not able to sustain the burning motions and heats of Nature stirring in a man, but only by the grace of God, neither be able to conquer the Flesh fighting against the Spirit, according to that which he saith of himself in another place, For I see another Law in my Members rebelling against the Law of my Mind; he therefore of Mercy and Compassion, as condescending unto their weakness, and not by rigor of Law and force of Commandment, thus said. As also in another place in his Epistles he speaketh in like words, saying, I speak thus grossly after the manner of men, because of the infirmity of your flesh. And in this fore said Epistle, moreover a little before, using the same manner of speech, he saith, This I say to you as of favour and not of commandment. And adding moreover, he sheweth, As touching Virgins I have no commandment of the Lord, but only do give counsel, as one that have found mercy with God, that I should be faithful. That is, after the same mercy wherewith the Lord hath informed and instructed me when he called me to the Faith, and made me faithful to him; so I likewise do give counsel to others, and shew the same mercy to them.

And forasmuch as both are good, to wit, to have a Wife, or not to have; to have a Husband, or not to have; neither is there any sin in having Wife or Husband; shortly after he inferneth, saying, I suppose therefore this to be good for the present necessity: I mean, that it is good for a man so to be. What meaneth this, for present necessity? What is this necessity present, but present infirmity? or else instant necessity, compelling to do as the order of necessity requireth. Or else he meaneth by this present necessity, the distress of that time which then was instant, and compelled him to write, and so to bear with them, which was for the avoiding of Fornication amongst them, and many other kinds of filthiness above touched which might have happened. For the which Fornication he took occasion to write unto the Corinthians, and to answer to their Letters; and therefore he vehemently against the said Corinthians, in the former part of the said Epistle, uttereth these words; What will you I shall come to you with a rod? or in love and in the spirit of meekness? There is heard among you to be Fornication, and such Fornication as is not named among the Gentiles, that one should have his own Fathers Wife, &c. And therefore for this necessity of avoiding such Fornication, he saith, It is good for a man so to be, that he which cannot continen shall marry and take a Wife; which afterward he expoundeth, thus inferneth, Art thou bound to a Wife? seek not to be loosed. And if thou be loosed from a Wife, seek not to be married. But if thou takest a Wife thou sinnest not; and if a Virgin marry she sinneeth not, &c. And that he spake not this by way of commanding, but of succourance and compassion, he sheweth plainly in these words following; But I spare you; that is to say, I bear with your infirmity; and therefore he leaveth it in the free power and will of every man, to choose what he liketh best. Neither doth he enforce any man (he saith) violently, nor charge them with any strait commandment, and therefore addeth these words following, And this I speak for your own commodity, not to tangle you as in a snare, but for that it is good and benefit for you, that you may serve the Lord without separation.

This he saith to them whom before he exhorteth to Continency; and whom he would not to be let or troubled by Matrimonial Conjunction. But to other he saith thus, If any man think that it is uncomely for his Virgin to remain over-long unmarried, and if need so require, let him do what he thinketh good, he sinneeth not, let them marry. And again, both be good, he saith; but yet the one to be better he concludeth, saying, Therefore be that joineth in Matrimony his Virgin, doth well; but he that doeth not, doth better. Which agreeeth well with the Text above, speaking of both kinds, as well the man as the woman, where he saith, If thou take a Wife thou sinnest not; and if the Virgin take a Husband, she sinneeth not.

If therefore it be no sin for the man to take a Wife, nor for the Virgin to take a Husband, after the Apostles mind, neither doth diminish their felicity, but rather increase it; and forasmuch as both do well, and so both be blessed; we then which take Wives for our infirmity, what do we sin in having them? Or if the Apostle do suffer and permit to every man, for the avoiding of Fornication, to have his Wife; we then which come of the same lump or mass, and taking our sinful flesh of the sinful flesh of Adam, are not able otherwise to contain, why are we not permitted for the same cause, and by the same permission, to have likewise our Wives, but are enforced to forsake them, being married?

Wherefore either do you permit us, following the Apostle, to have our Wives, or else teach us that we come not of the same mass, either else shew us that the same sufferance and permission is not granted to us by the Apostle, which is granted to other. Which cause peradventure you will thus pretend; That this sufferance was granted of the Apostle, not to the Clergy, or to any of our Order, but only to Lay-men. Which cannot well be defended, neither by the words of the Apostle, nor by any circumstance of his Epistle, forasmuch as there is no certain distinction or denomination either of Persons or Degrees or Professions there mentioned, neither doth he make any difference either in Names or Offices of men, either of them which wrote unto him, either of those Persons of whom he wrote, or else of those to whom he answered, but only in general to the whole Church of the Christians, as he himself in the beginning of his Epistle purporteth in these words, Paul called the Apostle of Jesus Christ, by the will of God, and Softeneth his brother, to the Church which is at Corinth, such as he sanctified in Christ Jesus, called Saints, with all that invoke the Name of the Lord, &c. (And after a few other words, which here for brevities sake we omit, as not being greatly to the purpose pertinent; thus he inferneth.) These Premises being well considered, we beseech you to have regard and compassion of our infirmity, most humbly desiring you not to oppress us with this violence. For as we have sufficiently before proved, no man ought to be constrained unto Continency against his will, neither is this kind of virtue commanded of God to any man of necessity, but only of voluntary Devotion to be offered to the Lord; as he himself speaketh in the Gospel, All men cannot receive this saying, but to whom it is given. Wherunto he gently exhorteth them that can take it, saying, He that is able to receive this, let him receive it, &c. Wherefore for distinctions like Moses is not himself commanded to clothe Aaron and his Sons with Breaches, as in these words going before, Thou shalt clothe with these Aaron thy brother, and his sons, &c. But he thus saith, Thou shalt make linen breeches that they themselves may cover the filth of their flesh. That they themselves, saith he, may cover the filth of their flesh. Thou, saith he, shalt make the breeches for the Bishop and his sons: thou shalt teach the rule of Chastity; thou shalt exhort them to abstain from the company of their Wives, and shalt do the Priests Office; yet laying upon none violently the said yoke of Continency; but whosoever shall be Priests, and shall serve the Altar, shall of their own accord surcease from the use of Matrimony: which when they shall do, and of their own voluntary consent shall take upon them the purpose of Continency to serve the Altar, then shall the grace of God be present, which as it did apparel those other Priests afore said with attire for them convenient, so shall it instruct them abundantly, how they ought to live and to teach. And this is well agreeth with the Text that followeth, saying, And when thou shalt wash the Father and the Son with water, then shalt take the Garments, that is, the great Coat, the Tunicle, and the Breast-lap, and put them upon Aaron, and gird them to him with a brodered girdle of the Epled. Then thou shalt put the Afters upon his head, and shalt put the holy Crown upon the Myrr, and thou shalt be consecrated. Also thou shalt bring his Sons, and put Coats upon them, and shalt gird them with girdles, both Aaron and his Sons, and shalt put Bannets on them, and the Priests Office shall be theirs for a perpetual Law.

Marriage is permitted to the infirmity of all men. Priests are inferior as to their meat, &c. Virgins ought to be permitted to Priests like.

This then you see a Commandment of receiving of the seven Breaches of Adels. Whereby it plainly appears, that Aaron and his Sons first did apparel themselves with the kind of Apparel, and so entered in to be washed, instructed, anointed and consecrated by the hands of Moses.

By the which we are plainly taught, that the yoke of Continency is not to be enforced upon any man against his will, but it is to be received of God with a prompt and devout will. Which thing also Dionysius Areopagita, that godly wise man, the Disciple of S. Paul, and ordained of him Bishop of Athens, in a certain Epistle of his sent to Pylatus Bishop of the Gnathina, in which he toucheth many things of Marriage and Chastity (as is in the Ecclesiastical History related) doth admonish the said Pylatus, and prayeth him that he will lay no grievous Burthen upon the necks of the Disciples, neither infer any necessity of cooped Chastity upon the Brethren, whereby the inamity of some of them might be in danger. And Pylatus answering to Dionysius again, sheweth himself willing to embrace the Sentence of his wholesome Counsel. The same also did Papinianus, the divine and chaste Bishop, who in the Council of Nice (as the Tripartite History doth shew us) when the Fathers which there were present went about to restrain Priests from Marriage, he rising up among them, and moved with the zeal of mans infirmity, desired them that the would not to do, but rather to leave it unto the voluntary discretion of every man, lest in so doing they might peradventure give occasion of Adultery and Fornication. For those holy men did then use this Cautel and Moderation in Religion, that when they treated any thing concerning Instruction and Edification of the People, and would have taken steepest up to a better life by godly Instructions, they would rather perswade things to be observed with Patience and Lenity, than command with Rigor and Authority: neither would they compel any man to their Obedience against his will.

Whole Examples you also following, which succeeded in their room and name, do you not lay upon us infirm persons such importable Burthens, lest you be partakers with the Pharisees and Lawyers of the Lords Curse: who saith, Wo to you Lawyers, which lay burthens upon men, which they cannot bear, and you your selves teach not the burthens with one finger. And left the cry of the Children of Israel ascend up to the Lord for the cruel dealing of them which are Overseers of the works. Neither do you make such Eunuchs which are so born from their Mothers womb, or such Eunuchs which are violently made by men, but rather those Eunuchs, that of their own accord have gelded themselves for the Kingdom of Heaven. Neither do you bring upon the holy Order of Gods Ministers, for us only, such an offence and slander, that for our wicked life you make the Ministry to be despised of others, while you will not suffer them either to hear us, or to receive the Sacraments of us, infaming thereby our lowly life, and causing the flavor of us to stink before Pharab and his Servants. Wherein it seemeth to us that you deal not soundly and uprightly, if a man may so say (I pray you take it in good worth that I speak) and also to be against the Authority of Gods Word, and the Canonical Constitutions, which you do, whereas the Lord saith by Moses the Law-giver, The shame of thy Mother thou shalt not disclose, and her ignominy thou shalt not discover. Our Mother is the Church, the Sons of this Mother be all the Faithful, which name yet most fitly is appropriate to Priests, for they do beget the Faithful, both by the Word of Preaching and Sacrament of Baptism. Was not he to be counted a right Mother who said, My little Children of whom I travel in birth again? The same shame and ignominy of our Mother, what is it but the reproveable Conversation of the life of Priests: which shame and ignominy is then revealed when the life of Priests is publicly infamed: which thing you do, that discover and notice to men our fragility, lying before as hid and covered, because before it was not known, and for that same you bring the holy Ministry and Mysteries of God into contempt and hatred: as though the polluted life of others did any thing pertain thereto to pollute the same, and as though our uncleaness did any thing blemish them, or diminish the pureness thereof, whereas the Psalmist saith, The Law of the Lord is pure and immaculate, or as though they were any whit polluted by our infection, which do receive the said Mysteries either by our Mouth or Ministry: which if you grant, then the Lord would never have spoken so to his Disciples, and the People, touching the Pharisees, saying, Whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do.

And again, if it were so, the Lord would not have sent forth Judas, whom he knew should betray him, with the other Disciples to preach, neither would have committed to him the power of working Miracles, and of giving Health, nor have admitted him to the Communion of the Supper. And if our impurity should infect our holy Mysteries or Ministrations, and make them worse that bear and receive the same, then the Lord would never have touched the Leper whom he had healed, which would have killed him, neither would have taken with Simon another Leper, neither would have suffered his face to be kissed, and with the tears to be washed, and with the hair to be dried, and his head to be anointed of Mary the sinner.

Therefore the holy Canons have thus decreed: That no man, which rightly receiveth the Lords Sacraments of an Heretick, should be therefore any thing corrupted by his heretical pravity, nor the said Sacraments should be any whit defained by the infection of him. Whereupon the Church of Rome, in a certain Epistle directed unto Anastasi the Emperor, to Anastasi the Pope, did so ordain and write, That none of all them whom Anastasi did baptize, or whom he ordained Canonically to be Priests or Levites, should be any thing hurt by the name of the said Anastasi, so that thereby the Sacraments which by him were ministrated, should seem the less firm and effectual. For the Sacrament of Baptism also being ministrated of an Adulterer or a Thief (which God foreknew to be in the Church) doth come unto the Receiver never a whit the worse. What meant that voice which sounded by the Dove, but that it excluded all evil and impurity of the corruption of man? in the which it is declared and said, This is he which baptizeth, &c. For if the beams of this visible Sun, passing by the filthy places, receive no spot or filthiness thereby, much more the grace of him which made this visible Sun, is not tyed to any worthiness of our works. Whatsoever therefore any Minister of the Church worketh in his Function to the behoof of the People, all that taketh his effect by the operation of God. Thus witnesseth Paul, by whom Christ speaketh, I have planted, and Apollo hath watered, but it is the Lord that hath given the increase. God regardeth not so much who or what manner of person doth preach, but that he so preach that he may confirm them that be taught, and cause them to preach well of Christ. For such is the operation of Gods mighty Grace, that by evil men he winneth good men, and by reprobate and wicked persons he getteth and gathereth together those that be good.

By these, and such other Reasons and Authorities above alleged, you ought to be perswaded, neither to abandon us that be married from the administration of Divine Service, nor yet to Excommunicate such to whom the matter nothing pertaineth, from the Communion thereof. And if we be evil, we are evil to our selves, and hurt our selves more than others. And such as you suppose peradventure to be vicious, yet may have some good thing inwardly which you know not of.

to be Nicolas the Second, which in the third Book of the Laws, called Panormia, tit. De Lapis, is named Nicolas the younger: Which Nicolas also is Author of the next Decree that followeth, &c.

Objection answered.

Wherefore if any man shall object hereafter, That because Gratian in the Distinction aforesaid nameth Pope Nicolas absolutely without any additions, it is therefore to be taken for Nicolas the first; unto this Objection I set here these two Lawyers to answer. Unto whose answer this I add also, That the common manner of Gratian lightly in all his Distinctions, is, that when he speaketh of Popes, as of Innocentius, Gregorius, Leo, Lucius, and such other, very seldom he expresseth the difference of their names: So in the Distinction 18. Presbyteris, where he bringeth in the Decree of Calixtus in like manner against the Matrimony of Priests, Deacons, and Subdeacons, he addeth thereto no difference of his name; and yet all the world knoweth that this was Calixtus the Second, and not the First, &c. But whether he were or no, the matter forceth not much. The Letters (no doubt) by their title appear to be written by Volusianus. Most certain this is, by whomsoever they were written, fruitful Epistles they are, and effectual to the purpose.

But lest we should seem too much to digress from our purpose, let us return to the story and time of Nicolas the Second again, which was about the year, as is said, 1060. a little before Hildebrand was Pope. Which Hildebrand, albeit he was then but a Cardinal, yet was he the whole doer of all things, and concluded what him listeth in the Church of Rome, and also made Popes whom he would, as appeareth both by this Nicolas, and also Pope Alexander which followed him. So that this dissolution of Priests marriage began somewhat to kindle under this Pope Nicolas, through the Pessilent means of Hildebrand, and after him increased more under Pope Alexander, as appeareth by the Synod holden at Millain, Anno 1067. But most of all it burst out under the said Hildebrand himself, being Pope, the year as is said 1070.

Council Carthage c. 13.

Dist. 24. cap. Cum prece-rico.

Although as touching this Prohibition of Priests to be married, I am not ignorant that certain of the contrary Faction, in searching out the reach and antiquity of this Tradition, for Priests to abstain from Wives, do refer the same to the time of the second Council of Carthage, which was about the time of Pope Syritius, a great enemy to Ministers Wives, as appeareth Distinct. 84. cum Præteritis. Yet notwithstanding to the same may be answered, That this was no universal or general Council, but some particular Synod, and therefore of no such great forcible Authority.

2. Secondly, The same Synod being about the time of Pope Syritius, who was a capital Enemy against Priests marriage, may seem to draw some corruption of the time then present.

3. Thirdly, Neither is it impossible, but as divers bawdy Epistles have been falsely fathered upon certain ancient Bishops of the Primitive Church, and divers Canons also, as of the Council of Nice, have been corrupted by Bishops of Rome, so some falsehood likewise or forgery might be used in this second Council of Carthage.

4. Fourthly, Although no false Conveyance had been used therein, yet so much as the said Canon of the second Council of Carthage doth mis-report and falsify the Canons of the Apostles, in so doing it doth justly diminish his own credit.

Priests and Bishops married long after the second Council of Carthage.

5. Fifthly, Seeing the foresaid Canon of this second Council of Carthage tendeth clean contrary to the Canons of the Apostles, to the Council of Gangra, and other Councils more, and commandeth that which they do accuse, the Authority thereof ought to have no great force, but rather may be rejected.

6. Finally, though this Constitution of the Council of Carthage were perfectly sound without all corruption, yet plain and evident it is by this Volusianus, Bishop also of Carthage, that the same Constitution took no great hold in the Church, so much as we see, that both this Volusianus is married after that in Carthage himself, and also beliveth him, many hundred years after, marriage was a common matter through most Churches of Christendom, amongst Bishops and Priests, as partly before hath been declared. And more may be seen in Histories, what great tumults and business was long after that in Hildebrands time, and after him also amongst the Clergy-men, both in Italy, Spain, France, and in all Quarters of Christendom, for separating Priests from their liberty of marrying.

And again, if this Tradition concerning the unmarried life of Priests had stood upon such an old Foundation from the second Council of Carthage (as they pretend) what needed then in the time of Pope Nicolas the Second, Pope Alexander the Second, Pope Gregory the Seventh, and other Popes after them, so much labour to be taken, so many Laws and Decrees to be devised and enacted, for the abolishing of Priests marriage, if the same had been of such a long Antiquity as they would make men believe?

By these things considered it may appear, that this The general Law forbidding Priests to marry, when it first began.

About which time first it is to be noted, That under Pope Leo, and this Pope Nicolas, Cranzius, and certain German Chronicles do say, that Symony and Priests marriage were prohibited. This Pope Leo was Anno 1051.

After this Pope Nicolas (to whom the foresaid Letter of Volusianus seemeth to be written) made this Ordinance: Ut nullus Missam audiat Presbyteri quem sit Concubinam Ex Romana Synodo 4. indubitanter habere aut subintroductam mulierem. Et quicumque Sacerdotum, Diaconorum, Subdiaconorum, post constitutum beatæ memoriæ prædecessoris nostri sanctiss. Papæ Leonis, de castitate Clericorum, Concubinam palam duxerit, vel duxim non reliquerit, ex parte Omnipotentis Dei & Autoritate beati Petri & Pauli præcipimus, & omni contradicimus ut Missam non canet, &c. That is, Whatsoever Priest, Deacon, or Sub-deacon, according to the Constitution of Pope Leo our Predecessor, concerning the Chastity of Clerks, shall openly marry a Concubine, or shall not put her away being married: in the behalf of Almighty God, &c. we utterly charge and forbid the same, that he sing no Mass, nor read the Gospel or Epistle at Mass, nor execute any Divine Service, &c. And this was about the year of our Lord, 1058.

Although in this Constitution of Pope Nicolas, this word Concubine may be understood for no Wife, but so as Gratian understandeth it in the sixteenth Canon of the Apostles in these words, Concubina vero intelligenda est præter uxorem: That is, For one besides a mans Wife. Then after this Pope Nicolas coming Pope Alexander, and specially Pope Hildebrand, do expound this Concubine forbidden, for a Wife, and such Priests as be married, they expound them for Nicolaitans; for so we read in the Synod of Millain, under Pope Alexander the Second: Nicolaitæ autem dicuntur Clerici, qui contra castitatis Ecclesiasticæ regulam faminis administrant, &c.

And further it followeth in the same Synod, Nicolaitarum quoque hæresin nibilominus condemnamus, & non modo Presbyteros, sed & Diaconos & Subdiaconos ab Uxoribus, vel Concubinarum sado consortio nostris studiis, in quantum nobis possibilitas fuerit, arcendos esse promittimus, &c.

And after it followeth in this wife, Si hæc de Simoniacis & Nicolaitarum hæresi delenda & funditus destruenda fideliter non observaverit, ab Omnipotentis Deo & omnibus Sanctis sine excommunicationis & anathematizationis, & ab omni Christianorum consortio inveniar alienus.

And moreover it followeth upon the same, Amibemathidom tito quoque omnes hæreses exollentes se adversus sanctam Catholicam & Apostolicam Ecclesiam, specialiter vero & nominatim Simoniacam hæresin; deinde Nicolaitarum æque abominabilem hæresin, quæ impudenter latrat, sacri Altaris Ministris debere vel posse licenter uti Conjugibus, quomodo & laicos, &c. As much to as I say in English, as, I do accuse all Heresies extolling themselves against the holy Catholick and Apostolick Church, but especially and namely, the heresie of Symony:

The general Law forbidding Priests to marry, when it first began.

Ex Romana Synodo 4.

Concubina.

Dist. 13. quæ. Ex Synodo. Melitole. Married. Priests call'd Nicolaitans.

Symony: and in like manner the abominable Heresie of the Nicolaitans, which impudently barked, that the Ministers of the holy Altar may and ought to use Wives lawfully, as well as Lay-men, &c. And thus much concerning the Synod of Millain, under Pope Alexander the Second, An. 1067.

Anno 1067.

Pope Hildebrand and the greatest enemy to Priests marriage.

And after this Alexander rose up Pope Hildebrand, of all other the chiefest and most principal Enemy against Priests marriage. For whereas all other approved Canons and Councils were contented, that any Clergyman, having a Wife before his entering into his Ministry, might enjoy the liberty of his Marriage, so that he married not a Widow, or a known Harlot, or kept a Concubine, or were twice married; now cometh in Pope Hildebrand, making Priests Marriage to be Heresie, and further enacting, That whatsoever Clerk, Deacon, or Minister had a Wife, whatsoever she was, Maid or other, either before his Orders, or after, should utterly part her from him, or else forsake his Ministry, &c.

Tim: Ex Limber to Scholre barguill.

Although notwithstanding the greatest part of Ecclesiastical Ministers facing this strange Doctrine and Proceedings (which S. Paul expressly calleth The Doctrine of Devils) did what they could to withstand the same. Of whom Lambertus Schafnaburgensis thus writeth; Adversus hoc Decretum prout vehementer infremuit tota factio Clericorum, hominem plane Hæreticum, & vesani dogmati esse clamitantes, qui oblitus sermonis Domini, quo ait, Non omnes capere hoc verbum; Qui potest capere, capiat, &c. Et Apostoli, Qui se non cominet, nubat; Melius est nubere, quam uri; violenta exactione homines vivere cogeret ritu angelorum. Quod si pergeret, male se Sacerdotium quam conjugium deserere, &c. In English thus; Against this Decree the whole number of the Clergy did vehemently storm and grudge, crying out upon him as a pernicious Heretick, and one that made Phantastical Doctrine: who forgetting what the Lord saith, All men cannot take this word; he that can take it, let him take it. And also what the Apostle saith, Who so cannot otherwise contain, let him marry; better it is to marry than to burn, &c. Yet notwithstanding would he bind men to live like Angels. Who if he continued as he began, they would (they said) sooner forsake the Order of Priesthood, than their Order of Matrimony, &c.

The Council of Ruma-giella Priests marriage unles Pope Hildebrand. Anno 1074.

Which Hildebrand, all this notwithstanding, yet ceased not still to call upon them, and to send to the Bishops every where to execute his Commandment with all severity, threatening to lay the Apostolical Censure upon them, if otherwise they shewed not their diligence therein to the uttermost. Ex Lamb. This was An. 1074. Of the same Hildebrand Radulphus de Diceto also writing, hath these words:

Ex Radulpho de Diceto.

Gregorius Papa septimus Hildebrandus, celebrata Synodo, Symoniacos anathematizavit, uxoratos Sacerdotes a divino remotis officio, & Laici Missarum eorum audire interdixit novo exemplo, & (ut multis visum est) inconsiderato præjudicio contra sanctorum Patrum Sententiam, &c. The English is this; Pope Gregory the Seventh, called Hildebrand, bolding a Synod, accused such as committed Symony, and removed married Priests from saying Service, forbidding also the Lay-men to hear their Mass, after a new and strange example, and as many thought, after an inconsiderate prejudice, against the Sentence of holy Fathers.

And thus much for the Antiquity of bringing in the single life of Priests, which first springing from the time of Pope Nicolas and Alexander the Second, began first with a Custom, and afterwards was brought into a Law, chiefly by Pope Hildebrand, and so spread from Italy into other Countries, and at length into England also, albeit not without much ado, as ye shall hear, the Lord willing.

Law for Priests not to marry.

In the mean while, as Pope Nicolas and Hildebrand were busie at Rome, so Lanfrank Archibishop of Canterbury likewise was doing here in England about the same matter, although he began not altogether so roughly as Pope Hildebrand did, for so it appeared by his Council holden at Winchester: where though he inhibited such as were Prebendaries of Cathedral Churches to have Wives, yet did he permit in his Decree, that such Priests as dwelt in Towns and Villages, having Wives, should retain them still, and not to be compelled to separate from them, and they which had none, should be admitted to have; imposing moreover the fifth part of the tithes hereafter, to it they presumed not to admit into Order any Priests or Deacons, unless they should first make a solemn position to have no Wives.

The words of the Council be these; Decretumque est, ut nullo Canonico uxorem habeat, Sacerdotum vero in Castellis & in vicis habitantium uxores uxores, non cogantur dimittant: non habentes, interdicanur ut habeant. & diuince caveant Episcopi, ut Sacerdotes vel Diaconos non presumant ordinare, nisi profiteantur ut uxores non habeant, &c.

Ex Mat: Parit. Lanfrank not to be a pure Virgin.

And here to note by the way of the said Lanfrank, for all his glorious gay shew of his Monkish Virginity and single Life, yet he escaped not altogether so unsupported for his part, but that the story of Matthew Paris, writing of Paulus Cadomensis, whom Lanfrank preferred to be Abbot of S. Albans, thus reporteth of him, Paulus (inquit) Monachus Cadomensis Archiepiscopi Lanfranci nepos, jure, aliquorum relationibus, consanguinitate propinquior, &c. That is, Paul a Monk of Cadune, and Nephew of the Archbishop Lanfrank, yea, as some say further, more near in blood to him than so, &c.

Then after Lanfrank came Anselme into the See of Canterbury, who taking to him a stouter stomach, more fiercely and eagerly laboured this matter, in abrogating utterly the Marriage of Priests, Deacons, Sub-deacons, and of the Universal Clergy, not permitting (as Lanfrank did) Priests that had Wives in Villages and Towns to keep them still, but utterly commanding, and that under great pain, not only Priests and Deacons, but Sub-deacons also (which is against the Council of Lateran) which were already married, to be separated, and that none should be received into Order hereafter, without profession of perpetual Chastity.

Anselme Archbishop of Cantuarie, a constant doer against Priests marriage. Conc. Later. Can. 16. De Clericis matrimon. cop. 1. 12.

And yet notwithstanding, for all this great blustering and thundering of this Romish emphes, the Priests yet still holding their own as well as they could, gave not much place to his unlawful Injunction, but kept still their Wives almost two hundred years after, refusing and resisting of long time the yoke of that servile Bondage, to keep still their freedom from such vowing, professing, and promising, as may well appear by those Priests of York, of whom Gerardus Archbishop of York speaketh, writing to Anselme in these words:

Sitio Clericorum meorum integritatem, sed præterquam in paucis admodum, vel Assiduè juridicam, vel sancti cujusdam Præbiteri mutabilitatem invenio. Varii linguarum aculeis, modo minus, modo convicia infingunt. Sed hoc facilius in his qui remotiores sunt, tolero. Illud omnino grave genus mali est, quod his qui quasi in sinu meo sunt, qui Canonico nomine gaudent, Canones aspernant, adversus Concilia nostra statuta, quasi sophistis disputantes argumentantur, professiones vero minus potius abnegant Canones illi, qui sine professione ad sacros Ordines inordinabiliter sunt processu, & qui in Presbyterium vel Diaconatum constituti, Uxores sive Concubinas in publico ballenus habuerunt, ab Altari nulla e reverentia continentur. Cum vero ad ordines aliquos accessu, dura cereræ naturam, ne in Ordinando castitatem profiteantur. In English thus; I much desire the purity of my Clergy-men: howbeit, except it be in very few, I find in them the deafness of the Serpent Alps, and the inconstancy of Proteus, that the Poets Fable, make of. With their stinging Tongues they cast out sometimes threats, sometimes taunts and rebukes. But thus grieveth me less in them that be further off. This grieveth me most of all, that they which be of mine own Church, as in mine own bosom, and Prebendaries of mine own See, contemn our Canons, and argue like Sophistical Disputers, against the Statutes of our Council. The Prebendaries which unordinately have been taken into Orders heretofore, without making vow or profession, refuse utterly to make profession to me. And they that be Priests or Deacons, having married before openly Wives or Concubines, will not be removed for any reverence from the Altar. And when I call upon any to receive Order, signify they deny to profess Chastity in their Ordering, &c.

John 12.

Christ was born of a Virgin, Christ lived ever a Virgin, and commandeth them that will serve him, to follow him. Qui mihi ministrat, me sequatur, (id est) Si vis mihi ministrare, me casse vivendo imitare.
Ergo, Priests that have Wives are not meet to serve him.

Let every Man have his own Wife for avoiding of Fornication.

The exposition of Anselm.The great exposition of Anselm, upon the words of S. Paul.

That is meant and granted of the Apostle only to Laymen: Hoc solis Laicis concessisse, nemo ignorat.

1 Cor. 7.

Melius est nubere quam uri: It is better to marry than to burn.

The exposition.

Melius, id est, levius est legitimæ uxori nubere, quam uri, id est quam alienarum mulierum concupiscentia consumi. It is a lighter fault to marry one lawful wife, than to be consumed with concupiscent of strange Women.

1 Tim. 3.

Oportet esse Episcopum irreprehensibilem, unius uxoris virum, &c. A Bishop ought to be unreplicable, the Husband of one Wife, &c.

The exposition.

Præcipit Apostolus, ne quis ad sacerdotium accedere præsumat, nisi is qui non nisi unicam uxorem laicis habuisset. Accepit autem Ordine nunquam ei carnis commixtionem se copularet, tantum vitæ necessaria ei subministraret: That is; The Apostle here commandeth, that none should presume to be Priest, but he who being a Layman before, hath had no more but one Wife: And after he be made Priest, not to couple himself any more with her, but only to minister to her things necessary for her living, &c.

And finally after these things thus disputed and alleged, the said Anselm concludeth the matter with this final censure and determination, as followeth:
Per hoc autem quod sacras vestes induunt, vel sacra vasa tangunt, Christo violenti manus injiciunt. Per hoc autem quod impudenter offerre præsumunt, Christum quodammodo visibiliter in Altari crucifigunt. Legitur ministerium eorum Christi persecutio, imo crucifixio appellatur. In English thus; In that these men (he speaketh of married Priests) do put on the holy Vestments, or do touch the holy Vessels, they do lay violent hands upon Christ. And in that they presume impudently to offer, they do in a manner visibly crucify Christ upon the Altar. The ministry of such is read to be a persecution, or rather a Crucifying of Christ, &c.

The conclusion or censure of Anselm upon married Priests.

Loe here the mighty Reasons, the strong timbered Arguments, and the deep Divinity wherewith this Anselm and all other that draw after his thing, go about to impugn the lawfulness of Priests marriage. Because the Israelites when they should appear before the Lord at Mount Sinai, were commanded to be kept from their Wives three days; and because the Priests of the old Law in doing their Function, as their turn came about, refrained the company of their Wives for that present time; Ergo, Priests of the new Law must at no time have any Wives, but live always single, &c.

And why might not Anselm as well argue thus: the People of Israel approaching to the Mount, were commanded in like sort to wash their Garments; Ergo, Priests of the new Law, which are occupied every day about the Altar, ought every day to wash all their Garments.

Moses, approaching to the presence of the Lord in the Bush, was commanded to put off his shoes; Ergo, Priests of the new Law, which are ever approaching to the presence of their God, should never wear shoes.

Of King David and his company, which but once in all their life did eat of the Shew-bread, it was demanded by the high Priest, whether they had kept them from their Wives three days before: Ergo, Kings and the people of the new Testament, which every year eat the Bread of the Lords Board, more precious than ever was that Panis Propositionis, should abide all their life wifeless and unspoused.

But here Anselm should have considered by these Scriptures, how we are taught not to put away our Wives, but wisely to distinguish times, when and how to have them. For as Solomon teacheth that there is a time for all things; so is there a time to marry; and a time not to marry, a time to resort, a time to withdraw, a time of company, a time of abstinence and Prayer; which S. Paul calleth, ἡσυχασμός; and as he speaketh of a time of Prayer and abstinence, so he speaketh also of a time of resorting together, and addeth the cause why; Ne tentet vos Satanas propter incontinentiam vestram, &c. That is, Left Satan, saith he, tempt you for your incontinency.

And thus should Anselm, with Solomon and Paul, have considered the order and distinction of time. Oftentimes in Scripture that is commanded to some and at some time, which extendeth not to others. And that which for a time is convenient, is not by and always convenient. Neither that which for a time is forbidden in Scripture, is therefore forbidden for ever. Neither ought special examples to break general orders; neither again do extraordinary prohibitions make an universal rule.

They were then commanded to sequester themselves from their Wives at the coming of the Lord; not that the coming of the Lord did break Wedlock, but his commandment did bind obedience and therefore obeyed they, because they were commanded. And yet were they not commanded to put away their Wives, but only to separate themselves for a time, and that not for Months and Years, but only for three days: which abstinence also was enjoined them, not in the presence, nor at the appearing of the Lord, but three days before his descending to them on the hill. Whereby it appeareth, that the use of their Wedlock neither displeased God being present, nor yet did drive his presence away when he was come; for he remained there present amongst them on the hill forty days notwithstanding.

Furthermore, this time of separation from their Wives, as it was expressly commanded to them of God, so was it not long nor tedious, but such as was neither hard for them, nor inconvenient for the time: giving us thereby to understand, how to use separation in Wedlock wisely, that is, neither at no time, nor yet too long.

For as they do not well, which never follow the time of Saint Paul called, ἡσυχασμός, for abstinence and Prayer: so do they worse which fall into that ἡσυχασμός, whereof Saint Paul again giveth us warning. Ne tentet vos Satanas per incontinentiam vestram. But worst of all do they, which so separate their Wives clean from them, and so abjure all Matrimony, that they fall headlong into the Devils pitfall of fornication and all filthy abomination. And therefore the Lord foreseeing the peril thereof, said unto the people, Estote parati in diem tertium, &c. Appointing indeed a separation from their Wives; but yet, knowing the infirmity of Man, limiteth the time withal, adding, in diem tertium and goeth no further.

He saith not, as Anselm laid in the Council of Winchester, Jurabunt Presbyteri, Diaconi, & Subdiaconi, uxores suas omnino abjicare, nec ullam deinceps cum iis conversationem habere, sub distinctione censure, &c.

The like order also was taken by the Lord with the Priests of the Old Testament, who although they were enjoined to withdraw themselves from their Wives during the time of their Priestly service, yet for avoiding fornication they were permitted to have their Wives notwithstanding. So that both their absenting from their Wives served to Sanctification, and their resorting again unto them served to Avoid Adultery and Fornication.

But here our Priestly Prelates will object, That because they be continually conversant about the Priestly Function,

A time for all things.

Special examples break no general orders.

Separation of the Monks from their Wives for three days is no Argument that Priests should never marry.

Separation in Wedlock, how it is to be used.

Exod. 19.

Objection of the Papists why Priests should leave Wives.

tion, therefore a perpetual sanctification is of them specially required. Whereupon I answer.

1. First, The Prieſtly Function of thoſe high Prieſts, Sacrificing for the people in the old Law, repreſenteth only the Function of Chriſt the High-prieſt, Sacrificing for the Sins of the World, which truly and only performed that pure chaſtity in his ſanctified Body, which the Law then in thoſe Prieſts prefigured.

2. Secondly, ſpeaking now of the Prieſts of the New Teſtament (and ſpeaking properly) the Scripture neither knoweth nor admitteth any Prieſt to Sacrifice to God for the Sins of Man, but only the high King and Prieſt Chriſt Jeſus.

3. Unto that Prieſt all other be but Servants and Miniſters; of whom ſome be Apoſtles, ſome Prophets, ſome Evangelists, ſome Preachers, having the gift of utterance, ſome Interpreters and Doctors, having the gift of underſtanding, ſome Deacons ſerving the Lords board. The Office of all whom chiefly conſiſteth in miniſtring the Word, next in adminiſtring the Sacraments.

4. Fourthly, Forasmuch as in theſe, principally above all other, pureneſs and Sanctification of life is required, as much and more too, than was in the Prieſts of the old Law, and from whom all Fornication, Adultery, Inceſt, and uncleaneſs of life ought moſt to be baniſhed; therefore in theſe eſpecially, above the Prieſts of the old Law, Matrimony and Spouſe is moſt requiſite and convenient, whoſeever he be, which otherwiſe cannot contain; according to the Apoſtle, ſaying, Unuſquiſque uxorem ſuam habeat propter fornicationem.

5. Fifthly. Neither is this Matrimony in theſe any hindrance to their Sanctification before God, but rather furthereth and helpeth their ſanctification, forasmuch as where Matrimony is not, there commonly reigneth Adultery, Fornication and all kinds of filthineſs; according to the true ſaying of Bernard, Talis de Eccleſia honorabile concubium, & thorum immaculatum, nonne repleam Concubinarum, inceſtuos, ſeminiſus, molibus, maſcularum concubitoribus & omni denique genere immundorum? That is, Take from the Church honourable marriage, and the bed undefiled, ſhalt thou not repleniſh it with Concubines, with inceſtuous perſons, Sodomitical vices, and finally with all kind of beaſtly filthineſs?

The truth of which ſaying lacketh no kind of examples for confirmation, if we liſted here to ranſack the lives of theſe glorious deſpiſers of Matrimony, even from Lanſfrank, the firſt Ring-leader of this dance here in England, with * Paulus Monk of Cadene his Nephew whom Matthew Paris miſdoubted to be his own Son, even to Stephen Gardiner with his Gold Locks, the Author and Work-maſter of theſe ſix Articles. But to the Reaſons of Anſelme hitherto ſufficient, which of themſelves are ſo frivolous and groſs, that only to recite them is enough to confute the ſame.

Permitting therefore the reſt to the diſcuſſing of Divines, it ſhall ſuffice for our purpoſe, profeſſing here to write Stories, to declare and make manifeſt by proceſs of times and Hiſtories, that this cruel Law, compelling Miniſters of the Church to abjure Matrimony, entred not into this land before Lanſfranke and Anſelme his Succeſſor, as both may appear by the multitude of Prieſts Sons lawfully begotten in Matrimony, and ſucceeding in the Churches here in England, ſcited by the Epistle of Pope Faſchals to Anſelme before, and alſo may appear likewiſe by the Council of Anſelme, holden at Wincheſter, which, partly was touched before, and now the full Act we have more largely expreſſed to be read and ſeen of all poſterity, as under followeth.

The Act againſt Prieſts Marriage, concluded in the Council at Wincheſter, under Anſelme, Anno 1104.

Ita ſunt Statuta de Archidiaconis, Presbyteris, & Canonici in quocunque gradu constituti, que Wintonie constituerunt Anselmus Archiepiscopus Cantuariensis, & cum eo, Girardus Archiepiscopus Eboracensis, et omnes alii Anglia Episcopi, in presentia gloriosi Regis Henrici, assensu omnium Baronum, iurorum. Statutum est ut Presbyteri et Diaconi caste vivant, et feminas in domibus suis non habeant prater proxima conjugumque sibi junctas, *secundum hoc quod sancta Nicena Synodus definiit. Illi vero Presbyteri, Diaconi, sive Subdiaconi, qui post interdictum Londonensis Concilii, feminas suas tenuerint vel alias duxerint, si elegerint in sacris Ordinibus remanere, jurent quod cum eis carnale commercium non habebunt amplius. Statutum est etiam ut predicta femina in domo cum eis scienter non conveniant, neque hujusmodi femina in territorio Ecclesie habuerint. Si autem propter aliquam honestam causam eos colloqui oporteat, cum duobus ad minus legitimis testibus extra domum colloquantur. Si vero in duobus aut tribus legitimis testibus vel publica parochianorum fama, aliquis eorum accusatus fuerit, quod hoc statutum transierit, purgabit se adiunctis secum ordinis sui idoneis testibus, sex si Presbyter, quinque si Diaconus, quatuor si Subdiaconus fuerit. Cui autem hac purgatio defecerit, ut transgressor sacri Statuti judicabitur. Illi vero Presbyteri qui divini Altaris et sacrorum Ordinum contemptores preceperint cum uxoriis suis habitare, a divini officio remoti, extra * hortum penantur, infames pronuntiantur. Eadem sententia Archidiaconos et Canonicos omnes complectitur, et de abjiciendis uxoriis, et de vitanda earum conversatione, et destructione censura si statuta transgressi fuerint. Jurantur et Archidiaconi omnes quod pecuniam non accipiant pro toleranda transgressione hujus Statuti. Sed neque ullo modo tolerabunt Presbyteros uxoriis carere, vel vicarios habere, et quod ipsi non dissimulabunt per Archidiaconos suos hoc inquirere, et fideliter Episcopus suis renuntiabunt, et attente, et fideliter de exequenda hujus rei vindicta Episcopos suos adjuvabunt. Qui vero Archidiaconus, vel Diaconus hoc jurare noluerit, Archidiaconatus vel Diaconatus irrevocabiler perdet. Presbyteri vero, qui relictis uxoriis Deo et sacris Ordinibus servare elegerint, quadraginta dies ab officio cessantes, pro se vicarios habebunt, inuncta eis penitentia secundum quod Episcopus eorum visum fuerit.*

And yet this unreasonable Statute of Anſelme, ſo diligent defended with ſharp Cenſures and Penalties, had no great ſpeed, neither in the life time of the ſaid Anſelme, nor long after his death, but divers Prieſts notwithstanding living kept ſtil their Wives, or after his death, they returned to their Wives again, through the ſufferance of the Famous and Learned King, named then Henry Bewelark, who ſomething ſtayed the Importunity of this Monkliſh Prelat, and willed the Prieſts ſhould keep both their Wives and their Churches, as they did before in Lanſfranks days.

Then after Anſelme followed Radulphus Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in whole time was no great ſtir againſt the Prieſts that were married. About the time of this Archbiſhop King Henry called a Council at London, where he obtained of the Spirituality a grant to have the puniſhment of married Prieſts (which the Spirituality afterward did much repent) whereby the Prieſts, paying a certain ſum to the King, were ſuffered to retain their Wives ſtill, as is above ſtoied.

Next after this Radulph, then ſucceeded William Turbiline, ſurnamed De Turbine, who renewed again the conſtitution of Anſelme againſt married Prieſts, eſpecially by the help of Joannes Prieſt and Cardinal of Crema, the Popes Legate, ſent the ſame time into England, Anno 1129. Of which Cardinal Cremeniſis, becauſe enough hath been before declared, how after his ſtout replying in the Council of London, againſt the married ſtate of Prieſt exclaiming what a ſhameful thing it was to riſe from the ſides of a Whore to make Chriſts Body, the night following he was ſhamefully taken with a notable Whore, &c. as is apparent before.

I will therefore paſs over that matter, returning again to William the Archbiſhop, who with the Cardinal Legate aforeſaid, although he buſily occupied himſelf in re-proving the Matrimony of Prieſts, inſomuch that he would give them no longer reſpite to put away their Wives but from Michaelmas to Saint Andrews-day following, yet could he not bring his purpoſe to paſs, but that the Prieſts ſtill continued with their Wives by the Kings leave, as the Saxon Story plainly recordeth in theſe words: This beſede Archbiſcop William of Canterbrige, and ealle thelede Biſcopes the the woren on Engelen, and neforſod nobe ealle the biſcopes. ealle beuden the piſes be thes kinges leve, ſwa ſwa hi ear didon; That is to ſay in Engliſh,

Answer to the obj. di. ou.

No ſervice for ſin but only Chriſt.

Marriage more convenient for Prieſts of the new law than of the old.

1 Cor. 7.

Matrimony is no hindrance, but a furtherance to ſanctification.

Cronic. Sax. on.

English, This William Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishops which were in England did command, and yet all these Decrees and Biddings stood not: all held their Wives by the Kings leave, even so as they before did. So hard was this Cause to be won, that the Archbishop at length gave it over, and left the Controversie wholly unto the King. Whereupon he decreed that the Priests should remain with their Wives still. And so continued they after that, in the time of Theobaldus after him, of Thomas Becket, Richard Baldwin, Stephen Langton, Richard Edmund, Boniface, Peckham, and other, during well-near the time after Anselme, two hundred years.

And least the quarrelling Adversary, being peradventure disposed here to cavil, should object and say that such marriage amongst the Spiritual Men might be private and secret, but not openly known, nor quietly suffered by any Law of this Realm: to avoid therefore what may be by them objected, I thought it good, and as a thing neither impertinent nor unprofitable to this Story, and for the further satisfying of the Readers mind herein, to infer and make known by good Record, not only that the liberty of marriage amongst Spiritual Men, hath continued within this Realm during the time aforesaid (videlicet) two hundred years, or thereabouts, after Anselme, and not only in secret wise, but also openly, and the same being well known, suffered, and lawfully allowed of, in such sort, as both they, their Wives, Children, and Assigns might inherit and enjoy Lands, Tenements, and other Hereditaments, by way of Feoffment, Deed of Gifts, or any other Assurance, in such sort, manner and form, as Lay-men, their Heirs and Assigns at this day lawfully may do. As by divers Writings and Instruments shewed to us at the writing hereof, by divers Men whose names hereafter follow (some to this day remaining fair sealed, some by Antiquity and long keeping much worn and their Seals mouldered and wasted) is very evident and manifest to be seen. The Copies whereof being by us truly and faithfully excerpted out of the very Originals (being yet extant) we have hereunder inserted, as followeth.

Clericus ad Ecclesiam confugiens pro felonis, pro
immunitate Ecclesiastica obtinenda, si asserit se esse Clericum, regnum non compellatur abjurare, sed legi regni se reddens gaudebit Ecclesiastica libertate, juxta laudabilem consuetudinem regni hactenus usitatam.

Not long after that, about the time of Pope Nicolas Anno 1069; the Second, Anno 1060. of Alexander and Hildebrand, came into the See of Canterbury another Monk called Lawfrank, who also, being a promoter of this professed Chastity, made the Decree more general, that all Prebendaries being married in any Churches should be displaced; yet the Priests in Towns and Villages should not be compelled to leave their married Wives, unless they would.

Anno 1106. Last of all followed Monkish Anselme, Anno 1106. by whom was made this Law at Winchester aforesaid, that Priests, Arch-deacons, Deacons and Sub-deacons, which had Wives and Spiritual Livings, should be put from them both; and also that none after should be admitted to their Orders, but should first profess single life, that is, to live without Wives. And thus much concerning Priests marriage forbidden.

Let us add moreover to these Evidences above rehearsed, for more confirmation of the ancient use and liberty of Priests marriage, another testimony or two out of like ancient Records, with like plain words declaring unto us, how the Matrimony of Priests, before the time of Lanfrank aforesaid, was no strange example in the Church. And first we will infer the words of an old Martyrologue pertaining to the Records of Canterbury. The words of which Martyrologue be these.

Ex antiquo Martyrologio Ecclesie Cant.

To this also may be adjoined another like Antiquity out of an old written History belonging to the Church of S. Asaph, after the time of Lanfrank, as followeth.

Anno Domini 1261. ex antiq. libro Asaph. Manuscripto.

Si vero Uxor alienius talia scilicet vel volenter in eius absentia receperit, Mulier in foro Ecclesiastico respondeat, & Clericus ratione sui facti non puniatur, nec pro ea, (nisi velit) respondere cogatur.*

Neither is the testimony of Mantuanus unworthy also hereunto to be added, writing in the Life of Hilarius Bishop of Pisavum, as followeth.

The sixth Article, touching Auricular Confession.

OF Confession three things we find in the Scriptures expressed and approved. The first is our Confession on privately and publickly made unto God alone; and this Confession is necessary, for all men at all times. Wherefore S. John speaketh, If we confess our sins, he is faithful to forgive, &c.

The second is the Confession which is openly made in the face of the Congregation. And this Confession also hath place when any such thing is committed, whereof is a publick offence and slander to the Church of God; as examples there be of Penitentiaries in the Primitive Church, as Melchior and other, &c.

The third kind of Confession is that which we make privately to our Brother. And this Confession is requisite, when either we have injured or by any way damaged our Neighbour, whether he be rich or poor. Whereof speaketh the Gospel, Go and reconcile thy self first unto thy Neighbour, &c. Also S. James, Confess your selves one to another, &c. Or else this Confession may also have place, when any such thing lieth in our Confidence, in the opening whereof we stand in need of the counsel and comfort of some faithful Brother. But herein must we use discretion in avoiding these points of blind Superstition. First, That we put therein no necessity for remission of our sins, but that we use therein our own voluntary discretion, according as we see it expedient for the better satisfying of our troubled mind. The second is, That we be not bound to any enumeration of our sins. The third, That we tye not our selves to any one person, more than to another, but that we use therein our free choice, whom we think can give us the best Spiritual counsel in the Lord.

But as there is nothing in the Church so good and so ghostly, which through peevish Superstition either hath not, or may not be perverted; so this Confession also hath not lacked his abuses. First, The secret Confession to God alone, as it hath been counted insufficient; so hath it been but lightly esteemed of many. The publick Confession to the Congregation hath been turned to a standing in a heet, or else hath been bought out for money. Furthermore, the secret breaking of a mans mind to some faithful or spiritual Brother, in disclosing his infirmity or temptations, for counsel and godly comfort, hath in like sort been turned into Auricular Confession in a Priests ear, for assuaging of his sins. In which Auricular Confession, first of the free liberty of the Penitent, in uttering his griefs, they have made a meer necessity, and that unto salvation and remission of sins. Secondly, They require without enumeration and a full rehearsal of all sins whatsoever, both great and small. Also besides the necessity of this ear Confession, they add thereto a prescription of time, at least once in the year for all men, whether they repent or no, to be confessed; making moreover of the same a Sacrament, and lastly, whereas before it stood in the voluntary choice of a man to open his heart to what Spiritual Brother he thought best, for an easment of his grief and ghostly Consolation, they bind him to a Priest (unless some Friar come by the way to be his ghostly Father) to whom he must needs confess all, whatsoever he hath done, and though he lack the Key of Knowledge, and peradventure of good discretion, yet none must have power to assuile him, but he through the Authority of his Keys.

And this manner of Confession, they say, was instituted by Christ, and his Apostles, and hath been used in the Church ever since to this present day. Which is a most manifest untruth, and easie by Stories to be convinced.

For Soc. li. 5. c. 19. and Soc. li. 7. c. 16. in the Book of Ecclesiastical History, do give us plainly to understand that this Auricular Confession never came of Christ, but only of Man.

Item, In the time of Tertullian, Beatus Rhenanus testifieth, that there was no mention made of this Auricular Confession. Which may well be gathered hereof, for that Tertullian writing upon Repentance, maketh no mention at all thereof.

Three kinds of Confession to God.

Chryf. in hom. de pen. & conf. Juliane. Item, The faid Chryfoftom in another place writing upon Repentance and Confession, Let the examination of thy fins and thy judgment, faith he, be fecret and clofe without witnefs; let God only fee and hear thy Confession, &c.

De pen. diff. 1. Perus in Gloffa. Item, In the time of Ambrofe, de Penit. Diff. 1. Perus, the Glofs of the Popes own Decrees reporteth, That the Institution of Penance was not then begun, which now in our days is in ufe.

De pen. diff. in principio. Item, It is truly faid therefore of the Glofs in another place, where he testifieth, That this Institution of Penance began rather of some Tradition of the Univerfal Church, then of any Authority of the New Testament, or of the Old, &c.

Erasm. in Schol. in Epiaphani. Fabiola. The like alfo testifieth Erasmus, writing upon Jerome, in thefe words, Apparet tempore Hieronymi nondum instituta fuisse, &c. That is, It appeareth that in the time of Jerome, this fecret Confession of fins was not yet ordained, which the Church afterward did institute wholly only, if our Priests and Lay-men would use it rightly. But herein, Divines not confidering advifedly what the old Doctors do fay, are much deceived. That which they fay of general and open Confession, they wret by and by to this privy and fecret kind of Confession which is far divers, and of another fort, &c.

Graden de penit. diff. 1. Quamvis. The like Testimony may alfo be taken of Gratian himfelf, who fpeaking of Confession used then in his time, leaving the matter in doubtful fufpence, neither pronouncing on the one fide, nor on the other, but referreth the matter to the free judgment of the Readers, which the Act of thefe fix Articles here enjoyneeth as neceffary, under pain of death.

The first Institution of Auricular Confession, when and by whom it began. Briefly, in few words to fearch out and notifie the very certain time, when this Article of car Confession firft crept into the Church, and what Antiquity it hath, in following the Judgment of Joannes Scotus, and of Antonius, it may well be fuppofed, that the Institution thereof took his firft original by Pope Innocent the Third, in his Council of Laterane, Anno 1215. For fo we read in Joan. Scotus, Lib. 4. Sent. Diff. 17. Artic. 3. Præcipua autem specificatio hujus præcepti invenitur in illo cap. Extra de penit. & remiff. Omnis uiriusque fexus, &c.

Joan. Scot. 4. Non Diff. 17. Artic. 3. And after in the fame Article it followeth, Nam ex prima institutione Ecclesiæ non videtur fuisse distincti proprii Sacerdotes. Quando enim Apostoli vincti & inde ibant predicando verbum Dei, &c. By the which words it appeareth that there was no Institution of any fuch Confession fpecified before the Constitution of Pope Innocentius the Third.

Antonius part. 1. diff. 19. But more plainly the fame may appear by the words of Antonius in 3. parte Hist. which be thefe: Innocentius tertius in Concilio Generali prædicto, circa Sacramenta Confessionis & Communionis sic statuit: Omnis utriusque fexus fidelis postquam ad annum discretionis pervenerit, omnia peccata sua (solus, scilicet semel) in Anno, confiteatur proprio Sacerdoti, & inquantam sibi penitentiam proprii viribus student adimplere, aliqui & vivens ab ingressu Ecclesiæ arceatur, & mortui Christiana careat sepultura. Unde hoc salutare Statutum frequenter in Ecclesiis publicetur: ne quisquam ignorantia excitate velamen excusationis assumat, &c. That is to fay, Pope Innocent the Third, in his General Council aforesaid, touching the Sacraments of Confession and the Communion, made this Constitution, as followeth. That every faithful person, both man and woman, after they come to the years of discretion, shall confesse all their fins by themselves alone, at least once a year, to their own ordinary Priest, and shall endeavour to fulfil by their own strength their Penance to them enjoined. Or else who so doth not, shall neither have entrance into the Church, being alive, nor being dead, shall enjoy Christian burial. Wherefore this wholefool Constitution we will to be published often in the Churches, lest any man through the blindness of Ignorance, may make to themselves a Cloak of Excuse, &c. And thus much hitherto we have alledged by occasion incident of these

The Constitution of Pope Innocent, touching the Auricular Confession. six Articles for some part of confusion of the same, referring the Reader, for the rest, to the more exquisite tractation of Divines, which professedly write upon those matters.

In the mean time, forasmuch as there is extant in Latin a certain learned Epistle of Philip Melancthon, written to King Henry the Eighth against these wicked Articles above specified, I thought not to defraud the Reader of the Fruit thereof, for his better understanding and instruction. The tenour and effect of his Epistle translated into English thus followeth.

The Copy of Melancthon's Epistle sent to King Henry, against the cruel Act of the six Articles.

MOST famous and noble Prince, there was certain a fruitful Emperor of Rome, as Adrianus, Pius, and afterward the two Brethren, Verus and Marcus, which did receive gently the Apologies and Defences of the Christians; which so prevailed with those moderate Princes, that they swaged their wrath against the Christians, and obtained mitigation of their cruel Decrees: Even so, forasmuch as there is a Decree set forth of late in your Realm against that Doctrine which we profess, both godly and necessary for the Church, I beseech your most honourable Majesty favourably both to read and consider this our complaint, especially seeing I have not only for our own cause, but much rather for the common safeguard of the Church, directed this my writing unto you. For seeing those Heathen Princes did both admit and allow the defences of the Christians, how much more is it becoming for a King of Christian Profession, and such a one as is occupied in the studies of holy Histories, to hear the Complaints and Admonitions of the godly in the Church? and so much the more willingly I write unto you, for that you have so favourably heretofore received my Letters with a singular declaration of your Benevolence towards me. This also giveth me some hope that you will not unwillingly read these things, forasmuch as I see that the very phrase and manner of writing doth plainly declare, not your self, but only the Bishops to be the Authors of those Articles and Decrees there set forth; albeit, through their wily and subtle Sophistifications, they have induced you (as it hapned to many other worthy Princes besides you) to condescend and assent unto them, as the Rulers persuaded Darius, being otherwise a wife and just Prince, to cast Daniel unto the Lions.

It was never unfeemly for a good Prince to correct and reform cruel and rigorous Laws (as it is commonly said) to have a second view and oversight of things before passed and decreed.

The wife Athenians made a Decree when the City of Mitylene was recovered, which before had forsaken them that all the Citizens there should be slain, and the City utterly destroyed. Whereupon there was a Ship sent forth with the same Commandment to the Army. On the next morrow the matter was brought again before the same Judges, and after better advice taken, there was a contrary Decree made; that the whole multitude should not be put to the Sword, but a few of the chiefest Authors of their Rebellion should be punished, and the City saved. There was therefore another Ship sent forth with a Countermand in all haste to overtake and prevent their former Ship, as also it happened. Neither was that noble City, which then ruled and reigned far and wide, ashamed to alter and reform their former Decree. Many such examples there be, the most part whereof I am sure are well known unto you. But in the Church especially Princes have many times altered and reformed their Decrees, as Nebuchodonsor and Darius. There was a Decree set forth in the name of Affuerus, concerning the killing of the Jews: that Decree was afterwards called in again. So did Adrianus and Antoninus also correct and reform their Decrees.

Therefore, although there be a Decree set forth in England, which threateth strange punishments and penalties, disagreeing from the custom of the true Church, and swerving from the Rules and Canons thereof; yet I thought it not unseemly for us to become Petitioners unto you, for the mitigation of these your sharp and severe proceedings. The which, when I consider it, grieveth my mind, not only for the peril and danger of them which profess the same Doctrine that we do, but also I do lament for your cause, that they should make you an Instrument and a Minister of their bloody Tyranny and Impiety. And partly also I lament to see the course of Christian Doctrine perverted, superstitious Rites confirmed, Whoredom and lecherous Lusts maintained.

Besides all this, I hear of divers good men, excelling both in Doctrine and Vertue, to be there detained in Prison, as Latimer, Cromer, Shaxton, and others, to whom I wish strength, patience, and consolation in the Lord. Unto whom, albeit there can nothing happen more luckily or more gloriously, then to give their lives in the Confession of the manifest Truth and Verity; yet would I wish that you should not disdain your hands with the blood of such men; neither would I wish such Lanthoms of Light in your Church to be extinguished; neither these spiteful and malicious Pharisees, the enemies of Christ, to have their wills so much fulfilled; neither again would I wish that you should so much serve the will and desire of that Romish Antichrist, which laugheth in his sleeve to see you now to take part with him against us, hoping well, by the help of his Bishops, to recover again his former Possession, which of late by your virtues and godly means he lost: he seeth your Bishops for the time loyal unto you, and obsequious to obey your will; but in heart he seeth them linked unto him in a perpetual bond of Fidelity and Obedience. In all these feats and practices the Romish Bishops are not to seek. They see what great storms and blasts therefore they have passed by bearing and suffering. They see that great things be brought to pass in time. Neither do they forget the old Verse of the Poet:

— Retulit in melius.*

Many good and learned men in Germany conceived of you great hope, that by your Authority and example other Princes also would be provoked to surcease likewise from their unjust Cruelty, and better to advise themselves for the Reformation of Errors crept into the Church; trusting that you would be as a Guide and Captain of that godly purpose and enterprise. But now seeing these your contrary proceedings, we are utterly discouraged; and the indignation of other Princes is confirmed; the stubbornness of the wicked is augmented; and old and great Errors are thereby established.

But here your Bishops will say again, no doubt, That they defend no Errors, but the very Truth of Godsholy Word. And although they be not ignorant that they strive in very deed both against the true Word of God, and the Apostolick Church, yet like crafty Sophisters they can find out fair glosses, pretending a goodly shew outwardly, to colour their Errors and Abuses.

And this sophistication not only now in England is had in great admiration, and esteemed for great wisdom; neither in Rome only reigneth, where Cardinal Contarminus, Sadolet, and Cardinal Pool, go about to paint out Abuses with new colours and goodly glosses; but also in Germany divers Noblemen are likewise corrupted and seduced with the like sophistication. And therefore I nothing marvel that so many there with you be deceived with these crafty jugglings. And although you for your part lack neither learning nor judgment, yet sometimes we see it so happen, that wise men also be carried away, by fair and colourable persuasions, from the Verity.

The saying of Simonides is praiseworthy, Opinion (saith he) many times perverteth Verity. And many times false Opinion hath outwardly a fairer shew than simple Truth: and specially it so happeneth in cases of Religion, where the Devil transformeth himself into an Angel of Light, setting forth, with all colourable and goodly shews, false Opinions. How fair seemeth the Glois of Samosatenus upon the Gospel of S. John. In the beginning was the Word, &c. and yet is it full of Impiety. But I omit foreign Examples.

In these Articles of yours, how many things are craftily and deceitfully devised? Confession, faith the Article, is necessary, and ought to be retained. And why say they not plainly, That the rehearsing and numbering up of sins is necessary by Gods Word? This the Bishops knew well to be very false, and therefore in the Article they placed their words generally, to bear the eyes of the simple people, that when they hear confession to be necessary, they should thereby think the enumeration of sins to be necessary by Gods Word.

The like Legerdmain also they use in the Article of private Masses, albeit the beginning of the said Article containeth a manifest untruth, where they say that it is necessary to retain private Masses. What man in all the Primitive Church, more then four hundred years after the Apostles time, did ever so say or think, at what time there were no such private Masses used: for afterward in the process of the Article follow other blind sophistications, to make the People believe that they should receive by them Divine Consolations and Benefits. And why do they not plainly declare what Consolations and Benefits those be? The Bishops here do name no application and merit, for they know that they cannot be defended. Yet they dally, with glossing words, whereby they winde out and escape, if any should improve their application. And yet notwithstanding they would have this their application to be understood and believed of the People. They would have this idolatrous perversion confirmed, to wit, that this Sacrifice doth merit unto others remission à pana & culpa; release of all Calamities, and also gain and lucre in common Traffick, and to conclude, whatsoever else the careful heart of man doth desire.

The like sophistication they use also, where they say that Priests marriage is against the Law of God. They are not ignorant what S. Paul saith, A Bishop ought to be the Husband of one Wife: and therefore they know right well that marriage is permitted to Priests by the Law of God. But because now they say they have made a Vow, they go craftily to work, and do not say that Priests for their Vows sake cannot marry, but plainly give out the Article after this sort; That marriage of Priests is utterly against the Law of God. Again, what impudency and tyranny do they shew moreover, when they compel marriages to be dissolved, and command those to be put to death which will not put away their Wives, and renounce their Matrimony? Whereas the Vow of Priests, if it had any force at all, should extend no further, but only to put them from the Ministry if they would marry. And this, no doubt, is the true meaning of the Councils and Canons.

O cursed Bishops! O impudent and wicked Wincheſter! who under these colourable fetches thinketh to deceive the eyes of Christ, and the judgments of all the godly in the whole World. These things have I written, that you may understand the crafty sleights, and so judge of the purpose and policy of these Bishops. For if they would simply and heartily search for the Truth, they would not use these crafty Collusions and deceitful jugglings.

This sophistication, as it is in all other affairs pernicious and odious, so above all things, most specially it is to be avoided in matters of Religion: wherein it is a heinous Impiety to corrupt or pervert the pure Word of God. And hereof the Devil, which is called Diabolus, specially taketh his name, because he wresteth the Word of God out of mens hearts by such false juggling and sophistical Cavillations. And why do not these Bishops as well plainly utter and confess, that they will abide no Reformation of Doctrine and Religion in the Church, for that it shall make against their Dignity, Pomp, and Pleasure? Why do not their Adherents also, and such as take their part, plainly say that they will retain still this present state of the Church, for their own profit, tranquillity, and maintenance? Thus to confess were true and plain dealing.

Now whilst they pretend hypocritically a false zeal and loveto the Truth and sincere Religion, they come in with their blind sophistications, whereby they cover their Errors. For their Articles set forth in this Act be erroneous, false and impious, how glorious soever soever they seem outwardly. Wherefore it were to be wished that these Bishops would remember Gods terrible threatnings in the Prophet Isaiah; Wo to you (saith he) which make wicked Laws; what will you do in the day of visitation and calamity to come? &c. Wo unto you that call evil good, &c.

in hand; this cannot be denied, but that long and horrible darkness hath been in the Church of Christ. Mens Traditions not only have been a yoke to good Mens Conferences, but also (which is much worse) they have been reputed for Gods holy service, to the great dishonour of God. There were Vows, things bequeathed to Churches, diversity of Garments, choice of Meats, long babbling Prayers, Pardons, Image-worship, manifest Idolatry committed to Saints, the true Worship of God, and true good Works not known. Briefly, little difference there was betwixt the Chritlian and Heathen Religion, as fill is yet to Rome to this present day to be seen. The true Doctrine of Repentance, of Remission of Sins, which cometh by Faith, and the true Judgment of Faith, with, the difference between the Law and the Gospel, the right use of the Sacraments, was hid and unknown. The Keyes were abused to the maintenance of the Popes usurped tyranny. Ceremonies of Mens invention were much preferred before Civil Obedience and duties done in the Common-Wealth.

Unto these things moreover was joyed a corrupt life, full of all lecherous and filthy lusts; by reason of the Law forbidding Priests to marry. Out of this miserable darkness God doth something hath begun to deliver his Church through the reſorting again to true Doctrine. For ſo we muſt needs acknowledge, that theſe fo great and long eſtimated errors have not been diſcloſed and brought to light by the induſtry of Man; but this light of the Goſpel is only the Gift of God, who now again hath appeared unto the Church. For ſo doth the holy Ghoſt prophecy before-hand in the later times the Godly ſhould ſuſtain fore and perilous conflicts with Antichriſt, fore-ſeeing that he ſhould come, environed with a mighty and ſtrong Army of Biſhops, hypocrites, and Princes; that he ſhould fight againſt the Truth, and ſlay the Godly.

And that no all these things are so come to pass, it is most evident and cannot be denied. The tyranny of the Bishop of Rome hath partly brought in errors into the Church, partly hath confirmed them, and now maintaineth the fame with force and violence, as Deu well forebowed. And much we rejoyce to see you divided from him, hoping and trusting well that the Church of England would now flourish. But your Bishops be not divided from the Romish Antichrist; his Idolatry, Errors, and Vices they defend and maintain with tooth and nail; for the Articles now passed are craftily picked out. They confirm all Humane Traditions, in that they establish folem Vows, single Life, and Auricular Confession. They uphold and advance not only their pride and authority, but all errors withal, in retaining the private Mass.

Thus have they craftily provided that no Reformation can take any place, that their dignity and wealth may still be upheld. And this to be the purpose of the Bishops, experience'll felt doth plainly teach us. Now what Man will not lament to fee the glory of Christ thus to be defaced? For as I said before | this matter concerneth not only these Articles which be there enacted, but all other Articles of found Doctrine are likewise overthrowen, if such Traditions of Men shall be reputed as necessary, and to be retained. For why doth Christ say, For they worship me in vain with the precepts of Men? or why doth Saint Paul to ofsettle Mens Traditions?

It is no light offence to set up new kinds of worship, piping and ferving of God without his Word, or to defend the same. Such presumption God doth horribly detest, which will be known in his Word only. He will have none other Religions invented by Mans devise; for élse all sorts of Religions of all Nations might be approved and allowed. Lean not (saith he) to thine own wisdom. - But he sent Christ, and commanded us to hear him, and not the invention of subtle and politick heads;

which apply Religion to their own lucre and commodity.

Further, the private Mafis, Vows, the Engliſh-life of Prieſts, numbering up of Sins to the Prieſt, with other things more, being but mean ordinances of M. and offered for Gods true ſervice and w^ol^oſhip. For altho^ugh, the Supper of the Lord was truly inſtituted by Chriſt, yet the private Mafſ is a wicked prophaneation of the Lords Supper. For in the Canon, what a corruption is contained in this, where it is ſaid, That Chriſt is Chere, and that the work it ſelf is a Sacrifice which redeemeth the quick and the dead? Theſe things were never ordained of Chriſt; yea manifold ways they are repugnant to the Goſpel. Chriſt willett not himſelf to be offered up of Prieſts, neither can the work of the offerer, or of the receiver, by any means be a Sacrifice. This is manifeſt Idolatry and overthroweth the true Doctrine of M. and the true uſe of the Sacraments. By Faith in Chriſt we are juſtified, and not by any work of the Prieſts. And the Supper is ordained that the Minifter ſhould diſtribute to others, to the intent, that they repenting for their Sins ſhould be admoniſhed firmly to believe the promiſes of the Goſpel to pertain unto them. Here is ſet a plain testimony before us, that we are made the members of Chriſt, and waſhed by his Blood.

And this is the true use of that Supper, which is ordained in the Gospel, and was observed in the Primitive Church three hundred years and more, from the which we ought not to be removed. For it is plain inability to transfer the Lords Institution to any other use, as we are taught by the second Commandment. Wherefore these private Masses, forsooth as they derive from the right Institution of Christ manifold ways, as by Oblation, Sacrifice, Application, and many other ways besides, they are not to be retained, but to be abolished. Flide (saith Saint Paul) From all Idolatry. In these private Masses much Idolatry is committed, which we see our Bishops now so fluently to defend; and no marvel. For in the later times the Scripture plainly sheweth that great Idolatry hath reigned in the Church of God. As Christ himself also signifieth, saying, When ye shall see the abomination of desolation, which is foretold of the Prophet Daniel, standing in the holy place, he that readeth, let him understand. And Daniel in the eleventh Chapter, and he shall worship the God Maozin in his place, and shall adore the God whom his Fathers knew not, with Gold, Silver, and precious Stones. Both these places do speak of the Mass.

This kind of worship and horrible prophanation of the Sacrament God abhorreth. For how many and sundry kinds of manifest impiety are here committed in this one action of the Mass? First it is fet forth to sale. Secondly, they that are unworthy are compelled to receive whether they will or no. Thirdly, it is applied for meritorious and satisfactory for the quick and the dead. Fourthly, many things are promised thereby, as prosperous navigation, remedies against diseases both for Man and Beast, with other infinite more. These be manifest and notorious abominations. But besides this, there be other also no less to be reprehended, which the simple people do not so plainly see. Such worshipping, and serving of God is not to be set up after the phantasie of Men.

Wherefore they do wickedly when they offer Sacrifices to God without his commandment. For when of this work they make a Sacrifice, they imagine that private Masses are to be done, because God would be worshipped after this sort. And we see that Masses are bought with Gold and Silver, great riches and sumptuous charges; also that the Sacrament is carried about in Gold and Silver to be worshipped, whereas the Sacrament was never ordained for any such purpose. Wherefore seeing the commandment of God biddeth, flee from Idolatry, private Masses are not to be maintained. And I marvel that they say that such private Masses are necessary to be retained; when it is evident that in the old time there was none such. Shall we think that things, pertaining to the necessary worship of God, could so long be lacking in the Primitive Church, three hundred years after the Apostles and more? What can be more absurd and against all reason?

What impiety is in the Mass.

No private

We

We see these private Masses to be defended with great labour and much ado: of some, for fear lest their gain should decay; of some, because they would serve the affection of the vulgar people (which thinketh to have great succour thereby), and therefore are loath to leave it rather than for any just Cause or Reason to leave them. But howsoever they do, a most manifest and evident cause there is why these private Masses ought to be abolished. For first, their application undoubtedly is wicked; neither doth the work of the Priest merit any Grace to any Person, but every one is justified by his own Faith. Neither again would God have any Man to trust upon any Ceremony, but only to the benefit of Christ; and most certain it is, that the application of these Masses for the dead is full of great error and impiety.

Appellation to the Mass
idolatrious.

But here come in blind glosses (albeit to no purpose) to excuse this application. For universally among all the people, who is he that thinketh otherwise, but that this work is available for the whole Church? Yea the Canon of the Mass itself declareth no less. And why then do some of these crafty Sophisters dally out the matter with their glossing words, denying that they make any application of their Masses, when they know full well that the error of the people is confirmed by this their doing; although they themselves do think otherwise? Albeit how few be there in very deed which do otherwise think?

The old instruction of Christ is not to be altered by new inventions.

We ought not to dissemble in Gods matters. Let us use them as the holy Scripture teacheth, and as the ancient custom of the Primitive Church doth lead us. Why should any Man be so presumptuous to swerve from ancient custom? Why now do they defend the error of other which have perverted the institution of Christ.

Now, although some perhaps will pretend and say, that he maketh no application of his Masses, yet notwithstanding he so dealeth in handling the Ceremony privately by himself, that he thinketh that his obligation to be high service done to God, and such as God requirerh: Which is also erroneous and to be reproved. For why? No service or worship pertaining unto God ought to be set up by mans device, without the commandment of God.

Wherefore I beseech you, for the Glory of Christ, that you will not defend the Article of this Act concerning these private Masses, but that you will suffer the matter to be well examined by virtuous and learned Men. All things that we here with us do, we do them by evident and substantial testimony of the Primitive Church; which testimony I dare be bold to set against the judgments of all that have since followed, such as have corrupted the ancient Doctrine and told Rites with manifold errors.

Vows.

As touching the other Articles, they have no need of any long disputation. Vows that be wicked, fained, and impossible, are not to be kept. There is no doubt but this is the common persuasion of all Men touching Vows, that all these will-works devised by Man are the true service and worship of God, and so think they also which speak most indifferently of them. Other add thereto more gross errors, saying, that these works bring with them perfection, and merit everlasting life. Now all these opinions the Scripture in many places doth reprove. Christ saith, They worship me in vain with the precepts of Men. And Paul saith, that these observations be the Doctrine of Devils, for they ascribe to the power and strength of Man false honour, because they are taken for the service of God: they obscure faith and the true worship of God. Item, the said Paul to the Colossians saith, Let no Man deceive you by fained humility, &c. Why make you Decrees, &c.? Wherefore these corrupt traditions of Men are indeed a wicked and detestable service of God.

then afterward they pretended the holiness of the Vow and Profession.

Furthermore this Vow of single life is not to all Men possible to be kept, as Christ himself saith, All Men do not receive this. Such Vows therefore which without Sin cannot be performed are to be undone; but these things I have discussed sufficiently in other of my works.

Math. 19.

But this causeth me much to marvel, that this Vow of Priests in your English Decree is more strict and hard, than is the Vow of Monks, whereas the Canons themselves do bind a Priest no farther to single life, but only for the time that he remaineth in the Ministry. And certainly it made my heart to tremble when I read this Article who so forbiddeth Matrimony, and dissolveth the same being contracted, and appointeth moreover the punishment of death for the same. Although there have been divers godly Priests which in certain places have been put to death for their marriage, yet hath never man hitherto been so bold to stablish any such law. For every Man in a manner well perceived that all well disposed and reasonable persons would abhor that cruelty; and also they feared lest the posterity would think evil thereof. Who would ever think that in the Church of Christ, wherein all lenity toward the Godly ought most principally to be shewn, such cruelties and tyranny could take place, to set forth bloody Laws to be executed upon the Godly for lawful Matrimony?

The six Ar-

six Articles.

But they brake their Vows, will the Bishop say. For (as I said) that Vow ought not to stand, seeing it is turned to a false worship of God, and is impossible to be kept. Again, although it stood in force, yet it should not extend to them which forsake the Ministry. Finally, if the Bishops here would have a care and regard to Mens Consciences, they should then ordain Priests without any such profession or Vow-making, as appeareth by the old Canons, how that many were admitted to the Ministry without professing of any Vow; and the same afterward, when they had married their Wives, remained in the Ministry, as is testified, Cap. Diaconi. Distinct. 28.

Why Priests Vows ought not to stand.

Dist. 28. cap.
Diaconi.

Certainly what here I may complain I cannot tell. First, in this Article I cannot impute it to ignorance that they do. For no Man is ignorant of the Commandment of God, which saith, Let every Man have his Wife for avoiding of fornication. Again, who is so blind but he seeth what a life these unmarried Priests do live? The complaints of good Men are well known. The filthiness of the wicked is too too manifest. But peradventure your Bishops, holding with the Sect of Epicures, do think God is not offended with filthy lusts. Which if they so think, then do we sustain doubtless an hard cause where such must be judges.

I am not ignorant that this single life is very fit to set out the glory and bravery of Bishops and Colledges of Priests, and to maintain their wealth and portly state, and this I suppose to be the cause why some do abhor so much that Priests should be married. But O lamentable state of the Church, if Laws should be so forced to serve, not the verity and the Will of God, but the private gain and commodity of Men! They err which think it lawful for them to make Laws repugnant to the Commandment of God, and to the Law of nature, so that they be profitable to attain Wealth and Riches and of truth from my very heart I do mourn and lament, Right Noble Prince, both for your sake, and also for the cause of Christs Church. You pretend to impugn and gainstand the tyranny of the Romish Bishop, and truly do call him Antichrist, as indeed he is; and in the mean time you defend and maintain those Laws of that Romish Antichrist, which be the strength and sinews of all his power, as private Mass, single life of Priests, and other superstitions. You threaten horrible punishments to good Men, and to the members of Christ, you violently oppress and bear down the verity of the Gospel beginning to shine in your Churches. This is not to abolish Antichrist, but to establish him.

God.

I beseech you therefore for our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye file not your Conscience in defending those Articles which your Bishops have devised and set forth touching private Masses, Auricular Confession, Vows, single life of Priests, and prohibition of the one half of the Sacrament. It is no light offence to establish Idolatry, errors, cruelty, cruelty, the filthy lusts of Antichrist. If the Roman Bishops should call a Councel, what other Articles chiefly would he devise and publish unto the World, but the very same which your Bishops have here enacted?

The subtilty of Sathan in abusing the power of Princes to maintain his Kingdom.

Understand and consider, I pray you, the subtil trains and deceits of the Devil, which is wont first to tempt and assaile the chief Governours. And as he is the enemy of Christ from the beginning of the World, so his chief purpose is by all crafty and subtil means to work continually against Christ; by spurring abroad wicked opinions, and setting up Idolatry, and also in polluting mankind with bloody Murthers and filthy lusts: in the working whereof heauleth the policies and wits of Hypocrites, also the power and strength of mighty Princes; as Stories of all times bear witness, what great Kingdomes and Empires have set themselves with all might and main against the poor Churches of Christ.

Example of
cost.

And yet notwithstanding God hath relieved some good Princes at all times out of the great multitude of such Giants, and hath brought them to his Church, to embrace true Doctrine, and to defend his true worship; as Abraham taught Abimelech; Joseph the Egyptian Kings; and after them came David, Jehoiachaz, Ezechias, Jehoiachin excelling in true Godliness; Daniel converted to the knowledge of God; the Kings of Chaldea and Persia. Also Byzantius brought forth unto the World the Godly Prince Constantine. In this number I with you rather to be than amongst the Enemies of Christ, defiled with Idolatry, and spotted with the Blood of the Godly; of whom God will take punishment, as he doth many times forewarn, and many examples do teach.

Yet again therefore I pray and beseech you, for our Lord Jesus Christ, that you will correct and mitigate this Decree of the Bishops; in which doing you shall advance the Glory of Christ, and provide as well for the wealth of your own Soul, as the safeguard of your Churches.

He meaneth Shaxton, Latimer, Cromer, and others.

Let the hearty desires of so many Godly Men through the whole World move you, so earnestly willing that some good Kings would extend their Authority to the true reformation of the Church of God, to the abolishing of all Idolatrous Worship, and the furthering of the course of the Gospel. Regard also and consider, I beseech you, those Godly persons which are with you in bands for the Gospels sake, being the true members of Christ.

The Devils Instruments by whom he worketh.

And if that cruel Decree be not altered, the Bishops will never cease to rage against the Church of Christ, without mercy or pity: for them the Devil uses as Instruments and Ministers of his fury and malice against Christ: They be firebrands to flay and kill the members of Christ. Whose wicked and cruel proceedings and subtil falsifications and that you will not prefer before our true and most righteous request, all the Godly most humbly and heartily do pray and beseech you. Which if they shall obtain, no doubt but God shall recompence to you great rewards for your piety, and your excellent virtue. shall be renowned both by pen and voice of all the Godly, whilst the World standeth. For Christ shall judgeall them that shall deserve either well or evil of his Church. And whilst Letters shall remain, the memorial worthy of such base deserters shall never dye or be forgotten with the posterity to come. And seeing we seek the glory of Christ, and that our Churches are the Churches of Christ, there shall never be wanting such as both shall defend the righteous cause, and magnifie with due commendation such as have well deserved, and likewise shall condemn the unjust cruelty of the enemies.

Christ goeth about hungry, thirsty, naked, imprisoned, complaining of the raging fury of the Bishops, and of the wrongful oppression and cruelty of divers Kings and Princes, intreating that the members of his Body be not rent in pieces, but that true Churches may be defended, and his Gospel advanced. This request of Christ to hear, to receive, and to embrace, is the Office of a Godly King, and service most acceptable unto God.

Intreating a little before, of certain old instruments for proof of Priests lawful marriage in times past, I gave a little touch of a certain Record taken out of an old Martyrologue of the Church of Canterbury touching Livingus a Priest and his Wife, in the time of Lanfranke. Wherein I touched also of certain Lands and Houses re-restored again by the said Lanfrank to the Church of S. Andrew. Now forasmuch as the perfect note thereof is more fully come to my hands, and partly completing the restoring of the said Lands to be to Certain Church in Canterbury, and not S. Andrew in Rochester, and also for that I have found some other Persons approving the lawful Marriage of Priests, and legitimization of their Children, I thought good for the more full satisfying of the Reader, to enter the same, as follows.

A Note out of an old Martyrologue of Canterbury.

That is, After the death of William King of England, the said Lanfrank reformed again to Christe Church in Canterbury all the Lands whicsh from ancient memory unto these later days have been taken away from the right of the said Church. The names of whiche Lands be these: in Kent, Raulf, Sandwich, Rarburch, Wodeten, the Abbey of Limmingwhith the Lands and Customs unto the same Monastery belonging, Saltwode, &c. (Stoke and Denenham, because they belonged of old time to the Church of S. Andrew, them be reformed to the same Church) in Suthery, Murelas, the Abbey of S. Mary in London, with the Lands and Houss whiche Livingus Priest, and his Wife had in London. All these Lanfrank reformed again for the health of his own Soule, freely and without Moneys.

Concerning the six Articles passed in this Act aforesaid, in the one and twentieth year of King Henry, sufficiently hitherto hath bin declared, first what the Articles were Secondly, by whom, and from whom they chiefly proceeded thirdly, how erroneous, pernicious, repugnant, and contrarious to true Doctrine, Christian Religion, and the word of God, to nature also it self, all reason and honesty, and finally to the ancient Laws, Customs, and Examples of our fore-fathers, during the days of a thousand years after Christ were. Fourthly, ye have heard also what unreasonable and extreme penalty was set upon the same, that a man may deem these Laws to be written not with the ink of Stephen Gardiner, but with the Blood of a Dragon, or rather the Claws of the Devil. The breach whereof was made no less than Treason and Felony, and no less punishment assigned thereto than Death.

Draconis es sangu
scriptæ.

Besides all this, the words of the A^ct were so curious and subtle, that no Man could speak, yea or cypher against them, without present danger, write farcelly a Man might speak any word of Christ and his Religion, but he was in perill of these six Articles. Over and besides, the Papists began so finely to interpret the A^ct, that they spared not to indite Men for abusing their Countenance and Behaviour in the Church. So great was the power of darknes in those days. And thus much concerning this A^ct.

Potestas
negotiorum

Besides these fix Articles in this forefaid Act concluded, there was also another Confitution annexed withal, without the advice (as may feem) of the Lord Cromwell, which was this: That Priests and Ministers of the Church, being now they would needs themselves be bound from all Matrimony, should therefore by Law likewise be bound to such honesty and continency of life, that carnally they should live, and accustom no manner of Woman married or single by way of Adultery or Fornication, the breach whereof for the first time, was to forfeit goods and to suffer Imprisonment at the Kings pleasure: and for the second time, being duly convicted, it was made Felony, as the other were.

In this Constitution, if the Lord Cromwell and other good Men of the Parliament might have had their will there is no doubt, but the first crime of these concubinary Priests, as well as the second, had had the same penalties as the other fix Articles had, and should have bin punished with death. But Stephen Gardiner with his fellow Bishops who then ruled all the rots, bestowed this extraordinary Article with their accustomed flattery, that if they were taken and duly convicted for their casus non causati at first time it was but forfeit of goods. All for the second conviction or attainer they so provided, that the next year following that punishment and pain of death by Act of Parliament was clean wiped away and repealed. And why so? Because, say the Statute, that punishment by pain of death is very severe, and much extrem, therefore it pleases the King with the assent of the Lords, that that clause above written concerning Felony, and pains of death, and other penalties and forfeitures, for and upon the first and second conviction or attainer of any Priest or Woman for any such offences of Wickedness, or Adultery

Stat. An. 2
cap. 12.

aforsaid, shall be from henceforth void and of none effect, &c. So that by this Statute it was provided, for all such Votaries as lived in Whoredom and Adultery, for the first offence to lose his goods, and all his spiritual promotions except one; for the second, to forfeit all that he had to the King; for the third conviction to sustain continual Imprisonment.

In these ungodly proceedings of the Popes Catholick Clergy two things we have to note.

1. First, the horrible impiety of their Doctrine, directly fighting against the exprets Authority of God and his Word, forasmuch as that which God permitteth, they restrain; that which he bids they forbid. Habeat, faith he; Non habeat; say they, taking exceptions against the word of the Lord. That which he calleth honourable and undefiled, they call Heretic; that which he commandeth and infitteth, they punish with pains of death. Not only the Priests that marry, but also those that fy or cypher that a Priest may marry; at the first they kill as Felons. Neither can any Miserere take place for chaste and lawfull wedlock; whereas contrariwise a spiritual Man may thrice defile his neighbours Wife, or thrice deflow his Brothers Daughters, and no Felony at all layed to his charge. What is this in plain words to say, but that it les sin thrice to commit Adultery, than once to marry?

2. The second is to be noted, how these painted Hypocrites do bewray their false dissimled dealings unaware, with whom a Man might thus reason. Tell us you Priests and Votaries, which so precisely flie the Talle of Matrimony intend you to live chaste & are able so to do with our Wives, or do you keep your wives honest & chaste without them, without burning or not? If you be not able why then marry ye not? Why take you not the remedy appointed of God? why make you those Vows, which you cannot perform? Or why do you not break them being made, falling thereby in danger of breaking Gods Commandment, for keeping your own? If you be able and so do intend to continue an honest and a continent conversation with your Wives, then shall I ask of you according as Doctor Turner gravely and truly layeth to your charge, Why do you so carefully provide a remedy by your Laws ahead for such mischief to come, which you may avoid if you list, unless either ye list not to stand though you might, or else fear your own infirmity, that you could not though you would. And therefore, fearing your own weak fragility, to provide wisely for your wives ahead, that where others shall suffer pains of death at the first for well doing, you may fall three in abominable Adultery, and yet by the Law have your lives pardoned.

And here cometh our own Hypocrite by you selves bewrayed ; for whereas you all confesse, that you are able to live chaste if ye will without Vvives, this moderation of the Law provided before against your aduoluerous incontinency, plainly declareth that either ye purpose will-lingly to fall, at least ye fear and stand in doubt not to be able to stand. And why then do you so confidently take such Vows upon you, standing in such doubt and fear for the performance thereof ?

And be it to you admitted that all do not fall, but that some keep their Vow, though some viciously run to excess: then Mens Wives and Daughters, then herein again I say, you, feeling these Vicious Whorehunters and adventurous persons among you do live viciously, (as you cannot deny) and may do otherwise if they list, as you confess, what punishment then are they worthy to have, which may lay on the continent and will not, neither yet will take the remedy provided by God, but refuse it? Which being for the what inquiry is this in you, or rather impity inexcusable against God and Man, to procure a moderation of Laws for such, and to shew such compassion and clemency to these vicious Adulterers, whore-hunters, and beaſtly Fornicators, that if they Adulterate other Mens Wives never so oft, yet there is no death for them; and to shew no compassion at all, nor to find out any moderation for such, but at the very first kill them as Felons and Hereticks, which honestly do marry in the fear of God, or once say that a Priest may marry? How can ye here be excused, O you Children of iniquity? What Reason is in your doing, or what truth in your Doctrines, or what fear of God in your hearts. You that neither are able to avoid burning and pollution without Wedlock, nor yet will receive that remedy that the Lord hath given you, how will you stand in his face, when he shall reveal your operations and cogitations to your perpetual confusion, unless by time ye convert and repent? And thus being ashamed of your execrable doings, I cease to defile my pen any further in this so stinking matter of yours, leaving you to the Lord.

Read before: It was declared before, that what time these six Articles were in hand in the Parliament House, Crommer, then being Archbishop of Canterbury, only withstood the same, disputing three days against them; whose Reasons and Arguments I will were extant and remaining. After these Articles were thus passed and concluded, the King, who always bare especial favour unto Crommer, perceiving him to be not a little discomforted therewith, sent all the Lords of the Parliament, and with them the Lord Cromwel, to dine with him at Lambeth (as is before declared) and within few days also upon the same, requiring that he would give a note of all his doings and reasonings in the said Parliament: Which the said Crommer effects accomplished, accordingly, drawing out his Reasons and Allegations; the copy whereof, being fair written out by his Secretary, was sent and delivered unto the King, and there remained.

Now after these things thus discussed, as touching the six wicked Articles, it followeth next, in returning to the order of our story again, to declare those things which after the setting out of these Articles ensued, coming now to the time and story of the Lord Cromwel, a man whose worthy fame and deeds are worthy to live renowned in perpetual memory.

The History concerning the Life, Acts, and Death of the famous and worthy Counsellour Lord Thomas Cromwel Earl of Essex.

Thomas Cromwell although born of a simple Parentage, and House obscure, through the singular excellency of Wisdom, and dexterity of Wit wrought in him by God, coupled with like industry of mind, and deserts of life, rose to high preferment and authority; inasmuch that by steps and stairs of Office and Honour, he ascended at length to that, that not only he was made Earl of Essex, but also most secret and dear Counsellor to King Henry, and Vicegerent unto his person, which Office hath not commonly been supplied, at least not so fruitfully discharged within this Realm.

First as touching his Birth, he was born at Purney or thereabout, being a Smiths Son, whose Mother married after to a sheerman. In the simple estate and rude beginnings of this man, as of divers other before him, we may see and learn, that the excellency of noble virtues and heroical prowesses which advance to fame and honour, stand not only upon Birth and Blood, as priviledges only entailed and appropriate to noble Houses; but are disposed indifferently, and proceed of the gift of God, who raiseth up the poor Abject many times out of the Dunghil, and matcheth him in Throne with Peers and Princes, Plal. 113.

As touching the order and manner of his coming up, it would be superfluous to discourse what may be said at large; only by way of story it may suffice to give a touch of certain particulars, and so to proceed. Although the humble condition and poverty of this man was at the beginning (as it is to many others) a great let and hinderance for virtue to shew her self, yet such was the activity and forward ripeness of nature in him, so pregnant in wit, and so ready he was, in judgment discreet, in tongue eloquent, in service faithful, in stomach courageous, in his pen active, that being conversant in the sight of men, he could not be long unhelped, nor yet unprovided of favour and help of friends to set him forward in place and office: neither was any place or Office put unto him, whereunto he was not apt and fit; Nothing was so hard which with wit and industry he could not compass. Neither was his capacity so good, but his memory was as great in retaining whatsoever he had attained. Which well appeareth in canning the text of the whole new Testament of Erasmus Translation without Book, in his journey going and coming from Rome, whereof you shall hear anon.

Thus in his growing years, as he shot up in age and ripeness, a great delight came in his mind to stray into foreign Countries, to see the World abroad, and to learn experience; whereby he learned such Tongues and Languages as might better serve for his use hereafter.

And thus passing over his youth, being at Antwerp he was there retained of the English Merchants to be their Clerk or Secretary, or in some such like condition placed pertaining to their affairs.

It happened the same time that the Town of Boston the Town of Boston thought good to send up to Rome, for renewing of their two pardons, one called the great pardon, the other the lesser pardon. Which thing although it should stand them in great expences of money (for the Popes Merchandise is always dear ware) yet notwithstanding such sweetness they had felt thereof, and such gain to come to their town by that Romish Merchandise (as all Superstition is commonly gainful) that they like good Catholick Merchants, and the Popes good customers, thought to spare for no cost, to have their leases again of their pardons renewed, whatsoever they paid for the fine. And yet was all this good Religion then, such was the lamentable blindness of that time.

This then being so determined and decreed among my Countrymen of Boston, to have their pardons needs repaired and renewed from Rome, one Geffrey Chambers with another Champion was sent for the messengers, with writings and money, no small quantity, well furnished, and with all other things appointed, necessary for so chargeable and costly exploit. Who coming in his journey to Antwerp, and misdoubting to be too weak for the compassing of such a weighty piece of work, conferred and persuaded with T. Cromwel to associat him in that legacy, and to assist him in the contriving thereof. Cromwel although perceiving the enterprise to be of no small difficulty to traverse the Popes Court, for the unreasonable expences amongst those greedy Cormorants, yet having some skill of the Italian Tongue, and as yet not grounded in the judgment of Religion in those his youthful days, was at length obtained and content to give the adventure, and so took his journey towards Rome. Cromwel loth to spend much time, and more loth to spend his money; and again perceiving that the Popes greedy humour must needs be served with some present or other (for without rewards there is no doing at Rome) began to cast with himself, what thing best to devise wherein he might best serve the Popes devotion.

At length having knowledge how that the Popes holy tooth greatly delighted to new fangled strange delicacies, and dainty dishes, it came in his mind to prepare certain fine dishes of gelly, after the best fashion, to make offer of Country manner here in England, which to them of Rome was not known nor seen before.

This done, Cromwel observing his time accordingly, as the Pope was newly come from hunting into his pavilion, he with his companions approached with his English presents brought in with a three mans song (as we call it) in the English Tongue, and all after the English fashion. The Pope suddenly marvelling at the strangeness of the Song, and understanding that they were English men, and that they came not empty handed, willed them to be called in. Cromwel there shewing his obedience, and offering his jolly junkets, such as Kings and Princes only, said he, in the Realm of England use to feed upon, desired the same to be accepted in benevolent part, which he and his companions, as poor suiters unto his Holiness, had there brought and presented, as novelties meet for his recreation, &c.

Pope Julius, seeing the strangeness of the dishes, commanded by and by his Cardinal to take the assay. Who in tasting thereof liked it so well, and so likewise the Pope after him, that knowing of them what their sutes were, and requiring them to make known the making of that neat, he incontinent, without any more ado, stamped both their pardons as well the greater as the lesser.

And thus were the jolly pardons of the Town of Boston obtained as you have heard, for the maintenance of their decayed port. The copy of which pardons (which I have in my hands) briefly comprehended, cometh to this effect;

Also should have licence to carry about with them an Altar-stone, whereby they might have a Priest to say them Mass, or other Divine Service where they would, without prejudice of any other Church or Chappel, though it were also before day, yea and at three of the Clock after midnight in the summer time.

Furthermore, that all such Brethren and Sisters of the said Guild, which should resort to the Chappel of our Lady in Saint Botolphes Church at the feast of Easter, Whitsontide, Corpus Christi, the Nativity or Assumption of our Lady, or in the Octaves of them, the feast of Saint Michael, and first Sunday in Lent, should have pardon no less than if they themselves personally had visited the Stations of Rome.

Provided that every such person, Man or Woman, entering into the same Gilde, at his first entrance should give to the finding of seven Priests, twelve Quirilters, and thirteen Beadsmen, and to the lights of the same Brotherhood and a Grammar School, six Shillings eight pence, and for every year after twelve pence.

And these premises being before granted by Pope Innocentius, and Pope Julius the second, this Pope Clement also confirmed, granting moreover, that whatsoever Brother or Sister of the same Guild, through poverty, sickness, or any other let could not resort personally to the said Chappel, notwithstanding he should be dispensed withal, as well for that, as for all other Vows, irregularities, Censures Canonical whatsoever, only the Vow of going the Stations of Rome, and going to S. James of Compostella excepted, &c.

He also granted unto them power to receive full remission, a pena & culpa, once in their life, or in the hour of death.

Item, that having their Altar-stone, they might have Mass said in any place, though it were unlawfulled and in the time of interdict, to have Mass or any Sacrament ministrifd; and also being departed, that they might be buried in Christian burial notwithstanding the interdict.

Extending moreover his Grant, to all such Brethren and Sisters, in resorting to the foresaid Chappel of our Lady upon the Nativity, or Assumption of our Lady giving supporation to the foresaid Chappel, at every such Festival day to have full Remission of their Sins. Or if they for any impediment could not be present at the Chappel aforesaid, yet if they came unto their own Parish Church, and there said one Pater noster, and Ave Maria, they should enjoy the same remission above specified; or whosoever came every Friday to the same Chappel, should have as much Remission, as if he went unto the Chappel of our Lady called Scala Cali.

Furthermore, that whatsoever Christian people, of what estate or condition soever, either Spiritual or Temporal, would aid and support the Chamberlains or Substitutes of the foresaid Guild, should have five hundred years of pardon.

Item, to all Brothers and Sisters of the same Guild was granted free liberty to eat in the time of Lent, or other fasting days, Eggs, Milk, Butter, Cheese, and also Fleish, by the Counsel of their Ghostly Father and Physician, without any scruple of Conscience.

Item, that all partakers of the same Guild, and being supporters thereof, which once a quarter, or every Friday or Saturday, either in the said Chappel in S. Botolphes Church, or any other Chappel, of their Devotion, shall say a Pater Noster, Ave Maria, and Credo, or shall say or cause to be said Masses for Souls departed in pains of Purgatory, shall not only have the full Remission due to them which visit the Chappel of Scala Cali, or of S. John Lateran, but also the Souls in Purgatory shall enjoy full Remission, and be released of all their pains.

Item, that all the Souls departed of the Brothers and Sisters of the said Guild, also the Souls of their Fathers and Mothers shall be partakers of all the Prayers, Suffrages, Almotes, Fastings, Masses, and Matrens, Pilgrimages, and all other good deeds of all the H. Church militant for ever, &c.

These Indulgences, Pardons, Grants, and Relaxations were given and granted by Pope Nicholas the fifth, Pope Pins the second, Pope Sixtus, and Pope Julius the second, of which Pope Julius it seemeth that Cromwell obtained this Pardon aforesaid about the year of our Lord, 1510. Which Pardon again afterward through the request of King Henry, Anno, 1526. was confirmed by Pope Clement the seventh. And thus much concerning the Pardon of Boiton, renewed by the means of Thomas Cromwell, of Pope Julius the second.

All this while it appeareth, that Cromwell had yet no sound taste nor judgment of Religion, but was wild and youthful, without sense or regard of God and his Word as he himself was wont oftentimes to declare unto Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, shewing what a Ruffian he was in his young days, and how he was in the Wars of the Duke of Bourbon at the siege of Rome, also what a great doer he was with Geffrey Chambers in publishing and setting forth the Pardon of Boiton every where in Churches as he went, and so continued, till at length by learning the Text of the New Testament without book of Erasmus Translation in his going and coming from Rome (as is aforesaid) he began to be touched and called to better understanding.

In this mean time Thomas Wolsey Cardinal of York began to bear a great part in England, and almost to rule all under the King, or rather with the King; so that the freshest Wits, and of the best towardness, most commonly fought unto him. Among whom was also Thomas Cromwell to his service advanced, where he continued a certain space of years, growing up in Office and Authority till at length he was preferred to be Solicitor to the Cardinal.

There was also about the same time, or not much different, in the Household of the said Cardinal Thomas More, afterward Knight and Chancellor of England, and Steven Gardiner after Bishop of Winchester and of the Kings Council. All these three were brought up in one Household, and all one standing almost together. Whole Ages as they were not greatly discrepant, nor their wits much unequal; so neither was their fortune and advancements greatly divers, albeit their dispositions and fancies were most contrary. And though peradventure in More and in Gardiner there was more art of the Letters, and skill of learnings, yet notwithstanding there was in this man a more Heavenly light of the mind, and more prompt and perfect judgment, eloquence equal, and as may be supposed in this man more Heroical and Princely disposition, born to greater affairs in the Common-Wealth, and to the singular help of many.

It happened that in this mean season, as Cromwell was placed in this Office to be Solicitor to the Cardinal, the said Cardinal had then in hand the building of certain Colledges, namely his Colledge in Oxford, called then Frideswide, now Christs Church. By reason whereof, certain small Monasteries and Priors, in divers places of the Realm, were by the said Cardinal suppressed, and the lands seized to the Cardinals hands. The doing whereof was committed to the charge of Thomas Cromwell. In the expedition whereof he shewed himself very forward and industrious, in such sort as in the handling thereof he procured to himself much grudge with divers of the Superstitious sort, and with some also of Noble calling about the King. And thus was Cromwell first set awork by the Cardinal, to suppress Religious Houses. Which was about the year of our Lord, 1525.

As this passed on, it was not long, but the Cardinal which had gotten up so high began to come down as fast, first from the Chancellorship (in which room was placed Sir Thomas More, as is before said) then he fell into a Præmonstrance. So that his Household being dissolved, Thomas Cromwell, amongst other, laboured also to be retained into the Kings service.

There was at the same time one Sir Christopher Hales Knight, Master of the Rolls, who notwithstanding was then a mighty Papist; yet bare he such favour and good liking to Cromwell, that he commended him to the King, as a Man most fit for his purpose, having then to do against the Pope. But here before is to be understood, that Cromwell had greatly been complained of, and defamed by certain of Authority about the King, for his rude manner and homely dealing in defacing the Monks Houses, and in handling of their Altars, &c. Wherefore the King, hearing of the name of Cromwel, began to detest the mention of him, neither lacked their some Standers-by, who with reviling words ceased not to increase and inflame the Kings hatred against him: what there names were it shall not need here to recite. Among other, there present at the same hearing, was the Lord Ruffel Earl of Bedford, whose life Cromwel before had preferred at Bonny, through politick conveyance, at what time the said Earl, coming secretly in the Kings affairs, was there espied, and therefore being in great danger to be taken, through the means and policy of Cromwel escaped.

The Lord Ruffel Earl of Bedford, through the policy of Cromwel escaped at Bonny. The Lord Ruffel commended Cromwel to the King.

This Lord Ruffel therefore not forgetting the old benefits past, and with like gratuity willing again to requite that he had received, in a vehement boldness stood forth, to take upon him the defence of Thomas Cromwel, uttering before the King many commendable words in the behalf of him, and declaring whiloh how by his singular device and policy he had done for him at Bonny, being there in the Kings affairs in extremum peril. And forasmuch as now his Majesty had to do with the Pope, his great Enemy, there was (he thought) in all England none so apt for the Kings purpose, which could lay or do more in that matter, than could Thomas Cromwel, and partly gave the King to understand wherein. The King hearing this, and specially marking the latter end of his talk, was contented and willing to talk with him, to hear and know what he could say.

This was not so privily done, but Cromwel had knowledge incontinent that the King would talk with him, and whereupon; and therefore providing before hand for matter, had in a readines the Copy of the Bishops Oath, which they use commonly to make to the Pope at their consecration; and so being called for, was brought to the King in his Garden at Westminster, which was about the year of our Lord 1530.

Cromwel brought to talk with the King.

Cromwel after most loyal obedience, doing his duty to the King, according as he was demanded, made his declaration in all points; this especially making manifest unto his Highness, how his Princely Authority was abused within his own Realm by the Pope and his Clergy, who being sworn unto him, were afterward dispensed from the same, and sworn anew unto the Pope; so that he was but as half King, and they but half his Subjects in his own Land: which (said he) was derogatory to his Crown, and utterly prejudicial to the Common Laws of his Realm. Declaring thereupon how his Majesty might accumulate to himself great Riches, so much as all the Clergy in his Realm was worth, if it so pleased him to take the occasion now offered. The King giving good ear to this, and liking right well his advice, required if he could avouch that which he spake. All this he could (he said) avouch to be certain, so well, as that he had the Copy of their own Oath to the Pope there present to shew, and that no less able he could manifestly prove, if his Highness would give leave; and therewith shewed the Bishops Oath unto the King.

Cromwel words to the King concerning the transgression of the Clergy.

Cromwel sent by the King to the Convocation-House.

The King, following the vein of his Counsel, took his Ring off his Finger, and first admitting him into his Service, sent him therewith to the Convocation-House among the Bishops. Cromwel coming with the Kings Signet boldly into the Clergy-House, and there placing himself among the Bishops (William Warham being then Archbishop) began to make his Oration, declaring unto them the Authority of a King, and the Office of Subjects, and especially the Obedience of Bishops and Churchmen under Publick Laws, necessarily provided for the profit and quiet of the Commonwealth. Which Laws notwithstanding they had all transgressed, and highly offended in derogation of the Kings Royal Estate, falling in the Law of Premunire, in that not only they had consented to the Power Legative of the Cardinal, but also in that they had all sworn to the Pope, contrary to the fealty of their Sovereign Lord the King, and therefore had forfeited to the King all their Goods, Chatels, Lands, Possessions, and whatsoever Livings they had. The Bishops hearing this were not a little amazed, and first began to excuse and deny the Fact. But after that Cromwel had shewed them the very Copy of their Oath made to the Pope at their Consecration, and the matter was so plain that they could not deny it, they began to shrink and to fall to entreaty, desiring respite to put up on the matter. Notwithstanding, the end thereof fell out, that to be quit out of that Premunire by Act of Parliament, it cost them to the King for both the Provinces, Canterbury and York, no less than one hundred eighteen thousand, eight hundred and forty Pounds, which was about the year of our Lord 1520, whereof before you may read more at large.

The Clergy condemned to the Premunire.

After this, Anno 1522. Sir Thomas Cromwel growing in great favour with the King, was made Knight and Master of the Kings Jewel-House, and shortly after was admitted also into the Kings Council, which was about the coming in of Queen Anne Boleyn. Furthermore, within two years after the same, Anno 1524. he was made Master of the Rolls; Dr. Taylor being discharged.

Sir Thomas Cromwel made Knight and Master of the Kings Jewel-house.

This Cromwel springing up in favour and honour, after this, in the year 1527, a little before the birth of King Edward, was made Knight of the Garter, and not long after was advanced to the Earldom of Essex, and made Great Chamberlain of England. Over and besides all which Honours, he was constituted also Vicegerent to the King, representing his Person. Which Office although it standeth well by the Law, yet seldom hath there been any besides this Cromwel alone, either to have signified it, or else to have so furnished the same with counsel and wisdom, as Cromwel did. And thus much hitherto concerning the steps and degrees of the Lord Cromwels rising up to dignity and high estate.

Cromwel made Knight of the Garter.

Cromwel made Knight of the Garter, made Earl of Essex, great Chamberlain of England, and Vicegerent to the King.

Now somewhat would be said likewise of the noble Acts, the memorable Examples and worthy Vertues, not drowned by ease of Honour in him, but increased rather, and quickened by advancement of Authority and Place, to work more abundantly in the Commonwealth. Among the which his worthy Acts and other manifold Vertues, in this one chiefly above all other fifth his commendation, for his singular Zeal and laborious Travel bestowed in restoring the true Church of Christ, and subverting the Synagogue of Antichrist, the Abbeys, I mean, and Religious Houses of Friars and Monks. For so it pleased Almighty God, by the means of the said Lord Cromwel, to induce the King to suppress first the Chauntries, then the Friars Houses and small Monasteries, till at length all the Abbeys in England, both great and less, were utterly overthrown and plucked up by the roots.

The Acts and doings of the Lord Cromwel described.

The which Act and enterprise of him, as it may give a president of singular Zeal to all Realms Christened, which no Prince yet to this day scarce dare follow; so to this Realm of England, it wrought such benefit and commodity, as the fruit thereof yet remaineth, and will remain still in the Realm of England, though we seem little to feel it. Rudely and simply I speak what I suppose, without prejudice of other which can inter any better reason. In the mean time my reason is this, That if God had not raised up this Cromwel as he did, to be the Instrument of rooting out of the Abbeys and Cells of strange Religion, what other men see I know not; for my part I never saw yet in this Realm any such Cromwel since Cromwels time, whose heart and courage might not sooner have been subverted with the Mony and Bribes of Abbats; than he to have subverted any Abbey in all England.

The Lord Cromwel a profitable Instrument in suppressing Abbeys.

But here I must of necessity answer the complaint of certain of our Country-men. For so I hear of many of the subversion of these Monasteries to be reprehended, as evil and wicked. The Buildings, say they, might have been converted unto Schools and Houses of Learning, the Goods and Possessions might have been bestowed to much better and more godly use of the Poor; and maintaining of Hospitality. Neither do I deny, but that these things are well and godly spoken of them, and could willingly embrace their Opinion with my whole heart, if I did not consider herein a more secret and deeper meaning of Gods holy Providence, than at the first blush peradventure to all men doth appear.

The defence of the Lord Cromwel for overthrowing the Abbeys.

And first to omit the wicked and execrable Life of these Religious Orders, full of all fecity, and found out by the Kings Visitators, and in their Registers also recorded, so horrible to be heard, so incredible to be believed, so sinking before the face of God and Man, that no marvel it is if Gods vengeance from Heaven provoked would not suffer any stone or monument of these abominable Houses to be unplucked up. But, as I said, letting these things pass under chaff silence, which for very shame will abhor any story to disclose, let us now come to the first Institution of these Orders and Houses of Monastery, and consider how and to what end they were first instituted and erected here among the Saxons at the first foundation of them, about the time 666.

The abominable life of the Monasteries, bewrayed by their own confession.

Said also:

In the former part of this History, declaration was made before, first by whom, and at what time these Monkish Houses here in England among the Saxons (showing no doubt out of the Order of St. Bennet, and brought in by Augustine) began first to be founded, as by Augustine the Monk, Fursey, Medulphus, Aldanus, Ceadda, King Ulferus, Oswine, Elfrida, King Ofusa Daughter Kineburga, Hilda, Botolphus, Edelreda, King Oswald, Edgar, Erkenwaldus Bilhop, Ethelwaldus Bilshop of Winchester, Oskellus Archbilhop of York, Oswaldus Bilhop of Worcester, Lejwinus Bilhop of Dorchester, Dunstan, and divers others.

The first beginning of Religious Houses in the time of the Saxons.

The end and cause of building Religious Houses. The end and final cause why they were builded, appeareth in Stories to be, Pro remissione & redemptione peccatorum: pro remedio & liberatione anime; pro amore celestis patrie; in elemosynam anime; in remissionem criminum; pro salute regnorum, pro salute & requie animarum patrum & matrum, fratrum, & sororum nostrorum, parentum, & omnium benefactorum; in honorem gloriose Virginis, &c. As may appear in ancient Histories, in old Charters and Donations unto Religious Houses, and in the Chronicle of Ingulphus, as also all other Stories be full of the fame.

The damnable Doctrine and Institution of Religious Orders.

So King Ethelstane, for killing his Brother Edwine, builded two Monasteries, Mildeton and Michelney, for his Soul. Which Doctrine and Institution, so far as it tendeth and foundeth directly against the foundation of Christian Religion, against the Testament of God, the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the freedom of our redemption and free justification by Faith, it is therefore to be condemned as execrable or horrible, as evil or worse than the life of the persons, and not only worthy to be suppressed to the foundation, but to marvelled rather, that God would suffer it to stand so long. Albeit Gods mighty Vengeance and Scourge hath not ceased from time to time to work against such impious Foundations from the time of their first setting up. For besides the Invasions of the Danes (which may seem to be stirred up of God, especially for the subversion of Abbeyes) let old Histories be searched, what Monastery almost in all this Realm was either left by the Danes, or redified again after the Danes, but by some notorious casualty of fire sent by Gods hand it hath been burned up?

These, with many other Monasteries more, God brought down to the ground, so that few or none of all the Monastical Foundations in England, either before the Conquest, escaped the hands of the Danes and Scots, or else after the Conquest escaped destruction of fire, and that not without just cause deserved; for as the trade of their Lives was too too wretched and bestial, so the profession of their Doctrine was intolerable, fraught with all Superstition, full of much Idolatry, and utterly contrary to the Grace of the Gospel and Doctrine of Christ.

Abbeys burnt and plagued with fire.

The Doctrine of the Monks worse than their lives.

Furthermore, the more these Abbeyes multiplied and the longer they continued, in time the more corruption still they drew unto them. And albeit we read the name of Monks to have continued from the old ancient time, yet notwithstanding the Monks of those days were not like the Monks of our time, nor their Houses then like to our Abbeyes now. So we read of the Monks of Bangor before the coming of Augustine; but those Monks got their living with toyl and labour of their hands, and had no other Lands nor Lordships to live upon. Again, neither were they as Ministers then, but as Lay-men, according as Hierome describeth the Monks of his time, saying, Monachus non docens, sed plangens habet officium. And again he saith, Alia causa est Monachi, alia Clerici; Clerici oves pastores; Ego pastor, &c. That is, A Monks Office is not to preach, but to mourn. The state of a Monk is one thing, and the state of a Priest is another. Priests feed the Flock of Christ; I am fed, &c.

Also in the Story of Ingulphus Abbot of Croyland thus I find: Anno 1075. In Croylandiam primum installatus inveni tunc in isto Monasterio Croylandensi Monachos numero 62. Quorum quatuor laici fratres erant, preter aliorum Monasteriorum Monachos nostri capituli comprefectos, &c. That is, Being instilled in the Abbey of Croyland I found there to the number of sixty two Monks. Of which Monks, four of them were Lay-Brethren, besides the Monks of other Monasteries which were also professed to our Chapter, &c.

The like matter also appeareth in the fourth Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, where it is provided: Ne Monachi se Ecclesiasticis negotiis immiscuant, &c. Ex Leo Epist. 62. Verat Monachos & Laicos, est scientia nomine gloriantur, admitti ad officium docendi & concionandi. Whereof read more before.

Thus it appeareth about or before the time of Hierome, that Monks in the first Persecutions of the Primitive Church were Lay-men, and companies of Christians associating themselves together, either for fear of persecution, or for eschewing the company of Heathen Gentiles: afterward in continuance of time, when the Gentiles began to be called to Christianity, the Monks yet keeping their name, and growing in Superstition, would not joyn with other Christians, but kept still their Brotherhoods, dividing themselves from other Christians, and professing a kind of life strange and diverse from the common trade. Upon this diversity of Life and Profession, followed also like diversity of garments and attire differing from their other Brethren. After this more-over came in the Rule of St. Benedict, enjoining to them a prescribed form of going, of wearing, of watching, sleeping, rising, praying, of silence, sole life and diet, and all things almost differing from the vulgar sort of common Christians.

Whereby men, seeing their austerity, began to have them in great admiration. And thus growing up in Opinion of Holiness, of Lay-men and Labourers they came at length to be Clergy-men, and greatest doers of all other in Christs Religion; inasmuch that at last there was none reputed almost for a Religious man or perfect Christian, unless he were a Monk: neither almost was any advanced to any dignity of the Church, but either he was a Monk, or afterward he put on a Monks weed. According as in the Stories of this Realm it is to be seen, how in the time of Dunstan Archbishop of Canterbury, of Ethelwald Bilhop of Worcester, and of Oswald Bilhop of Winchester, Pope John the thirteenth, writing to King Edgar, willed him in his Letters, to see in his Cathedral Churches none to be promoted to be Bishops, but such as were of the Monastical Religion, and willed him moreover to exclude the Secular Prelendaries at Winchester, and to place in Monks, and that none of the Secular Clerks there should be chosen Bishop, but either taken out of the same Convent of that Church, or of some other Abbey.

So was also King Henry the Second commanded to do in the house of Walram, where the Secular Canons were removed out, and Regular Canons intruded. The same did Oswald Bilhop with the Church of Worcester.

cester, likewise in their Sees did Dunstane Archbishop of Canterbury, Osketellus Archbishop of York, Eshelwold Bishop of Worcester (who in stories is reported to be Multorum fundator Monasteriorum.) Lefwinus also Bp. of Dorchester, with other Bishops more about the time and Reign of King Edgar. Odo Archbishop of Canterbury before Dunstane, Anno 934. after his election refused to take that dignity upon him, before he had received the Habit of a Monk in the Abbey of Florence in France, because as the story telleth (if it be true) Nullus ad id tempus, nisi Monachali schemate indutus, Archiepiscopus fuisset, &c. That is, Because all the Archbishops of Canterbury before him had been Monks, &c. In like manner Baldwinus also, Anno 1114. after he was elected Archbishop of Canterbury, took upon him the Habit and Profession of Merton Abbey. And so did Reginaldus his next Successor after him, &c.

As concerning therefore the Origine of Monks, ye have heard how first they began of Lay men only: leading a freater life from the society of other persons, who then following the Rule of Saint Benet, where called Regulars, and Votaries, and yet all this while had nothing to do with any Ecclesiastical ministry, till the time of Pope Bonifacius the fourth, Anno 606. who then made a Decree, that Monks might use the office of Praching, of Christening, of hearing Confessions and absolving them of their sins, differing from Priests only in this, that they were called Regulars, and Priests were called, Seculares, the Monks were Votaries, the Priests had free liberty to have Wives, till the time of Lawfranke and Anselme, as is afore said. Albeit Arbanasius, in his Epistle ad Dracontium, winceseth also, that he knew Monks in the old time, and Bishops, which were married and had Children. Furthermore, as ignorance and superstition with time increased, so the number and swarm of Monks still more and more multiplied in such sort as not only they thrust out Secular Priests from their Houses, but also out of them were made Popes, Cardinals, Archbishops and Bishops, to govern Churches. Of which number began Augustine the first Archbishop of the See of Canterbury, and the most part of all other Archbishops after him, until the time of the conquest, and after.

All this while the Friars were not yet come, neither the Discipline of St. Dominick, nor the Testament of St. Francis, nor the Order of the Austin Brothers, nor of the Carmelites was yet heard of: which last of all came in with their pageants, and plaid their art likewise, an. 1220. being much more full of Hypocrisie, Blindness, Idolatry, and Superstition, than were the Monks: So that what with Monks on the one side, and with the Friars on the other side, while all things were ruled by the Rules of St. Benet, by the Canons of the Pope, by the Doctrine of S. Dominick, and by the Testament of S. Francis, Christs Testament was trodden under Foot, the Rule of Gods Word neglected, true Christian Religion defaced, Faith forgotten, the right way of Salvation abolished, sound Doctrine oppressed Christs Servants persecuted, and the Peoples Souls uncomfortable; yea, and the true Church of Christ almost clean extirpated, had not Almighty God (who cannot forget his promise) provided remedy in time, in raising up this Cromwel his Servant, and other like Champions, to cut up from the Root the Houses of them, which otherwise would utterly have rooted up the House of the Lord, and had subverted a great part already.

Wherefore, whosoever findeth himself aggrieved with Cromwels doings in suppressing these Monasteries of Monks and Friars, let him wisely consider with himself, First the Doctrine, Laws and Traditions of these Men, which he shall find rebelling to the Religion of Christ, pernicious to our Salvation, Derogatory to Christs Glory, full of much Blasphemy and damnable Idolatry. Secondly let him likewise well advise the horrible and execrable lives of the Cloisters, or at the least search out the Rolls and Registers of matters found out by inquisition in King Henry the eighth his days, against them; which here is not to be spoken of, unless we will speak as Matthew Paris speaketh of the Court of Rome, Cuius factor usque ad nubes fumum terrerimum exhalabat, That is, Whose filthy stinck, saith he, did breathe up a most pestiferous fume, even unto the Clouds of Heaven, &c.

All which things well considered, what marvel is it then, if God of his iust judgment did set up the foresaid Lord Cromwel to destroy these sinful Houses, whom their own Corruptions could suffer no longer to stand? And as touching the dissipation of their Lands and Possessions to the Hands of such as they were bestowed upon; if it so pleased the King, in bestowing those Abbey-Lands upon his Nobles and Gentlemen, either to restore them again unto them from whence they came, or else to gratifie his Nobility by that means of policy, not to mislike his doings, what is that to Cromwel? But they might, say you, have been much better employed to other more fruitful uses. Briefly to answer thereunto, what may be done presently in a Common-wealth, is not enough to say, but what may also follow must be considered. If this throwing down of Abbeyes had happened in such free and reformed Cities and Countries, as are amongst the Germans, where the State governed and directed by Laws, rather than by Rulers, remaineth always alike and unmutable; who doubteth, but such Houses there standing still, the Possessions might well be transported to such uses above said, without any fear or peril? But in such Realms and Kingdoms as this, where Laws, and Parliaments be not always one, but are subject to the disposition of the Prince, neither is it certain always what Princes may come; the surest way therefore to send Montery and Popery packing out of the Realm, is to do with their Houses and Possessions as King Henry here did, through the motion of the Council of Cromwel. For else who seeth not in Queen Marius time, if either the Houses of Monks had stood, or their Lands had been otherwise disposed than into the Hands of such as they were, how many of them had been restored and replenished again with Monks and Friars, in as ample wise as ever they were? And if Dukes, Barons, and the Nobilitie scarce were able to retain the Lands and Possessions of Abbies distributed to them by King Henry, from the devotion of Queen Mary seeking to build again the Walls of Jericho, what then should the meaner sort have done, let other men conjecture. Wherefore it is not unlike, but that Gods heavenly Providence did well foresee and dispose these things before by this man, in working the destruction of these Abbies; Whereupon as often as he sent out any man to suppress any Monastery, he used most commonly to send with this charge, that they should throw down those Houses to the foundation.

Which words although it may seem percase to some to be cruelly spoken of him; yet contrariwise do I suppose the doing thereof not to be without Gods special Providence and secret guiding. Or else we might peradventure have had such swarms of Friars and Monks possessed in their nests again before this day in England, in so great a number, that ten Cromwels afterward uneth should have been suffered to have unhouseed them.

Wherefore if the Plantation, which the Lord God never planted, be plucked up by the Roots, let God alone with his working, and let the Monasteries go.

Now that you have seen, what this Malleus Monachorum had done in defacing the Synagogue of the Pope, let us see how the same Cromwel again did travel in setting up Christs Church and Congregation.

After that the Bishop of Romes Power and Authority was banished out of England, the Bishops of his Sect never crafed to seek all occasion how either to restore his Head again, being broken and wounded, or at the least to keep upright those things which remained, wherein although their labours were not altogether frustrate, yet had they brought much more to pass, if Cromwel (as fore and defence of the Church) had not refitted continually their Enterprises.

It happened, that after the abolishing of the Pope certain tumults began to rise about Religion. Whereupon it seemed good unto King Henry to appoint an ed by the Assembly of learned Men and Bishops, which should soberly and modestly intreat and determine those things which pertained to Religion. Briefly, at the Kings pleasure all the learned Men, but especially the Bishops assembled, to whom this matter seemed chiefly to belong. Cromwel thought also to be present himself with the Bishops, who by chance meeting with Alexander Alefius by the way, a Scottish man, brought him with him to the Convocation House, where all the Bishops were assembled together. Which was in the year 1537. The Bishops and Prelates attending upon the coming of Cromwell, as he was come in, rose up and did obeisance unto him as to their Vicar General, and he again saluted every one in their degree and fate down in the highest place at the Table, according to his degree and Office, and after him every Bishop in his order, and Doctors. First over against him sat the Archbishop of Canterbury, then the Archbishop of York, the Bishops of London, Lincoln, Salisbury, Bath, Ely, Hereford, Chichester, Norwich, Rochester, and Worcester, &c. There Cromwell in the name of the King (whose most dear and secret Counsellor at that present he was, and Lord privy Seal, and Vicar General of the Realm) spake these words in manner following.

Cromwell's
the Bishops.

Right reverend Fathers in Christ: The Kings Majesty groweth you high thanks that ye have so diligently, without any excuse, assembled hither according to his commandment. And ye be not ignorant that ye be called hither to determine certain controversies, which at this time become concerning the Christian Religion and Faith, not only in this Realm, but also in all Nations throughout the world. For the King studieth day and night to let a quietness in the Church, and he cannot rest until all such controversies be fully debated and ended, through the determination of you and of his whole Parliament. For although his special desire is to set a stay for the unlearned People, whose consciences are in doubt what they may believe; and he himself by his excellent learning knoweth these controversies well enough, yet he will suffer no common alteration but by the consent of you and his whole Parliament. By the which thing ye may perceive both his high Wisdom, and also his great love toward you. And he desireth you for Christs sake, that all malice, obduracy, and carnal respect set apart, ye will friendly and lovingly dispute among your selves of the controversies moved in the Church, and that you will conclude all things by the Word of God, without all brawling or folding; neither will his Majesty suffer the Scripture to be wrested and defaced by any Glosses, any Papistical Laws, or by any Authority of Doctors or Councils, and much less will he admit any Articles or Doctrine not contained in the Scripture, but approved only by Continuance of time and old custome, and by unwritten verities, as ye were wont to do. Ye know well enough that ye be bound to shew this service to Christ and to his Church, and yet notwithstanding his Majesty will give you high thanks, if ye will set and conclude a goodly and a perfect unity: whereunto this is the only way and mean, if ye will determine all things by the Scripture, as God commandeth you in Deuteronomy, which thing his Majesty exhorteth and desireth you to do.

The Kings
request to the Bishops.

When Cromwell had ended this his Oration, the Bishops rose up altogether, giving thanks unto the Kings Majesty, not only for his great Zeal toward the Church of Christ, but also for his most godly exhortation, worthy to Christian a Prince.

Stokesley defends the Seven Sacraments.

Immediately they rose up to dispute, where Stokesley Bishop of London, the first of all, being the most earnest Champion and maintainer of the Romish Decrees, (whom Cromwell a little before had checked by name, for defending unwritten Verities) indeavoured himself with all his labour and industry, out of the old School Glosses, to maintain the seven Sacraments of the Church; the Archbishop of York, Lincoln, Bath, Chichester, and Norwich also favoured his part and Sect. On the contrary part was the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of Salisbury, Ely, Hereford, Worcester, with many other.

After much communication had on either part, and that they had long contended about the Testimony of the Doctors, which as it seemed unto them differed and disagreed among themselves, the Archbishop of Canterbury at the last spake and said thus unto them.

I beseecheth not men of learning and gravity to make much babbling and brawling about bare words, for that we agree in the very Substance and effect of the matter. For to brawle about words is the property of Sophisters, and such as mean deceit and subtilty, which delight in the debate and disension of the world, and in the miserable State of the Church; and not of them which should seek the glory of Christ; and should study for the unity and quietness of the Church; there be weighty controversies now moved and put forth, not of Ceremonies and light things, but of the true understanding, and of the right difference of the Law and of the Gospel; of the manner and way how sins be forgiven; of comforting doubtful and wavering consciences, by what means they may be certified that they please God; seeing they feel the strength of the Law accusing them of sin; of the true use of the Sacraments, whether the outward work of them doth justify man, or whether we receive our justification by Faith. Item, which be the good works, and the true Service and Honour which pleasest God; and whether the choice of means, the difference of Ceremonies, the vows of Monks and Priests and other Traditions which have no Word of God to confirm them; whether these (I say) be right good works, and such as make a perfect Christian man or no? Item, whether vain service and false honouring of God, and mans Traditions, do bind mens consciences or no? Finally, whether the ceremony of Confirmation, of Orders, and of anealing, and such other (which cannot be proved to be institute of Christ, nor have any word in them to certify us of remission of sins) ought to be called Sacraments, and to be compared with Baptism and the Supper of the Lord, or no? These be no light matters, but even the principal points of our Christian Religion. Wherefore we contend not about words and Titles, but about high and earnest matters. Christ saith, Blessed be the Peacemakers, for they shall be called the Sons of God. And Paul, writing unto Timothy, commanded Bishops to avoid brawling and contention about words, which be profitable to nothing but unto the subversion and destruction of the bearers: and moneth him specially, that he should resist with the Scriptures, when any man disputeth with him of the Faith; and he addeth a cause whereas he saith, Doing this thou shalt preserve both thy self, and also them which hear thee. Now if ye will follow these Counsellors Christ and Paul, all contention and brawling about words must be set apart, and ye must stablish a goodly and a perfect unity and concord out of the Scripture. Wherefore in this disputeation we must first agree of the number of the Sacraments, and what a Sacrament doth signifie in the holy Scripture, and when we call Baptism and the Supper of the Lord, Sacraments of the Gospel, what we mean thereby. I know right well that Saint Ambrose and other Authors call the washing of the Disciples feet and other things, Sacraments; which I assure you your selves would not suffer to be numbred among the other Sacraments.

When he had ended his Oration, Cromwell commanded Alefius which stood by (whom he perceived to give attentive ear to that which was spoken) to shew his mind and Opinion; declaring to the Bishops before, that he was the Kings Scholar, and therefore desired them to be contented to hear him indifferently.

Alefius, after he had first done his duty unto the Lord Cromwell and to the other Prelates of the Church, said thus with the Bishops.

Alex Alefius

Bishops.

Right honorable and Noble Lord, and you most reverend Fathers and Prelates of the Church, although I come unprepared unto this disputeation, yet trusting in the aid of Christ, which promitteth to give both mouth and wisdom unto us when we be required of our Faith, I will utter my Sentence and judgment of this Disputation. And I think that my Lord Archbishop hath given you a profitable exhortation, that ye should first agree of the signification of a Sacrament, whether ye will call a Sacrament a Ceremony institute of Christ in the Gospel, to signifie a special or a singular virtue of the Gospel, and of the godliness (as Paul nameth remission of sins to be) or not, how whether ye mean every Ceremony generally, which may be a token or a signification of an holy thing to be a Sacrament? For after this later signification I will not stick to grant you that there be seven Sacraments and more too, if ye will. But yet Paul seemeth to describe a Sacrament after the just signification, whereas he saith, That Circumcision is a token and seal of the righteousness of Faith. This definition of one particular Sacrament must be understood to appertain unto all Sacraments generally, for the Jews had but one Sacrament only, as all the Sophistical Writers do grant. And he describeth Baptism after the same manner, in the fifth to the Ephesians, whereas he saith, That Christ doth sanctifie the Church, that is to say, all that be baptized through the Bath of Water in the Word of Life. For here also he addeth the Word and Promise of God unto the Ceremony. And Christ also requirerh Faith where he saith, Whoſoever believeth and is baptized shall be ſaved.

And S. Augustine describeth a Sacrament thus; The Word of God coming unto the Element maketh the Sacrament. And in another place he saith, A Sacrament is a thing wherein the power of God, under the form of visible things, doth work secretly ſalvation. And the Maſter of the Sentences doth describe a Sacrament no otherwiſe: A Sacrament (saith he) is an inviſible grace, and hath a viſible form: and by this inviſible grace I mean (saith he) remiſſion of ſins. Finally, St. Thomas denieth that any man hath authority to inſtitute a Sacrament. Now if ye agree unto this definition of a Sacrament, it is an eaſie thing to judge of the number of thoſe Sacraments which have the maniſeſt Word of God, and be inſtitute by Chriſt, to ſignifie unto us the remiſſion of our ſins.

St. Augustine ſaith that there be two ſuch Sacraments, in the hundred and eighteenth Epistle to Januarinus. His words be theſe, Fiſt, I would have thee to underſtand the ſum and effect of this Diſputation, which is this: That our Lord Jeſus Chriſt (as he himſelf ſaith in the Goſpel) hath laden us but with a light and eaſie Yoke or Burthen. Wherefore he hath knitt together the fellowſhip of his new people with Sacraments, very few in number, very eaſie to be kept, and very excellent in ſignification, which be Baptiſm, and the Supper of the Lord, and ſuch other, ſo there be any more commanded in the holy Scripture, thoſe except which were Burthen for the ſervitude of the people in the old Law, for the hardneſs of their hearts, &c. And again in the third Book of the learning of the Chriſtian Man, he ſaith, The Scripture hath taught us but few ſigns, as be the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the ſolemn celebration and remembrance of the Body and Blood of the Lord, &c.

Then the Biſhop of London, which could ſcarcely refrain himſelf all this while, and now could forbear no longer, brake out in this manner: Fiſt of all, ſaith he, where you alledge that all the Sacraments which are in the Church inſtituted by Chriſt himſelf, have either ſome maniſeſt ground in the Scriptures, or ought to ſhew forth ſome ſignification of remiſſion of ſins, it is falſe, and not to be allowed.

Then ſaid Aleſius, that he would prove it, not onely by maniſeſt Authorities of Scripture, but alſo by evident Teſtimonies of ancient Doctors and School-writers.

But the Biſhop of Hereford (which was then lately returned out of Germany, where he had been Embaſſador for the King to the Proteſtants) being moved with the Biſhop of London ſowardneſs, turning himſelf fiſt to Alexander Aleſius, willed him not to contend with the Biſhop in ſuch manner, by the Teſtimonies of Doctors and Schoolmen, forſomuch as they do not all agree in like matters, neither are they itedfaſt among themſelves in all points, but do vary, and in many points are utterly repugnant. Wherefore if this Diſputation ſhall be decided by their minds and verdicts, there ſhall be nothing eſtabliſhed, neither ſhall appear any way of agreement to follow. Furthermore, we be commanded by the King, that theſe Controverſies ſhould be determined onely by the rule and judgment of the Scripture. This he ſpake unto Aleſius. Then he turning himſelf unto the Biſhops, likewiſe admoniſhed them with a grave and ſharp Oration, which we thought not good to omit in this place.

Think ye not (ſaid he) that we can by any ſophiſtical ſubtilties ſteal out of the the world again the light which every Man doth ſee. Chriſt hath ſo lightened the world at this time, that the light of the Goſpel hath put to flight all myſty darkneſs, and it will ſhortly have the higher Hand of all clouds, though we reſiſt in vain never ſo much. The Lay people do now know the Holy Scripture better than many of us. And the Germans have made the Text of the Bible ſo plain and eaſie by the Hebrew and Greek Tongues, that now many things may be better underſtood without any Glaſſes, as all, than by all the Commentaries of the Doctors. And moreover, they have ſo opened theſe Controverſies by their writings, that Women and Children may wonder at the blindneſs and Falſehood that hath been hitherto. Wherefore ye muſt conſider earneſtly what ye will determine of theſe Controverſies, that ye make not your ſelves to be mocked and laughed to ſcorn of all the world, and that ye bring them not to have the opinion of you, to think evermore hereafter, that ye have neither one ſpark of learning, nor yet of godlineſs in you. And thus ſhall ye loſe all your Eſtimation and Authority with them, which before took you for learned Men and profitable members unto the Common-wealth of Chriſtendom. For that which you do hope upon, that there was never Hereſie in the Church ſo great, but that proceſs of time, with the power and upon the Authority of the Pope, hath quenched it, is nothing to the purpose. But ye muſt turn your opinion, and think this ſurely, that there is nothing ſo feeble and weak, ſo that it be true, but it ſhall find place, and be able to ſtand againſt all Falſehood.

Truth is the Daughter of time, and time is the Mother of Truth. And whoſoever is Beſieged of Truth cannot long continue, and upon whoſe ſide Truth doth ſtand, that ought not to be thought Tranſitory, or that it will ever fall. All things conſiſt not in painted eloquence and ſtrength or Authority. For the Truth is of ſo great power, ſtrength, and efficacy, that it can neither be defended with words, nor be overcome with any ſtrength, but after ſhe hath hidden herſelf long at length ſhe purſeth up her head and appeareth, as it is written in Eccleſ. 4. A King is ſtrong, Wine is ſtrong, yet Women be more ſtrong; but Truth excelleth all.

To this effect, in a manner, and much more, did he ſpeak and utter in that Convocation, both copiouſly and diſcreetly. Through whoſe Oration Aleſius being encouraged, proceeded further, to urge the Biſhop with this Argument.

The Argument in form.

- Be- Sacraments be ſeals aſcertaining us of Gods good will.
- re- Without the Word there is no certainty of Gods good will.
- co. Ergo, Without the Word there be no Sacraments.

The fiſt part of this reaſon is Saint Pauls own ſaying, the fourth to the Romans, where he ſaith, That Circumciſion is a token and a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of Faith. Ergo, it requirerh Faith to certifie mans heart of the will of God. But the Word of God is the Foundation of Faith, as Saint Paul witneſſeth. Rom. 10. Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing cometh the Word of God. For the mind muſt be taught and inſtructed to the will of God by the Word, like as the eye is taught and inſtructed by the outward ceremony. And ſo Paul by that ſaying conſuteh this opinion, that the Sacraments ſhould make Men righteous and juſt before God, for the very outward work, without Faith of them that receive them.

And after this manner doth Paul ſpeak unto the Ephesians, that Chriſt doth ſanctifie his Church though the Bath of Water in the Word of life. And for as much as he joyneth the Word unto the ceremony, and declarerh the vertue and power of the Word of God, that it bringeth with it ſelf, he doth maniſeſtly teach that Word of

The publick care of Cromwel for the Commonwealth.

God is a principal thing, and even as it were the very substance and body of the Sacrament; and the outward ceremony to be in very deed nothing else but a token of that lively inflammation which we receive through faith in the Word and Promise. St. Paul also in ministring the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, doth manifestly add the words of Christ. He took Bread, faith he, and when he had given thanks, he brake it and said, Take ye this, and eat ye this, for it is my Body. Item, Do ye this in my remembrance. Beside this he teacheth evidently that only Christ, and none but he had power to institute a Sacrament; and that neither the Apostles nor the Church hath any Authority to alter or to add any thing unto his Ordinance, whereas he faith, For I have received of the Lord that which I delivered unto you, &c. To what purpose should he go about to move the People to believe him, and to win their hearts with this Protestation, if it had been lawful for him to have made any Sacraments, or to have altered the form and manner of ministring the Sacrament, as some men both wickedly and shamefully do affirm, that the Apostles did alter the form of Baptism.

When he had spoken thus much, the Bishop of London did interrupt him and said; Let us grant that the Sacraments may be gathered out of the Word of God, yet are you far deceived, if ye think that there is none other Word of God, but that which every Sowter and Cobler do read in their Mother Tongue. And if ye think that nothing pertaineth unto the Christian Faith, but that only that is written in the Bible, then erre ye plainly with the Lutherans. For John faith, that Jesus did many things, which be not written. And Paul commandeth the Thessalonians to observe and keep certain unwritten Traditions and Ceremonies, 2 Thess. 2. Moreover he himself did preach not the Scripture only, but even also the Traditions of the Elders, Acts 16. Finally, we have received many things of the Doctors and Councils by times, which although they be not written in the Bible, yet forso much as the old Doctors of the Church do make mention of them, we ought to grant that we received them of the Apostles, and that they be of like authority with the Scripture, and finally that they may worthily be called the Word of God unwritten.

Now when the right Noble Lord Cromwel, the Archbishop, with the other Bishops, which did defend the pure Doctrine of the Gospel, heard this, they smiled a little one upon another, forso much as they saw him flee even in the very beginning of the Disputation, unto his old rusty Sophistry and unwritten Verities. Then Alefius would have proceeded further with the Bishop to have confuted this blasphemous Lie; but the Lord Cromwel had him be content, for the time began to go away and it was twelve of the Clock; and thus he made an end with his Protestation. Right Reverend Mr. Bishop, you deny that our Christian Faith and Religion doth lean only upon the Word of God, which is written in the Bible: which thing if I can prove and declare, then you will grant me that there be no Sacraments but those that have the manifest Word of God to confirm them. Unto this he did consent, and then immediately that Assembly was dissolved for that day.

The next day when the Bishops were set again, the Archbishop of Canterbury sending his Archdeacon, commanded Alefius to abstain from disputation. Whereupon he wrote his mind, and delivered it to Cromwel, who afterward shewed the same unto the Bishops. Thus through the industry of Cromwel, the Colloquies were brought to this end, that albeit Religion could not wholly be reformed, yet at that time there was some Reformation had throughout all England.

How desirous and studious this Cromwel was in the cause of Christs Religion, examples need not to be brought. His whole life was nothing else but a continual care and travel how to advance and further the right knowledge of the Gospel, and reform the House of God: as by so many Proclamations above-specified, by his means set forth, may well appear, wherein first he caused the People to be instructed in the Lords Prayer and Creed in English. Then procured the Scripture also to be read and set forth in the same Language for every Englishman to understand: after that, to rescue the Vulgar People from damnable Idolatry, caused certain of the most grosslest Pilgrimages to be destroyed. And further, for the more commodity of the poor sort, which get their living with their daily labour and work of their hands, he provided that divers idle Holy-days were diminished. Item, He procured for them liberty to eat Eggs and White-meat in Lent. Furthermore it was by him also provided, for the better instruction of the People, that Beneficed men should be resident in their Cures and Parishes, there to teach and to keep Hospitality, with many other things else most fruitfully redressed for the Reformation of Religion and behoof of Christs Church: as by the Proclamations, Injunctions, and necessary Articles of Christian Doctrine above-specified, set forth in the Kings Name, by his means, may more abundantly appear.

Now to adjoyn withal his private benefits in helping divers good Men and Women at sundry times out of troubles and great distresses. It would require a long discourse. Briefly, his whole life was full of such Examples, being a man to that intent ordained of God (as his deeds well proved) to do many men good, and especially such as were in danger of persecution for Religions sake. Amongst other infinite stories, one or two examples shall suffice for a testimony of his worthy doings.

IN the year of our Lord 1538. Sir A Story of William Forman being Mayor of the City of London, three weeks before Easter, the Wife of one Thomas Frebarne dwelling in Paternoster-Row, being with Child, longed after a morsel of a Pig, and told her mind unto a Maid dwelling in Abchurch-Lane, desiring her if it were possible to help her unto a piece. The Maid perceiving her earnest desire, shewed unto her Husband what his Wife had said unto her, telling him that it might chance to cost her her life, and the Childs too which the went with, if she had it not. Upon this, Thomas Frebarne her Husband spake to a Buter-Wife which he knew, that dwelled at Harnesley, named good-Wife Fisher, to help him to a Pig for his Wife, for the was with Child, and longed fore to eat of a Pig: unto whom the said good-Wife Fisher pro-mited that he would bring him one the Friday following, and so he did, being ready dressed and scalded before. But when she had delivered him the Pig, the craftily conveyed one of the Pigs feet, and carried it unto Dr. Cocks, at that time being Dean of Canterbury, dwelling in Ivy-Lane, who at that time of his Dinner, before certain Guests which he had hidden, shewed the Pigs foot, declaring who had the body thereof. And after that they had talked their pleasure, and Dinner was done, one of his Guests being Landlord unto Frebarne afore said, called Mr. Garret, and by his Office, King of Arms, sent his Man unto the said Frebarne, demanding if there were no body sick in his house. Unto whom he answered, that they were all in good health, he gave God thanks. Then said he again, it was told his Master that some body was sick, or else they would not eat flesh in Lent. Unto whom Frebarne made answer, that his Wife was with Child, and longed for a piece of a Pig, and if he could get some for her he would. Then departed his Landlords man home again.

And shortly after his Landlord let for him. But before that he had sent for him, he had sent for the Bishop of Londons Summer, whose name was Holland, and when this Frebarn was come, he demanded of him, if he had not a Pig in his house, which he denied not. Then commanded Mr. Garter the said Sumner called Holland, to take him and go home to his House, and to take the Pig, and carry both him and the Pig unto Dr. Stokesley his Master, being then Bishop of London, and so he did. Then the Bishop being in his Chamber with divers other of the Clergy, called this Frebarn before him, and had him in examination for this Pig, laying also unto his charge, that he had eaten in his House that Lent powdered Beef and Calves-heads. My Lord, if the Heads were eaten in my House, in whose House were the Bodies eaten; Also, if there be either Man or Woman that can prove, that either I, or any in my House hath done as your Lordship saith, let me suffer death therefore. You spake (said he) against Pilgrimages, and will not take holy Bread nor holy Water, nor yet go on Procession on Palm-Sunday; Thou art no Christian man. My Lord, said Frebarn, I trust I am a true Christian man, and have done nothing either against Gods Law or my Princes.

In the time of this his Examination, which was during the space of two hours, divers came unto the Bishop; some to have their Children confirmed, and some for other causes. Unto whom as they came, having the Pig before him covered, he would lift up the Cloth and shew it them, saying, How think you of such a Fellow as this is? Is not this good meat, I pray you, to be eaten in this blessed time of Lent, yea, and also powdered Beef and Calves-Heads too besides this.

After this, the Bishop called his Sumner unto him, and commanded him to go and carry this Thomas Frebarn and his Pig openly throw the Streets into the Old-Bailly, unto Sir Roger Chomeley; for the Bishop said, he had nothing to do to punish him, for that belonged unto the Civi. Magistrates; and so was Frebarn carried with the Pig before him to Sir Roger Chomeleys House in the Old-Bailly, and he being not at home at that time, Frebarn was brought likewise back again unto the Bishops place with the Pig, and there lay in the Porters-Lodge till it was Nine of the Clock at Night. Then the Bishop sent him unto the Counter in the Poultry by the Sumner and other of his Servants.

The next day being Saturday, he was brought before the Mayor of London and his Brethren unto the Guild-Hall; but before his coming they had the Pig delivered unto them by the Bishops Officer. Then the Mayor and the Bench laid unto his charge (as they were informed from the Bishop) that he had eaten powdered Beef and Calves-heads in his House the same Lent; but no man was able to come in that would justify it, neither could any thing be found, save only the Pig, which (as is before said) was for the preservation of his Wifes life, and that she went withal. Notwithstanding the Mayor of London said, that the Monday next following he should stand on the Pillory in Cheapside, with the one half of the Pig on the one shoulder, and the other half on the other.

Then spake the Wife of the said Frebarn unto the Mayor and the Bench, desiring that she might stand there, and not be, for it was long of her and not of him. After this they took a Satten-Lift, and tied it fast about the Pigs neck, and made Frebarn to carry it hanging on his shoulder until he came unto the Counter of the Poultry, from whence he came.

After this was done, the Wife of this Prisoner took with her an honest Woman, the Wife of one Michael Lobley; which was well acquainted with divers in the Lord Cromwells House, unto whom the said Woman reported for some help for this Prisoner, desiring them to speak unto their Lord and Master for his deliverance out of trouble.

It hapned that the same time came in Dr. Barns and Mr. Barlow, who understanding the matter by Lobleys Wife, went up to the Lord Cromwel and certified him thereof; who upon their request sent for the Mayor of the City of London; but what was said to him is unknown, saving that in the Afternoon of the same day the Wife of the person aforesaid reforted again unto the Lord Mayor, suing to get her Husband delivered out of Prison, declaring how that he had two small Children, and had nothing to help her nor them, but only her Husband, who laboured for their living. Unto whom the Mayor answered, What come ye to me? You are taken up with the Kings Council. I supposed you had come to desire me that your Husband should not stand upon the Pillory in Cheapside on Monday next, with the one half of the Pig on his one shoulder, and the other half on the other. Also the Mayor said unto her, That he could not deliver him without the content of the rest of his Brethren the Aldermen. Wherefore he bade her the next day following, which was the Sabbath-day, to resort unto Pauls, to St. Dunstons Chapel, and when he had spoken with his Brethren, he would then tell her more. Other answer could he get none at that time. Wherefore she went unto Mr. Wilkinson, then being Sheriff of London, desiring him to be good unto her, and that the might have her poor Husband out of Prison. Unto whom Mr. Wilkinson answered: O Woman, Christ hath laid a piece of his Cross upon thy neck, to prove whether thou wilt help him to bear it or no, saying moreover unto her, that if the Lord Mayor had sent him to his Counter, as he sent him to his Brothers, he should not have tarried there an hour, and he commanded her to come the next day unto him to dinner, and he would do the best for her he could. So the next day came, and this Woman reforted again to Mr. Wilkinson, according as he bade her, who also had hidden divers Guests, unto whom he spake in her behalf. But as they were set at dinner, and the also sitting at the Table, when the saw the hot Filth come in, the fell down in a swoon, so that for the space of two hours they could keep no life in her. Wherefore they sent her home to her house in Paternoster-Rew, and then they sent for the Midwife, supposing that she would have been delivered incontinent of her Child that the went with (but after that she came somewhat again to her self) where the lay sick and kept her Bed the space of fifteen weeks after, being not able to help her self, but as she was helped of others, during the time of fifteen weeks.

Now to shew further what became of this Pig where- of we have spoken so much, it was carried into Finsbury Field by the Bishop of London Sumner, at his Masters commandment, and there buried. The Monday following, being the fourth day after that this Prisoner aforesaid was apprehended, the Mayor of London, with the residue of his Brethren being at Guild-Hall, sent for the Prisoner aforesaid, and demanded Sureties of him for his forth-coming, whatsoever hereafter should or might be laid unto his charge; but for lack of such Sureties as they required, upon his own Bond, which was a Recognizance of twenty pound, he was delivered out of their hands. But shortly after that he was delivered out of this his trouble, Mr. Garter, of whom we have spoken before, being his Landlord, warned him out of his House, so that in four years after he could not get another, but was constrained to be within other good Folks, to his greathindrance and undoing.

Hard it were, and almost out of number to rehearse the names and stories of all them, which felt the gentle help of this good man in some case or other. Where Gray a might be remembered the notable deliverance of one Gray a Smith of Bishops-Stafford, who being accused for denying the Sacrament of the Altar to be our Saviour, was sent up for the same to London, and there should have been condemned to be burnt, but that by the means of the Lord Cromwel he was sent home again and delivered. * One other Example, though it be somewhat long with the circumstances and all, I will declare, how he helped the Secretary that then was to Dr. Crammer Archbishop of Canterbury, which Secretary is yet alive, and can bear present Record of the same.

How the Lord Cromwel helped Crammers Secretary.

Mention was made before how King Henry, in the one and twentieth year of his Reign, caused the six Articles to pass, much against the mind and contrary to the content of the Archbishop of Canterbury, Thomas Crammer, who had disputed three days against the same in the Parliament-House, with great Reasons and Authorities. by the Parliament, the King for the singular favour which he ever bare to Crommer, and reverence to his learning, being desirous to know what he had said, and objected in the Parliament against these Articles, or what could be alledged by learning against the same, required a Note of the Archbishop of his doings, what he had said and opposed in the Parliament touching that matter. And this word was sent to him from the King by Cromwel, and other Lords of the Parliament, whom the King then sent to dine with him at Lambeth, somewhat to comfort again his grieved mind and troubled spirits, as hath been above recited.

Whereupon when his Dinner was finished, the next day after the Archbishop collecting both his Arguments, Authorities of Scriptures, and Doctors together, caused his Secretary to write a fair Book thereof for the King, after this order. First, the Scriptures were alledged, then the Doctors, thirdly followed the Arguments deduced from those Authorities. This Book was written in his Secretaries Chamber. Where, in a by-Chamber, lay the Archbishops Almshouse. When this Book was fair written, and whilst the Secretary was gone to deliver the same unto the Archbishop his Master, who was (as it then chanced) rid to Croydon, returning back to his Chamber, he found the door shut, and the Key carried away to London by the Almshouse.

At this season also chanced the Father of the said Secretary to come to the City, by whose occasion so it fell out that he must needs go to London. The Book he could not lay into his Chamber, neither durst he commit it to any other person to keep, being strictly charged, in any condition, of the Archbishop his Master, to be circumspect thereof; so that he determined to go to his Father, and to keep the Book about him. And so thrusting the Book under his Girdle, he went over unto Westminster Bridge with a Sculler, where he entered into a Wherry that went to London, wherein were four of the Guard who meant to land at Pauls-Wharf, and to pass by the Kings Highness, who then was in his Barge, with a great number of Barges and Boats about him, then baling of Bears in the Water over against the Bank.

These foresaid Yeomen of the Guard, when they came against the Kings Barge they durst not pass by towards Pauls-Wharf, lest they should be espied, and therefore intreated the Secretary to go with them to the Bear-baying, and they would find the means being of the Guard to make room, and to see all the pastime; the Secretary, perceiving no other remedy, assented thereto. When the Wherry came nigh the multitude of the Boats, they with Pollaxes got the Wherry so far, that being compassed with many other Wherries, and Boats, there was no refuge if the Bear should break loose and come upon them, as in very deed, within one Paternoster while, the Bear brake loose and came into the Boat where the Yeomen of the Guard were, and the said Secretary. The Guard forsook the Wherry, and went into another Barge, one or two of them leaping forth, and so fell into the Water. The Bear and the Dogs so flaked the Wherry, wherein the Secretary was, that the Boat being full of Water sunk to the ground, and being also as it chanced an ebbing Tide, he there fate in the end of the Wherry up to the middle in Water. To whom came the Bear and all the Dogs. The Bear, seeking as it were aid and succour of him, came back with his hinder parts upon him, and rushing upon him, the Book was looked from his Girdle, and fell into the Thames out of his reach.

The flying of the People, after that the Bear was loosed, from one Boat to another, was so combrous, that divers Persons were thrown into the Thames, the King commanding certain men that could swim to strip themselves naked, and to help to save them that were in danger. This pastime so displeased the King, that he bad away with the Bear, and let us go all hence.

The Secretary perceiving his Book to flee away in the Thames, called to the Bearward to take up the Book. When the Bearward had the Book in his custody, being an arrant Papist, far from the Religion of his Mistress (for he was the Lady Elizabeths Bearward, now the Queens Majesty) ere the Secretary could come to land, he had delivered the Book to a Priest of his own affinity in Religion standing on the bank, who reading in the Book, and perceiving that it was a manifest Reutation of the six Articles, made much ado, and told the Bearward that whosoever claimed the Book should surely be hanged. Anon the Secretary came to the Bearward for his Book. What quoth the Bearward, dare you challenge this Book? Whose Servant are you? I am Servant to one of the Council, said the Secretary, and my Lord of Canterbury is my Master. Yea marry, quoth the Bearward, I thought so much: you be like, I trust, quoth the Bearward, to be both hanged for this Book. Well, said he, it is not so evil as you take it, and I warrant you my Lord will avouch the Book to the Kings Majesty. But I pray you let me have my Book, and I will give you a Crown to drink. If you will give me five hundred Crowns you shall not have it, quoth the Bearward. With that the Secretary departed from him, and understanding the malicious frowardness of the Bearward, he learned that Blage the Grocer in Cheapside might do much with the Bearward, to whom the Secretary brake this matter, requiring him to lend for the Bearward to Supper, and he would pay for the whole charge thereof, and besides that, rather than he would forego his Book after this sort, the Bearward should have twenty shillings to drink. The Supper was prepared;

The Bearward was sent for and came. After Supper the matter was intreated of, and twenty shillings offered for the Book. But do what could be done, neither Friendship, acquaintance, nor yet reward of money could obtain the Book out of his hands, but that the same should be delivered unto some of the Council that would not slightly look on so weighty a matter, as to have it redeemed for a Supper, or a piece of money. The honest man Master Blage with many good reasons would have persuaded him not to be stiff in his own conceit, declaring that in the end he should nothing at all prevail of his purpose, but be laughed to scorn, getting neither penny nor praise for his Travel. He hearing that rushed suddenly out of the doors from his Friend Mr. Blage, without any manner of thanksgiving for his Supper, more like a Bearward, than like an honest man. When the Secretary saw the matter so extremely to be used against him, he then thought it expedient to fall from any further practising of intreaty with the Bearward, as with him that seemed rather to be a Bear himself, than the Master of the Beasts, determining the next morning to take the Lord Cromwel privy of the chance that happened.

So on the next day, as the Lord Cromwel went to the Court, the Secretary declared the whole matter unto him, and how he had offered him twenty shillings for the finding thereof. Where is the fellow, quoth the Lord Cromwel? Suppose, said the Secretary, that he is now in the Court attending to deliver the Book unto some of the Council. Well, said the Lord Cromwel, it maketh no matter; go with me thither and I shall get you your Book again. When the Lord Cromwel came into the Hall of the Court, there stood the Bearward with the Book in his hand, waiting to have delivered the same unto Sir Anthony Brown, or unto the Bishop of Winchester, as it was reported. To whom the Lord Cromwel said, Come hither fellow, what Book hast thou there in thy hand? and with that snatched the Book out of his hand, and looking in the Book, he said, I know this hand well enough. This is your hand, said he to the Secretary.

But where hadst thou this Book, quoth the Lord Cromwel to the Bearward? This Gentleman loff it two days ago in the Thames, said the Bearward. Dost thou know whose Servant he is, said the Lord Cromwel? He saith quoth the Bearward, that he is my Lords of Canterburys Servant. Why then didst thou not deliver to him the Book, when he required it, said the Lord Cromwel? who made thee so bold as to detain and withhold any Book or writing from a Counsellors Servant, specially being his Secretary? It is more meet for thee to meddle with thy Bears, than with such writing, and were it not for thy Mistress sake, I would fether thee fast by the feet, to teach such malapert Knaves to meddle with Counsellors matters. Had not many been well bestowed upon such a good fellow as this is, that knoweth not a Counsellors man from a Coblers man? And with those words the Lord Cromwel went into the Kings Chamber of presence, and the Archbishops

Secretary with him, where he found in the Chamber the Loſt Cant. To whom he ſaid, My Lord, I have found here good ſtuff for you (ſhewing to him the paper Book that he had in his Hand) ready to bring both you and this good fellow your Man to the halter, namely if the Knave Bearward now in the Hall might have well compaſſed it. At theſe words the Archbiſhop ſmiled and ſaid, he that loſt the Book is like to have the worſt Bargain, for beſides that he was well waſhed in the Thames, he muſt write the Book fair again: and at theſe words, the Lord Cromwel caſt the Book unto the Secretary, ſaying, I pray thee, Moriee, go in hand therewith, by and by with all expedition, for it muſt ſerve a turn. Surely, my Lord, it ſomewhat rejoiceth me, quoth the Lord Cromwel, that the Varlet might have had of your Man twenty ſhillings for the Book, and now I have diſcharged the matter with never a penny, and ſhaked him well up for his over much malapertneſs. I know the fellow well enough, quoth he, there is not a ranker Papift within this Realm than he is, moſt unworthy to be a ſervant unto ſo Noble a Princeſs. And ſo after humble thanks given to the Lord Cromwel, the ſaid Moriee departed with his Book, which when he again had fair written, was delivered to the Kings Majeſty by the ſaid Lord Cromwel, within four days after.

IT is commonly ſeen, that men advanced once from baſe degree to ample dignities, do riſe alſo with fortune into ſuch infoleny and exaltation of mind, that not only they forget themſelves what they were, and from whence they came, but alſo caſt out of Remembrance all their old Friends and former Acquaintance, which have been to them before beneficial. From which ſort of men how far the courteous condition of this Chriſtian Earl did differ, by divers examples it may appear. As by a certain poor Woman keeping ſometimes a victualling Houſe about Hounſloe, to whom the ſaid Lord Cromwel remained in debt for certain old reckonings, to the ſum of forty ſhillings. It happened that the Lord Cromwel with Crammer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, riding through Cheſpide towards the Court, in turning his eye over the way and then eſpying this poor Woman brought now in need and miſery, eſtious cauſed her to be called unto him, Who being come, after certain queſtions asked her if he were not ſuch a Woman, and dwelling in ſuch a place. At laſt he demanded if he were not behind for a certain payment of money between him and her. To whom ſhe with reverent obeſſance confeſſed that he owed her money for a certain old reckoning which was yet unpaid, whereof the ſtood now in great neceſſity, but never durſt call upon him, nor could come at him to require her right. Then the Lord Cromwel ſending the poor Women home to his houſe, and one of his ſervants withal, that the Porter ſhould let her in, after his return from the Court not only diſcharged the debt which he owed, but alſo gave her yearly penſion of four pounds, and a livery every year while he lived.

The like courteſie the ſaid Lord Cromwel ſhewed alſo to a certain Italian, who in the City of Florence had ſhewed him much kindeſs in ſuccouring and relieving his neceſſity, as in this ſtory following may appear. Which ſtory ſet forth and compiled in the Italian Tongue by Bandello, and imprinted at Luke by Buſdrago, Anno, 1554. I thought here to inſert, with the whole order and circumſtance thereof, as it is reported.

Not many years paſt, ſaith the Author; there was in Florence a Merchant, whoſe name was Francis, deſcended from the Noble and ancient Family of the Frefcobalds. This Gentleman was naturally indued with a Noble and liberal mind, unto whom alſo, through proſperous ſucceſſes and fortunate luck in his affairs and doings, much abundance of riches increaſed, ſo that he grew in great wealth, having his coſſers replenished with many heaps of much treaſure. He according to the cuſtom of Merchants, uſed his Trade into many Countries, but chiefly into England, where long time he lived, ſojourning in London, keeping Houſe to his great commendation and praiſe.

It happened, that Francis Frefcobald being in Florence, there appeared before him a poor Young Man, asking his Alms for God ſake, Frefcobald, as he earnestly beheld this ragged ſtrippling, who was not ſo diſguiſed in his tottered attire, but that his Countenance gave ſignification of much towardneſs and vertue in him, with conformity of manners agreeing to the ſame, being moved with pity demanded of what Country he was, and where he was born. I am Sir, quoth he, of England, and my name is Thomas Cromwel. My Father is a poor Man, and by his occupation a cloth-ſheaver. I am ſtrayed from my Country, and am now come into Italy with the Camp of Frenchmen that were overthrowen at Gaſtilyon, were I was the Page to a Footman, carrying after him his Pike and Burgonet. Frefcobald partly conſidering the preſent State of this Young Man, and partly for the love he bare to the Engliſh Nation, of whom he had received in times paſt ſundry pleaſures, received him into his Houſe, and with ſuch courteſie entertained his gueſt, as at his departure, when he was in mind to return to his Country, he provided ſuch neceſſaries as he any way needed. He gave him both Horſe and new apparel, and ſixteen Duckets of gold in his purſe, to bring him into his Country. Cromwel, rendring his hearty thanks, took leave of his Hoſt and returned into England. This Cromwel was a Man of Noble Courage, and Heroical Spirit, given to enterpriſe great matters, very liberal, and a grave Counſellor, &c. But to our purpoſe.

At what time Cromwel was ſo highly favoured of his Prince, and advanced to ſuch dignity as is aforeſaid, Francis Frefcobald (as it many times happeneth to Merchants) was by many miſfortunes and great loſſes caſt back and become very poor. For, according to Conſcience and equity, he paid whatſoever was due to any other from himſelf, but ſuch debts as were owing unto him he could by no means obtain: yet calling further to remembrance that in England by certain Merchants there was due to him the ſum of fifteen thouſand Duckets, he ſo purpoſed with himſelf, that if he could recover that money, he would well content himſelf, and no longer deal in the Trade of Merchants, but quietly paſs over the reſt of his days.

All things prepared for his journey, he ſetting forward towards England at laſt arrived at London, having utterly forgotten what courteſie long before he had ſhewed to Cromwel, which is the property always of a good nature, for a Man to forget what benefits he hath ſhewed to other, but to keep in mind continually what he hath received of other. Frefcobald thus being now arrived at London, and there travelling earneſtly about his buſineſs, it chanced him by the way to meet with this Noble Man, as he was riding towards the Court. Whom, as ſoon as the ſaid Lord Cromwel had eſpied, and had earneſtly beheld, he bethought himſelf that he ſhould be the Man of Florence, at whoſe Hands in times paſt he had received ſo gentle Entertainment, and thereupon ſuddenly alighting (to the great admiration of thoſe that were with him) in his Arms he gently embraced the ſtranger, and with a broken voyce ſcarce able to refrain tears, he demanded if he were not Francis Frefcobald the Florentine, Yea Sir, he answered, and your humble ſervant. My ſervant (quoth Cromwel?) no, as you have not been my ſervant in times paſt, ſo will I not now account you other ways than my great and ſpecial Friend, aſſuring you that I have juſt reaſon to be ſory, that you knowing what I am (or at the leaſt what I ſhould be) will not let me underſtand of your arriving in this Land, which known unto me, truly I ſhould have payed part of that debt which I confeſs to owe you; but thanked be God, I have yet time. Well, Sir, in conſequence, you are heartily welcom. But having now weighty affairs in my Princes cauſe, you muſt hold me excuſed, that I can no longer tarry with you. Therefore at this time I take my leave, deſiring you with the faithful mind of a Friend, that you forget not this day to cometo my Houſe to dinner; and then in remounting on his Horſe, he paſſed to the Court. Frefcobald greatly marvelling with himſelf who this Lord ſhould be, at laſt, after ſome pauſe his remembrance better called home, he knew him to be the ſame, whom long before (as you have heard) he had relieved in Florence, and thereſt not a little joyed, eſpecially especially considering how that by his means he should the better recover his due.

The hour of Dinner drawing near, he repaired to the house of his honourable Counsellor, where walking a while in his bafe Court, he attended his coming. The Lord shortly returned from the Court, and no sooner dismounted, but he again embraced this Gentleman with so friendly a countenance, that both the Lord Admiral, and all the other Noble Men of the Court being then in his Company, did not a little marvel thereat.

Which thing when the Lord Cromwell perceived, he turning towards them, and holding Frescobald fast by the hand, do ye not marvel my Lords, quoth he, that I seem so glad of this man? This is he by whose means I have achieved the degree of this my present calling: and because ye shall not be ignorant of his courtesie when I greatly needed, I shall tell it you, and there declared unto them every thing in order according as before hath been recited unto you. His Tale finished, holding him still by the hand, he entred his House, and coming into the Chamber, where his Dinner was prepared, he fate him down to the Table, placing his best welcomed Guest next unto him.

The Dinner ended, and the Lords departed, he would know what occasion had brought Frescobald to London. Francis in few words opened his cause, truly telling, that from great wealth he was fallen into poverty, and that his only Portion to maintain the rest of his life was fifteen thousand Duckats which were owing him in England, and two thousand in Spain. Whereunto the Lord Cromwell answering again, said, Touching the things, Mr. Frescobald that be already past, although it cannot now be undone by mans power, nor by policy called again, which hath hapned unto you by the unstable condition and mutability of this world altering to and fro; yet is not your sorrow so peculiar to your self alone, but that by the bond of mutual love I must also bewail with you this your state and condition: which state and condition of yours, though it may work in you matter of just heaviness, yet notwithstanding, to the intent you may receive in this your heavy distress some consolation for your old courtesie shewed to me in times past, the like courtesie now requireth of me again, that likewise should repay some portion of that debt whereunto am bound unto you; according as the part of a thankful man bindeth me to do, in requiting your benevolence my part heretofore received. And this further I have in the word of a true Friend, that during this life and state of mine, I will never fail to do for you, wherein my authority may prevail to supply your lack and necessity: and so let these few words suffice to give you knowledge of my friendly meaning. But let me delay the time no longer.

Then taking him by the hand, he led him into his Chamber, whence, after that every man by his commandment was departed, he locked fast the Door. Then opening a Coffer full heaped with Treasure, he first took out sixteen Duckats, and delivering them to Frescobald he said; Lo here (my Friend) is your money which you lent me at my departure from Florence, and here other ten which you bestowed in my apparel, with ten more that you disbursed for the Horse I rid away on. But considering you are a Merchant, it seemeth to me not honest to return your money without some consideration for the long detaining of it. Take you therefore these four bags, and in every of them is four hundred Duckats, these you shall receive and enjoy from the hands of your assured Friend.

Frescobald, although from great wealth he was brought to a low ebb, and almost an utter decay, yet expressing the virtue of a modest mind, after gentle thanks given to the Lord Cromwell for his exceeding kindness shewed, courteously would have refused that which was offered, had not the other enforced him against his will to receive it.

This done, he caused Frescobald to give him a Note of the Names of all his Debtors, and the sum that every one of them was owing him. This schedule he delivered to one of his Servants, unto whom he gave charge diligently to search out such men whose names were therein contained, if they were within any parts of the Realm, and then frailty to charge them to make payment of those sums within fifteen days, or else to abide the hazard of his displeasure. The Servant so well performed his Masters commandment, that in very short time they made payment of the whole sum: and if it had liked Frescobald so to have demanded, they should have answered to the uttermost such commodity as the use of his money in so many years would have given him profit: but he, contented with his principal, would demand no further. By which means he got both hearty love and great estimation, and the more, for that he was so dear to the Lord Cromwell, and so highly esteemed of him.

And during all this time, Frescobald continually lodged in the house of the Lord Cromwell, who ever gave him such entertainment as he had right well deserved, and oftentimes moved him to abide here in England, offering him the loan of three score thousand Duckats for the space of four years, if he would continue and make his Bank in London. But Frescobald, who desired to return into his Country, and there quietly to continue the rest of his life, with the great favour of the Lord Cromwell, after many thanks for his high and noble entertainment, departed towards his desired home, where richly arriving he gave himself quietly to live. But this wealth he still time enjoyed, for in the first year of his return he died.

So plentiful was the life of this man in such fruits full of singular gratitude and courtesie, that to rehearse all it would require too long a tractation. Yet one amongst many other I may not overpass, whereby we may evidently consider, or rather marvel at the lively mind of such a Person in so High a State and place of Honour. For as he coming with other of the Lords of the Council and Commissioners, to the house of Shene, about the examination of certain Monks which there denied the Kings Supremacy, after the examination done was there sitting at Dinner, it chanced him to spy afar off a certain poor man, which there served to sweep their Cells and Cloisters, and to ring the Bells. Whom when the Lord Cromwell had well advised, he sent for the poor man to come unto him, and before all the Table most lovingly and friendly called him by his name, took him by the hand, and asked how he did, with many other good words; and turning therewith to the Lords, My Lords (quoth he) see you this poor man? This mans Father hath been a great Friend to me in my necessity, and hath given me many a meals meat. Then said he unto the poor man, Come unto me, and I will provide for thee, and thou shalt not lack so long as I live. Such as were there present, and saw and heard the same, reported it to be true.

In this worthy and Noble Person, besides divers other eminent virtues, three things especially are to be considered, to wit, flourishing authority, excelling wisdom, and fervent zeal to Christ and to his Gospel. First, as touching his fervent zeal in setting forward the sincerity of Christian Faith, sufficient is to be seen before by the Injunctions, Proclamations, and Articles above specified, that more cannot almost be wished in a noble man, and scarce the like hath been seen in any.

Secondly, for his wisdom and policy no less singular, joyned with his Christian zeal, he brought great things to pass, as well on this side the Sea as in the other parts beyond. But especially his working was to nourish peace abroad with foreign Realms, as may be well by the Kings Letters and instructions sent by his means to his Ambassadors resident both with the Emperour, the French King, and the King of Scots, and also with the Pope, appear. In all whose Courts, such watch and espial he had, that nothing there was done, nor pretended, whereof he before had not intelligence. Neither was there any spark of mischief kindling never so little against the King and the Realm, which he by wit and policy did not quench and keep down. And where policy would not serve to obtain peace, yet by money he bought it out; so that during all the time of Cromwells prosperity, the King never had Wars with any foreign Nation: notwithstanding, that both the Pope, the Emperour, the King of France and Scotland, were mightily bent and incensed against him.

Thus

The courtesie of the Lord Cromwell, not in contenting his old Host.

Modesty in an Italian.

The Duckats after the Italian count come much near to our English Crowns.

An other example of the kind and lowly mind of this Lord Cromwell.

Three things in the Lord Cromwell, 1. Zeal, 2. Wisdom, 3. Authority.

The wisdom and policy of the Lord Cromwell.

The Lord Cromwell a continual nourisher of peace.

This as the prudent policy of this man was ever circumpect abroad, to stay the Realm from forcin wars; so his Authority was no less occupied in keeping good order and rule at home: First, in hampering the popish Prelats, and disappointing their subtil devices; secondly in bridling and keeping other untuly subjects under subjection and discipline of the Laws. Whereby as he was a succour and refuge to all Godly Persons, so was he a terror to the evil Doers; so that not the presence of him only, but also the hearing of the coming of Cromwel brake many fraies, and much evil rule, as well appeared by a certain notorious fray or riot, appointed to be fought by a company of Ruffians in the Street of London called Pater-noster-Row; where Carts were fet on both sides, of purpose prepared to inclose them, that none might break in to part them. It happened, that as this desperate skirmish should begin, the Lord Cromwel coming the same time from the Court through Pauls-Churchyard, and entering into Cheap, had intelligence of the great fray toward, and because of the Carts he could not come at them, but was forced to go about the little conduit, and so came upon them through Pannier-Alley.

A skirmish or fray in Pater-noster-row, stoped by the coming of the Lord Cromwel.

The Ruffian between the Lord Cromwel and a Ruffian.

Frier Bartley catcheth away his Priests soul.

I suppose verily that neither these monstrous habits, nor these prodigious hose, and prodigal or rather hyperbolical barbarous Breeches (which seem rather like Barrells than Breeches) would have any place in England. In which uncomatious excess of volture this I have to marvel; first, how these serving-men, which commonly have nothing else but their waies, and that so slender and bare, can maintain such stay, so huge and so sumptuous, which commonly stand them in more than their three years wages do come unto. Secondly, I marvel that their Masters and Lords (who shall yield to God account of their Servants doings) do not search and try out their Servants walks, how they come by these expenses wherewith to uphold this bravery, seeing their stipendary wages, and all revenues else they have, will not extend therunto. Thirdly, this most of all is to be marvelled, that magistrates which have in their Hands the ordering and guiding of good Laws, do not provide more feverely for the needful reformation of these enormities. But here we may well see, and truly this may say, That England once had a Cromwel.

The Monstrous Habits of England lack a Cromwel.

Long it were to recite what innumerable benefits this worthy Counsellor by his prudent policy, his grave Authority, and perfect Zeal, wrought and brought to pass in the publick Realm, and especially in the Church of England, what good Orders he established, what wickednesses and vices he suppressed, what corruptions he reformed, what abuses he brought to light, what crafty jugglings, what Idolatrous deceptions, and superstitious delusions he detected and abolished out of the Church. What posterity will ever think the Church of the Pope, pretending such Religion, to have been so wicked, so long to abuse the peoples eyes with an old rotten stock (called the Rood of Grace) wherein a Man should stand inclosed, with an hundred wyers within the Rood to make the Image goggle with the eyes, to nod with the Head, to hang the lips, to move and shake his jawes, according as the vallew was of the gift which was offered? If it were a final piece of silver he would hang a frowning lip, if it were a piece of gold, then should his jawes go merrily. Thus miserably was the people of Christ abused, their Souls seduced, their senses beguiled, and their purses spoiled, till this Idolatrous forgery at last by Cromwels means was disclosed, and the Image with all his engins shewed openly at Pauls Cross, and there torn in pieces by the People. The like was done by the Blood of Heales, which in like manner by Cromwel was brought to Pauls of Heales, Cross, and there proved to be the Blood of a Duck.

Divers contrivances in the Church destroyed and reformed by Cromwel.

The Rood of Grace goggling with his eyes.

The Blood of Heales.

Who would have judged, but that the Maid of Kent had been an holy Woman and a Prophetess inspired, had not Cromwel and Cranmer tried her at Pauls Cross to be a strong whore.

The holy Maid of Kent read before.

What should I speak of Darvel Gariboren, of the Rood of Chester, of Thomas Becket, our Lady of Walsingham, with an infinite multitude more of the like affinity? All which stocks and blocks of cursed Idolatry Cromwel, stirred up by the Providence of God, removed out of the peoples way, that they might walk more safely in the sincere service of Almighty God.

Stocks and blocks removed out of the way.

While the Lord Cromwel was thus blessedly occupied in profiting the common wealth, and purging the Church of Christ, it hapned to him, as commonly it doth to all good Men, that where any excellency of vertue appeareth, there envie creepeth in, and where true piety leeketh most after Christ, there some persecution followeth withal.

This, I say, as he was labouring in the Commonwealth and doing good to the poor afflicted saints, helping them out of trouble, the malice of his Enemies lo wrought continually hunting for matter against him, that they never ceased, till in the end they by false trains and crafty furnishes brought him out of the Kings Favour.

The chief and principal Enemy against him was Stephen Gardiner Bilhop of Winchester; who ever disdaining and envying the State and Felicity of the Lord Cromwel, and now taking his occasion by the Marriage of Lady Anne of Cleve, being a stranger and forcin, put in the Kings ears what a perfect thing it were to the quiet of the Realm, and establishment to the Kings succession, to have an English Queen and Prince that were were

were meer English; so that in conclusion, the Kings affection, the more it was diminished from the late married Anne of Cleve, the less favour he bare unto Cromwel. Besides this Gardiner, there lacked not other Friends also, and ill willers in the Court about the King, which little made for Cromwel both for his Religion which they malign'd, and for other private grudges also incident by the way.

Over and besides all which, it is moreover supposed, that some part of displeasure might rise against him, by reason of a certain talk which happened a little before at Lambeth, at what time the King after the making of the six Articles, sent the said Lord Cromwel his Vicegerent, with the two Dukes of Northfolk, and Suffolk, with all the Lords of the Parliament to Lambeth, to dine with the Archbishop (who mightily had disputed and alledged in the Parliament against the said Articles) to cheer and comfort his daunted Spirits again.

The talk between the Lord Cromwel and certain of the Lords at Lambeth.

There the said Cromwel with the other Noble Lords sitting with the Archbishop at his Table in talk, as every Lord brought forth his sentence in commendation of Crommer, to signify what good will both the King and they bare unto him; amongst the rest one of the company entering into a comparison between the said Thomas Crommer, and Thomas Wolsey late Cardinal of York, declared in his judgment, that Crommer was much to be preferred for his mild and gentle nature, whereas the Cardinal was a stubborn and a churlish Prelate, and one that could never abide any Noble-man, and that, said he, know you well enough, my Lord Cromwel, for he was your Master, &c. At these words the Lord Cromwel, being somewhat touched to hear the Cardinals service cast in his teeth, inferred again, saying, That he could not deny but he was Servant sometime to Cardinal Wolsey, neither did he repent the fame, for he received of him both fee, meat, and drink, and other Commodities; but yet he was never so far in love with him, as to have waited upon him to Rome, if he had been chosen Pope, as he understood that he would have done, if the case had so fallen out. Which when the other had denied to be true, Cromwel still persisted, affirming the fame, and shewing moreover, what number of Florens he should have received, to be his Admiral, and to have safe conducted him to Rome, in case he had been elected Bishop of Rome. The party, not a little moved with these words, told him, he lied. The other again affirmed it to be true. Upon this, great and high words rose between them. Which contention, although it was through intreaty of the Archbishop and other Nobles somewhat pacified for the time, yet it might be, that some bitter Root of grudge remained behind, which afterward grew unto him to some displeasure. And this was Anno 1540. in the Month of July. Ex testimonio Secretarii Cantuar.

Anno 1541. A Parliament. The Lord Cromwel apprehended.

After this, the next year following, which was 1541. in the Month of April, was holden a Parliament, which after divers prorogations was continued till the Month of July the said year. In the which Month of July, the Lord Cromwel being in the Council-Chamber was suddenly apprehended, and committed to the Tower of London. Whereat as many good Men, which knew nothing but truth by him, did lament and prayed heartily for him, so more there were on the contrary side that rejoiced, especially of the Religious sort, and of the Clergy, such as had been in some dignity before in the Church and now by his means were put from it. For indeed such was his nature, that in all his doings he could not abide any kind of Popery, or of false Religion creeping under Hypocrisie, and less could he abide the ambitious pride of Popish Prelacy, which professing all humility was so elated in pride, that Kings could not rule in their own Realms for them. These snuffing Prelates he could never abide, so they again hated him as much, which was the cause of shortning his days, and to bring him to his end; so that the xix. day of the Month aforesaid, he was attainted by Parliament.

Crimes and accusations brought against the Lord Cromwel.

In the which Attainder, divers and sundry Crimes, surmises, objections, and Accusations were brought against him, but chiefly, and above all other he was charged and accused of Heresie, for that he was a supporter of them (whom they recounted for Hereticks) as Barns,

Clark, and many other, whom he by his Authority and Letters written to Sheriffs and Justices in divers shires rescued, and discharged out of Prison. Also that he did divulgate and disperse abroad among the Kings Subjects great numbers of Books, containing (as they said) manifest matter of much Heresie, diffidence, and misbelief. Item, that he caused to be translated into our English Tongue Books comprising matter expressly against the Sacrament of the Altar, and that after the Translation thereof, he commended and maintained the same for good and Christian Doctrine. Over and besides all this, they brought in certain witnesses (what they were, the attainer expresseth not) which most especially pressed (or rather oppressed) him with hainous words spoken against the King in the Church of Saint Peter the Poor, in the Month of March, in the thirtieth year of the Kings Reign. Which words if they be true, as the Attainder doth purport, three things I have here much to marvel at. First, if his Adversaries had so sure hold and matter against him, then what should move them to make such hasty speed, in all post haste to have him dispatched and rid out of the way, and in no case could abide him to come to his purgation? Which if might have done, it is not otherwise to be thought, but he would easily have cleared himself thereof.

Witnesses against Cromwel falsely ed.

Secondly, this I marvel, that if the words had been so hainous against the King, as his Enemies did pretend, why then did those witnesses which heard those words in St. Peters Church, in the thirtieth year of the Kings Reign, conceal the said words of such Treason so long, the space almost of two years, and now uttered the same in the two and thirtieth year of the Kings Reign, in the Month of July.

Thirdly, here is again to be marvelled, if the King had known or believed these words to be true, and that Cromwel had indeed been such a Traitor to his Person, why then did the King so shortly after lament his death, wishing to have his Cromwel alive again? What Prince will with the life of him whom he suspecteth undoubtedly to be a Traitor to his Life and Person? Whereby it may appear what judgment the King had of Cromwel in himself, howsoever the Parliament by sinister information was otherwise incited to judge upon him.

Such Malicious Makebates about Princes, and Parliaments never lacked in Commonweals. By such King Erbseltene was incited to kill his Brother Edwine. So was King Edward the second deposed. So likewise when King Richard the second was once brought into the Tower, what Crimes and Accusations were laid against him in the Parliament? So was Humfrey the good Duke of Gloucester, the Kings uncle, by Henry Beauford Bishop of Winchester, and other in the Parliament holden at Berry, arrested as a traitour, and falsely made away. What great Treason was in the words of him, who, dwelling in Cheapside at the sign of the Crown, said merrily to his Son, that if he lived, he would make him heir of the Crown; and yet was he therefore attainted and judged for a Traitor. In the time of King Henry the eighth, how was that Parliament incited, wherein both Queen Anne was falsely condemned, and Queen Elizabeth her Daughter as falsely disherited? To omit here the Attainder of the Duke of Buckingham, wrought by the Cardinal of York; of the Lord Cobham likewise, and Sir Roger Aston: If the cause of the Lord Henry late Earl of Surrey were well tried out, peradventure no such hainous purpose of any Treason should be found therein as then was made. Who incited the late Duke of Somerst to behead his own Brother, but such Makebates as these? And afterward, when the said Duke himself was attainted for a Traitor, and condemned for a Felon, a Briber, and Extortioner; how was the Parliament then incited? Adam Damis received of Cardinal Pole at Rome but a silly Crown in way of Alms, and therefore, by means of Stephen Gardiner, was attainted for a Traitor. George Egles did but read sometimes in Woods, and by the said Gardiner was also condemned, and suffered as a Traitor. Not that I here speak or mean against the high Courts of Parliaments of this our Realm, necessarily assembled for the Commonwealth, to whom I always attribute their due Reverence and Authority. But as it happeneth sometimes in General Councils, which though they be be never so general, yet notwithstanding sometimes they may do err in weighty matters of Religion. so likewise they that say, that Princes and Parliaments may be misinformed sometimes, by some sinister Heads; in matters civil and politick, do not therein derogate or empaire the high estate of Parliaments, but rather give wholesome admonition to Princes and Parliament Men, to be more circumspect and vigilant what Counsel they shall admit, and what witnesses they do credit. For private affection, which commonly beareth a great stroke in all Societies and doings of men, creepeth sometimes into such general Councils, and into Princes Courts also, either too much amplifying things that be but small, making Mountains of Molehills, or else too much extenuating things that be of themselves great and weighty, according as it is truly said of the Poet Juvenal; Dat veniam carius, vexat censura columbus; or as our English Proverb sheweth, As a man is friended, so is his matter ended; And where the Helge is low, a man may lightly make large leaps; or rather to speak after the French Paraph; Qui son chien veut tuer, la rage lui met sus, That is He that is disposed to have his Dog killed, first maketh men believe that he is mad. And thus much having declared touching the matter of his accusation, the rest I refer to the high Parliament of that mighty King, who shall one day bring all things to perfect light.

In the mean season, howsoever the cause of the Lord Cromwel standeth true or false, this is certain, that Stephen Gardiner wanted notan Head, nor yet privy Assilters, which cunningly could fetch this matter about, and watch their time, when as the King being disposed to marry another Wife, which was the Lady Katherine Howard, immediately after the beheading of the Lord Cromwel, did repudiate Lady Ann of Cleve, which otherwise is to be thought during the life of Cromwel could not so well be brought to pass.

But these things being now done and past, let us pass them over, and return again from whence we have digressed, that is to the Lord Cromwel, being now attained and committed to the Tower. Who so long as he went with full fall of Fortune, how moderately, and how temperately he did ever bear himself in his estate, before hath been declared. So now the said Lord Cromwel, always one man, by the contrary wind of adversity being overblown, received the same with no less constancy, and patience of a Christian heart, neither yet was he so unprovided of Counsel and forecast, but that he did foresee this tempest long before it fell, and also prepared for the same; for two years before, smelling the conspiracy of his Adversaries, and fearing what might happen, he called unto him his Servants, and there shewing unto them in what a slippery state he stood, and also perceiving some stormy weather already to gather, required them to look diligently to their order and doings, lest through their default any occasion might rise against him. And furthermore before the time of his apprehension, such order he took for his Servants, that many of them, especially the younger Brethren, which had little else to take unto, had honestly left for them in their Friends hands to relieve them, whatsoever should him befall.

Briefly, such a loving and kind Master he was to his Servants, that he provided aheadmost for them all; inasmuch, that he gave to twelve Children, which were his Musicians, twenty pounds a piece, and so committed them to their Friends, of whom some yet remain alive, who both enjoyed the same, and also gave record of this to be true.

Furthermore, being in the Tower, a Prisoner, how quietly he bare it, how valiantly he behaved himself, how gravely and discreetly he answered, and entertained the Commissioners sent unto him, is worthy noting. Whatsoever Articles and Interrogatories they propounded, they could put nothing unto him, either concerning matters Ecclesiastical or Temporal, wherein he was not more ripened, and more furnished in every condition than they themselves.

Amongst the rest of those Commissioners which came unto him, one there was, whom the Lord Cromwel desired to carry for him a Letter to the King, which when he refused, saying that he would carry no Letter to the King from a Traitor; then the Lord Cromwel desired him at least to do from him a message to the King. To that the other was contented, and granted, so that it were not against his Allegiance. Then the Lord Cromwel taking witness of the other Lords; what he had Promised; You shall commend me, said he, to the Kings, and tell him, By that he hath so well tried, and thoroughly proved you as I have done, he shall find you as false a man as ever came about him.

Besides this, he wrote also a Letter from the Tower to the King, whereof when none durst take the carriage upon him, Sir R. Sadler (whom he also had preferred to the King before, being ever trusty and faithful unto him) went unto the King to understand his pleasure, whether he would permit him to bring the Letter or not, which when the King had granted, the said Master Sadler, as he was required, presented the Letter unto the King, which he commanded thrice to be read unto him, inasmuch as the King seemed to be moved therewith.

Notwithstanding by reason of the Act of Parliament afore passed, the worthy and Noble Lord Cromwel, oppressed by his enemies, and condemned in the Tower, and not coming to his answer, the twenty eighth day of July, Anno 1541, was brought to the Scaffold on Tower Hill, where he said these words following.

I Am come hither to die, and not to purge my self, as some think peradventure that I will. For if I should so do, I were a very wretch and a Miser. I am by the Law condemned to die, and thank my Lord God, that hath appointed me this death for mine Offence. For since the time that I have had years of discretion, I have lived a sinner, and offended my Lord God for the which I ask him heartily forgiveness. And it is not unknown to many of you, that I have been a great Traveller in this World, and being but of a base degree, was called to high estate, and since the time I came thereunto I have offended my Prince, for the which I ask him heartily forgiveness, and beseech you all to pray to God with me, that he will forgive me. And now I pray you that be here, to bear me record, I die in the Catholick Faith, not doubting in any Article of my Faith, no nor doubting in any Sacrament of the Church. Many have slandered me, and reported that I have been a bearer of such as have maintained evil Opinions, which is untrue. But I confess, that like as God by his holy Spirit doth instruct us in the Truth, so the Devil is ready to seduce us, and I have been seduced; but bear me witness that I die in the Catholick Faith of the holy Church: and I heartily desire you to pray for the Kings Grace, that he may long live with you in health and prosperity; and that after him, his Son, Prince Edward that goodly Impie, may long Reign over you. And once again I desire you to pray for me, that so long as life remaineth in this flesh, I never nothing in my Faith. And so making his Prayer, kneeling on his knees he spake these words, the effect whereof here followeth.

A Prayer that the Lord Cromwel said at the hour of his death.

O Lord Jesus, which art the only health of all men living, and the everlasting life of them which die in thee; I wretched sinner do submit my self wholly unto thy most blessed will, and being sure that the thing cannot Perish which is committed unto thy mercy, willingly now I leave this frail and wicked flesh, in sure hope that thou wilt in better wise restore it to me again at the last day in the resurrection of the just. I beseech thee most merciful Lord Jesus Christ, that thou wilt be thy grace make strong my Soul against all temptations, and defend me with the Buckler of thy mercy against all the assaults of the Devil. I see and know that there is in my self no hope of Salvation, but all my confidence, hope and trust is in thy most merciful goodness. I have no merits nor good works which I may alledge before thee. Of sins and evil works (alas) I see a great heap; but yet through thy mercy I trust to be in the number of them to whom thou wilt not impute their sins; and wilt take and accept me for righteous and just, and to be the inheritor of everlasting life. Thou merciful Lord wert born for my sake, thou didst suffer both hunger and thirst for my sake; thou didst teach, pray, and fast for my sake; all thy holy Acts and Works thou wroughtest for my sake. thou sufferedst most grievous Pains and Torments for my sake; finally, thou gavest thy most precious Body and thy Blood to be shed on the Croys for my sake. Now must merciful Saviour, let all these things profit me, which hast graciously self also for me. Let thy Blood cleanse and wash away the spots and stains of my sins. Let thy righteousness cover my unrighteousness. Let the merits of thy Passion and blood shedding be satisfaction for my sins. Give me, Lord thy grace, that the Faith of my salvation in thy Blood waver not in me, but may ever be firm and constant. That the hope of thy mercy and life everlasting never decay in me, that love wax not cold in me. Finally, that the weakness of my flesh be not overcome with the fear of death. Grant me, merciful Saviour, that when death hath shut up the eyes of my Body, yet the eyes of my Soul may still behold and look upon thee, and when death hath taken away the use of my Tongue, yet my heart may cry and say unto thee, Lord into thy hands I commend my Soul, Lord Jesus receive my spirit, Amen.

Cromwel.

And thus his Prayer made, after he had godly and devoutly exhorted them that were about him on the Scaffold, he quietly committed his Soul into the hands of God, and so patiently suffered the stroke of the Ax, by a ragged and butcherly Miller, which very ungodly performed his Office.

Of the Bible in English, printed in the large Volume; and of Edmund Boner preferred to the Bishoprick of London, by the means of the Lord Cromwel.

About the time and year when Edmund Boner Bp. of Hereford, and Embassa^r our resident in France, being first nominate and preferred by the means of the Lord Cromwel to the Bishoprick of London, which was Anno 1540. it happened that the said Thomas Lord Cromwel Earl of Essex procured of the King of England his gracious Letters to the French King, to permit and Licence a subject of his to imprint the Bible in English within the University of Paris, because Paper, was there more meet and apt to be had for the doing thereof, than in the Realm of England, and also that there were more store of good workmen for the ready dispatch of the same. And in like manner at the same time the said King wrote unto his Embassa^dour, who then was Edmund Boner Bishop of Hereford lying in Paris, that he should aid and assist the doers thereof in all their reasonable suits. The which Bishop outwardly shewed great friendship to the Merchants that were the Imprinters of the same, and moreover did divers and sundry times call and command the said Persons to be in manner daily at his Table both Dinner and Supper, and so much rejoiced in the workmanship of the said Bibles, that he himself would visit the Imprinters House, where the same Bibles were printed, and also would take part of such dinners as the Englishmen there had, and that to his cost, which as it seemed he little weighed. And further, the said Boner was so fervent, that he caused the said Englishmen to put in print a New Testament in English and Latin, and himself took a great many of them, and payed for them, and gave them to his Friends. And it chanced the mean time, while the said Bible was in printing, that King Henry the eighth preferred the said Boner from the said Bishoprick of Hereford to be Bishop of London; at which time the said Boner according to the Statute Law of England took his Oath to the King, acknowledging his Supremacy, and called one of the fore-said Englishmen that printed the Bible, whom he then loved, although afterward upon the change of the world he did hate him as much, whose name was Richard Grafton; to whom the said Boner said when he took his Oath, Master Grafton, so it is, that the Kings most excellent Majesty hath by his gracious gift presented me to the Bishoprick of London, for which I am forry; for if it would have pleased his Grace, I could have been well content to have kept mine old Bishoprick of Hereford. Then said Grafton, I am right glad to hear of it, and so I am sure will be a great number of the City of London; for though they yet know you not, yet they have heard so much goodness of you from hence, as no doubt they will be glad of your placing. Then said Boner, I pray God I may do that may content them. And to tell you Master Grafton, before God (for that was commonly his Oath) the greatest fault that ever I found in Stokeley was, for vexing and troubling of poor men, as Lobbey the Book-binder and other, for having the Scripture in English; and, God willing, he did not so much hinder it, but I will as much further it, and I will have of your Bibles set up in the Church of Pauls, at least in sundry places six of them, and I will pay you honestly for them, and give hearty thanks. Which words lie then spake in the hearing of divers credible Persons, as Edmund Stile Grocer, and other. But now Master Grafton at this time I have specially called you to be a witness with me, that upon this translation of the Bishops Sees, I must according to the Statute take an Oath unto the Kings Majesty, knowing, ing his Supremacy, which, before God, I take with my heart, and so think him to be, and beseech Almighty God to save him, and long to prosper his Grace. Hold the Book, Sirra, and read you the Oath (said he to one of his Chaplains) and he laid his hand on the Book and so he took his Oath. And after this he shewed great friendship to the said Grafton, and to his partner Edward Whitchurch, but especially to Miles Coverdale, who was the Corrector of the great Bible.

Now after that the fore-said Letters were delivered, the French King gave very good words, and was well contented to permit the doing thereof, and so the Printer went forward and printed forth the Book even to the last part, and then was the quarrel picked to the Printer, and he was sent for to the Inquisitors of the Faith, and there charged with certain Articles of Heresie. Then were sent for the Englishmen that were at the cost and charge thereof, and also such as had the correction of the same, which was Miles Coverdale; but having some warning what would follow, the said Englishmen posied away as fast as they could to save themselves, leaving behind them all their Bibles, which were to the number of two thousand five hundred, called the Bibles of the great Volume, and never recovered any of them, saving that the Lieutenant Criminal having them delivered unto him to burn in a place of Paris (like Smithfield) called Malbert place, was somewhat moved with covetousness, and sold four great Dry-fats of them to a Haberdasher to lap Caps in, and those were bought again, but the rest were burned to the great and importunate loss of those that bare the charge of them. But notwithstanding the said loss, after they had recovered some part of the fore-said Books, and were comforted and encouraged by the Lord Cromwel, the said Englishmen went again to Paris, and there got the Prefaces, Letters, and Servants of the fore-said Printer, and brought them to London, and there they became Printers themselves (which before they never intended) and printed out the said Bible in London, and after that printed sundry Impressions of them; but yet not without great trouble and loss, for the hatred of the Bishops, namely St. Gardiner and his Fellows, who nightly did stomach and malign the printing thereof.

Here by the way, for the more direction to the Story, thou hast loving Reader, to note and understand, that in those days there were two sundry Bibles in English, printed and set forth, bearing divers Titles, and printed in divers places. The first was called Thomas Matthews Bible, printed at Hamborough, about the year of our Lord 1532. the Corrector of which Print was then John Rogers of whom ye shall hear more, Christ willing, hereafter. The Printers were Richard Grafton, and Whitchurch. In the translation of this Bible, the greatest doer was indeed William Tindal, who with the help of Miles Coverdale had translated all the Books thereof, except only the Apocrypha, and certain Notes in the Margent which were added after. But because the said W. Tindal in the mean time was apprehended before this Bible was fully perfected, it was thought good to them which had the doing thereof, to change the name of William Tindal, because that name then was odious, and to further it by a strange name of Thomas Matthew, John Rogers the same time being Corrector to the Print, who who had then translated the residue of the Apocrypha, and added also certain Notes thereto in the Margent, and thereof came it to be called Thomas Mathew's Bible. Which Bible of Thomas Mathew's, after it was Imprinted and presented to the Lord Cromwel, and the Lord Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury, who liked very well of it, the said Cromwel presented it to the King, and obtained that the same might freely pass to be read of his Subjects with his Graces Licence; so that there was printed upon the same Book, one line in red Letters with these words, Set forth with the Kings most Gracious Licence.

The setting forth of this Book did not a little offend the Clergy, namely the Bishops aforesaid, both for the Prologues and especially because in the same Book was one special Table collected of the common places in the Bible, and the Scriptures for the approbation of the same, and chiefly about the Supper of the Lord, and Marriage of Priests, and the Mass which there was said not to be found in the Scripture.

Another Bible of the great volume printed at Paris.

Furthermore, after the restraint of this aforesaid Bible of Mathew's, another Bible began to be printed at Paris, Anno 1540. Which was called the Bible of the large Volume. The Printers whereof were the forefard Richard Grafton, and Wbit-church which bare the charges. A great helper thereto was the Lord Cromwel. The chiefest overseer was Miles Coverdale, who taking the translation of Tindal, conferred the same with the Hebrews, and amended many things.

In this Bible although the former Notes of Thomas Mathew's were omitted, yet sundry marks and Hands were annexed on the sides, which meant that in those places should be made certain Notes, wherewith also the Clergy was offended, though the Notes were not made.

The Bibles offered at the Bible translated into English. The sale of the Bible stayed by the King through the Bishops means.

After this the Bishops, bringing their purpose to pass, brought the Lord Cromwel out of favor, and shortly to his death; and not long after, great complaint was made to the King of the translation of the Bible, and of the preface of the same, and then was the sale of the Bible commanded to be stayed, the Bishops promising to amend and correct it, but never performing the same. Then Grafton was called, and first charged with the printing of Mathew's Bible; but he being fearful of trouble made excuses for himself in all things. Then was he examined of the great Bible, and what Notes he was purposed to make. To which he answered, that he knew none. For his purpose was to have retained learned men to have made the Notes, but when he perceived the Kings Majesty, and his Clergy not willing to have any, he proceeded no further. But for all these excuses, Grafton was sent to the Fleet, and there remained six weeks, and before he came out, was bound in three hundred pounds that he should neither sell, nor imprint, or cause to be imprinted, any more Bibles, until the King and the Clergy should agree upon a Translation. And thus was the Bible from that time stayed, during the Reign of King Henry the eighth.

Rich. Grafton imprisoned for printing the Bible.

But yet one thing more is to be noted, that after the Imprinters had lost their Bibles, they continued furies to Boner, as is aforesaid, to be a mean to obtain of the French King their Books again: but so long they continued suiters, and Boner ever fed them with fair words, promising them much, but did nothing for them, till at the last Boner was discharged of his Embassage, and returned home, where he was right joyfully welcomed home by the Lord Cromwel, who loved him dearly, and had a marvellous good opinion of him. And so long as Cromwel remained in Authority, so long was Boner at his beck and Friend to his Friends, and Enemy to his Enemies: as namely, at that time to Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, who never favoured Cromwel, and therefore Boner could not favour him, but he and Winchester were the greatest enemies that might be. But so soon as Cromwel fell, immediately Boner and Winchester pretended to be the greatest men that lived, and no good word could Boner speak of Cromwel, but the lowdest, vilest, and bitterest that he could speak, calling him the rankest Heretick that ever lived: and then such as the said Boner knew to be in good favour with Cromwel, he could never abide their sight. Inasmuch as the next day after that Cromwel was apprehended, the above named Grafton, who before had been very familiar with Boner, met with the said Boner suddenly; and said unto him, That he was sorry to hear of the news that then was abroad. What are they, said he? Of the apprehension of the Lord Cromwel, said Grafton. Are ye sorry for that, said he? It had been good that he had been dispatched long ago. With that Grafton looked upon him and knew not what to say, but came no more to Boner. Howbeit afterward the said Grafton being charged for the imprinting of a ballad made in favour of Cromwel, was called before the Council, where Boner was present, and there Boner charged him with the words that he spake to him of Cromwel, and told out a great long tale. But the Lord Audley, who then was Lord Chancellor, right discreetly and honourably, cut off the matter, and entred into other talk.

Dr. Boner against the L. Cromwel.

The History of Robert Barnes, Thomas Garret, and William Hierome, Divines.

Like as in foreign Battles the chief point of Victory consisteth in the safety of the General or Captain, even so when the valiant Standardbearer and stay of the Church of England, Thomas Cromwel I mean, was made away, pity it is to behold what miserable slaughter of good Men and good Women ensued thereupon, whereof we have now (Christ willing) to intreat. For Winchester having now gotten his full purpose, and free swing to exercise his cruelty, wonder it was to see that Aper Calydonius, or (as the Scripture speaketh) that Ferns Val qui singularis, what troubles he raised in the Lords Vineyard. And left by delays he might lose the occasion presently offered, he straightways made his first assaults upon Robert Barnes, Thomas Garret, and William Hierome, whom in the very same Month, within two days after Cromwel's death, he caused to be put to execution. Whose Histories severally to comprehend, first of all we will somewhat speak of Barnes Doctor of Divinity, whose particular Story here followeth.

Rob. Barnes, Trin. Garret, Will. Hierome Martyrs.

This Barnes, after he came from the University of Lovain, went to Cambridge, where he was made Prior and Master of the House of the Augustines. At that time the knowledge of good Letters was scarcely entred into the University, all things being full of rudeness and barbarity, saving in very few, which were privy and secret. Whereupon Barnes, having some feeling of better learning and Authors, began in his house to read Terence, Plautus, and Cicero, so that what with his industry, pains, and labour, and with the help of Thomas Parnel his Scholar, whom he brought from Lovain with him, reading Copia verborum & rerum, he caused the House shortly to flourish with good Letters, and made a great part of the House learned (which before were drowned in barbarous rudeness) as Master Cambridge, Master Field, Master Coleman, Master Burley, Master Coverdale, with divers other of the University, that sojourned there for learnings sake. After these foundations laid, then did he read openly in the House Pauls Epistles, and put Duns and Derbel, and yet he was a questionary himself and only, because he would have Christ then taught and his Holy Word, he turned their unfavoury problems and fruitless disputations to other better matter of the Holy Scripture, and thereby in short space he made divers good Divines. The same order of disputation which he kept in his House, he observed likewise in the University abroad when he should dispute with any man in the common Schools. And the first man that answered Doctor Barnes in the Scriptures, was Master Stafford for his form to be Batchelor of Divinity, which Disputation was marvellous in the sight of the great blind Doctors, and joyful to the godly spirited.

Mr. Cambridge, Mr. Field, Mr. Coleman, Mr. Coverdale, Batchelor of Divinity.

Thus Barnes, what with his reading, disputation, and preaching, became famous and mighty in the Scriptures, preaching ever against Bishops and Hypocrites, and yet did not see his inward and outward Idolatry, which he both taught and maintained, till that good Master Bilney with other (as is aforesaid in the life of Master Bilney) converted him wholly unto Christ.

The first Sermon that Dr. Barnes preached in defence of the truth.

The first Sermon that ever he preached of this truth was the Sunday before Christmas day, at Saint Edwards Church belonging to Trinity-Hall in Cambridge by the Pease Market; whose Theme was the Epistle of the same Sunday, Gaudete in Domino, &c. And so polluted the whole Epistle, Following the Scripture and Luthers postil, and for that Sermon he was immediately accused of Heresie by two Fellows of the Kings Hall. Then the godly learned in Christ both of Pembroke-Hall, Saint Johns, Peters-House, Queens Colledge, the Kings Colledge, Gunwell Hall, and Benet Colledge shewed themselves and flocked together in open sight, both in the Schools and at open Sermons at Saint Maries, and at the Austins, and at other disputations, and then they conferred continually together.

The House that they resorted most commonly unto was the white Horse, which for despite of them, to bring Gods Word into contempt, was called Germany. This House especially was chosen because many of them of Saint Johns, The Kings Colledge, and the Queens Colledge came in on the back side. At this time much trouble began to ensue. The Adversaries of Doctor Barnes accused him in the Regent House before the Vice-Chancellor, whereas his Articles were presented with him and received, he promising to make answer at the next Convocation, and so it was done. Then Doctor Nettoris, a rank Enemy to Christ, moved Doctor Barnes to recant, but he refused so to do; which appeareth in his Book that he made to King Henry the eighth in English, confuting the judgment of Cardinal Wolsey, and the residue of the Bishops Papistical, and so for the time stood steadfast. And this tragedy continued in Cambridge, one preaching against another, in trying out of Gods Truth, until within six days of Shrove-tide. Then suddenly was sent down to Cambridge a Sergeant of Arms, called Master Gibson, dwelling in Saint Thomas Apostles in London, who suddenly arrested Doctor Barnes openly in the Convocation-House, to make all other afraid; and privily they had determined to make search for Luthers Books, and all the Germanys works suddenly.

Dr. Barnes brought to London.

Dr. Gardiner Secretary to the Cardinal.

But good Doctor Farmen of the Queens Colledge sent word incontinently thereof, to the Chambers of those that were suspected, which were in number thirty persons. But, God be praised, they were conveyed away by that time that the Sergeant at Arms, the Vice-chancellor and the Proctors were at every mans Chamber, going directly to the place where the Books lay (whereby it was perceived that there were some privy spies amongst that small company) and that night they studied together, and gave him his answer, which answer he carried with him to London the next morning, which was the Tuesday before Shrove-sunday, and came on the Wednesday to London, and lay at Master Parnels House by the Stocks. In the morning he was carried by the Sergeant at Arms to Cardinal Wolsey to Westminster, waiting there all day, and could not speak with him till night. Then by reason of Doctor Gardiner Secretary to the Cardinal, (of whose familiar acquaintance he had been before) and Master Fox master of the Wards, he spoke the same night with the Cardinal in his Chamber of Estate, kneeling on his Knees. Then said the Cardinal to them, Is this Doctor Barnes your man that is accused of Heresie? Yea, and please your Grace, and we trust you shall find him reformable, for he is both well learned and wise.

The talk between Cardinal Wolsey and Dr. Barnes.

What, Mr. Doctor (said the Cardinal) had you not a sufficient scope in the Scriptures to teach the people, but that my golden shoes, my pollaxes, my pillars, my golden cushions, my Croffes did so sore offend you, that you must make us ridiculum Caput amongst the people? We were jollily that day laughed to scorn. Verily it was a Sermon more fitter to be preached on a stage than in a Pulpit; for at the last you said, I wear a pair of red gloves, I should say bloody gloves (quoth you) that I should not be cold in the midst of my Ceremonies. And he answered, I spoke nothing but the truth out of the Scriptures, according to my Conscience, and according to the old Doctors; and then did he deliver him fix sheets of Paper written, to confirm and corroborate his sayings.

He received them smiling on him, and saying, We perceive then that you intend to stand to your Articles, and to shew your learning.

Yea, said Barnes, that I do intend, by Gods Grace, with your Lordships favour.

He answered, Such as you are do bear us little favour and the Catholick Church. I will ask you a question: Whether do you think it more necessary that I should have all this Royalty, because I represent the Kings Majesties Person in all the high Courts of this Realm, to the terror and keeping down of all Rebellious Treasons, Traitors, all the wicked and corrupt members of this Commonwealth, or to be as simple as you would have us, to fill all these aforesaid things, and to give it to the poor, which shortly will piss it against the walls, and to pull away this Majesty of a Princely dignity, which is by me maintained a Terror to all the wicked, and to follow your Counsel in this behalf?

He answered, I think it necessary to be bold and given to the poor. For this is not comely for your calling, nor is the Kings Majesty maintained by your pomp and pollaxes, but by God who faith, Per me Reges regnant, Kings and their Majesty reign and stand by me.

Then answered he, Lo Master Doctors, here is the learned wise man that you told me of. Then they kneeled down and said, We desire your Grace to be good unto him, for he will be reformable.

Dr. Gardiner a letter for Barnes.

Then said he, stand you up; for your fakes and the University we will be good unto him. How say you Master Doctor, do you not know that I am Legatus de latere, and that I am able to dispence in all matters concerning Religion within this Realm, as much as the Pope may? He said, I know it be so.

Will you then be ruled by us, and we will do all things for your honesty, and for the honesty of the University?

He answered, I thank your Grace for your good will, I will stick to the Holy Scriptures, and to Gods Book, according to the simple talent that God hath lent me.

Well, said he, thou shalt have thy learning tried to the uttermost, and thou shalt have the Law.

Then he required him that he might have Justice with equity, and forthwith he should have gone to the Tower, but that Gardiner and Fox became his Sureties that night, and so he came home to Mr. Parnels House again, and that night fell to writing again and slept not, Master Coverdale, Master Goodwin, and Master Field being his writers; and in the morning he came to York place to Gardiner and Fox, and by and he was committed to the Sergeant of Arms to bring him into the Chapter House at Westminster before the Bishops and the Abbot of Westminster called Slip.

The same time when Doctor Barnes should appear before the Cardinal, there were five Still-yard Men to be examined for Luthers Book and Lollards, but after they spied Barnes they set the other aside, and asked the Sergeant of Arms what was his errand. He said he had brought one Doctor Barnes to be examined of Heresie, and presented both his Articles and his Accusers. Then immediately after a little talk, they swore him and laid his Articles to him. Who like as he answered the Cardinal before, so said he unto them; and then he offered the Book of his probations unto them. Who asked him whether he had another for himself, and he said yea, shewing it unto them. Who then took it from him, and said they would have no leisure to dispute with him at that present, for other affairs of the Kings Majesty, which they had to do, and therefore bade him stand aside. Then they called the Still-yard Men again one by one, and when they were examined, they called forth the Master of the Fleet, and they were committed all to the Fleet. Then they called Dr. Barnes again, and asked him whether he would subscribe to his Articles or no, and he subscribed willingly; and then they committed him and young Master Parnel to the Fleet also with the other. There they remained, till Saturday in the morning, and the Warden of the Fleet was commanded that no Man should speak with him.

The Still-yard Men committed to the Fleet.

Dr. Barnes with Parnel committed to the Fleet.

On the Saturday he came again afore them into the Chapter House, and there with the Still-yard men remained till five a clock at night. And after long disputations, threatnings, and scornings, about five a clock at night they called him, to know whether he would abjure or burn. He was then in a great agony, and thought rather rather to burn than to abjure. But then was he said again to have the Counsel of Guard and Fox, and they persuaded him rather to abjure than to burn, because (they said) he should do no more in time to come, and with divers other persuasions that were mighty in the fight of reason and foolish Flesh. Upon that, kneeling upon his Knees, he consented to abjure, and the abjuration put in his hand, he abjured as it was there written, and then he subscribed with his own Hand; and yet they would scarcely receive him into the Bosom of the Church as they termed it. Then they put him to an Oath, and charged him to execute, do, and fulfil all that they commanded him, and he promised so to do.

Then they commanded the Warden of the Fleet to carry him, and his Fellows to the place from whence he came, and to be kept in close Prison, and in the morning to provide five Fagots for Doctor Barnes, and the four Still-yard Men. The fifth Still-yard Man was commanded to have a Taper of 5. pound weight to be provided for him, to offer, to the Rood of Northen in Pauls, and all these things to be ready by eight of the clock in the morning; and that he with all that he could make, with Bills and Gloves, and the Knight Marshal with all his Tiptaves that he could make, should bring them to Pauls and conduct them home again. In the morning they were all ready by their hour appointed in Pauls Church, the Church being so full that no man could get in. The Cardinal had a Scaffold made on the top of the stairs for himself, with six and thirty Abbots, mitred Priors and Bishops, and he in his whole pomptitude (which Barnes spake against) fate there enthroned, his Chaplains and Spiritual Doctors in Gowns of Damask and Satin, and he himself in Purple, even like a bloody Antichrist. And there was a new Pulpit erected on the top of the stairs also, for the Bishop of Rocheſter to preach against Luther and Doctor Barnes; and great Baskets full of Books standing before them within the Rails, which were commanded, after the great fire was made afore the Rood of Northen, there to be burned, and these Hereticks after the Sermon to go thrice about the fire and to call in their Fagots.

Now while the Sermon was a doing, Dr. Barnes and the Still-yard men were commanded to kneel down and ask God forgiveness, the Catholic Church, and Cardinals Grace; and after that he was commanded at the end of the Sermon to declare that he was more charitably handled than he deserved, or was worthy (his Heresies were so horrible and so detestable) and once again knelt down on his Knees, desiring the people of forgiveness and to pray for him; and so the Cardinal departed under a Canopy with all his mitred men with him till he came to the second Gate of Pauls, and then he took his Mule, and the mitred men came back again. Then these poor Men being commanded to come down from the Stage (whereon the Sweepers use to stand when they sweep the Church) the Bishops sat them down again, and commanded the Knight Marshal and the Warden of the Fleet with their company to carry them about the fire, and so were they brought to the Bishops, and therefor absolution kneeled down. Where Rocheſter stood up and declared unto the people how many days of pardon and forgiveness of sins they had for being at that Sermon, and there did assay Doctor Barnes with the other, and shewed the people that they were received into the Church again.

This done, the Warden of the Fleet and the Knight Marshal were commanded to have them to the Fleet again, and charged that they should have the liberty of the Fleet as other Prisoners had, and that their Friends might resort unto them, and there to remain till the Lord Cardinals pleasure was known.

After that Barnes there in the Fleet had continued the space of half a year, at length being delivered, he was committed to be a free Prisoner at the Austlin Friars in London. When those Caterpillars and bloody Beasts had there undermined him, they complained again to the Lord Cardinal. Whereupon he was removed to the Austlin Friars of Northampton, there to be burned. Yet he himself understanding nothing thereof, but supposing still that he should there remain, and continue in Free Prison, at last one Master Horne, who had brought him up, was his special Friend, having Intelligence of the Wit which should shortly be sent down to burn him, gave him Counsel to fain himself to be desperat, and that he should write a Letter to the Cardinal and leave it on his Table where he lay, and a Paper by, to be drowned. And there he wrote a Letter to the Cardinal, which should teach all men to beware by him. Upon this, they were seven days in searching for him, but he was conveyed to London in a poor mans apparel, and so tarried there, but took Shipping and went by long Seas to Antwerp, and so to Luther, and there fell to study till he had made an answer to all the Bishops of the Realm, and had made a Book intituled, Acta Romanorum Pontificum, and another Book with a supplication to King Henry. Immediately it was told the Cardinal, that he was drowned, and he said, Perit memoria ejus cum sonitu. But this did light upon himself shortly after, which wretchedly died at Leicester.

In the same season Dr. Barnes was made strong in Christ and got favor both the learned in Christ and foreign Princes in Germany, and was great with Luther, Melancthon, Pomeran, Justus Jonas, Hegendorpinus, and Æpius, and with the Duke of Saxon, and with the King of Denmark, which King of Denmark in the time of More and Stokeſly sent him with the Lubecks, as an Embassador to King Henry the eighth. He lay with the Lubecks Chancellor at the Still-yard.

Sir Thomas More then Chancellor would fain have entrapped him, but the King would not let him, for Cromwel was his great Friend. And ere he went, the Lubecks and he disputed with the Bishops of this Realm in defence of the Truth, and so he departed again without restraint with the Lubecks. After his going again to Wittenberge to the Duke of Saxon, and to Luther, he remained there to set forward his works in print that he had begun, from whence he returned again in the beginning of the Reign of Queen Anne, as others did, and continued a faithful Preacher in this City, being all her time well entertained and promoted. After that he was sent Embassador by King Henry the eighth to the Duke of Cleves, for the Marriage of the Lady Anne of Cleves, between the King and her, and well accepted in the Embassade and in all his doings, until the time that Steven Gardiner came out of France; but after he came, neither Religion prospered, nor the Queens Majesty, nor Cromwel, nor the Preachers; who, after the Marriage of the Lady Cleves, never ceased until he had grafted the Marriage in another stock, by the occasion whereof he began his bloody Broyl.

For not long after, Dr. Barnes with his Brethren were apprehended and carried before the Kings Majesty to Hampton-Court, and there he was examined. Where the Kings Majesty seeking the mean of his safety, to bring Wincheſter and him agreed, at Wincheſter request granted him leave to go home with the Bilhop to confer with him, and so he did. But as it happened, they not agreeing, Gardiner and his Comparters fought by all subtil means how to entangle and to entrap them in further danger, which not long after was brought to pass. For by certain Complaints made to the King of them, they were enjoined to preach three Sermons the next Easter following at the Sputle. At the which Sermons, besides other Reporters which were thither sent, Stephen Gardiner also was there present sitting with the Mayor, either to bear record of their Recantation, or else as the Pharisees came to Christ, to trip them in their talk, if they had spoken any thing awry. When these three had thus preached their Sermons, among whom Barnes preaching the first Sermon, and seeing Stephen Gardiner there present, humbly desired him in the face of all the Audience, if he forgave him, to hold up his Hand, and the said Gardiner thereupon held up his finger; yet notwithstanding shortly after, by the means of the said reports, they were sent for to Hampton-Court; who from thence were carried to the Tower by Sir John Goswike. From thence they never came out till they came to their Deaths hereafter, Christ willing, shall more appear.

And thus hitherto concerning the History of Barnes. Now let us likewise, consider the story and doings of Thomas Garret.

The Story of Thomas Garret or Garrard, and of his trouble in Oxford, testified and recorded by Anthony Dalaber, who was there presents the same time.

The Garret brought Books to Oxford.

ABout the year of our Lord 1526. Mr. Garret, Curate in Hony-Lane in London, came unto Oxford, and brought with him sundry Books in Latin, treating of the Scripture, with the first part of Unio dissidentium, and Tindal's first translation of the New Testament in English, the which Books he sold to divers Scholars in Oxford.

Garret sought for at London.

After he had been there a while, and had dispatched those Books, News came from London, that he was searched for through all London to be apprehended and taken as an Heretick, and to be imprisoned for selling of those heretical Books (as they termed them) because they spake against the usurped Authority and erroneous Doctrine of the Bishop of Rome, and his no less impure and filthy Synagogue. For it was not unknown to Cardinal Wolsey, and to the Bishop of London, and to other of that naughty Generation, that Mr. Garret had a great number of those Books, and that he was gone to Oxford to make sale of them there; so such as he knew to be the lovers of the Gospel. Wherefore they determined forthwith to make a privy search through all Oxford, to apprehend and imprison him, and to burn all and every his foreraind Books, and him too if they could; so burning hot was their Charity. But yet at that time one of the foreraind Proctors, called McCole of Magdalen Colledge, who after was Cross-bearer unto Cardinal Wolsey, was well acquainted with Mr. Garret, and therefore he gave secret warning unto a Friend or two of Mr. Garret's of this privy search, and willed therefore that he should forthwith, as secretly as he could, depart out of Oxford; for if he were taken in the same search, no remedy but he should be forthwith sent up unto the Cardinal, and so he should be committed unto the Tower.

A privy search in Oxford for Garret. At City of Magdalen Colledge in Oxford.

Anthony Dalaber Scholar of All Saints Hall, Recorder here of.

The Christmas; before that time, I Anthony Dalaber then Scholar of Alborne-Hall, who had Books of Mr. Garret's, had been in my Country in Dorsetshire at Stalbridge, where I had a Brother Parson of that Parish, who was very desirous to have a Curate out of Oxford, and willed me in any wise to get him one there if I could. This just occasion offered, it was thought good among the Brethren (for so did we not only call one another, but were indeed one to another) that Mr. Garret, changing his Name, should be sent forth with my Letters into Dorsetshire to my Brother, to serve him there for a time, until he might secretly from thence convey himself some whither over the Sea. According hereunto I wrote my Letters in all hast possible unto my Brother, for Mr. Garret to be his Curate, but not declaring what he was indeed, for my Brother was a rank Papist, and afterward was the most mortal Enemy that ever I had for the Gospels sake.

Brother against Brother.

So the Wednesday in the Morning before Shrove-tide Mr. Garret departed out of Oxford toward Dorsetshire, with his Letters for his new Service. How far he went, and by what occasion he soon returned, I know not. But the Friday next, in the Night time he came again to Radley's House, where he lay before, and so after Midnight, in the privy search which was then made for him, he was apprehended and taken there in his Bed by the two Proctors, and on the Saturday in the Morning was delivered unto one Dr. Cottisford Master of Lincoln Colledge, then being Commissary of the University, who kept him as Prisoner in his own Chamber. There was great joy and rejoicing among all the Papists for his Apprehension, and specially with Dr. London, Warden of the New Colledge, and Dr. Higdon Dean of Fride-wides; two Arch-Papists, who immediately sent their Letters in post-hast unto the Cardinal, to inform him of the apprehension of this notable Heretick. For the which their doing they were well assured to have great thanks. But of all this sudden hurly-burly was I utterly ignorant, so that I knew neither of Mr. Garret's sudden return, neither that he was so taken; until that afterward he came unto my Chamber, being then in Gloucester Colledge, as a man amazed, and as soon as he saw me, he said he was undone, for he was taken. Thus he spake unadvisedly in the presence of a young man that came with him. When the young man was departed I asked him what he was, and what acquaintance he had with him. He said, he knew him not: but he had been to seek a Monk of his acquaintance in that Colledge, who was not in his Chamber, and thereupon desired that his Servant, (not knowing my Chamber, for that I was newly removed thither) to bring him to me: and so forth declared how he was returned and taken that Night in the privy search, as ye have heard, and that now when the Commissary and all his Company were gone to Even-song, and had locked him alone in his Chamber, he hearing no body stirring in the Colledge, put back the Bar of the Lock with his Finger, and so came strait unto Gloucester Colledge, to speak with that Monk, if he had been within, who had also bought Books of him.

The miraculous deliverance of Garret out of the Colledge Chamber.

Then said I unto him, Alas Mr. Garret, by this your uncircumspect coming unto me, and speaking so before this young man, you have disclosed your self, and utterly undone me. I asked him, why he went not unto my Brother with my Letters accordingly. He said, after that he was gone a days Journey and a half, he was so fearful, that his heart would no other but that he must needs return again unto Oxford; and so he came again on Friday at Night, and then was taken, as ye heard before. But now with deep sighs and plenty of tears, he prayed me to help to convey him away, and so he cast off his Hood and his Gown, wherein he came unto me, and desired me to give him a Coat with Sleeves, if I had any, and told me that he would go into Wales, and thence convey himself into Germany, if he might. Then I put on him a sleeved Coat of mine. He would also have had another manner of Cap of me, but I had none but Priest-like, such as his own was.

Then kneeled we both down together upon our knees, and lifting up our hearts and hands to God our heavenly Father, desiring him with plenty of tears to conduct and prosper him in his Journey, that he might well escape the danger of all his Enemies, to the glory of his holy Name, if his good pleasure and will so were; and then we embraced and kissed the one the other, the tears so abundantly flowing out from both our eyes, that we all bewet both our faces, and scarcely for sorrow could we speak one to another, and so he departed from me apparelled in my Coat, being committed unto the tuition of our Almighty and Merciful Father.

The parting between Mr. Garret and Dalaber.

When he was gone down the Stairs from my Chamber, I straightways did shut my Chamber-door, and went into my Study, and took the New Testament in my hands, kneeled down on my knees, and with many a deep sigh and salt tear I did with much deliberation read over the tenth Chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel: and when I had so done, with Prayer I did commit unto God that our dearly beloved Brother Garret, earnestly beseeching him, in and for Jesus Christs sake his only begotten Son our Lord, that he would vouchsafe not only safely to conduct and keep our said dear Brother from the hands of all his Enemies; but also that he would endure his tender and lately born little Flock in Oxford with heavenly strength by his holy Spirit, that they might be well able thereby valiantly to withstand to his glory all their fierce Enemies, and also might quietly, to their own salvation, with all godly patience bear Christs heavy Cross, which I now saw was presently to be laid on their young and weak backs, unable to bear so huge a burthen, without the great help of his Holy Spirit.

Dalaber's Prayer for Mr. Garret.

This done, I laid aside my Book safe, folded up Mr. Garret's Gown and Hood, and laid them in my Press among mine Apparel, and so having put on my short Gown, shut up my Study and Chamber-doors, and went toward Fride-wides, to speak with that worthy Martyr of God McClark, and others, and to declare unto them what had hapned that Afternoon. But of purpose I went by St. Mary Church, to go first unto Corpus Christi Colledge, to speak with Dier and Udal, my faithful Brethren and Fellows in the Lord there. But by chance I met by the way with a Brother of ours, one Master Eden, fellow of Magdalen-Colledge, who, as soon as he saw me, came with a pitiful countenance unto me, saying, that we were all undone, for Master Garret was returned again to Oxford, taken the last night in the Privy search, and was in Prison with the Commiffary. I said it was not so. He said it was so. I told him it could not be so, for I was sure he was gone. He answered me and said, I know he was gone with your Letters, but he came again yesterday in the even, and was taken in his Bed at Radley this night in the Privy search; for, quoth he, I heard our Proctor Master Cole say and declare the same this day in our Colledge to divers of the House. But I told him again, that I was well assured he was now gone, for I spake with him later then either the Proctor or the Commiffary did: and then I declared the whole matter unto him, how and when he came unto me, and how he went his way, willing him to declare the same unto our other Brethren whom he should meet withal, and to give God hearty thanks for his wonderful deliverance and to pray him also that he would grant him safely to pass away from all his enemies, and told him that I was going unto Master Clarke of Frideswides, to declare unto him this matter; for I knew and thought verily that he and divers others there were in great sorrow for this matter. Then I went straight to Frideswides, and Evening was begun, and the Dean and the other Canons were there in their gray Amices; they were almost at Magnificat before I came thither, I stood at the Quire Door and heard Mr. Treasurer play, and others of the Chappel there sing with and among whom I my self was wont to sing also, but now my fingring and musick was turned into sighing and muling.

M. Tawm.

The Pharisee troubled at Mr. Garret's escape out of Prison.

As I thus and there stood, in cometh Dr. Cotiford the Commiffary as fast as ever he could go, bare headed, as pale as Albes (I knew his grief well enough) and to the Dean he goeth into the Quire, where he was sitting in his Stall, and talked with him very sorrowfully: what I know not, but whereof I might and did well and truly guess. I went aside from the Quire Door, to see and hear more. The Commiffary and Dean came out of the Quire wonderfully troubled, as it seemed. About the middle of the Church met them Dr. London puffing, blustering, and blowing, like an hungry and greedy Lion seeking his Prey. They talkt together a while, but the Commiffary was much blamed of them for keeping of his Prisoner so negligently, inasmuch that he wept for sorrow: and it was known abroad that Master Garret was escaped, and gone out of the Commiffaries Chamber at Evening time, but whither no man could tell. These Doctors departed, and sent abroad their Servants and spies every where. Master Clark about the middle of Compline came forth of the Quire: I followed him to his Chamber, and declared what was happened that afternoon, of Master Garret's escape. He was glad, for he knew of his foretelling. Then he sent for one Mr. Sumner and Mr. Betts, Fellows, and Canons there. In the mean while he gave me a very good exhortation, praying God to give me, and all the rest of our Brethren, Prudentiam serpentinam & simplicitatem columbinam, for we should have shortly much need thereof, as he verily thought. When Mr. Sumner and Mr. Betts were come unto him, he caused me to declare again the whole matter to them two, and they were very glad that Master Garret was so delivered, trusting that he should escape all his enemies. Then desiring them to tell unto our other Brethren what was happened, (for there were divers others in that Colledge) I went to Corpus Christi Colledge to comfort our Brethren there being in like heaviness. There I tarried and supped with them. At which Supper we were not very merry, considering our State and peril at hand.

M. Clark.

Mr. Sumner, Mr. Betts.

When we had ended our Supper, and committed our whole cause with fervent sighs and hearty Prayers unto God our heavenly Father, I went to Albion-Hall; and there lay that night. In the morning I was up very early, and so soon as I could get out of the door, I went straight toward Glocester Colledge to my Chamber. It had rained that morning, and with my going I had all to be sprinkled my hose and shoes with mire. And when I was come unto Glocester Colledge, which was about six of the Clock, I found the Gates fast shut. Whereat I did much marvel, for they were wont to be opened daily long before that time. Then did I walk up and down by the Wall there, a whole hour before the Gates were opened. In the mean while my muling head being full of forecasting cares, and my sorrowful heart flowing with doleful sighs, I fully determined in my conscience before God, that if I should chance to be taken and be examined, I would accuse no man nor declare any thing further than I did already perceive was manifestly known before. And so when the Gate was opened, thinking to shift my self, and to put on a longer Gown, I went in towards my Chamber, and going up the Stairs, would have opened my Door, but I could not in a long season do it. Whereby I perceived that my Lock had been meddled withal, and therewith was somewhat altered. Yet at last with much ado I opened the Lock and went in. When I came in, I saw my bed all to be tossed and tumbled, my Cloaths in my Pres thrown down, and my study door open. Whereat I was much amazed, and my thought verily that some search was made there that night for Mr. Garret, and that it was known of his being with me, by the Monks man that brought him to my Chamber.

Dalester Chamber searched for Mr. Garret.

Now was there lying in the next Chamber unto me a Monk, who, as soon as he had heard me in the Chamber, came to me, and told how Mr. Garret was sought for in my Chamber that night, and what ado there was made by the Commiffary and the two Proctors, with Bills and Swords thrust through my bed straw, and how every Corner of my Chamber was searched for Mr. Garret. And albeit his Gown and his Hood lay there in my Pres with my Cloaths, yet they perceived them not. Then he told me he was commanded to bring me as soon as I came in, unto the Prior of the Students named Anthony Dunstan a Monk of Westminster. This so troubled me that I forgot to make clean my hose and shoes, and to shift me into another Gown, and therefore so all to be dirted as I was, and in my short Gown, I went with him to the said Priors Chamber, where I found the said Prior standing and looking for my coming. He asked me where I had been that night. I told him I lay at Albion-Hall with my old bedfellow Fitzjames, but he would not believe me. He asked me if Master Garret were with me yesterday. I told him yea. Then he would know where he was, and wherefore he came unto me. I told him I knew not where he was except he were at Woodstock. For so, said I, he had shewed me that he would go thither because one of the Keepers there his Friend had promised him a piece of Venison to make merry withal the Shrove-tide, and that he would have borrowed a Hat and a pair of high shoes of me, but I had none indeed to lend him. This Tale I thought meetest, though it were nothing so. Then had he spied on my finger a big Ring of silver very well double gilt with two Letters A. D. engraved in it for my name; I suppose he thought it to be Gold. He required to see it. I took it unto him. When he had it in his hand, he said it was his Ring, for therein was his name: An. A. for Anthony, and a D. for Dunstan. When I heard him so say, I withdrew in my heart to be as well delivered from and out of his Company, as I was assured to be delivered from my Ring for ever.

Dalester brought to the Prior of the Students Colledge.

Anthony Dunstan brought to the Prior of the Students Colledge.

Then he called for Pen, Ink, and Paper, and commanded me to write when and how Garret came unto me, and where he was become. I had scarcely written three words, but the chief Beadle with two or three of the Commiffaries men were come unto Mr. Prior, requiring him straightwaies to bring us away unto Lincolne Colledge to the Commiffary, and to Doctor London. Whither when I was brought into the Chappel, there I found Dr. Cotiford Commiffary, Doctor Higdon then Dean of the Cardinals Colledge, and Doctor London Warden of the New Colledge, standing together at the Altar in the Chappel. When I was brought unto them, after Salutations given and taken between them, they called for Chairs and sate down, and called for me to come to them. And first they asked what my name was. I told them that my name was Anthony Dalester. Then they also asked me how long I had been student in the University, and I told them almost three years. And they asked me what what I studied. I told them that I had read Sophistry and Logic in Alborn Hall, and now was removed unto Gloucester College to study the Civil Law, the which the forefaid Prior of the Students affirmed to be true. Then they asked me whether I knew Master Garret, and how long I had known him. I told them I knew him well, and had known him almost a twelve Month. They asked me when he was with me. I told them yesterday at afternoon.

Now by this time, whiles they had me in this talk, one came unto them which was sent for, with Pen, Inke and Paper; I trow it was the Clarke of the University. As soon as he was come, there was a Board and Trefles with a form for him to sit on, set between the Doctors and me, and a great Mass-Book layed before me, and I was commanded to lay my right hand on it, and to swear that I should truly answer unto such Articles and Interrogatories as I should be by them examined upon. I made danger of it awhile at first, but afterward being persuaded by them, partly by fair words, and partly by great threats, I promised to do as they would have me, but in my heart meant nothing so to do. So I laid my Hand on the Book, and one of them gave me my Oath, and that done commanded me to Kiss the Book. Then made they great courtesie between them who should examine me, and minister Interrogatories unto me. At the last, the rankest Papistical Pharisee of them all, Dr.

Then he asked me again by my Oath where Master Garret was, and whither I had conveyed him. I told him I had not conveyed him, nor yet wist where he was, nor whither he was gone, except he were gone to Woodstock (as I had before said) as he shewed me he would. Then he asked me again when he came to me, how he came to me, what and how long he talked with me, and whither he went from me. I told him he came to me about Evenfong time, and that one brought him unto my Chamber Door, whom I knew not, and that he told me he would go to Woodstock for some Venison to make merry withal this Shrove-tide, and that he would have borrowed a Hat, and a pair of high shoes of me, but I had none such to lend him, and then he straight went his way from me, but whither I know not. All these sayings the Scribe wrote in a PaperBook.

Then they earnestly required me to tell them whither I had conveyed him, for surely they said I brought him going some whither this morning, for that they might well perceive by my foul shoes and dirty hosen, I had travelled with him the most part of this night. I answered plainly that I lay at Alborn Hall with Sir Fitz-james, and that I had good witness thereof there. They asked me where I was at Evenfong. I told them at Friswides, and that I saw first Master Commissary, and then Master Doctor London come thither at that time unto Master Dean of Friswides, and that I saw them talking together in the Church there. Doctor London and the Dean threatened me, that if I would not tell the truth where I had done him, or whither he was gone, I should surely be sent to the Tower of London, and there be racked, and put into Little-cage. But Master Commissary prayed me with gentle words, to tell him where he was, that he might have him again, and he would be my very great Friend, and deliver me out of trouble straight way. I told him I could not tell where he was, nor whither he was become. Thus they did occupy and tosse me almost two hours in the Chappel, sometimes with threatnings and foul words, and then with fair words and fair promises flattering me. Then was he that brought Mr. Garret unto my Chamber brought before me, and caused to declare what Mr. Garret said unto me at his coming to my Chamber; but I said plainly I heard him say no such thing, for I thought my nay to be as good as his yea, seeing it was to rid and deliver my godly Brother out of trouble and peril of his life.

At the last, when they could get nothing of me whereby to hurt or accuse any man, or to know any thing of the which they fought, they all three together brought me up a long stairs into a great Chamber over Master Commissaries Chamber wherein stood a great pair of very high Stocks. Then Master Commissary asked me for my purse and girdle, took away my money and my knives, and then they put both my leggs into the stocks, and so locked me fast in them: in which I fate, my feet being almost as high as my head, and so departed they (I think to their abominable Mass) locked fast the Chamber Door, and leaving me alone. When they all were gone, then came unto my remembrance the worthy forewarning and godly declaration of that most constant martyr of God, Master John Clark my Father in Christ, who welnigh two years before that, when I did earnestly desire him to grant me to be his Scholar, and that I might go with him continually when and whereforever he should teach or preach (the which he did daily) said unto me much after this sort, Dalaber, you desire you wot not what, and that you are, I fear me, unable to take upon you: for though now my preaching be sweet and pleasant unto you, because there is yet no persecution laid on you for it, yet the time will come, and that peradventure shortly, if ye continue to live godly therein, that God will lay on you the Crofs of persecution to try you withal, whether you can as pure gold abide the fire, or as stubble and dross be consumed. For the Holy Ghost plainly affirmeth by Saint Paul; Quod omnes qui pie volunt vivere in Christo Jesu persecutionem patientur. Yea, you shall be called and judged an Hereick, you shall be abhorred of the world, your own Friends and kinsfolk will forsake you, and also hate you, and you shall be cast into Prison, and no man shall dare to help or comfort you, and you shall be accused and brought before the Bishops to your reproach and shame, to the great sorrow of all your faithful Friends and Kinsfolk. Then will ye with ye had never known this Doctrine; then will ye curse Clarke, and wish that ye had never known him, because he hath brought you to all these troubles. Therefore rather than that you should do this, leave off from meddling with this Doctrine, and desire not to be and continue in my company.

At which words I was so griev'd, that I fell down on my Knees at his feet, and with abundance of tears and sighs, even from the very bottom of my heart I earnestly besought him, that for the tender mercy of God shewed to us in our Lord Jesus Christ he would not refuse me, but receive me into his company, as I had desired, saying that I trusted verily, that he which had begun this in me would not forsake me, but give me grace to continue therein unto the end. When he heard me say so, he came to me and took me up in his Arms, kissed me, the tears trickling down from his eyes, and said unto me; The Lord Almighty grant you so to do, and from henceforth for ever take me for your Father, and I will take you for my Son in Christ. Now were there at this time in Oxford divers Graduates and Scholars of sundry Colleges and Halls, whom God had called to the knowledge of his holy Word, which all resorted unto Mr. Clarke Disputations and Lectures in Divinity at all times as they might, and when they might not come conveniently, I was by Mr. Clark appointed to resort to every one of them weekly, and to know what doubts they had in any place of the Scripture, that by me from him they might have the true understanding of the same. Which exercise did me much good and profit, to the understanding of the holy Scriptures, which I most desired.

This forefaid forewarning and godly declaration (I say) of this most godly Martyr of God Mr. Clarke, coming to my remembrance, caused me with deep sighs to cry unto God from my heart, to assist me with his Holy Spirit, that I might be able patiently and quietly to bear and suffer whatsoever it should please him of his fatherly love to lay on me, to his glory, and the comfort of my dearly beloved Brethren, whom I thought now to be in great fear and anguish, lest I would be an accuser of them all; for unto me they all were well known, and all their doings in that matter. But God be blessed, I was fully bent never to accuse any of them, whatsoever should happen of me. Before Dinner Master Cosford came up to me, and requested me earnestly to tell him where Mr. Garret was, and if I would so do, he promised of me straightways to deliver me out of Prison. But I told him I could not tell where he was; no more indeed I could. Then he departed to dinner, asking me if I would eat any meat, I told him, Yea, right gladly. He said he would send me some. When he was gone, his Servants asked asked me divers questions, which I do not now remember, and some of them spake to me fair and some threatened me, calling me Heretick, and so departed, locking the door fast upon me.

Thus far Anthony Dalaber hath profecuted this Story, who before the finishing departed, the year 1562. in the Diocess of Salisbury; the residue whereof as we could gather it out of ancient and credible Persons, so have we added here unto the same.

After this, Garret was apprehended or taken by Maister Cole the Proctor, or his men going Weltward, at a place called Hinksey, a little beyond Oxford, and so being brought back again was committed to Ward: that done, he was convented before the Countiffary, Doctor London, and Doctor Higdon Dean of Frideswides (now called Christis Colledge) into St. Maries Church, where they sitting in judgment, convicted him according to their Law as an Heretick (as they said) and afterward compelled him to carry a Ragot in open Procession from St. Maries Church to Frideswides, and Dalaber likewise with him, Garret having his red Hood on his shoulders like a Master of Art. After that, they were sent to Oxney, there to be kept in Prison till further order was taken.

There were suspected beside a great number to be infected with Heresie, as they called it, for having such Books of Gods Truth, as Maister Garret sold unto them; as Maister Clark, which died in his Chamber, and could not be suffered to receive the Communion, being in Prison, and saying these words; Credo, & manducasti; Maister Sumner, Mr. Betts, Taverner the Musitian, Radley, with other of Frideswides Colledge; of Corpus Christi Colledge; as Udel and Dietz, with other of Magdalen Colledge, one Eden, with other of Gloucester Colledge, and two black Moncks, one of Saint Austines of Canterbury named Langport, the other of Saint Edmunds Bury, Monk, named John Salisbury, two white Monks of Bernard Colledge, two Canons of Saint Maries Colledge, one of them named Robert Ferrar, afterward Bishop of Saint Davids, and burned in Queen Maries time. These two Canons, because they had no place in the University with the other, they went on the contrary side of the Procession bare headed, and a Beadle before them to be known from the other. Divers other there were, whose names I cannot remember, which were forced and constrained to forsake their Colledges, and fought their Friends. Against the Procession time there was a great fire made upon the Top of Carfax, wherein all such as were in the said Procession, either convict or suspect of Heresie, were commanded in token of repentance and renouncing of their errors, every man to cast a Book into the fire as thy passed by.

After this, Maister Garret flying from place to place escaped their Tyranny, until this present time that he was again apprehended and burned with Doctor Barns with whom also William Hierome sometime Vicar of Stepney was likewise drawn into Smithfield, and there together with them constantly endured Martyrdom in the fire.

Now let us add also to these the Story of Hierome

The Life and Story of William Hierome Vicar of Stepney and Martyr of Christ.

The third Company which suffered with Barns and Garret, was W. Hierome Vicar of Stepney. This Hierome being a diligent preacher of Gods Word, for the comfort and edification of the People, had preached divers and sundry Sermons, wherein to the intent to plant in the consciences of men the sincere Truth of Christian Religion, he laboured as much as time then served, to extirp and weed out the roots of mens Traditions, Doctrines, Dreams, and Fantasies. In so doing it could not otherwise be but he must needs provoke much hatred against him amongst the Adversaries of Christs Gospel.

If so happened, that the said Hierome, preaching at Pauls on the fourth Sunday in Lent last past, made there a Sermon, wherein he recited and mentioned of Agar and Sara, declaring what these two signified. In process whereof he shewed further how that Sara and her Child

Isaac and all they, that were Isaacs; and born of the free Woman Sara, were freely justified: contrary, they that were born of Agar the Bondwoman were bound and under the Law, and cannot be freely justified. In these words what was here spoken, but that Saint Paul himself uttereth and expoundeth in his Epistle to the Gal. 4. or what could here be gathered of any reasonable or indifferent hearer, but consonant to sound Doctrin, and vein of the Gospel? Now see what Rancor and malice armed with crafty and subtil Sophistry can do. This Sermon finished, it was not long but he was charged and convented before the King at Weistminster, and there accused for Erroneous Doctrin.

Percase thou wilt muse (gentle reader) what Erroneous Doctrin here could be picked out. Note therefore for thy learning; and he that listeth to study how to play the Sycophant, let him here take example. The knot found in this Ruhl was this, for that he preached erroneously at Pauls Crofs, teaching the People that all that were born of Sara were freely justified, speaking there absolutely without any condition either of Baptism or of Penance, &c. Who doubteth here but if St. Paul himself had been at Pauls Crofs, and had preached the same words to the Englishmen, which he wrote to the Galatians in this behalf, ipso facto, he had been apprehended for an Heretick for preaching against the Sacrament of Baptism and Repentance.

Furthermore it was objected against him, touching matter against Magistrates, and Laws by them made. Whereto he answered again and affirmed (as he had before preached) that no Magistrate of himself could make any Law or Laws, private or otherwise, to bind the inferior People, unless it were by the Power, Authority and Commandment of his or their Princes to him or them given, but only the Prince. And moreover, to confirm the same he added, saying, that if the Prince make Laws consenting to Gods Laws, we are bound to obey them. And if he make Laws repugnant to the Laws of God, and be an evil and wicked Prince; yet are we bound humbly to suffer him, and not violently to resist or grudge against him.

Also concerning his Sermons, one Doctor Wilson entered into disputation with him, and defended that good works justified before God, and were necessary and available to Salvation. To whom Hierome answered again, That all works, whatsoever they were, were no thing worthy, nor any part of salvation of themselves, but only referred to the mercy and love of God, which mercy and love of God directeth the workers thereof, and yet it is at his mercy and goodness to accept them. Which to be true, Doctor Wilson neither could nor did deny.

And thus much concerning the several Stories of these three good men. Now let us see the order of their Martyrdom, joyning them all together; what was the cause of their condemnation; and what were their Protestations and words at their suffering.

Ye heard before how Barns, Hierome, and Garret were caused to preach at Eastar at the Spittle. the occasion whereof, as I find it reported by Stephen Gardiner writing against George Joye, I thought good here to discourse more at large.

Stephen Gardiner hearing that the said Barns, Hierome, and Garret should preach the Lent following, Anno, 1541. at Pauls Crofs, to stop the course of their Doctrine sent his Chaplain to the Bishop of London, the Saturday before the first Sunday in Lent, to have a place for him to preach at Pauls. Which to him was granted, and time appointed that he should preach the Sunday following, which should be on the morrow; which Sunday was appointed before for Barns to occupy that room. Gardiner therefore, determining to declare the Gospel of that Sunday containing the Devils three temptations, began amongst other things to note the abuse of Scripture amongst some, as the Devil abused it to Christ, and so alluding to the temptation of the Devils, wherein he alledged the Scripture against Christ, to cast himself downward, and that he should take no hurt, he inferred thereupon, saying;

Amongst other things, moreover he noted the Devils craft and shift in deceiving man: who envying his felicity, and therefore coveting to have man idle, and void of good works, and to be led in that idleness with a vain hope to live merrily at his pleasure here, and yet to have Heaven at the last, hath for that purpose procured our Pardons from Rome, wherein Heaven was sold for a little Money; and to retale that Merchandise, the Devil used Friers for his Ministers. The Sermon of Dr. Barnes replying to Winchester.

This Sermon of Stephen Winchester finished, Doctor Barnes, who was put off from that Sunday, had his day appointed, which was the third Sunday next following, to make his Sermon: who taking the same Text of the Gospel which Gardiner had done before, was on the contrary side no less vehement in setting forward the true Doctrine of Christian Religion, than Winchester had been before in plucking men backward from Truth to Lies, from Sincerity to Hypocrisy, from Religion to Superstition, from Christ to Antichrist. In the procefs of which Sermon he proceeding, and calling out Stephen Gardiner by name to answer him, alluding in a pleasant Allegory to a Cock-fight; terming the said Gardiner to be a fighting God, and himself to be another, but the Garden-Cock (he said) lacked good Spurs: objecting moreover to the said Gardiner, and opposing him in his Grammar Rules; thus saying, That if he had answered him in the Schools, so as he had there preached at the Cross, he would have given him six stripes. Declaring furthermore what evil Herbs this Gardiner had set in the Garden of Gods Scripture, &c.

St. Gardiner

Barnes.

Finally, with this Sermon Gardiner was so tickled in the Spleen, that he immediately went to the King to complain, shewing how he, being a Bishop and Prelate of the Realm, was handled and reviled at Pauls Crofs.

Whereupon the King, giving too much ear to Gardiners grief, was earnestly incensed against Barnes, and with many high words rebuked his doings in his privy Closet, having with him the Earl of Southampton which was the Lord Whisley, and the Master of the Horse which was Anthony Brown, Dr. Cocks, and Dr. Robinson. Unto whom when Barnes had submitted himself; Nay, said the King, yield thee not to me, I am a mortal Man, and therewith rising up and turning to the Sacrament, and putting of his Bonnet, said, Yonder is the Master of us all, the Author of Truth, yield in truth to him, and that Truth will I defend, and otherwise yield thee not unto me. Much ado there was, and great matter laid laid against Barnes. In conclusion this order was taken, that Barnes should go apart with Winchester, to confer and commune together of their Doctrine, certain witnesses being thereunto appointed, to be as indifferent hearers, of whom one was Dr. Cocks, the other was Dr. Robinson, with two other also to them assigned, which should be Reporters to the King of the Disputation. At the first entry of which talk, Gardiner, forgiving him (as he saith) all that was past, offered him the choice, whether he would answer or oppose, which was the Friday after that Barnes had preached.

The Question between them propounded, by Gardi-ners narration was this, Whether a man could do any thing good or acceptable before the Grace of Justification, or not. Which question rose upon a certain contention which had been between them before. For Barnes had affirmed, that albeit God requireth of us to forgive our Neighbour, to obtain forgiveness of him; yet he said that God must forgive us first, before we forgive our Neighbour; for else to forgive our Neighbour were sin, by the Text which saith, All that is not of faith is of sin, &c. Rom. 13:

Thus the matter being propounded, Gardiner to prove the contrary, came forth with his Arguments two or three: To the which Arguments (saith Gardiner) Barnes could not answer, but desired to be spared that Night, and the next Morning he would answer his Arguments. In the Morning Gardiner with the Hearers being again assembled, Dr. Barnes, according to the appointment, was present, who then went about to assail his Arguments. To his Solutions Gardiner again replied. And thus continued they in this altercation by the space of two hours. In the end of this Cock-fight Winchester thus concluded this glorious Tale, and croweth up the Triumph; declaring how Barnes befought him to have pity on him, to forgive him, and to take him to be his Scholar: whom then the said Winchester (as he himself confesseth) receiving, not as his Scholar, but as his Companion, offered to him a portion out of his Living, to the sum of 40 l. a year. Which if it be true (as Stephen Gardiner himself reporteth) why then doth this glorious Cockatrice grow so much against Barnes afterward, and call him in the Teeth, bearing all the world in hand that Barnes was his Scholar; whereas he himself here refuteth Barnes to be his Scholar, and receiveth him as his Companion fellow-like; But to the Story.

This done, the King being advertized of the conclusion of this matter between Barnes and Winchester, was content that Barnes should repair to the Bishops House at London the Monday following. Which he did, with a certain other Companion joyed unto him. Who he was, Winchester there doth not express, only he saith that it was neither Hierome nor Garret. In this next meeting between Barnes and the Bishop, upon the foresaid Monday, the said Bishop studying to instruct Barnes, uttered to him certain Articles or Conclusions, to the number of ten, the effect whereof here followeth.

Winchesters Articles against Barnes.

1. The effect of Christs Passion hath a Condition. Winchester The fulfilling of the Condition diminisheth no- Articles against Dr. Barnes; tiking the effect of Christs Passion.
2. They that will enjoy the effect of Christs Passion must fulfil the Condition.
3. The fulfilling of the Condition requireth first knowledge of the Condition, which knowledge we have by Faith.
4. Faith cometh of God, and this Faith is a good gift; it is good and profitable to me; it is profitable to me to do well, and to exercise this Faith; Ergo, by the gift of God I may do well before I am justified.
5. Therefore I may do well by the gift of God before I am justified, towards the attainment of Justification.
6. There is ever as much Charity towards God as Faith: and as Faith increaseth so doth Charity increase.
7. To the attainment of Justification is required Faith and Charity.
8. Every thing is to be called freely done, whereof the beginning is free and set at liberty, without any cause of provocation.
9. Faith must be to me the assurance of the Promises of God made in Christ (if I fulfil the Condition) and love must accomplish the Condition: whereupon followeth the attainment of the Promise according to Gods Truth.
10. A man being in deadly sin, may have grace to do the works of Penance, whereby he may attain to his Justification.

These Articles, soformuch as they be sufficiently answered and replied unto by George Joy in his Joyner and the Rejoynder against Winchester, I shall not need to comber this Work with any new ado therewith, but only refer the Reader to the Books aforesaid, where he may see matter enough to answer to these Popish Articles.

The Answer of the Rejoynder of
Geo. Joy against Winch.

I told' you before how the King, was contented that Barns should resort to the house of the Bishop of Winchester, to be trained and directed by the Bishop: which Barns then hearing the talk of the People, and having also conference with certain Learned men, within two days after his coming to the Bishop's house, waxed weary thereof, and so coming to the Bishop signified unto him, that if he would take him as one that came to confer, he would come still, but else he would come no more, and to clean gave over the Bishop.

This being known unto the King, through sinister complaints of Popish Sycophants; Barns again was sent for, and converted before the King, who being grievously incensed against him, enjoined both him, Hierome and Garret, at the solemn Easter Sermons at St. Mary Spittle, openly in writing to revoke the Doctrine which they before had taught. At which Sermon Stephen Gardiner also himself was present to hear their Recantation.

First Dr. Barnes, according to his promise made to the King, solemnly and formally began to make his Recantation; which done, he with much circumstance and obtestation called upon the Bishop (as is above touched) and asking of him forgiveness, required him in token of a grant to hold up his hand, to the intent that he there openly declaring his Charity before the world, the Bishop also would declare his Charity in like manner. Which when the Bishop refused to do at the first, as he was required, Barns again called for it, desiring him to shew his Charity, and to hold up his hand. Which when he had done with much ado, wagging his finger a little: then Barns entering into his Sermon, after his Prayer made, beginneth the process of a matter, preaching contrary to that which before he had recanted. Inasmuch that the Mayor, when the Sermon was finished, sitting with the Bishop of Winchester, asked him whether he thought from the Pulpit sent him to Ward, to be forthcoming for that his bold preaching contrary to his Recantation. The like also did Hierome, and Garret after him.

The King had appointed before certain to make report of the Sermons. Besides them there was one who writeth to a Friend of his in the Court, in the favour of these Preachers, declared how gaily they had all handled the matter, both to falsifie that Recantation, and also in the same Sermons to utter out the Truth, that it might spread without let of the world. Wherefore partly by these Reporters, and partly by the negligent looking to this Letter, which came to the Lord Cromwells hands, faith Gardiner, Barns with his other Fellows were apprehended, and committed to the Tower. Stephen Gardiner, in his foretold Book against George Joy, would needs clear himself, that he was in no part nor cause of their casting into the Tower, and giveth this reason for him, for that he had then no access, nor had after, so long as Cromwells time lasted, to the Kings secret Council; yet notwithstanding the said Gardiner cannot perfwade us to the contrary, but that his privy complaining to the King, and his secret whisperings in his Friends ears, and his other workings by his Factors about the King, was a great sparkle to set their Fagots a fire.

Thus then Barns, Hierome and Garret, being committed to the Tower after Easter, there remained till the 30th day of July, which was two days after the death of the Lord Cromwell. Then ensued Process against them by the Kings Council in the Parliament, to the which Process Gardiner confest himself that he was privy amongst the rest. Whereupon all those three good Saints of God, the 30th day of July, not coming to any answer, nor yet knowing any cause of their condemnation, without any public hearing were brought together from the Tower to Smithfield, where they preparing themselves to the Fire, had there at the Stake divers and sundry Exhortations, among whom D. Barnes first began with this Proclamation following.

I am come hither to be burned as an Heretick, and you shall hear my Belief, whereby you shall perceive what erroneous Opinions I hold. God I take to record, I never (to my knowledge) taught any erroneous Doctrine, but only those things which Scripture led me unto; and that in my Sermons I never maintained any Error, neither moved nor gave occasion of any Insurrection. Although

I have been slandered in preach that our Lady, was but a Saffron-Bag, which I never, priest before God that I never taught it, nor preached it; but all my study and diligence hath been strictly to confound and confute all men of that Doctrine, as are the Anabaptists, which deny that our Saviour Christ did take any flesh of the blessed Virgin Mary, which I detest and abhor. And in this place there have been burned some of them, whom I never favoured nor maintained; but with all diligence evermore did I study to set forth the glory of God, the obedience to our Sovereign Lord the King, and the true and sincere Religion of Christ, and now Iarken to my Faith.

I believe in the holy and blessed Trinity, three Persons and one God, that created and made all the World, and that this blessed Trinity sent down the second Person, Jesus Christ, into the womb of the most blessed and purest Virgin Mary. And let me bear me record, that I do never condemn that abominable and detestable Opinion of the Anabaptists, which say that Christ took no flesh of the Virgin. For I believe, that without means will or power he was conceived by the Holy Ghost, and took flesh of her, and that he suffered hunger, thirst, cold, and other passions of our Body, sin excepted, according to the saying of St. Peter, He was made in all things like to his Brethren, except sin. And I believe that his death and passion was the sufficient ransom for the sin of all the world. And I believe that through his death he overcame Sin, Death, and Hell, and that there is none other satisfaction unto the Father, but his death and passion only, and that no work of man did deserve any thing of God, but only his Passion, as touching our justification, for I know the best work that ever I did is impure and imperfect. And with this he cast abroad his hands, and desired God to forgive him his Trespases. For although perchances, said he, you know nothing by me, yet do I confess, that my thoughts and cogitations be innumerable; wherefore I beseech thee, O Lord, not to enter into judgment with me, according to the saying of the Prophet David, Non iudices in iudicium cum servo tuo, Domine, i. Enter not into judgment with thy Servant, O Lord. And in another place, Si iniquitates obli-viscaris Domine, quis sustinebit? Lord, if thou finally mark our Iniquities, who is able to abide thy Judgment? Wherefore I trust in no good work that ever I did, but only in the death of Christ. I do not doubt but through him to inherit the Kingdom of Heaven. Take me not here that I speak against good works; for they are to be done, and verily they that do them not shall never come into the Kingdom of God. We must do them, because they are commanded us of God, to shew and set forth our Profession, not to deserve or merit; for that is only the death of Christ.

I believe that there is a holy Church, and a company of all them that do profess Christ; and that all that have suffered and confessed his Name be Saints, and that all they do praise and laud God in Heaven, more than I or any mans Tongue can express; and that always I have spoken reverently, and praised them as much as Scripture willed me to do. And that our Lady, I say, was a Virgin immaculate and undefiled, and that she is the most pure Virgin that ever God created, and a vessel elect of God, of whom Christ should be born. Then said Mr. Sheriff, You have said well of her before. And being afraid that Mr. Sheriff had been or should be agrieved with any thing that he should say, he said, Mr. Sheriff, If I speak any thing that you will me not, do no more but becken me with your hand, and I will straightway hold my peace, for I will not be disobedient in any thing, but will obey.

Then there was one that asked him his opinion of praying to Saints. Then said he, Now of Saints you shall hear my Opinion. I have said before somewhat I think of them, how that I believe they are in Heaven with God, and that they are worthy of all the honour that Scripture willeth them to have. But I say throughout Scripture we are not commanded to pray to any Saints. Therefore I neither can nor will preach to you that Saints ought to be prayed unto; for then should I preach unto you a Doctrine of mine own head. Notwithstanding whether they pray for us or no, that I refer to God. And if Saints do pray for us, then I trust to pray for you within this half hour.

Pray not to Saints.

bow, Mr. Sheriff, and for every Christian man living in the Faith of Christ, and dying in the same as a Saint. Wherefore if the dead may pray for the quick, I will surely pray for you.

No cause showed why Dr. Barnes died.

Well, have you any thing more to say? Then spake he to Mr. Sheriff, and said, Have ye any Articles against me for the which I am condemned? And the Sheriff answered, No. Then said he, Is there here any man else that knoweth wherefore I die, or that by my preaching hath taken any Error? Let them now speak, and I will make them answer. And no man answered. Then said he, Well, I am condemned by the Law to die, and as I understand, by an Act of Parliament; but wherefore, I cannot tell, but belike for Heresie, for we are like to burn. But they that have been the occasion of it, I pray God forgive them, as I would be forgiven my self. And Dr. Stephen Bishop of Winchester that now is, if he have sought or wrought this my death either by word or deed, I pray God forgive him, as heartily, as freely, as charitably, and without feigning, as ever Christ forgave them that put him to death.

Dr. Barnes praying for his Execution.

And if any of the Council, or any other have sought or wrought it through malice or ignorance, I pray God forgive their Ignorance, and illuminate their eyes that they may see, and ask mercy for it. I beseech you all to pray for the Kings Grace, as I have done ever since I was in Prison, and do now, that God may give him prosperity, and that he may long reign among you; and after him that godly Prince Edward may so reign, that he may finish those things that his Father hath begun. I have been reported to be a preacher of Sedition and Disobedience unto the Kings Majesty; but here I say to you, that you are all bound by the Commandment of God, to obey your Prince with all humility, and with all your heart, yea, not so much as in a look to shew your selves disobedient unto him, and that not only for fear of the Sword, but also for Conscience sake before God. Yea, and I say further, if the King should command you any thing against Gods Law, if it be in your power to resist him, yet may you not do it.

D. Barnes prayeth for the King. Five Requests of Dr. Barnes to the King. The 1. Request. The King of England made a whole King by poor Preachers.

Then spake he to the Sheriff and said, Mr. Sheriff, I require you on Gods behalf to have me commended unto the Kings Grace, and to shew him that I require of his Grace these five Requests: First, that where his Grace hath received into his hands all the goods and substance of the Abbies. Then the Sheriff desired him to stop there. He answered Mr. Sheriff, I warrant you I will speak no harm, for I know it is well done that all such Superstition be clean taken away, and the Kings Grace hath well done in taking it away. But his Grace is made a whole King, and obeyed in his whole Realm as a King (which neither his Father nor Grandfather, neither his Ancestors that reigned before him ever had) and that through the preaching of us and such other Wretches as we are, which alwaies have applied our whole Studies, and given our selves for the setting forth of the same, and this is now our reward. Well, it maketh no matter. Now he reigneth among you; I pray God long he may live and reign among you. Would to God it may please his Grace to bestow the said Goods, or some of them, to the comfort of his poor Subjects, which surely have great need of them.

The 2. Request of D. Barnes to the King.

The second that I desire his Grace, is, that he will see that Matrimony be had in more reverence than it is; and that men for every light cause invented cast not off their Wives, and live in adultery and fornication; and that those that be not married should not abominably live in whoredom, following the filthy lusts of the flesh.

The third Request.

The third, That the abominable Swearers may be punished and straightly looked upon; for the vengeance of God will come on them for their malicious Oaths. Then desired he Mr. Pope to have him commended to M. Edgar, and to desire him for the dear Blood of Jesus Christ, that he would leave that abominable Swearing which he used; for surely except he did forsake it, he would come to some malicious end.

The fourth Request.

The fourth, That his Grace would set forth Christs true Religion, and seeing he hath begun, go forward and make an end; for many things have been done, but much more is to do; and that it would please his Grace to look on Gods Word himself, for that it hath been observed with many Traditions invented of our own Brains. Now, said he, how many Petitions have I spoken of? And the People said, four. Well, said he, even these four be sufficient, which I desire you, that the Kings Grace may be certified of, and say, that I most humbly desire him to look earnestly upon them; and that his Grace take heed that he be not deceived with false Preachers and Teachers and evil Counsel, for Christ saith, that such false Prophets shall come in Lambs skins.

Then desired he all men to forgive him, and if he had said any evil at any time unadvisedly, whereby he had offended any man, or given any occasion of evil that they would forgive it him, and amend that evil they took of him, and to bear him witness that he detested and abhorred all evil Opinions and Doctrines against the Word of God, and that he died in the Faith of Jesus Christ, by whom he doubted not but to be saved. And with those words he desired them all to pray for him, and then he turned him about, and put off his Cloaths, making him ready to the fire, patiently there to take his death.

Dr. Barnes cleareth himself of all Heresie.

The like Confession made also Hierome and Garret, professing in like manner their Belief, reciting all the Articles of the Christian Faith, briefly declaring their minds upon every Article, as the time would suffer; whereby the People might understand that there was no cause nor error in their Faith, wherefore justly they ought to be condemned; Pretending moreover, that they denied nothing that was either in the Old or New Testament, set forth by their Sovereign Lord the King, whom they prayed the Lord long to continue among them, with his most dear Son Prince Edward. Which done, Hierome added this Exhortation in few words following.

The Profession and Confession of Hierome and Garret.

I say unto you, good Brethren, that God hath bought us all with no small price, neither with gold nor silver, or other such things of small value, but with his most precious Blood. Be not unthankful therefore to him again, but do as much as to Christian men belongeth, to fulfil his Commandments; that is, Love your Brethren. Love hurteth no man, love fulfilleth all things. If God hath sent thee plenty, help thy Neighbour that hath need. Give him good counsel. If he lack, consider if you were in necessity, thou wouldest gladly be refreshed. And again, bear your Cross with Christ. Consider what reproach, slander and reproach he suffered of his Enemies, and how patiently he suffered all things. Consider that all that Christ did was of his mere goodness, and not of our deserving. For if we could merit our own salvation, Christ would not have died for us. But for Adams breaking of Gods Precepts we had been all lost, if Christ had not redeemed us again. And like as Adam broke the Precepts, and was driven out of Paradise, so we if we break Gods Commandments, shall have damnation, if we do not repent and ask mercy. Now therefore let all Christians put no trust nor confidence in their Works, but in the Blood of Christ, to whom I commit my Soul to guide, beseeching you all to pray to God for me, and for my Brethren here present with me, that our Souls leaving these wretched Carcasses may constantly depart into the true Faith of Christ.

In much like sort Garret also protesting and exhorting the People, after his Confession made, ended his protestation in manner as followeth.

I also detest, abhor and refuse all Heresies and Errors, and if either by negligence or ignorance I have taught or maintained any, I am sorry for it, and ask God mercy, Or if I have been too vehement or rash in preaching, whereby any person hath taken any offence, error, or evil opinion, I desire him, and all other persons which I have any way offended, forgive me. Notwithstanding to my remembrance I never preached wittingly or willingly any thing against Gods holy Word, or contrary to the true Faith, to the maintenance of errors, heresies, or vicious living, but have always, for my little learning and wit, set forth the honour of God, and the right obedience to his Laws, and also the Kings accordingly. And if I could have done better, I would. Wherefore, Lord, if I have taken in hand to do that thing which I could not perfectly perform, I desire thy pardon for my bold presumption. And I pray God fend the Kings Grace good and godly Council, to his glory, to the Kings honour, and the increase of virtue in this Realm. And thus now I yield my Soul up unto Almighty God, trusting and

A note of three Papists executed the same time with Barnes, Hierome, and Garret.

The same time and day, and in the same place, where and when these three above mentioned did suffer, three other also were executed, though not for the same cause, but rather the contrary, for denying the Kings Supremacy, whose names were Powel, Fetherstone, and Abel. The which spectacle so happening upon one day, in two so contrary parts or factions brought the people into a marvellous admiration and doubt of their Religion, which part to follow and take; as might so well happen amongst ignorant and simple people, seeing two contrary parts so to suffer, the one for Popery, the other against Popery, both at one time. Inasmuch that a certain Stranger being there present the same time, and seeing three on the one side, and three on the other side to suffer, said in these words, Dum bone: quomodo hic vivunt gentes? hic suspenduntur Papistae, illic comburuntur Antipapistae. But to remove and take away all doubt hereafter from the Posterity, whereby they shall the less marvel how this so happened, here is to be understood how the cause thereof did rise and proceed. Which happened by reason of a certain division and discord among the King's Council, which were so divided among themselves in equal parts, that the one half seemed to hold with the one Religion, the other half with the contrary.

This division and separation of the Council amongst themselves, caused both these parts above mentioned, the one for one Religion, the other for another, to suffer together. For as the one part of the Council called upon the execution of Barnes, Garret, and Hierome, so the other part likewise called upon the execution of the Law upon Powell, Fetherstone, and Abel. Which six being condemned and drawn to the place of Execution, two upon a Hurdle, one being a Papist, the other a Protestant, thus after a strange manner were brought into Smithfield, where all the said six together for contrary Doctrine suffered death, three by the fire for the Gospel, the other three by hanging, drawing, and quartering for Popery.

Two together laid up on the Hurdle, the one a Papist, the other a Protestant.

Allen Cope.

Allen Cope in his worshipful Dialogues, making mention of these three aforesaid, Powell, Fetherstone, and Abel, amongst other which died in King Henries days in the like Popish quarrel, that is, for the like Treason against their Prince, (being in all to the number of twenty four) extolled them not only in words, but with miracles also, up to the height of Heaven, among the crowned Martyrs and Saints of God. To the which Cope, because in this halfe of story I have no leisure at this present to give attendance, I shall wait attendance (the Lord willing) another time, to joyn in this issue with him more at leisure. In the mean time it shall suffice at this present to recite the names only of those twenty four Rebels, whom he of his Popish Devotion lo dignified with the pretended Title of Martyrs. The names of which Monkish Rebels be these here following:

24. Neither good Martyrs to God, nor good Subjects to the King.

Besides these were other nine Carthusian Monks which died in the Prison of Newgate. To the which number if you add Mr. More and the Bishop of Rochester, the summa totalis cometh to twenty four, whom the said Cope unjustly crowned for Martyrs. But of these more shall be said (the Lord willing) hereafter.

Great disturbance in England after the six Articles.

Thus having discoursed the order of the six Articles, with other matter likewise following in the next Parliament, concerning the condemnation of the Lord Cromwell, of Dr. Barnes and his Fellows, let us now (proceeding further in this History) consider what great disturbance and vexations ensued after the setting forth of the said Articles, through the whole Realm of England, especially among the godly sort. Wherein first were to be mentioned the freight and severe Commissions sent forth by the Kings Authority to the Bishops, Chancellors, Officials, Justices, Maiors, and Bailiffs in every Shire, and other Commissioners by name in the same Commissions expressed; and amongst other, especially to Edmund Boner Bishop of London, to the Maior, Sheriffs, and Aldermen of the same, to enquire diligently upon all Heretical Books, and to burn them. Also to enquire upon all such Persons whatsoever, culpable or suspected of such Felonies, Heresies, Contempts, or Transgressions, or speaking any words contrary to the forefaid Act set forth of the six Articles. The tenor of which Commissions being sufficiently expressed in ancient Records, and in the Bishops Registers, and also partly touched before, therefore for tediousness I here omit, only shewing forth the Commission directed to Edmund Boner Bishop of London, to take the Oath of the Maior of London, and of others, for the execution of the Commission aforesaid; the tenor whereof here followeth.

Read before.

The Commission for taking the Oath of the Maior of London and others, for the execution of the Act aforesaid.

HENRY the Eighth, by the Grace of God, King of England and of France, Defender of the Faith, Lord of Ireland, and in Earth supreme Head of the Church of England, unto the Reverend Father in Christ Edmund Boner Bishop of London, and to his wellbeloved the Bishops Chancellors, health. Know ye that we have given you jointly and severally, Power and Authority to receive the Oaths of William Roch Maior of London, John Allen Knight, Ralph Warren Knight, Richard Grelham Knight, Roger Cholmley Knight, Sergeant at Law, John Grelham, Michael Dortmer Archdeacon of London, the Bishops Commissary and Official, Robert Chidley, Guy Crayford, Edward Hall, Robert Brook, and John Morgan, and every of them our Commissioners for Heresies, and other Offences done within our City of London and Diocess of the same, according to the tenor of a certain Schedule hereto annexed. And therefore We command that you receive the Oaths aforesaid, and when you have received them, to certify us into our Chancery under your Seals, returning this our Writ. Telle me ipso at Westminster the twenty ninth of January, in the 32. year of our Reign.

Commission directed to John Boner Bishop of London, from the King.

What the Oath was of these Commissioners whereunto they were bound, read before.

A Note how Boner sate in the Guildhall in Commission for the six Articles. And of the condemning of Mekins.

UPON this Commission given unto Edmund Boner, The story of he coming to the Guildhall with other Commissioners, to sit upon the Statute of the six Articles, began effusions to put in execution his Authority after a rigorous sort, as ye shall hear. And first he charged certain Juries to take their Oath upon the Statute aforesaid; who being sworn, had a day appointed to give their verdict. At the which day they indicted sundry Persons, which shortly after were apprehended and brought to Ward; who, after a while remaining there, were by the King and his Council discharged at the Star-Chamber, without any further punishment.

Not long after this, Sir William Roch being Maior, Boner with other Commissioners sate at the Guildhall aforesaid, before whom there were a certain number of Citizens warned to appear, and after the Commission read, the said Parties were called to the Book, and when five or six were sworn, one of the said Persons being called to the Book, Boner seemed to mislike, and said, Stay a while, my Masters, (quoth he) I would ye should consider this matter well that we have in hand, which concerneth the glory of God, the honour of the King, and the wealth of the Realm, and if there be any here among you that doth not consider the same, it were better that he were hence than here. Then commended the Commissioners with Boner about that man, so that at length he was called to the Book and sworn, not altogether with his good will.

When the two Juries were sworn, Boner taketh upon him to give the Charge unto the Juries, and began with a Tale of Anacharsis, by which example he admonished the Juries to spare no Persons, of what degree soever they were. And at the end of his Charge, he brought forth to the Bar a Boy, whose name was Mekins, declaring how grievously he had offended by speaking of certain words against the State, and of the death of Dr. Barnes, and produced into the said Court two Witnesses, which were there sworn in the face of the Court.

John Boner Bishop of London, from the King.

So a day was assigned upon which the Juries aforesaid should give up their Verdict; at which day both the Commissioners and the said Juries met at Guildhall aforesaid. Then the Clerk of the Peace called on the Juries by their Names, and when their Appearance was taken, Boner bade them put in their Presentments. Then said the Foreman of that Jury, whose name was William

Spil. Rolin Juron.

Robins; My Lord (with a low courtesy) we have found nothing. At which words he fared as one in an Agony, and said, Nothing? have ye found nothing? What nothing? By the faith I owe to God (quoth he to the Foreman) I would trust you upon your Obligation, but by your Oath I will trust you nothing. Then said some of the Commissioners; My Lord, give them a longer day. No, (quoth he) in London they ever find nothing. I pray you what say you to Mekins? My Lord, quoth the Foreman, we can say nothing to him, for we find the Witnesses to disagree. One affirmeth that he should say the Sacrament was nothing but a Ceremony; and the other, nothing but a signification. Why (quoth Boner) did he not say that Barnes died holy. Then pausing a while, he bade call the other Jury. Put in your Verdict, (quoth he.) My Lord, said one, we have found nothing. Jesus! (quoth he) is not this a strange case?

Self Testy Juron.

Then spake one of the same Jury, whose name was Ralph Foxley, and said, My Lord, when you gave us charge, we desired to have the Parsons and Curates of every Parish to give us instructions, and it was denied us.

*This Recorder was Sir
Th. Cawley.*

Then stood up the Recorder, and said, It was true indeed that he had spoken; and there wiche said, Thus last year were charged two Juries, which did many things naughtily and foolishly, and did as much as in them lay to make an uproar among the Kings people, and therefore it was thought not meet that they should give information to you. Nay, nay, quoth Boner, this was the case; If the Parson or Curate should give information according to his knowledge, then what will they say? I must tell my Confession to Knave-Priest, and he shall go by and by and open it. What, said my Lord Maior, there is no man (I trow) that will say so? Yes, by my troth, quoth Boner, Knave-Priest, Knave-Priest. Then said my Lord Maior somewhat smiling, There be some of them slippery Fellows; and as men find them, so will they oft-times report. Boner not well contented with those words, said to the Jury, My Masters, what say you to Mekins? They answered, The Witnesses do not agree, therefore we do not allow them. Why (quoth Boner) the Court hath allowed them. Then said one of the Jury to the Recorder, Is it sufficient for our discharge, if this Court do allow them? Yes, said the Recorder, it is sufficient; and said, Go you aside together awhile, and bring in your Verdict. After the Jury had talked together a little while, they returned to the Bar again with their Judgment, which at Boners hand was friendly received; so both they and the other Jury were discharged, and bidden take their ease. Thus ended the Court for that day. Shortly after they sate for Life and Death. Mekins being brought to the Bar, and the Indictment read, Boner said to him; Mekins, confess the truth, and submit thy self unto the Kings Law, that thy death may be an example to all other.

brought to the Bar.*

Ex Ed. Hall.

This Richard Mekins being a Child, which passed not the Age of fifteen years (as Hall reporteth) as he had heard some other Folks talk, so chanced he to speak against the Sacrament of the Altar. Which coming to Boners ears, he never left him (as afore doth plainly appear) before he had brought him to the five. During the time of his imprisonment, neither his poor Father nor Mother for fear durst aid him with any relief, whereby he there endured in great misery. At what time he was brought unto the Stake, he was taught to speak much good of the Bishop of London, and of the great Charity he shewed to him, and to defie and detest all Hereticks and Heresies, but specially Dr. Barnes, unto whom he imputed the learning of that Heretic, which was the cause of his death. The poor Lad would for safeguard of his life have gladly said that the twelve Apostles had taught it him; such was his childish innocency and fear. But for this deed many spake and said, It was great shame for the Bishop, whose part and duty it had been rather to have laboured to save his life, than could he

Dr. Barnes,

Barnes was

to procure that terrible Execution, seeing that he was such an ignorant Soul, that he knew not what the affirming of Heresie was.

Richard Spencer, Ramsey, and one Hewet, suffered at Salisbury.

About the same time also a certain Priest was burned at Salisbury, who leaving his Paristrey had married a Wife, and became a Player in Enterludes, with one Ramsey and Hewet, which three were all condemned and burned; against whom, and specially against Spencer, was laid matter concerning the Sacrament of the Altar. He suffered at Salisbury.

Spencer, Ramsey, and Hewet, sate 1541.

Although this Inquisition above mentioned was meant ex Regibus properly and especially concerning the six Articles, yet so it fell out, that in short space doubts began to rise, and to be moved by the Quelt, whether they might enquire as well of all other Opinions, Articles, and Causes of Lollardy, or for speaking against the holy Bread, holy Water, or for favouring the cause of Barnes; of Frier, of Ward, Sir Thomas Rose, &c. Alex.

Persons presented, with the causes.

Alexander Seton a Scottish, and a worthy Preacher.

Alexander Seton was denounced, detected, and presented, by three Priests of whom one was fellow of Whittington Colledge called Richard Taylor; another was John Smith; the third was John Hanningdon, who after was converted to the same Doctrine himself.

This Seton was Chaplain to the Duke of Suffolk, and by him was made free Denison. In his Sermon Preached at Saint Antholines, his adversaries picked against him matter containing fifteen objections, or rather cavillations, which for example I thought here to exhibit to the Reader, to the intent that men may see, not only what true Doctrine Seton then Preached, consonant to the Scriptures; but also what wrangling cavillers can do, in depraving that is right, or in wringing that is well meant, or in carping that they understand not, or in seeking out faults where none is, as by these their sinister cavillations may appear.

Certain places or Articles gathered out of Setons Sermons by his Adversaries.

Articles gathered out of Seton Sermons by his Adversaries. The sayings and Words of Alexander Seton, spoken and Preached by him in his Sermon, made the thirteenth day of November, at afternoon, in the Parish Church of Saint A. in London; Paul said, of our selves we can do nothing; I pray thee then where is thy will? Art thou any better than Paul, James, Peter, and all the Apostles? Hast thou any more Grace than they? Tell me now if thy will be any thing or nothing. If it be any thing, tell me whether it be to do good or ill? If thou say to do ill, I will grant thou hast a greater deal. If thou say to do good, I ask whether is more, somewhat or nothing? For Paul said he could do nothing, and I am sure thou hast no more Grace, than Paul and his Companions.

Scripture speaketh of three things in man; the first is will, the other two are consent and deed. The first that is will, God worketh without us, and besides us. The other two he worketh in us, and with us. And here he alledged Saint Augustine, to prove that we can will nothing that is good. Moreover he said, thou hast not one jot, no not one tittle to do any good.

There is nothing in Heaven or Earth, creature or other, that can be any mean towards our justification, nor can any man satisfy God the Father for our sin, save only Christ, and the shedding of his Blood.

He that Preacheth that works do merit, or be any mean to our Salvation, or any part of our justification, Preacheth a Doctrine of the Devil.

If any thing else, save only Christ, by any mean towards our justification, then did not Christ only justify us.

I say, that neither thy good works, nor any thing that thou canst do, can be one jot or tittle towards thy justification. For if they be, then is not Christ a full justifier, and that I will prove by a familiar example. Be it in case I have two Servants, the one is called John, and the other Robert, and I promise to fend you such a day twenty pound by John my servant, and at my day I fend you by Jo. my servant, xix. li. xix. xi. d. ob. q. and there lacketh but one farthing, which Robert doth bring thee, and so thou hast thy twenty pound, every penny and farthing. Yet, will I ask if I be true of my promise, or no, and thou maist say nay. And why, because I promised to fend thee that whole twenty pound by John and did not, for there lacked a farthing, which Robert brought. Wherefore I say, if thy works do merit or bring one little jot or tittle towards thy justification, then is Christ false of his promise, which said that he would do all together.

One Scripture I will bring you, which they cannot writhe, to prove that Christ was only promised to be our only justifier, our only mean, and that is in the two and twentieth of Genesis, where it is written, In thy seed shall all people be blessed, meaning thereby only Christ, and he said not in thy seeds, nor in the works of thy seeds. Wherefore all they that preach, that works be any part or mean toward our justification, do make God false of his promise.

They that preach that works do merit, do make works the tree, which are but the fruits of justice, wrought by him that is already a just man, which cannot chuse but bring forth good fruit.

I would ask a question, whether he that worketh be a good man, or bad, for he must be one of them. If he be a good man, he cannot chuse but bring forth good fruits; if he be an ill man, he cannot bring forth no fruit, but ill fruit; for a good tree cannot bring forth ill fruit.

He that faith that works do merit any thing towards our Salvation, doth make works checkmate with Christ and plucketh from Christ that is his, and giveth it to works. Some will ask, wherefore then should I do good works? I answer, good works are to be done for no cause else, but only for the Glory of God, and not that they do merit any thing at all. And he that faith that good works are to be done for any other cause, than for the glory of God only, and will have them to merit, or be any mean towards our justification, I say he lieth and believe him not.

He that can shew me in any scripture, that works do merit, or be any mean to our justification, for the first Scripture I will (without any further judgment) lose both mine ears, for the second, my Tongue, and for the third my Neck. For if I dare say he cannot prove in all the whole Scripture one tittle: Wherefore believe them not.

Men say that we deny good works, and fasting and prayer. They lye on us, we deny nothing but Popish works, and Popish fasting, and Popish Prayer; and he that preacheth that works do merit, or fasting doth merit, or prayer doth merit, doth preach a Popish Doctrine.

If you ask me when we shall leave preaching of works? even when they do leave to preach that works do merit, and suffer Christ to be a whole satisfier, and only mean to our justification; and till then we will not cease in Gods Cause to set forth only Christ to be a full, and perfect, and only satisfaction.

If you ask, if good works shall be rewarded, I say yes, and with no less than eternal Glory, but for no merit that they deserve, for they deserve nothing; but only because God hath promised, not for the merit of the work, but for his promise sake, and he will not break his promise.

Other Articles gathered out of Setons Sermons.

Touching reconciliation spoken of by Doctor Smith, Other Articles out of Seton Sermons. preaching in the forenoon at Pauls Cross, Alexander Seton preaching at afternoon at Saint Antholines, and reciting his sayings and Scriptures, reproved him for alledging this saying, Reconciliamini Deo, and Englishing the same thus, Reconcile your selves to God; because it is there spoken passively, and not actively, so that there should be nothing in man pertaining to reconciliation, but all in God.

Also reproving the said Doctor Smith, for that the said D. said that man by his good works might merit. Which saying of Doctor Smith the said Alexander Seton reproved in the Pulpit at S. Antholines the 13. day of November, the year of our Lord 1541. as naughtily spoken.

Moreover the said Alexander Seton said in the same place, that it was a shame that any such preacher should be suffered so openly to preach such erroneous Doctrine, as to say that works should merit, adducing, Non sunt condigna passionis, &c. Et postquam feceris omnia, &c.

Finally Seton said, peradventure ye will say the Church hath determined this matter touching works. And I say, quoth he, that it is Ecclesia Malignantium, so determining any thing against Scripture.

To these pretended Objections of his Adversaries he made his Answer again by writing, first denying many things there presented, taking upon his Conscience, that he never spake divers of those words; and again many things that he never meant to such end or purpose, as in the said Register may appear. But all this notwithstanding, for all that he could say for himself, the Ordinary proceeded in his consistory judgment, ministring

Good fruits make not a good man, but a good man cannot chuse but make good fruits. Many works made checkmate with Christ.

The Papists believe the righteousness; as though they denied good works.

Good works show they be rewarded.

1 Cor. 13.

to him certain Interrogatories (after the Popish course) to the number of 10. Articles. The greatest matter laid against him, was for preaching free justification by Faith in Christ Jesus, against false confidence in good works, and Mans free will. Also it was laid unto him, for affirming that private Masses, Diriges, and other Prayers profited not the Souls departed; so that in the end, he with Tolwaine afore said, was caused to recant at Pauls Cross, 1541.

Add to these afore said, Doctor Taylor, Parson of S. Peters in Cornhill.

South, Parish Priest of Alhallows in Lombardstreet. Some, Priest.

Giles the Kings Beer-brewer, at the Red-Lion in Saint Katherine's.

Thomas Lancaffer, Priest. All which were imprisoned likewise for the six Articles.

To be short, such a number out of all Parishes in London, and out of Calais, and divers other quarters, were then apprehended through the said Inquisition, that all Prisons in London were too little to hold them, in so much that they were fain to lay them in the Halls. At the last, by the means of good Lord Audley, such pardon was obtained of the King, that the said Lord Audley then Lord Chancellor, being content that one should be bound for another, they were all discharged, being bound only to appear in the Star-Chamber the next day after All-Souls, there to answer if they were called; but neither was there any person called, neither did any appear.

The Story of John Porter, cruelly Martyred for reading the Bible in Pauls.

A Story of John Porter, Martyr.

IN the number of these forenamed cometh the remembrance of John Porter, who in the same year, 1541. for reading the Bible in Pauls Church, was cruelly handled, and that unto death, as you shall hear. It was declared in this History above how Edmund Boner Bishop of London (in the days of the Lord Cromwel) being then Embassadour at Paris, was a great doer in setting forth the printing of the Bible in that great Volume: promising moreover, that it would for his part have fix of those Bibles set up in the Church of S. Paul in London. Which also at his coming home he no less performed, according to the Kings Proclamation set forth for the same, whereof read afore.

The Bible commanded by the King to be set in Churches.

Read afore.

The Bibles thus standing in Pauls by the Commandment of the King, and the appointment of Boner the Bishop, many well disposed people used much to resort to the hearing thereof, especially when they could get any that had an Audible Voice to read unto them, misdoubting therein no danger toward them; and no more there was so long as the days of Cromwel lasted. After he was gone, it happened amongst divers and sundry godly disposed persons, which frequented there the reading of the fore said Bible, that one John Porter used sometimes to be occupied in that Godly Exercise, to the edifying as well of himself, as of other. This Porter was a fresh young man, and of a big stature: Who by diligent reading of the Scripture, and by hearing of such Sermons as then were preached by them that were the letters forth of Gods Truth, became very expert. The Bible then being set up by Boners Commandment upon divers Pillars in Pauls Church, fixed unto the same with Chains for all men to read in them that would, great multitudes would resort thither to hear this Porter, because he could read well, and had an Audible Voice. Boner and his Chaplains being grieved withal (and the World beginning then to frown upon the Gospellers) sent for the fore said Porter, and rebuked him, very sharply for his reading. But Porter answered him that he trusted he had done nothing contrary to the Law, neither contrary to his advertisements which he had fixed in Print over every Bible.

Boner & his Chaplains grieved with the Bibles which he before caused to be set up himself.

Boner then laid unto his charge that he had made Explications upon the Text, and gathered great multitudes about him to make Tumults. He answered, he trusted that should not be proved by him. But in fine Boner sent him to Newgate, where he was miserably fettered in Irons both Legs and Arms, with a Collar of Iron about his Neck fastened to the Wall in the Dungeon, being there so cruelly handled, that he was compelled to send for a kinsman of his, whose Name is also Porter, and yet alive, and can testify that it is true, and dwelleth yet without Newgate. Who, seeing his kinsman in this miserable case, intreated Jewes, then Keeper of Newgate, that he might be released out of those cruel Irons, and so through friendship and money had him up among other Prisoners, which lay there for Felony and Murder, where Porter being amongst them, hearing and seeing their Wickedness and Blasphemy, exhorted them to amendment of Life, and gave unto them such instructions as he had learned of the Scriptures; for which his doing he was complained on and so carried down, and laid in the lower Dungeon of all, oppressed with Bolts and Irons, where within fix or eight days after he was found dead.

It is signified to us by credible information, that the same night before he was found dead, they that dwelt near to the same place of the Prison where Porter lay, did hear him pitiously to groan and make a lamentable noise, where some suppose that he was put in certain frait Irons which be there in the House, called, The Devils nail on the neck, being after an horrible sort devised, of viling and wringing the Neck of a man with his Legs together, in such sort, as the more he stretch in it the frailer it presseth him, so that within three or four hours it breaketh and crusheth a Mans back and body in pieces. In which devilish Torment, whether John Porter was slain or no, it is not certain. But howsoever it was, this is known, that he was found dead (as is afore said) in the Dungeon, with such groaning and piteous noise heard the night before in the said Dungeon as is declared.

A Note of one Thomas Sommers, imprisoned for the Gospel.

AMONGST these Londoners thus troubled by the Clergy, (we will add also (though a little out of place) another Note of a Merchant called Thomas Sommers, who dyed in the Tower of London for confessing the Gospel. Which Thomas being a very honest Merchant and Wealthy, was sent for by the Lord Cardinal, and committed to the Tower, for that he had Luthers Books (as they termed them) and after a great lute made for him to the said Cardinal, his judgment was, that he should ride from the Tower into Cheapside, carrying a new Book in his hand, and be hanged with Books round about him, with three or four other Merchants after the same order, which was done. And when Master Sommers should be set on a Colliers Nagg, as the rest of his fellow Prisoners were, a friend of his called Master Cupland brought him a very good Gelding, fair dressed with Bridle and Saddle; and when the Bishops Officers came to dress him with Books, as they had trimmed the other, and would have made holes in his Garment to have thrust the strings of the Books therein; Nay, said Sommers, I have always loved to go handsomely in my Apparel, and taking the Books and opening them, he bound them together by the strings, and cast them about his neck (the leaves being all open) like a collar, and being on Horseback, rode formost thorow the Streets, till they came about the Standard in Cheapside, where a great fire was made to burn their Books in, and a Pillory set up there for four persons, in token that they had deserved it.

In the mean time, by the way as they should come, it was appointed that one should go before them with a bason, at the noise whereof M. Sommers Horse, being a lofty Gelding and fierce, was in such a rage, that he which rung the bason, being afraid of himself, was fain to go alone a great pace before that any Horseman followed after. At length when they came to the fire, every of them having a Book in his hand, they were commanded to cast their Books into the Fire. But when Master Sommers saw that his new Testament should be burned, he threw it over the fire which was seen by some of Gods Enemies, and brought to him again commanding him to cast it into the fire; which he would not do.

do, but cast it through the fire. Which thing was done three times. But at last a slander by took it up, and saved it from burning. But not long after, the said Master Sommers, cast again into the Tower by the Cardinal, through the cruelty of the Bishops and their adherents, who soon after died in the said prison for the testimony of his faith.

What trouble and vexation happened amongst the godly Brethren in London, for the six Articles, hitherto we have discoursed. Albeit neither have I comprehended all which were molested thorow all the Parishes of London, neither again did this rigorous Inquisition so cease within the precincts of this City only, but also extended further to Salisbury, Norfolk, Lincoln, and through all other Shires and quarters of the Realm; so that whereas any Popish Prelate most bare stroke, there most persecution increased. The Bishop of Lincoln the same time was John Longland, and Doctor Dracot his Chancellor. Of whose rigorous doings ye have heard enough and too much before. His ready diligence in all Popish quarrels as it never lacked before, so now in the execution of these six Articles it was not far behind in whose Diocess divers good Men and Women, namely, about Buckingham and Amergham, and quarters thereabouts, were grievously disquieted, appearing yet in the same register; as one.

Thomas Bernard and James Morton, Martyrs.

The Bernard,
James Morton Martyrs.

About the same time John Longland Bishop of Lincoln, burned two upon one day, the one named Thomas Bernard, and the other James Morton: the one for teaching the Lords Prayer in English, and the other for keeping the Epistle of Saint James translated into English.

In Oxford also the same time, or much thereabout, recanted one Master Barber, Master of Art of that University, a man excellently learned. Who being called up to Lambeth before the Archbishop Thomas Cranmer, was in his Examination so stout in the cause of the Sacrament, and so learnedly defended himself therein, that (as it is credibly affirmed of them which yet be alive, and were present thereat) neither Cranmer himself, nor all they could well answer to his allegations brought out of Augusine. Wherein he was so prompt and ripe of himself, that the Archbishop, with the residue of his company were brought in great admiration of him. Notwithstanding, by compulsion of the time and danger of the six Articles, at last he relented, and returning again to Oxford was there caused to recant. After which the good man long prospered not, but ware away. Ex testimonio Rad. Morris.

A merry and pleasant narration, touching a false fearful imagination of fire, raised among the Doctors and Masters of Oxford in Saint Maries Church, at the recantation of Master Malarie Master of Art of Cambridge.

His Recantation of Master Barber aforesaid, in the University of Oxford, bringeth me in remembrance of another Recantation likewise, happening not long before in the said University, which I thought here not to overpass, and namely, for that the same carrieth withal a merry ridiculous spectacle, not unworthy to be remembered, and here to be inserted, somewhat to recreate and refresh by the way the weary mind of the Reader, after so many bloody and lamentable stories, executions, recantations, and tragedies above passed. The story is this.

There was one Master Malarie, Master of Art of the Heads of Cambridge, Scholar of Christ's Colledge, who for the like opinions to those above rehearsed, holden contrary to the Catholick Determination of holy Mother Church of Rome, that is, for the right truth of Christs Gospel, was convented before the Bishops, and in the end sent to Oxford, there openly to recant, and to bear his fagot, to the terror of the Students of that University. The time and place was appointed, that he should be brought solemnly into Saint Maries Church upon a Sunday, where a great number of the Head Doctors and Divines, and other of the University were together Assembled, with a great multitude of Citizens and Town-dwellers, which came to behold the sight. Furthermore, because that solemnity should not pass without some official Sermon, for the holding up of the Mother Church of Rome, Doctor Smith, reader then of the Divinity Lecture, was appointed to make the Sermon at this Recantation. Briefly, at the preaching of this Sermon there was Assembled a mighty Audience of all sorts of degrees as well of Students as other. Few almost were absent which loved to hear or see any news; Inasmuch that there was no place almost in the whole Church which was not fully replenished with concourse and throng of people.

All things being thus prepared and set in readines, cometh forth Malarie with his Fagot upon his shoulder. Not long after also proceedeth the Doctor into the Pulpit to make his Sermon, the purpose and Argument whereof was wholly upon the Sacrament. The which Doctor, for the more confirmation and credit to his words, had provided the holy Catholick Cake, and the Sacrament of the Altar, there to hang by a string before him in the Pulpit. Thus the Doctor with his God Almighty, entering his Godly Sermon, had scarce proceeded into the midst thereof, the People giving great silence with all Reverence unto his Doctrine, but suddenly was heard into the Church the voice of one crying in the Street, Fire, fire. The party which thus cried first in the Street was called Henster. The occasion was this, for that he coming from Allballows Parish saw a Chimney on fire, and so passing in the Street by Saint Maries Church, cried Fire, as the fashion is, meaning no hurt.

This sound of Fire being heard in the Church, first of them which stood outmost next to the Church door, so increased and went from one to another, that at length it came unto the ears of the Doctors, and at last to the Preacher himself. Who as soon as they heard the matter, being amazed with sudden fear, and marveling what the matter should mean, began to look up into the top of the Church, and to behold the Walls. The residue seeing them look up, looked up also. Then began they in the midst of the Audience to cry out with a loud Voice, Fire, fire. Where saith one? Where saith another. In the Church, saith one. The mention of the Church was scarcely pronounced, when as in one moment there was a common cry amongst them, the Church is on Fire, the Church is on Fire by Hereticks, &c. And albeit no man did see any fire at all, yet so far as much as all men cried out so, every man thought it true that they heard. Then was there such fear, concourse and tumult of people, through the whole Church, that it cannot be declared in words as it was indeed.

And as in a great fire (where fire is indeed) we see many times how one little spark giveth matter of a mighty flame, setting whole stacks and piles on burning: so here upon a small occasion of one mans word kindled first a general cry, then a strong opinion running in every mans head within the Church, thinking the Church to be on fire, where no fire was at all. Thus it pleased Almighty God to delude these deluders, that is, that these great Doctors and wise men of the Schools, which think themselves so wise in Gods matters as though they could not err, should see by their own senses and judgments, how blinded and infatuated they were in these so small matters and sensible trifles.

Thus this strong imagination of fire being fixed in their heads, as nothing could remove them to think contrary but that the Church was on fire, so every thing that they saw or heard increased this suspicion in them, to make it seem most true, which was indeed most false. The first and chiefest occasion that augmented this suspicion, was the Heretick there bearing his Fagot, which gave them to imagine that all other Hereticks had conspired with him to set the Church on fire.

After this, through the rage of the people, and running to and fro, the dust was so raised, that it shewed as it had been the smoke of fire. Which thing, together with the outcry of the people; made all men so afraid, that leaving the Sermon, they began all together to run away. But such was the press of the multitude, running in heaps together, that the more they laboured, the less they could get out. For whilst they ran all headlong unto the doors, every man striving to get out first, they thrust one another in such sort, and stuck so fast, that they which were without, neither could get into the Church again; neither they that were within could get out by any means. So the one door being stopped, they ran to another little wicket on the North-side, toward the College called Brazen-nose, thinking so to pass out. But there again was the like or greater throng. So the people clustering and thronging together, it put many in danger, and brought many unto their end, by bruising of their Bones or Sides. There was yet another door towards the West, which albeit it was shut and seldom opened; yet now ran they to it with such swiftness, that the great bar of Iron (which is incredible to be spoken) being pulled out and broken by force of mens hands, the door notwithstanding could not be opened for the press or multitude of people.

At the last, when they were there also past all hope to get out, then they were all exceedingly amazed, and ran up and down, crying out upon the Hereticks which had conspired their death. The more they ran about and cried out, the more smoke and dust rose in the Church, even as though all things had now been on a flaming fire. I think there was never such a tumultuous hurly burly rising so of nothing heard of before, nor so great a fear where was no cause to fear, nor peril at all: so that if Demetrius the merry Philosopher sitting in the top of the Church, and seeing all things in such safety as they were, had looked down upon the multitude, and beheld so great a number, some howling and weeping, running up and down, and playing the mad men, now hither now thither, as being tossed to and fro with Waves or Tempests, trembling and quaking, raging and fuming, without any manifest cause, specially if he had seen those great Rabbins the Doctors laden with so many badges or cognifances of wisdom, so foolishly and ridiculously seeking holes and corners to hide themselves in, gasping, breathing, and sweating, and for very horror being almost beside themselves. I think he would have satisfied himself with this one laughter for all his life time, or else rather would have laughed his heart out of his belly, whilst one said that he plainly heard the noise of the fire, another affirmed that he saw it with his eyes, and another swore that he felt the molten lead dropping down upon his head and shoulders. Such is the force of Imagination, when it is once grafted in mens hearts through fear. In all the whole company, there was none that behaved himself more modestly than the Heretick that was there to do Penance; who casting his fagot off from his shoulders upon a Monks head that stood by, kept himself quiet, minding to take such part as the other did.

All the other, being careful for themselves, never made an end of running up and down and crying out. None cried out more earnestly than the Doctor that preached (who was, as I said, Doctor Smith) who in manner first of all cried out in the Pulpit, saying, These are the trains and subtilties of the Hereticks against me: Lord have mercy upon me, Lord have mercy upon me. But might not God, as it had been (to speak with Job) out of a Whirlwind, have answered again unto this Preacher thus, Thou dost now implore my mercy, but thou thy self shewest no mercy unto thy fellows and brethren. How doth thy flesh tremble now at the mention of fire? But think it a sport to burn other simple Innocents, neither do ye any thing at all regard it. If burning seem so grievous a matter unto you, and to suffer a torment of fire; then you should also have the like consideration in other mens perils and dangers, when as you do burn your fellows and brethren.

Or if you think it but a light and trifling matter in them, go too now, do you also with like courage contend, and with like patience suffer now the same torments your selves. And if so be it I should now suffer you with the whole Church to be burned to ashes, what other thing should I do unto you, than you do daily unto your fellows and brethren? Wherefore since you so little esteem the death of others, be now content that other men should also little regard the death of you. With this, I say, or with some other like answer, if that either God, or humane Charity, either the common sense of nature would expostulate with them, yea if there had been a fire indeed (as they were more feared then hurt) who would have doubted but that it had happened unto them according to their deserts? But now worthy it is the noting, how the vain fear and folly of those Catholics either was deluded, or how their cruelty was reproved, whereby they, being better taught by their own example, might hereafter learn what it is to put other poor men to the fire, when they themselves here so much abhorred.

But to return again to the description of this Pageant, wherein (as I said before) there was no danger at all, yet were they all in such fear, as if present death had been over their heads.

In all this great maze and garboyl there was nothing more feared than the melting of the lead, which many affirmed that they felt dropping upon their bodies. Now in this sudden terror and fear, which took from them all Reason and Counsel out of their minds, to behold what practices and sundry shifts every man made for himself, it would make not only Demetrius and Horacius also to laugh, but rather a Horse welnear to break his halter. But none used themselves more ridiculously, than such as seemed greatest wilful men, saying that in one or two peradventure somewhat more quietness of mind appeared. Among whom was one Cloymand president of Corpus Christi Colledge (whom for reverence and learnings sake I do here name) and a few other aged persons with him, which for their age and weakness durst not thrust themselves into the throng amongst the rest, but knelt down quietly before the high Altar, committing themselves and their lives unto the Sacrament. The other, which were younger and stronger, ran up and down through the press, marvelling at the uncivility of men, and waxt angry with the unmanly multitude that would give no room unto the Doctors, Bachelors, Masters, and other Graduates and Regent Masters. But as the terror and fear was common unto all men, so was there no difference made of Persons or Degrees, every man scrambling for himself. The Violet Cap, or Purple Gown did there nothing avail the Dr. neither the Masters Hood nor the Monks Cowl was there respected.

Yea if the King or Queen had been there at that present and in that perplexity, they had been no better than a common man. After they had long striven and assayed all manner of ways and saw no remedy, neither by force, neither authority to prevail, they fell to intreating and offering of rewards, one offering twenty pound, another his scarlet gown, so that any man would pull him out, though it were by the ears.

Some stood close unto the pillars, thinking themselves safe under the Vaults of Stone for the dropping of the lead. Other some, being without money and unprovided of all shifts, knew not which way to turn them. One being a Prefident of a certain Colledge (whose name I need not here to utter) pulling a boord out from the pews, covered his head and shoulders therewith against the scalding lead, which they feared much more than the fall of the Church. Now what a laughter would this have misfited unto Democritus amongst other things, to behold there a certain grand paunch, who seeing the doors stopped and every way closed up, thought by another compendious means to get out through a glass Window if it might be by any shift? But here the Iron Grates letted him notwithstanding his greedy mind would needs attempt if he could happily bring his purpose to pass. When he had broken the glass, and was come to the space between the Grates where he should creep out, first he thrust in his head with the one shoulder, and it went through well enough. Then he laboured to get the other shoulder after, but there was a great labour about that, and long he fluck by the shoulders with much ado. For what doth not importune labour overcome? Thus far forth he was now gotten. But by what part of his Body he did stick fast, am not certain, neither may I faine, forso much as there be yet witnesses which did see these things, which would correct me if I should do so. Notwithstanding this is most certain that he did stick fast between the Grates, and could neither get out nor in.

Thus this good man being indeed a Monk, and having but short hope, by the which way he supposed himself to escape, by the same he fell into further inconvenience, making of one danger two. For if the fire or lead had fallen on the outside, those parts which did hang out of the Window had been in danger; and contrariwise if the flame had raged within the Church, all his other parts had lien open to the fire. And as this man did stick fast in the windows, so did the rest stick as fast in the doors, that sooner they might have been burned, than they could once stir or move one foot. Through the which press at the last there was a way found, that some going over their heads got out.

Calphurnius
ore. Horat.*

Here also happened another Pageant in a certain Monk (if I be not misadvised) of Gloucester Colledge, whereat Calphurnius might well laugh with an open Mouth. So it happened, that there was a young lad in this Tumult, who seeing the doors fast stopped with the press or multitude, and that he had not way to get out climbed up upon the door, and there staying upon the top of the door was forced to tarry still. For to come down into the Church again he durst not for fear of the fire, and to leap down toward the street he could not without danger of falling. When he had tarried there a while, he advised himself what to do; neither did occasion want to serve his purpose. For by chance, amongst them that got out over mens heads, he saw a Monk coming towards him which had a great wide Coule hanging at his back. This the boy thought to be a good occasion for him to escape by. When the Monk came near unto him, the boy which was on the top of the door came down and prettily conveyed himself into the Monks Coule, thinking (as it came to pass indeed) that if the Monk did escape, he should also get out with him. To be brief, at the last the Monk got out over Mens heads, with the boy in his Coule, and for a great while felt no weight or burthen.

At the last, when he was somewhat more come to himself, and did shake his shoulders, feeling his coule heavier then it was accustomed to be, and also hearing the voice of one speaking behind in his Coule, he was more afraid than he was before when he was in the throng, thinking in very deed, that the evil spirit which had fed the Church on fire had flen in his Coule. By and by he began to play the Exorcist; in the Name of God (said he) and all Saints, I command thee to declare what thou art that art behind at my back. To whom the boy answered, I am Bertrams boy (said he) for that was his Name. But I (said the Monk) adjure thee in the Name of the unseparable Trinity, that thou wicked spirit do tell me who thou art, from whence thou comest, and that thou get hence. I am Bertrams boy (said he) good master let me go: and with that his Coule began with the weight to crack upon his shoulders. The Monk when he perceived the matter, took the boy out and discharged his Coule. The boy took his legs and ran away as fast as he could.

Among other, one wiser than the rest ran with the Church door key, beating upon the stone walls, thinking therewith to break an hole thorow to escape out.

In the mean time those that were in the street looking diligently about them, and perceiving all things to be without fear, marvelled at this sudden outrage, and made signs and tokens to them that were in the Church to keep themselves quiet, crying to them that there was no danger.

But forso much as no word could be heard by reason of the noise that was within the Church, those signs made them much more afraid than they were before, interpreting the matter as though all had been on fire without the Church, and for the dropping of the lead and falling of other things, they should rather tarry still within the Church, and not to venture out. This trouble continued in this manner by the space of certain hours.

The next day, and also all the week following there was an incredible number of Bills set upon the Church doors, to inquire for things that were lost, in such variety and number, as Democritus might here again have just cause to laugh. If any man have found a pair of Shooes yesterday in S. Mary Church, or knoweth any man that hath found them, &c. Another Bill was set up for a Gown that was lost. Another intreated to have his Cap reftored. One lost his purse and girdle with certain money; another his sword. One inquireth for a ring, and one for one thing, another for another. To be short, there was few in this garboil, but that either through negligence lost, or through oblivion left some thing behind them.

Thus have you hitherto heard a Tragical Story of a terrible fire which did no hurt. The description whereof although it be not so perfectly exprest according to the worthiness of the matter, yet because it was not to be passed with silence, we have superficially set forth some shadow thereof, whereby the wise and discreet may sufficiently consider, the rest, if any thing else be lacking in setting forth the full narration thereof. As touching the Heretick, because he had not done his sufficient Penance there by occasion of this hurly burly, thereof the next day following he was reclaimed into the Church of S. Frideswide, where he supplied the rest that lacked of his Plenary penance.

The fourth and fifth Marriage of King Henry the eighth.

The same year and month next following, after the apprehension of the Lord Cromwel, which was Ann 1541. the King immediately was divorced from the Lady Ann of Cleve. The cause of which separation being wholly committed to the Clergy of the Convocation, it was by them defined, concluded, and granted, that the King being freed from that pretended Murimoney (as they called it) might marry where he would, and so might she likewise; who also consenting to the same divorcement her self, by her own Letters, was after that taken no more for Queen, but only called Ann of Cleve. Which things thus discussed by the Parliament and Convocation-house, the King the same Month was married to his fifth Wife, which was the Lady Katherine Howard, Niece to the Duke of Norfolk, and Daughter to the Lord Edmund Howard the Dukes Brother. But this marriage likewise continued not long.

In the same Month of August, and the same year, Six Popish Monks for denying the Kings Supremacy executed in the like case of Rebellion. Of whom the first was the Prior of Doncaster; the second a Monk of the Charterhouse of London, called Giles Horn, some call him William Horn; the third one Thomas Ipsam a Monk of Westminster, who had his Monks Garment plucked from his his back, being the last Monk in King Henries days that did wear that Monkish weed; the fourth one Philpas; the fifth one Carew; the sixth was a Prier. See what a difficulty it is to pluck up blind Superstition once rooted in Mans Heart by a little custom.

Now as touching the late marriage between the King and the Lady Howard, ye heard how this Matrimony indured not long; for in the year next following 1542. the said Lady Katherine was accused to the King of incontinent living, not only before her marriage with Francis Dorcham, but also of spoufbreach, after her marriage, with Thomas Culpeper. For the which both the men aforesaid by Act of Parliament were attainted and executed for high Treason, and also the Lady Katherine, late Queen, with the Lady Jane Richmond Widow, late Wife to George Boleyn Lord Rob't, Brother to Queen Ann Boleyn, were beheaded for their defaults within the Tower. Ex Halo & alius.

After the death and punishment of this Lady his fifth Wife, the King calling to remembrance the words of the Lord Cromwel, and missing now more and more his o'd Counsellour, and partly also smelling somewhat the ways of Winchester, began a little to set his foot again in the Cause of Religion. And although he ever had a special favour to Thomas Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury (as you shall hear more hereafter, God willing, in the Life of Cranmer) yet now the more he misliked the Lord Cromwel, the more he inclined to the Archbishop, and also to the right cause of Religion. And therefore in the same year and in the Month of October, after the Execution of this Queen, the King understanding some abuses yet to remain unreformed, namely, about Pilgrimages and Idolatry, and other things more besides to be corrected within his Dominions, directed his Letters unto the foresaid Archbishop of Canterbury, for the speedy redress and reformation of the same. The tenour of which Letters hereafter fully ensueth, in these words.

The Kings Letters to the Archbishop, for the abolishing of Idolatry.

Right Reverend Father in God, right trusty and well-beloved, we greet you well, letting you to wit, that whereas heretofore upon the zeal and remembrance which we had to our bounden duty towards Almighty God, perceiving sundry superstitions and abuses to be used and embraced by our people, whereby they grievously offended him and his word, we did not only cause the Images and Bones of such as they resorted and offered unto, with the Ornaments of the same, and all such Writings and Monuments of fained Miracles, whereunto they were blinded, to be taken away in all places of the Realm, but also by our Injunctions commanded that no offering or setting up of lights or candles should be suffered in any Church, but only to the blessed Sacraments of the Altar: it is lately come unto our knowledge, that this our good intent and purpose notwithstanding, the Shrines, coverings of Shrines, and Monuments of the same, do yet remain in sundry places of this Realm, much to the slander of our Doings, and to the great displeasure of Almighty God, the same being means to allure our Subjects to their former Hypocrite and Superstition, and also that our Injunctions be not kept as appertaineth. For the due and speedy Reformation whereof, we have thought meet, by these our Letters expressly to will and command you, that incontinent upon the receipt hereof, you shall not only cause due search to be made in the Cathedral Church for these things, and if any Shrine, covering of Shrine, Table, Monument of Miracles, or other Pilgrimages, do there continue, cause it to be so taken away, as there remain no memory of it, but also that you shall take order with all the Churches, and other having charge within your Dioceses to do the semblable, and it is that our Injunctions be duly kept, as appertaineth without failing, as we trust you, and as you will answer to the contrary.

Given under our Signet at our Town of Hull, the fourth day of October in the 33. year of our Reign.

Furthermore, the next year after this ensuing, which was 1543. in the Month of February, followed another Proclamation given out by the Kings Authority, wherein the Popes Law, forbidding white meats to be eaten in Lent, was repealed, and the eating of such meats set at liberty, for the behoof of the Kings Subjects. The Copy of which Proclamation I thought here good also to be remembered.

A Proclamation concerning eating of white meats, made the ninth of February, the 34. year of the Reign of the Kings most Royall Majesty.

Forasmuch as by divers and sundry occasions, as well Herringes, Linges, Salsfijh, Salmond, Stuckfijh, as other kinds of Fish have been this year scant & also, onbaunched in prices above the old rate and common estimation of their value, so that if the Kings loving Subjects should be enforced only to buy and provide Herring and other salt store of Fish for the necessary and sufficient sustentation and maintenance of their households and families all this holy time of Lent, according as they have been wont in times past to do, and should not be by some other convenient means relieved therein, the same might and should undoubtedly redound to their importable charge and detriment; and forasmuch as his Highness considereth how this kind and manner of fasting, that is to say, to abstain from Milk, Butter, Eggs, Cheese, and other white meats, is but a meer positive Law of the Church, and used by a Custom within this Realm, and of none other force or necessity, but the same may be upon considerations and grounds altered and dispensed with from time to time, by the public Authority of Kings and Princes, whensoever they shall perceive the same to tend to the hurt and damage of their people: The Kings Highness therefore, most graciously considering and tendering the Wealth and Commodity of his people, hath thought good for the considerations above rehearsed, to release and dispense with the said Law and Customs of abstaining from white meats this holy time of Lent, and of his especial grace and meer motion granteth unto all and singular his Subjects within this his Realm of England, Wales, Calles, Guines, and Hammes, and in all other his Graces Dominions, free liberty, faculty and licence, to eat all manner of white meats, as Milk, Eggs, Butter, Cheese, and such like, during the time of this Lent, without any scruple or grudge of Conscience, any Law, Constitution, Use, or Custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

Whereas nevertheless his Highness exhorteth, and in the Name of God requirith all such his Faithful Subjects, as may, will, or shall enjoy this his said grant or faculty, that they be in no wise scrupulous or doubtful thereof, nor abuse or turn the same into a fleshly or carnal liberty, but rather endeavour themselves to their possible power, with this liberty of eating of white meats, to observe also that fast which God most specially requirith of them, that is to say, to renounce the World and the Devil, with all their pomp and works, and also to subdue and repress their carnal affections and the corrupt works of the flesh, according to their Vow and profession made at the font stone, for in these points specially consisteth the very true and perfect abstinence or fasting of a Christian Man; thus to endure and continue from year to year, till the Kings Highness pleasure shall by his Majesties Proclamation be published to the contrary.

The Trouble and Persecution of four Windsor-men, Robert Telwood, Henry Filmer, Anthony Perfon, and John Marbeck, persecuted for Righteousness sake, and for the Gospel.

Coming now to the Story and time of the four Windsor-men troubled and persecuted for the true Testimony of Gods Word, whereof three were Martyred and Sacrificed in Fire, the fourth (which was Marbeck) had his Pardon: First I have to shew the original of their troubles in several parts, secondly the manner and order of their death as they suffered together, which was Anno 1544. Thirdly, to answer partly in purgation of my self, against certain clatterers which have hitherto taken their pleasure in railing against my former Edition of Acts and Monuments, for mistaking the name of Marbeck, whom in one place I reported to have been burned, albeit in the end of the Story, correcting my self again I declared him not to have been burned. Wherefore to stop the brawling mouths of such quarrellers, I thought here

It is reported or some, that the Lady Katherine was accused to the King of incontinent living, not only before her marriage with Francis Dorcham, but also of spoufbreach, after her marriage, with Thomas Culpeper.

The Causes.

The first beginning of Testwoods trouble.

Steph. Gardiner Bp. of Winchester.	IN the Year of our Lord 1544, there was one Robert Testwood dwelling in the City of London, who for his knowledge in Musick had so great a name, that the Musicians in Windsor College thought him a worthy man to have a room among them. Whereupon they enformed Doctor Sampson (being then their Dean) of him. But forso much as some of the Canons had at that time heard of Testwood, how that he finelled of the new Learning (as they called it) it would not be consented unto at the first. Notwithstanding, with often sute of the foresaid Musicians, made to one Doctor Tate (who, being half a Musician himself, bare a great stroke in such matters) a room being void, Testwood was sent for to be heard. And being there four or five days among the Quire men, he was so well liked both for his voice and cunning, that he was admitted, and after settled in Windsor, with his Household, and had in good estimation with the Dean and Canons a great while: but when they had perceived him by his often talk at their Tables (for he could not well dissemble his Religion) that he leaned to Luthers Sect, they began to dislike him. And so passing forth among them, it was his chance one day to be at Dinner with one of the Canons, named Doctor Raswin. At the which Dinner, among all other, was one of King Edwards four Chantry Priests, named Mr. Ely, an old Bachelor of Divinity. Which Ely in his talk at the Board began to rail against Lay-men, which took upon them to meddle with the Scriptures, and to be better learned (knowing no more but the English Tongue) then they which had been Students in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge all the days of their lives. Then Testwood, perceiving he meant that by him, could forbear his railing no longer, but said, Mr. Ely, by your patience, I think it is no hurt for Lay-men, as I am, to read and to know the Scriptures. Which of you (quoth Ely) that be unlearned, knoweth them, or understandeth them? shine enemy hunger; feed him; if he thirst, give him drink, and in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head. Now Sir, quoth Ely, what meaneth S. Paul by those coals of fire? Marry Sir, quoth Testwood, he meaneth nothing else by them (as I have learned) but burning Charity, that by doing good to our Enemies we should thereby win them. Ah Sir, quoth he, you are an old Scholar indeed.

After this they fell into further communication of the Pope, whose Supremacy was much spoken of at that time, but not known to be so far in question in the Parliament House as it was. And in their talk Ely demanded of Testwood, Whether the Pope ought to be Head of their Church, or no? Against the which Testwood durst not say his full mind, but reasoned within his bounds a great while. But when they were both well stricken in an heat, Testwood forgetting himself, chanced to say, That every King, in his own Realm and Dominion, ought to be the Head of the Church under Christ. At the which words Ely was so chafed, that he rose up from the Table in a great fume, calling him Heretick, and all that naught was, and so went bawling, and chiding away to the great disquieting of all the Company that were there.

Every King in his own Realm and Church is Head under Christ.

Then was Testwood very sorry to see the old man take it so grievously. Whereupon after Dinner he went and sought Mr. Ely, and found him walking in the Body of the Church, thinking to have talked with him charitably, and so to have been at one again; but ever as Testwood pressed towards him, the other shunned him, and would not come nigh him, but spit at him; saying to others that walked by, Beware of this Fellow, for he is the greatest Heretick and Schismatick that ever came in Windsor.

Now began the matter to brew. For after that Ely had made his Complaint to the Deans Deputy, and other of the Canons, they were all against Testwood, purposing surely at the Deans coming home (if all things had chanced even) to have put him to his trump. But see the fortune, It was not twelve days after, ere that the Kings Supremacy passed in the Parliament House. Whereupon the Dean (Dr. Sampson) came home suddenly in the night late, and forthwith sent his Verger about to all the Canons, and Ministers of the Colledge, from the highest to the lowest, commanding them to be in the Chapter-house by eight of the Clock in the morning. Then Ely consulted with the Canons overnight (as late as it was) and thought on the next day to have put Testwood to a great plunge: But he that layeth a snare for another man, saith Solomon, shall be taken in it himself. And so was Ely. For when the Dean, and every man were come and placed in the Chapter House, and that the Dean had commanded the Ministers of the Church for their diligence in tending the Quire, exhorting them also to continue in the same; he began, contrary to every mans expectation, to inveigh against the Bishop of Romes Supremacy and usurped Authority, confounding the same by manifest Scriptures and probable Reasons, so earnestly, that it was a wonder to hear; and at length declared openly, that by the whole consent of the Parliament House, the Popes Supremacy was utterly abolished out of this Realm of England for ever, and so commanded every man there, upon his Allegiance, to call him Pope no more, but Bishop of Rome, and whatsoever he were that would not so do, or did from that day forth maintain or favour his Cause by any manner of means, he should not only lose the benefit of that House, but be reputed as an utter enemy enemy to God, and to the King. The Canons hearing this, were all stricken in a dump. Yet notwithstanding Elies heart was so great, that he would fain have uttered his cankered stomach against Testwood: but the Dean (breaking his tale) called him old Fool, and took him up so sharply, that he was fain to hold his peace. Then the Dean commanded all the Popes Pardons which hanged about the Church to be brought into the Chapter House, and cast into the Chimney, and burnt before all their faces, and so departed.

The Papists of Windsor afraid of Cromwel.

The Canons of Windsor glad to fall in again with Testwood.

AS it chanced Testwood one day to walk in the Church at Afternoon, and beheld the Pilgrims, specially of Devonshire and Cornwall, how they came in by Plumps without Candles and Images of Wax in their hands, to offer to good King Henry of Windsor, as they called him, it pited his heart to see such great Idolatry committed, and how vainly the People had spent their goods in coming so far to kiss a spur, and to have an old Hat set upon their Heads; inasmuch that he could not refrain, but (seeing a certain company which had done their Offring, stand gazing about the Church) went unto them, and with all gentleness began to exhort them to leave such false worshipping of dumb Creatures, and to learn to worship the true living God aright, putting them in remembrance what those things were which they worshipped, and how God many times had plagued his People for running a whoring to such Stocks and Stones, and so would plague them and their Posterity, if they would not leave it.

After this sort he admonished them so long, till at last his words, as God would, took such place in some of them, that they said they never would go a Pilgrimage more. Then he went further, and found another sort licking and kissing a white Lady made of Alabaster, which Image was mortrest in a wall behind the high Altar, and bordered about with a pretty border, which was made like branches with hanging Apples and Flowers. And when he saw them so superstitiously use the Image, as to wipe their hands upon it, and then to stroke them over their heads and faces, as though there had been great verue in touching the Picture, he up with his hand, in the which he had a Key, and smote a piece of the border about the Image, down, and with the glance of the stroke chanced to break off the Images nose. Lo, good People (quoth he) you see what it is, nothing but earth and dust, and cannot help it self, and how then will you have it to help you? For Gods sake, Brethren, be no more deceived. And so he gat him home to his House, for the rumour was so great, that many came to see the Image how it was defaced. And among all other, came one William Simons a Lawyer, who seeing the Image so be-raided, and to lack her nose, took the matter grievously, and looking down upon the Pavement, he spied the Images nose where it lay, which he took up and put in his Purse, saying it should be a dear nose to Testwood one day.

Now were many offended with Testwood, the Canons for speaking against their profit, the Wax-sellers for hindering their Market, and Simons for the Images nose. And more then that, there were of the Canons men that threatened to kill him. Whereupon Testwood kept his House, and durst not come forth, minding to send the whole matter in writing by his Wife, to Mr. Cromwel the Kings Secretary, who was his special Friend. The Canons hearing that Testwood would send to Cromwel, they sent the Verger unto him, to will him to come to the Church; who sent them word again that he was in fear of his life, and therefore would not come. Then sent they two of the eldest Pety Canons to entreat him, and to assure him that no man should do him harm. He made them a plain answer, That he had no such trust in their promises, but would complain to his Friends. Then wist they not what shift to make, for of all men they feared Cromwel, but sent in post haste for old Mr. Ward, a Justice of Peace, dwelling three or four miles off, who being come, and hearing the matter, was very loath to meddle in it. But notwithstanding, through their entreaty, he went to Testwood, and had much ado to persuade him, but at the last he did faithfully promise him, by the Oath he had made to God and the King, to defend him from all danger and harms, that Testwood was content to go with him.

And when Mr. Ward and Testwood were come into the Church, and were going toward the Chapter House, where the Canons abode their coming, one of the Canons men drew his dagger at Testwood, and would have been upon him, but Mr. Ward with his man resisted, and got Testwood into the Chapter House, causing the Serving-man to be called in, and sharply rebuked of their Masters, who strictly commanded them upon pain of losing their service, and further displeasure, not to touch him, nor to give him an evil word. Now Testwood, being alone in the Chapter House with the Canons and Mr. Ward, was gently entreated, and the master so pacified, that Testwood might quietly come and go to the Church, and do his duty as he had done before.

Another Cause of Testwoods trouble.

UPON a Relick Sunday (as they named it) when eve. A very Minister after their old custom should have borne a Relick in his hand about a Procession, one was brought to Testwood. Which Relick, as they said, was a Relick of Bishop Becket. And as the Sexton would have put the Relick in Testwood's hands, he pushed it from him, saying, if he did give it to him, he would wipe his tail withal, and so the Relick was given to another. Then came the Verger down from the high Altar with S. George's Dagger in his hand, demanding who lacked a Relick. Marry, quoth Testwood, give it to Mr. Hake, who stood next him, for he is a pretty man of his hands, and so the Dagger was given unto him. Now Testwood perceiving the Dagger in Mr. Hake's hand, and being merrily disposed (as he was a merry conceited man) stepped forth out of his place to Dr. Clifton, standing directly before him in the midst of the Quire, with a glorious golden Cope upon his back, having the Pix in his hand, and said, Sir, Mr. Hake hath S. George's Dagger. Now if he had his Horse, and S. Martins Cloak, and Mr. John Storm boots, with King Henries Spurs, and his Hat, he might ride when he would, and so stepped into his place again. Whereat the other changed colour, and wist not what to say.

Another Cause of Testwoods Trouble.

IN the days of Mr. Franken, who succeeded Doctor Samson in the Deanery of Windsor, there was on a time set up at the Quire door a certain foolish printed Paper in Meeter, all to the praise and commendation of our Lady, ascribing unto her our Justification, our Salvation, our Redemption, the Forgiveness of Sins, &c. to the great derogation of Christ. Which Paper, one of the Canons, called Mr. Magnus (as it was reported) caused to be set up in despite of Testwood and his Sect. When Testwood saw this Paper, he plucked it down secretly. The next day after was another set up in the same place. Then Testwood coming into the Church, and seeing another Paper set up, and also the Dean coming a little way off, made haste to be at the Quire door, while the Dean staid to take holy Water, and reaching up his hand as he went, plucked away the Paper with him. The Dean, being come to his Stall, called Testwood unto him, and said, That he marvelled greatly how he durst be so bold to take down the Paper in his presence? Testwood answered again, That he marvelled much more, that his Mastership would suffer such a blasphemous Paper to be set up, befeching him not to be offended with that he had done, for he would stand unto it. So Master Dean being a timorous man, made no more ado with him. After this were no more Papers set up, but poor Testwood was eaten and drunken amongst them at every meal, and an Heretick he was, and would roste a Fagot for this geer one day.

Now Mr. Magnus being fore offended with Testwood for plucking down his Papers, to be revenged on magnus idolaters. Conspiracy of the Priests and the Kings Physician, who lay, for the most part, at the Court, to see what he would do against Testwood, Testwood, which

Which Letters being made, were sent with speed. But whatsoever the cause was, whether he durst not meddle for fear of Cromwel, or what else, I cannot tell, their fute came to none effect. Then wist they not what to do, but determined to let the matter sleep, till S. Georges Feast, which was not far off.

Now in the mean time there chanced a pretty story, between one Robert Philips, Gentleman of the Kings Chappel, and Tettwood. Which story, though it was but a merry prank of a finging man, yet it grieved his Adversary wonderfully. The matter was this: Robert Philips was so notable a finging man (wherein he gloried) that wherefoever he came, the best and longest Song, with most Countervertes in it, should be let up at his coming. And so his chance being now to be at Windsor, against his coming to the Anthem, a long Song was set up called Lauda vivit. In which Song there was one Countervert to the end, that began on this wise, O redemptrix & salvatrix: Which verse, of all other, Robert Philips would sing, because he knew that Tettwood could not abide that Ditty. Now Tettwood knowing his mind well enough, joynd with him on the other part: and when he heard Robert Philips begin to fetch his flourish with, O redemptrix & salvatrix, repeating the same one in anothers neck, Tettwood was as quick on the other side to answer him again with Non redemptrix, nec salvatrix, and so driving there with O and Non, who should have the mastery, they made an end of the verse. Whereat was good laughing in sleeves of some, but Robert Philips with order of Tettwood, enemies, were fore offended.

Within fourteen days after this, the Lords of the Garter (as there custom is yearly to do) came to Windsor to keep S. Georges Feast, at which Feast the Duke of Norfolk was President: unto whom the Dean and Canons made a grievous complaint on Tettwood. Who being called before the Duke, he shooke him up, and all to reviled him, as though he would have sent him to hanging by and by. Yet nevertheless, Tettwood so behaved himself to the Duke, that in the end he let him go without any further molesting of him, to the great discomfort of the Dean and Canons.

Here you have heard the causes which have moved Tettwoods enemies to seek his destruction, and could not attain their purpose, till that wicked Haman, Dr. London came, as shall be shewed in the Proccs following.

The Original of Henry Filmers Trouble.

About the Year of our Lord, 1541. after all the Orders of superstitious and begging Friars were suppressed and put down, there chanced one Sir Thomas Melter, which had been a Friar before, and changed his Friars Coat (but not his Friars heart) to be Vicar of Windsor. This Priest on a time made a Sermon to his Parishioners, in the which he declared so many fond and Friarish tales, as that our Lady should hold out her Breasts to S. Bernard, and spout her milk into his eyes, with such like Festival Tales, that many honest men were offended therewith, and especially this Henry Filmer, then one of the Churchwardens: who was so zealous to Gods Word, that he could not abide to hear the glory of Christ so defaced with superstitious Fables. Whereupon he took an honest man or two with him, and went to the Priest, with whom he talked so honestly and so charitably, that in the end the Priest gave him hearty thanks, and was content at his gentle admonition to reform himself without any more ado, and so departed friendly the one from the other.

Now there was one in the Town, called William Simons a Lawyer (as is aforesaid) who hearing that Filmer had been with the Priest, and reproved him for his Sermon, took Pepper in the Nose, and got him to the Vicar, and did so animate him in his doing, that he slipped quite away from the promise he had made to Filmer, and followed the mind of Simons: who meeting with Filmer afterward, all to reviled him, saying, He would bring him before the Bishop, to teach him to be so malicious. Then Filmer hearing the matter renewed, which he had thought had been suppressed, stood against Simons, and said, That the Vicar had preached false and unfound Doctrine, and so would he fly to the Bishop whensoever he came before him. Then Simons slept not the matter, but went to the Maior, and procured of him and his Brethren a Letter, signified with their own hands in the Priests favour, as much as could be devised; and so departed himself, with other his Friends, to go to the Bishop, (whose name was Dr. Capon) and to take the Priest with them; which was a painful Journey for the silly poor man, by reason he had a fore Leg.

Now Filmer, hearing how Simons went about to put him to a foil, consulted with his Friends what was best to do; who concluded to draw out certain Notes of the Vicars Sermon, and to prepare themselves to be at Salisbury as soon as Simons or before him, if it might be possible. Thus both the parties being in a readines, it chanced them to set forth of Windsor all in one day. But by reason the Priest, being an impotent man, could not indure to ride very fast, Filmer and his Company got to the Town an hour and more before Simons, went to the Bishop and delivered up their Bill unto him; which Bill, when the Bishop had seen and perused well, he gave them great thanks for their pains, saying, It did behove him to look upon it, for the Priest had preached Herefie, and should be punished.

Then Filmer declared unto the Bishop the form of his talk he had with the Priest, and the end thereof; and how the matter, being renewed again by Simons, forced him and his Company to trouble his Lordship therewith. Well, said the Bishop; ye have done like honest men. Come to me soon again; and ye shall know more; and so they departed from the Bishop to their inn. And while they were there reposing themselves, Simons with his Company, came to the Town, and (not knowing the other to be come) got them up to the Bishop in all post haste, taking the Priest with them.

The Bishop, hearing of more Windsor men, demanded what they were, and being informed how it was the Vicar of the Town, with other more, he caused the Vicar to be brought in. To whom he said, Are you the Vicar of Windsor? Yea forthwith, my Lord, quoth he. How chancest it, quoth the Bishop, that you are complained on? for there have been with me certain honest men of your Town, which have delivered up a Bill of erroneous Doctrine against you. If it be so, I must needs punish you; and opening the Bill, he read it unto him. How say you, quoth the Bishop, is this true or no? The Vicar could not deny it, but humbly submitted himself to the Bishops Correction. Then was his Company called in, and when the Bishop saw Simons, he knew him well, and said, Wherefore come ye, Mr. Simons? Pleaseth it your Lordship, quoth he, we are come to speak in our Vicars cause, which is a man of good conversation and honesty, and doth his duty so well in every point, that no man can find fault with him, except a lewd Fellow we have in our Town, called Filmer, which is so corrupt with Herefie, that he is able to poison a whole Country: and truly, my Lord, quoth Simons, there is no man that can preach or teach any thing that is good and godly, but he is ready to controll it, and to say it is stark naught. Wherefore we shall beseech your Lordship he may be punished, to the ensample of others, that our Vicar may do his duty quietly, as he hath done before this base Fellow troubled him. And that your Lordship shall the better credit my sayings, I have brought with me these honest men of the Town; and beside all that, a testimonial from the Maior and his Brethren to confirm the same, and so he held the writing out in his hand.

Then said the Bishop, O God help me, Mr. Simons ye are greatly to blame, and most worthy to be punished of all men, that will so impudently go about to maintain your Priest in his Error, which hath preached Herefie, and hath confessed it; wherefore I may not nor will not see it unpunished. And as for that honest man, Filmer, on whom ye have complained, I tell you plainly he hath in this point shewed himself a great deal more honest man than you. But in hope you will no more bear out your Vicar in his evil doings, I will remit all things at this time, saying that he shall the next Sunday recant his Sermon openly before all his Parishioners in Windsor Church; and so the Bishop called in Filmer and his Company which waited without, and delivered

of Anthony Pearson, Priest.

There was a certain Priest, named Anthony Pearson, which frequented much to Windsor, about the year of our Lord 1540. and using the Talent that God had given him in preaching, was greatly esteemed among the People, who flocked so much to his Sermons which he made both in the Town and Country, that the great Priests of the Castle, with other Papists in the Town, specially Simons, were fore-offended: inasmuch that Simons at the last began to gather of his Sermons, and to mark his Auditors; whereof ensued the death of divers, and trouble of many honest men. For about a year and more after, a Minister of Satan, called Dr. London, Warden of the New-Colledge in Oxford, was admitted one of the Prebendaries of Windsor, who, at his first coming to Windsor, began to utter his stomach and to shew his affection. For at his first residence dinner which he made to the Clerks (which Company for the most part at that time favoured the Gospel,) all his whole talk to two Gentlemen strangers at his board (till the Table was taking up) was nothing else but of Hereticks, and what a desolation they would bring the Realm unto, if they might be suffered. And by S. Mary, Masters, (quoth he to the Clerks at last) I cannot tell, but there goeth a shrewd report abroad of this House: Some made answer, it was undeserved. I pray God it be, quoth he. I am but a stranger, and have but small experience amongst you; but I have heard it said before I came hither, that there be some in this House, that will neither have Prayer nor Fasting.

Then spake Testwood, By my troth, Sir, quoth he, I think that was spoken of malice: for Prayer, as your Masterhip knoweth better than I, is one of the first Lessons that Christ taught us. Yea marry, Sir, quoth he, but the Hereticks will have no Invocation to Saints, which all the old Fathers do allow. What the old Fathers do allow, quoth Testwood, I cannot tell; but Christ doth appoint us to go to his Father, and to ask our Petitions of him in Christs Name. Then you will have no mean between you and God, quoth Dr. London: Yes, Sir, quoth Testwood, our mean is Christ, as S. Paul saith, There is one Mediator between God and Man, even Jesus Christ. Give us water, quoth Dr. London. Which being set on the board, he said Grace and washed, and so falling into other Communication with the strangers, the Clerks took their leave and departed.

When Dr. London had been at Windsor a while among his Catholick Brethren, and learned what Testwood was, and also of Simons (who shewed him our Ladies Nose, as he called it) what a sort of Hereticks were in the Town and about the same, and how they increased daily by reason of a naughty Priest, called Anthony Pearson, he was so maliciously bent against them, that he gave himself wholly to the Devil to do mischief. And to bring his wicked purpose about, he conspired with the foresaid Simons, a meet Clerk to serve such a Curate, and other of like sort, how they might compass the matter, first to have all the Arch-hereticks, as they termed them, in Windsor and thereabout, indicted of Heresie, and so to proceed further: They had a good ground to work upon, as they thought, which was the six Articles, whereupon they began to build and practise thus. First they drew out certain notes of Anthony Pearsons Sermons, which he had preached against the Sacrament of the Altar, and their Popish Mass. That done, they put in Sir William Hobby with the good Lady his Wife, Sir Tho. Cardene, Mr. Edmund Herman, Mr. Thomas Weldon, Sir Edmund Weldon, and his wife, Dr. Haynes Dean of Exeter, and a Prebendary of Windsor, to be a common receiver of all suspected persons. They wrote also the names of all such as commonly haunted Anthony Pearsons Sermons, and of all such as had the Testament, and favoured the Gospel, or did but smell thereof.

Then had they privy Spies to walk up and down the Church, to hearken and hear what men said, and to mark who did not reverence the Sacrament, at the elevation time, and to bring his name to Dr. London. And of these Spies some were Chantry Priests; among the which there was one notable Spy, whose name was called Sir William Bows, such a fleeing Priest as would be in every corner of the Church pattering to himself, with his Portuile in his hand, to hear and to note the gesture of men towards the Sacrament. Thus when they had gathered as much as they could, and made a perfect Book thereof, Dr. London with two of his Catholick Brethren more, gave them up to the Bishop of Winchester, Stephen Gardiner, with a great complaint against the Hereticks that were in Windsor, declaring unto him how the Town was fore-diquieted through their Doctrine and evil Example. Wherefore they besought his Lordships help, in purging the Town and Castle of such wicked persons. The Bishop hearing their complaint, and seeing their Book, praised their doings, and bade them make Friends and go forward, and they should not lack his help. Then they applied the matter with tooth and nail, sparing for no money nor pains taking, as Marbeck saith that he himself heard one of them say, who is a greater doer herein, and afterward sorry for that he had done, that the sute thereof cost him that year, for his part only, an hundred Marks, beside the death of three good Geldings.

Now Bishop Gardiner, which had conceived a further fetch in his brain than Dr. London had, made W^rley and other of the Council on his side, and spying a time convenient, went to the King, complaining what a sort of Hereticks his Grace had in his Realm, and how they were not only crept into every corner of his Court, but even into his Privy Chamber, beseeching therefore his Majesty that his Laws might be prosecuted: the King, giving credit to the Councils words, was content his Laws should be executed on such as were Offenders. Then had the Bishop that he desired, and forthwith procured a Commission for a private search to be had in Windsor for Books and Letters that Anthony Pearson should send abroad, which Commission the King granted to take place in the Town of Windsor, but not in the Castle.

At this time the Canons of Exeter (specially Sutbray, Treasurer of the Church, and Dr. Brurewood the Chancellor) had accused Dr. Haynes their Dean to the Council, for preaching against holy Bread, and holy Water, and that he should say in one of his Sermons (having occasion to speak of Matrimony) that marriage and hanging were destiny; upon the which they gathered Testwood against him, because of the Kings marriage. The Bishop of Winchester (at the same time) had also informed the Council of Mr. Hobby, how he was a bearer of Anthony Pearsons, and a great maintainer of Hereticks. Whereupon both he and Dr. Haynes were apprehended and sent to the Fleet. But it was not very long after, ere that by the mediation of Friends they were both delivered.

Now, as touching the Commission for searching for Books, Mr. Ward and Fachel of Reading were appointed Commissioners, who came to Windsor the Thursday before Palm-Sunday, in the year of our Lord 1543. and began their search about eleven of the Clock at night. In the which search were apprehended Robert Benet, Henry Filmer, John Marbeck, and Robert Testwood, for certain Books and Writings found in their Houses against the six Articles, and kept in ward till Monday after, and then fetched up to the Council, all save Testwood, with whom the Bailiffs of the Town were charged, because he lay fore-dissed of the Gout. The other three, being examined before the Council, were committed to Prison, Filmer and Benet to the Bishop of London Goal, and Marbeck to the Marshalsey; whose Examination is here set out, to declare the great goodness of the Council, and the cruelty of the Bishop.

The first Examination of John Marbeck, before the Council, on the Monday after Palm-Sunday, 1544.

THis Marbeck had begun a great Work in English, called The Concordance of the Bible: Which Book, being not half finished, was among his other Books taken in the search, and had up to the Council. And when he came before them to be examined, the whole Work lay before the Bishop of Winchester, Steph. Gardiner, at the upper end of the board. Who beholding the poor man a while, said; Marbeck, dost thou know wherefore thou art sent for? No, my Lord, quoth he. No, quoth the Bishop? that is a marvellous thing. Forsooth, my Lord, quoth he, unless it be for a certain search made of late in Windsor, I cannot tell wherefore it should be. Then thou knowest the matter well enough, quoth the Bishop; and taking up a quire of the Concordance in his hand, said, Understandest thou the Latin Tongue? No, my Lord, quoth he, but simply. No; quoth the Bishop. And with that spake Mr. Wesley, (then Secretary to the King) he saith but simply. I cannot tell, quoth the Bishop, but the Book is translated word for word out of the Latin Concordance, and so began to declare to the rest of the Council, the nature of a Concordance, and how it was first compiled in Latin by the great diligence of the Learned men for the sake of Preachers; concluding with this reason, that if such a Book should go forth in English, it would destroy the Latin Tongue. And so casting down the quire again, he reached another Book, which was the Book of Ezay the Prophet, and turning to the last Chapter, gave the Book to Marbeck, and asked him who had written the note in the Margent. The other looking upon it, said, Forsooth, my Lord, I wrote it. Read it, quoth the Bishop. Then he read it thus, Heaven is my seat, and the Earth is my footstool. Nays, quoth the Bishop, read it as thou hast written it. Then shall I read it wrong, quoth he, for I had written it false. How hadst thou written it, quoth the Bishop. I had written it, quoth he, thus; Heaven is my seat, and the Earth is not my footstool. Yea marry, quoth the Bishop, that was thy meaning. No, my Lord (quoth he) it was but an oversight in writing; for, (as your Lordship seeth) this word (Not) is blotted out. At this time came other matters in to the Council, so that Marbeck was had out to the next Chamber. And when he had stood there a while, one of the Council, named Sir Anthony Wingfield, Captain of the Guard, came forth, and calling for Marbeck, committed him to one Belson of the Guard, laying unto him on this wise, Take this man and have him to the Marshalsey, and tell the Keeper that it is the Councils pleasure that he shall intreat him gently, and if he have any Money in his Purse, as I think he hath not much, take you it from him, lest the Prisoners do take it, and minister it unto him as he shall have need. And so the Messenger departed with Marbeck to the Marshalsey, and did his Commission both faithfully and truly, both to the Keeper and to the Prisoner, as he was commanded.

The second Examination of Marbeck, before the Bishops Gentleman in the Marshalsey.

ON the next day, which was Tuesday, by eight of the Clock in the Morning, there came one of the Bishop of Winchester's Gentlemen into the Marshalsey, whose man brought after him two great Books under his arm, and finding Marbeck walking up and down in the Chappel, demanded of the Keeper why he was not in Irons. I had no such Commandment, quoth he, for the Messenger which brought him yesternight from the Council, said, It was their pleasure he should be gently used. My Lord (quoth the Gentleman) will not be content with you; and so taking the Books of his man, he called for a Chamber, up to the which he carried the Prisoner, and casting the Books from him upon a Bed, fate him down and said, Marbeck, my Lord doth favour thee well for certain good qualities that thou hast, and hath sent me hither to admonish thee to beware and take heed lest thou cast away thy self wilfully. If thou wilt be plain, thou shalt do thy self much good; if not, thou shalt do thy self much harm. I assure thee, my Lord lamenteth thy case, for as much as he hath always heard good report of thee; wherefore now it is to thy self, and play the wife man. Thou art acquainted with a great sort of Hereticks, as Hobby and Haines, with other more, and knowest much of their secrets; if thou wilt now open them at my Lords request, he will procure thy deliverance out of hand, and prefer thee to better living.

Alas, Sir, quoth he, what secrets do I know? I am but a poor man, and was never worthy to be so conversant either with Mr. Hobby or Mr. Haines, to know any part of their minds. Well (quoth the Gentleman) make it not so strange, for my Lord doth know well enough in what estimation they had both thee and Anthony Pearson, for your Religion. For Anthony Pearson, quoth he, I can say nothing, for I never saw him with them in all my life. And as for my self, I cannot deny but that they have always, I thank them, taken me for an honest poor man, and shewed me much kindness; but as for their secrets, they were too wise to commit them to any such as I am.

Peradventure (quoth the Gentleman) thou fearest to utter any thing of them, because they were thy Friends, lest thy hearing thereof might hereafter withdraw their friendship from thee: which thou needest not to fear, I warrant thee, for they are sure enough, and never like to pleasure thee any more, nor any man else.

With that the water stood in Marbeck's eyes. Why weepst thou, quoth the Gentleman? Oh Sir, quoth he, I pray you pardon me; these men have done me good, wherefore I beseech the living God to comfort them as I would be comforted my self.

Well (quoth the Gentleman) I perceive thou wilt play the fool; and then he opened one of the Books, and asked him if he understood any Latin. But a little, Sir, quoth he. How is it then (quoth the Gentleman) that thou hast translated thy Book out of the Latin Concordance, and yet understandest not the Tongue? I will tell you (quoth he) in my youth I learned the Principles of my Grammar, whereby I have some understanding therein, though it be very small. Then the Gentleman began to try him in the Latin Concordance and English Bible which he had brought; and when he had so done, and was satisfied, he called up his man to fetch away the Books, and so departed, leaving Marbeck alone in the Chamber, the door fast shut unto him.

About two hours after, the Gentleman came again, with a sheet of Paper folded in his hand, and set him down upon the Beds side, (as before) and said, By my troth, Marbeck, my Lord seeth so much wilfulness in thee, that he saith it is pity to do thee good. When wast thou last with Haines? Forsooth, quoth he, about three weeks ago, I was at dinner with him. And what talk, quoth the Gentleman, had he at his board? I cannot tell now, quoth he. No? quoth the Gentleman, thou art not so dull witted, to forget a thing in so short a space. Yes, Sir, quoth he, such familiar talk as men do use at their boards, is most commonly by the next day forgotten, and so it was with me. Didst thou never, quoth the Gentleman, talk with him, nor with any of thy Fellows of the Mals, or of the blessed Sacrament? No, forsooth, quoth he. Now forsooth, quoth the Gentleman, thou liest; for thou hast been seen to walk with Testwood, and other of thy Fellows, an hour together in the Church, when honest men have walked up and down beside you, and ever as they have drawn near you, ye have staid your talk till they have been past you, because they should not hear whereof you talked. I deny not, quoth he, but I have talked with Testwood and other of my Fellows, I cannot tell how oft, which maketh not that we talked either of the Mals, or of the Sacrament: for men may commune and talk of many matters, that they would not that every man should hear, and yet far from any such thing; therefore it is good to judge the best. Well, quoth the Gentleman, thou must be plainer with my Lord than this, or else it will be wrong with thee, and that sooner than thou weneest. How plain wilt his Lordship have me to be, Sir, quoth he? There is nothing that I can do and say with a safe Conscience, but I am ready to do it at his Lordships pleasure. What tellest thou me, quoth the Gentleman, of thy Conscience? Thou maist with a safe Conscience utter those that be

The name of this Gentleman was Haines.

Marbeck cannot be persuaded to do these things.

Another talk between Wingfield Gentleman and Marbeck. How Wingfield Gentleman intreated for Dr. Haines.

Confession little passed of wrong these words.

Hereticks, and to say, thou shalt do God and the King no greater wrong. If I know, Sir, quoth he, who were an Heretick indeed, it were a thing; but if I should accuse him to be an Heretick that is none, what a worm would that be in my Conscience so long as I lived? yea it were a great deal better for me to be out of this life, than to live in such torment. In faith, quoth the Gentleman, thou knowest as well who be Hereticks of thy Fellows at home, and who be none, as I do know this Paper to be in my hand; but it maketh no matter, for they shall all be sent for and examined: and thinkest thou that they will not utter and tell of thee all that they can? Yes, I warrant thee. And what a foolish Dolt art thou, that wilt not utter aforehand what they bee, seeing it standeth upon thy deliverance to tell the truth? Whatsoever, quoth he, they shall say of me, let them do it in the Name of God, for I will say no more of them, nor of any men else, than I know. Marry, quoth the Gentleman, if thou wilt so do, my Lord requireth no more. And forasmuch as now peradventure thy Wits are troubled, so that thou canst not call things even by and by to remembrance, I have brought thee Ink and Paper, that thou mayest excoitate with thy self, and write such things as shall come to thy mind. O Lord, quoth Marbeck, what will my Lord do? Will his Lordship compel me to accuse men I wot not whereof? No, quoth the Gentleman, my Lord compelleth thee not, but gently intreateth thee to say the truth; therefore make no more ado, but write, for my Lord will have it so, and so laid down the Ink and Paper, and went his way.

Now was Marbeck so full of heaviness and woe, that he wist not what to do, nor how to set the Pen to the Book to falshe the Bishops mind, unless he did accuse men to the wounding of his own Soul. And thus being compassed about with nothing, but sorrow and care, he cried out to God in his heart, falling down with weeping tears, and said,

Marbeck
Prayer to God.

O most merciful Father of Heaven, thou that knowest the secret doings of all men, have mercy upon thy poor Pinner which is destitute of all help and comfort. Alight me, O Lord, with thy special Grace, that I save this frail and vile Body, which shall turn to corruption at his time; I have no power to say or to write any thing that may be to the casting away of my Christian Brother; but rather, O Lord, let this vile flesh suffer at thy will and pleasure. Grant this, O most merciful Father, for thy dear Son Jesus Christs sake.

Then he rose up and began to search his Conscience what he might write, and at last framed out these words: Whereas your Lordship will have me to write such things as I know of my Fellows at home; please it your Lordship to understand, that I cannot call to remembrance any manner of thing whereby I might justly accuse any one of them, unless it be that the reading of the New Testament, which is common to all men, be an offence; more than this I know not.

Wichester Gentleman recounted the third time to Marbeck.

Now the Gentleman, about his hour appointed, came again, and found Marbeck walking up and down the Chamber. How now, quoth he, hast thou written nothing? Yes Sir, quoth he, as much as I know. Well said, quoth the Gentleman; and took up the Paper. Which when he had read, he cast it from him in a great fume, swearing by our Lords Body, that he would not for twenty pounds carry it to his Lord and Master. Therefore, quoth he, go to it again, and advise thy self better, or else thou wilt let my Lord against thee, and then art thou utterly undone. By my troth, Sir, quoth Marbeck, if his Lordship shall keep me here these seven years, I can say no more than I have said. Then wilt thou repent it, quoth the Gentleman; and so putting up his Penner and Ink-horn, departed with the Paper in his hand.

The third Examination of Marbeck before the Bishop of Wichester himself in his own House.

The 11
of March in the morning.

THE 11th of March, which was Wednesday, by eight of the Clock in the Morning, the Bishop sent for Marbeck to his House at S. Mary Overies, and as he was entering into the Bishops Hall, he saw the Bishop himself coming out at a door in the upper end thereof, with a Roll in his hand, and going toward the great Window, he called the poor man unto him, and said, Marbeck, wilt thou cast away thy self? No, my Lord, quoth he, I trust. Yes, quoth the Bishop, thou goest about it, for thou wilt utter nothing. What a Devil made thee to meddle with the Scriptures? Thy Vocation was another way, wherein thou hast a goodly gift, if thou didst esteem it. Yes, my Lord, quoth he, I do esteem it, and have done my part therein, according to that little knowledge that God hath given me. And why the Devil, quoth the Bishop, didst thou not hold thee there? And with that he flang away from the Window out of the Hall, the poor man following him from place to place, till he had brought him into a long Gallery, and being there, the Bishop began on this wise; Ah firra, quoth he, the Nest of you is broken, I trow. And unfolding his Roll, (which was about an Ell long) he said, Behold, here be your Captains, both Hobby and Haynes, with all the whole pack of thy Sect about Windsor, and yet wilt thou utter none of them. Alas, my Lord, quoth he, how should I accuse them, by whom I know nothing? Well, quoth the Bishop, if thou wilt needs cast away thy self, who can let thee? What helpers hadst thou in setting forth thy Book? Forsooth my Lord, quoth he, none. None, quoth the Bishop, how can that be? It is not possible that thou shouldst do it without help. Truly, my Lord, quoth he, I cannot tell in what part your Lordship doth take it, but howsoever it be, I will not deny but I did it without the help of any man, save God alone. Nay, quoth the Bishop, I do not discommend thy diligence, but what shouldst thou meddle with that thing which pertaineth not to thee?

And in speaking of these words, one of his Chaplains (called Mr. Meadow) came up, and stayed himself at a Window, to whom the Bishop said, Here is a marvellous thing; this Fellow hath taken upon him to set out the Concordance in English, which Book when it was set out in Latin, was not done without the help and diligence of a dozen Learned men at the least, and yet will he bear me in hand, that he hath done it alone. But say what thou wilt, quoth the Bishop, except God himself would come down from Heaven and tell me so, I will not believe it: And so going forth to a Window where two great Bibles lay upon a Cushion, the one in Latin, and the other in English, he called Marbeck unto him, and pointing his finger to a place in the Latin Bible, said, Canst thou English this Sentence? Nay, my Lord, quoth he, I trow I be not so cunning to give it a perfect English, but I can fetch out the English thereof in an English Bible. Let's see, quoth the Bishop. Then Marbeck turning the English Bible, found out the place by and by, and read it to the Bishop. So he tried him three or four times, till one of his men came up and told him the Priest was ready to go to Mass.

And as the Bishop was going, said the Gentleman Mr. Clowbeck, which had examined Marbeck in the Marshall the day before; Shall this Fellow write nothing while your Lordship is at Mass, for he passeth not of it? It maketh no matter, quoth the Bishop, for he will tell nothing; and so went down to hear Mass, leaving Marbeck alone in the Gallery. The Bishop was no sooner down, but the Gentleman came up again with Ink and Paper. Come, firra, quoth he, my Lord will have you occupied till Mass be done; perswading him with fair words, that he would soon be dispatched out of trouble, if he would use truth and plainness. Alas, Sir, quoth he, what would my Lord have me to do? For more than I wrote to his Lordship yesterday, I cannot. Well, well, go too, quoth the Gentleman, and make speed, and so went his way. There was no remedy but Marbeck must now write something; wherefore he, calling to God again in his mind, wrote a few words, as nigh as he could frame them, to those he had written the day before. When the Bishop was come from Mass, and had looked on the writing, he pulled it from him, saying, What shall this do? It hath neither head nor foot. There is a marvellous Sect of them, quoth the Bishop to his men, for the Devil cannot make one of them to bewray another. Then was there nothing answering the Bishops Gentlemen, as they were making him ready to go to the Court, but Cruiciffe upon the poor man. And when the Bishops white Rochet was on him, and

and all, Well Marbeck (quoth he) I am now going to the Court, and was purposed, if I had found thee tractable, to have spoken to the Kings Majesty for thee, and to have given thee thy meat, drink, and lodging here in mine House; but seeing thou art so wilful and so stubborn, thou shalt go the Devil for me.

Then was he carried down by the Bishops men, with many railing words. And coming through the great Chamber, there stood Dr. London, with two more of his Fellows, waiting the Bishops coming, and passing by them into the Hall, he was there received of his Keeper, and carried to Prison again. It was not half an hour after, ere that the Bishop sent one of his Gentlemen to the under Keeper, called Stokes, commanding him to put Irons upon Marbeck, and to keep him fast shut in a Chamber alone, and when he should bring him down to Dinner or Supper, to see that he spake to no man, and no man to him. And furthermore, that he should suffer no manner of person (not his own Wife) to come and see him, or minister any thing unto him. When the Porter (who was the cruellest man that might be to all such as were laid in for any matter of Religion, and yet, as God would, favourable to this poor man) had received this commandment from the Bishop, he clapped Irons upon him, and shut him up, giving warning to all the House, that no man should speak or talk to Marbeck, whensoever he was brought down, and so continued the space of three weeks or more, till his Wife was suffered to come unto him.

The Sute of Marbecks Wife to the Bishop of Winchester.

Marbecks Wife, at the time of her Husbands apprehension, had a young Child of a quarter old sucking upon her breast; and when her Husband was taken from her, and had away to the Council not knowing what should become of him, she left the Child and all, and gat her up to London, and hearing her Husband to be in the Marshalsey, goeth thither: But when she came there, she could in no wise be suffered to see him, which greatly augmented her sorrow. Then, by counsel of Friends, she gat her to the Bishop of Winchester, (for other help was there none to be had at that time) making great sute to have his licence to go and see her Husband, and to help him with such things as he lacked. Nay, quoth the Bishop, thy Husband is acquainted with all the Heretics that be in the Realm, both on this side the Sea and beyond, and yet will he utter none of them. Alas, my Lord (quoth she) my Husband was never beyond the Seas, nor any great Traveller in the Realm, to be so acquainted, and therefore good my Lord, let me go see him. But all her earnest sute from day to day would not help, but still he put her off, harping always upon this string, Thy Husband will utter nothing. At the last, she finding him in the Court at S. James, going towards his Chamber, was so bold to take him by the Rocher, and say, Oh my Lord, these eighteen days I have troubled your Lordship; now for the love of God, and as ever ye came of a woman, put me off no longer, but let me go to my Husband. And as she was standing with the Bishop and his men, in a blind corner going to his Chamber, one of the Kings Servants, called Henry Carrike, and her next Neighbour, chanced to be by; and, hearing the talk between the Bishop and her, desired his Lordship to be good unto the poor woman, which had her own Mother lying Bedrid upon her hands, beside five or six Children. I promise you (quoth the Bishop) her Husband is a great Hereticke, and hath read more Scripture than any man in the Realm hath done. I cannot tell, my Lord (quoth Carrike) what he is inwardly, but outwardly he is as honest a quiet Neighbour as ever I dwelt by. He will tell nothing, quoth the Bishop; he knoweth a great sort of false Harlots, and will not utter them. Yes, my Lord, quoth Carrike, he will tell, I dare say, for he is an honest man. Well, quoth the Bishop, (speaking to the Wife) thou seemest to be an honest woman, and if thou love thy Husband well, go to him, and give him good counsel, to utter such naughty Fellows as he knoweth, and I promise thee he shall have what I can do for him; for I do fantasie him well for his Art, wherein he hath pleased me as well as any man; and so, stepping into his Chamber, he said the should have his Letter to the Keeper. But his mind being changed, he sent out his Ring by his Gentleman, which Gentleman delivered the Ring to his man, charging him with the Bishops message. And so his man went with the woman to the water side, and took boat, who never rested railing on her Husband all the way, till they came to the Prison; which was no small cross to the poor woman.

And when they were come to the Marshalsey, the Messenger shewed the Bishops Ring to the Porter, saying, Mr. Stokes, my Lord willeth you by this token, that ye suffer this woman to have recourse to her Husband; but he frairly chargeth you, that ye search her both coming and going, lest she bring or carry any Letters to or fro, and that she bring no body unto him, nor any word from any man. Gods blood, quoth the Porter, (who was a foul swearer) what will my Lord have me to do? Can I let her to bring word from any man? Either let her go to her Husband, or let her not go; for I fee nothing by him but an honest man. The poor woman, fearing to be repulsed, spake the Porter fair, saying, Good Master be content, for I have found my Lord a very good Lord unto me. This young man is but the Gentlemans servant which brought the Ring from my Lord, and I think doth his Message a great deal more fraiter than my Lord commanded the Gentleman, or than the Gentleman his Master commanded him: but nevertheless, good Master, (quoth she) I shall be contented to stir my self before you both coming and going, so far as an honest woman may do with honesty; for I do intend no such thing, but only to comfort and help my Husband. Then the Messenger said no more, but went his way, leaving the woman there, who from that time forth was suffered to come and go at her pleasure.

The fourth Examination of Marbeck, before the Commissioners in the Bishop of Londons House.

About three weeks before Whitsunday was Marbeck sent for to the Bishop of Londons House, where sat in Commission Dr. Capon Bishop of Salisbury, Dr. Skip Bishop of Hersford, Dr. Goodrick Bishop of Ely, Dr. Oking, Dr. May, and the Bishop of Londons Scribe, having before them all Marbecks Books. Then said the Bishop of Salisbury; Marbeck, we are here in Commission, sent from the Kings Majesty to examine thee of certain things whereof thou must be sworn to answer us faithfully and truly. I am content, my Lord, quoth he, to tell you the truth so far as I can, and so took his Oath. Then the Bishop of Salisbury laid forth before him his three Books of Notes, demanding whose hand they were. He answered they were his own hand, and notes which he had gathered out of other mens works, six years ago. For what cause, quoth the Bishop of Salisbury, didst thou gather them? For none other cause, my Lord, but to come by knowledge. For I being unlearned, and desirous to understand some part of Scripture, thought by reading of Learned mens Works to come the sooner thereby: and where as I found any place of Scripture opened and expounded by them, that I noted as ye see, with a Letter of his name in the Margent, that had set out the Work. So me think, quoth the Bishop of Ely, (who had one of the Books of Notes in his hand all the time of their fitting) thou hast read of all sorts of Books, both good and bad, as seemeth by the Notes. So I have, my Lord, quoth he. And to what purpose, quoth the Bishop of Salisbury? By my truth, quoth he, for no other purpose but to see every mans mind. Then the Bishop of Salisbury drew out a quire of the Concordance, and laid it before the Bishop of Hersford, who looking upon it a while, lifted up his eyes to Dr. Oking, standing next him, and said, This man hath been better occupied then a great sort of our Priests. To the which he made no Answer.

Then said the Bishop of Salisbury, whose help hadst thou in setting forth this Book? Truly, my Lord, quoth he, no help at all. How couldst thou, quoth the Bishop, invent such a Book, or know what a Concordance meant, without an Instructor? I will tell your Lordship quoth he, what Instructor I had to begin it. When Thomas Mattheus's Bible came first out in print, I was much desirous to have

The reason why Marbeck began the Concordance in English,

Marbeck brought again from his better House to the Marshalsey.

A cruel Porter of the Marshalsey, buyes good to Marbeck.

Marbeck Wife desired a great while to go to her Husband.

have one of them : and being a poor man not able to buy one of them, determined with my self to borrow one amongst my friends, and to write it forth. And when I had written out the five books of Moses in fair great paper, and was entered into the book of Jehona, my friend Mister Turner chanced to steal upon me unawares, and seeing me writing out the Bible, asked me what I meant thereby. And when I had told him the cause: Tush, quoth he, thou gosselt about a vain and tedious labour. But this were a profitable work for thee, to set out a Concordance in English. A Concordance, said I, what is that? Then he told me it was a book to find out any word in the whole Bible by the Letter, and that there was such an one in Latin already. Then I told him I had no learning to go about such a thing. Enough, quoth he, for that matter, for it required not so much learning as diligence. And seeing thou art so painful a man, and one that cannot be unoccupied, it were a good exercise for thee. And this my Lord is all the instruction that ever I had before or after, of any man. What is that Turner, quoth the Bishop of Salisbury? Marry, quoth Doctor May, an honest learned man, and a Batchelor of Divinity, and sometime a Fellow in Magdalen College in Oxford. How couldst thou, quoth the Bishop of Salisbury, with this instruction bring it to this order and form, as it is? I borrowed a Latin Concordance, quoth he, and began to practice my Wit, and at last with great labour and diligence brought it into this order, as your Lordship doth see. A good Wit with diligence, quoth the B. of Hereford, may bring hard things to pass. It is great pity, quoth the Bishop of Ely, he had not the Latin Tongue. So it is, quoth Doctor May. Yet cannot I believe, quoth the Bishop of Salisbury, that he hath done any more in this work, than written it out after some other that is learned.

Marbeck
words to the Bishops.

My Lords, quoth Marbeck, I shall beseech you all to pardon me what I shall say, and grant to my request if it shall seem good unto you. Say what thou wilt, quoth the Bishop. I do marvel greatly wherefore I should be so much examined for this book, and where I have committed any offence in doing of it or no? If I have, then were I loth any other to be molested or punished for my fault. Therefore to clear all men in this matter, this is my request, that ye will try me in the rest of the book that is undone. Ye see that I am yet but at the letter L. beginning now at M. and take out what word ye will of that letter, and so in every letter following, and give me the words in a piece of paper, and set me in a place alone where it shall please you, with ink and paper, the English Bible, and the Latin Concordance: and if I bring you not the right words written in the same order and form that the rest before is, then was it not I that did it, but some other.

The Bishop

and Hereford like well the order of Mar- beck.

By my truth, Marbeck, quoth the Bishop of Ely, that is honestly spoken, and then shalt thou bring many out of suspicion. That he shall, quoth they all. Then they bade Doctor Oking draw out such words as he thought best in a piece of paper, and so rose up; and in the mean time fell into other familiar talk with Marbeck (as the Bishop of Ely and Hereford were both acquainted with him afore, and his friends, so far as they durst) who perceiving the Bishops so pleasantly disposed, besought them to tell him in what danger he stood. I shall tell thee Marbeck, quoth the Bishop of Salisbury. Thou art in a better case than any of thy fellows, of whom there be some would give forty pound to be in no worse case than thou art, whose sayings the other affirmed. Then came Doctor Oking with the words he had written, and while the Bishops were perusing them over, Doctor Oking said to Marbeck, very friendly, on this wise: Good Master Marbeck make halt, for the sooner ye have done, the sooner ye shall be delivered. And as the Bishops were going away, the Bishop of Hereford took Marbeck a little aside, and informed him a word which Doctor Oking had written false, and also to comfort him, said, Fear not, there can no law condemn you for any thing that ye have done, for if you had written a thousand Heresies, so long as they be not your sayings nor your opinions, the Law cannot hurt you. And so went they all with the Bishop of Salisbury to dinner, taking the poor man with them, who dined in the Hall at the Stewards board; and besides that had Wine and Meat sent down from the Bishops Table.

Marbeck.

When Dinner was done, the Bishop of Salisbury came down into the Hall, commanding ink and paper to be given to Marbeck, and the two books to one of his men to go with him; at whose going he demanded of the Bishop, what time his Lordship would appoint him to do it in? Against to morrow this time, quoth the Bishop, which was about two of the Clock, and so departed.

Marbeck, now being in his Prison-Chamber, fell to his business, and so applied the thing, that by the next day when the Bishop sent for him again, he had written so much, in the same order and form he had done the rest before, as contained three sheets of paper and more. The which when he had delivered to the Bishop of Salisbury, Doctor Oking standing by, he marvelled and said, Well Marbeck, thou hast now put me out of all doubt. I assure thee, quoth he, (putting up the paper into his bosom) the King shall see this ere I be 24. hours older; but he dissembled every word, and thought nothing less than so. For afterward, the matter being come to light, and known to his Grace what a Book the poor man had begun, which the Bishops would not suffer him to finish, the King said he was better occupied than they that took it from him. So Marbeck departed from the Bishop of Salisbury to Prison again, and heard no more of his Book.

The fifth Examination of Marbeck, before Doctor Oking and Master Knight, Secretary to the Bishop of Winchester in S. Mary Overies Church.

Upon Whitsunday following at afternoon, was Marbeck sent for once again to Saint Mary Overies, where he found Doctor Oking with an other Gentleman in a Gown of Damask, with a Chain of Gold about his Neck (no more in all the Church but they two) sitting together in one of the stalls, their backs towards the Church door, looking upon an Epistle of M. John Calvin, which Marbeck had written out; and when they saw the Prisoner come, they rose and had him up to a side Altar, leaving his Keeper in the body of the Church alone. Now as soon as Marbeck saw the face of a Gentleman (which before he knew not by reason of his apparel) he saw it was the same person that first examined him in the Marshallsey, and did also cause him to write in the Bishops Gallery, but never knew his name, till now he heard Doctor Oking call him Master Knight. This Master Knight held forth the Paper to Marbeck, and said, Look upon this, and tell me whose hand it is. When Marbeck had taken the Paper and seen what it was, he confessed it to be all his hand, saying the first leaf and the Notes in the Margent. Then I perceive, quoth Knight, thou wilt not go from thine own hand. No Sir, quoth he, I will deny nothing that I have done. Thou dost well in that, quoth Knight, for if thou shouldst, we have testimonies enough besides to try out thy hand by: but I pray thee tell me, whose hand is the first leaf? That I cannot tell you, quoth Marbeck. Then how camest thou by it, quoth Knight? Forsooth I will tell you, quoth he.

This Gentleman of Winchester
was M.
Knight.

There was a Priest dwelling with us upon five or six years ago, called Marshall, who sent it unto me with the first leaf written, desiring me to write it out with speed, because the copy could not be spared past an hour or twain, and so I wrote it out, and sent him both the copy and it again.

And how came this hand in the Margent, quoth he, which is a contrary hand to both the other? That I will tell you, quoth Marbeck: When I wrote it out at the first, I made so much haste of it, that I understood not the matter, whereof I was desirous to see it again, and to read it with more deliberation, and being sent to me the second time, it was thus quoted in the Margent as ye see. And shortly after this it was his chance to go beyond the Seas (where he lived not long) by reason whereof the Epistle remaineth with me; but whether the first leaf, or the Notes in the Margent were his hand, or whose hand else, that I cannot tell. Tush, quoth Doctor Oking to Master Knight, he knoweth well enough that the Notes be Heynes own hand. If you know so much, quoth Marbeck, ye know more than I do, for I tell you truly I know it not. By my Faith, Marbeck, quoth Knight, if thou wilt not tell by fair means, these fingers of thine thine shall be made to tell. By my truth Sir, quoth Marbeck, if ye do tear the whole Body in pieces (I trust in God) you shall never make me accuse any man wrongfully. If thou be so stubborn, quoth Doctor Oking, thou wilt dye for it. Dye, Master Oking, quoth he? Wherefore should I dye? You told me the last day before the Bishops, That as soon as I had made an end of the piece of Concordance they took me, should be delivered, and shall I now dye? this is a sudden mutation. You seemed then to be my friend, but I know the cause, ye have read the ballad I made of Moses Chair, and that hath set you against me; but whensoever ye shall put me to death, I doubt not but I shall dye. Gods true Man and the Kings. How so, quoth Knight? How canst thou dye a true Man unto the King, when thou hast offended his Laws? Is not this Epistle, and most of thy Notes thou hast written, directly against the fix Articles? No Sir; quoth Marbeck, I have not offended the Kings Laws therein; for since the first time I began with the Concordance (which is almost fix years ago) I have been occupied in nothing else. So that both this Epistle, and all the Notes I have gathered, were written a great while before the fix Articles came forth, and are clearly remitted by the Kings General Pardon. Trust not to that, quoth Knight, for it will not help thee. No I warrant him, quoth Doctor Oking; and so going down to the Body of the Church, they committed him to his Keeper, who had him away to Prison again.

The Kings General Pardon claimed.

The sute of Filmers Wife to the Bishops which sate in Commission, for her Husband.

IN like manner the Wife of Filmer, knowing her Husbands trouble to be only procured of malice by Simons his old enemy, made great sute and labour unto the Bishops which were Commissioners, desiring no more of them, but that it would please their goodness to examine her Husband before them, and to hear him make his purgation. This was her only request to every of the Bishops from day to day, wherefore she could find them. Insomuch that two of the Bishops (Ely and Hereford) were very fory (considering the importune and reasonable Sute of the woman) that it lay not in them to help her. Thus travelling long up and down from one to another, to have her Husband examined, it was her chance at last to find the Bishops all three together in the Bishop of Elys his Place: unto whom she said, O good my Lords, for the love of God, let now my poor Husband be brought forth before you, while you be here all together. For truly my Lords, there can nothing be justly laid against him, but that of malicious envy and spite Simons hath wrought him this trouble. And you my Lord of Salisbury, quoth the poor Woman, can testifie, (if it will please your Lordship to say the truth) what malice Simons bare to my Husband when they were both before you at Salisbury (little more than a year ago) for the Vicar of Windfors matter. For as your Lordship knoweth, when my Husband had certified you of the Priests Sermon, which you said was plain Heresie, then came Simons (after the Priest himself had confessed it) and would have defended the Priests error before your Lordship, and have had my Husband punished. At what time it pleased your Lordship to commend and praise my Husband for his honesty, and to rebuke Simons for maintaining the Priest in his error, and thereupon commanded the Priest to recant his Heresie, at his coming home to Windfor. This (my Lord) you know to be true. And now my Lord, quoth the Woman, it is most certain, that for this cause only did Simons evermore afterward threaten my Husband to be even with him. Therefore good my Lords, call my Husband before you, and hear him speak; and if you find any other matter against him than this that I have told you, let me suffer death. Is this so my Lord, quoth the Bishops of Ely and Hereford? And the other could not deny it. Then they spake Latin to the Bishop of Salisbury, and he to them, and so departed. For the matter was so wrought between Doctor London and Simons, that Filmer could never be suffered to come before the Commissioners to be examined.

The words of Filmers Wife to the Bishops.

Filmer could not come to his answer.

The manner of their Condemnations, and how they dyed.

When the time drew nigh that the Kings Majesty (who was newly married to that good and vertuous Lady Katherine Parre) should make his progress abroad, the foresaid Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester had so compassed his matters, that no man bore so great swelling about the King as he did. Wherewith the Gospellers were so quailed, that the best of them all looked every hour to be clapt in the neck. For the saying went abroad, that the Bishop had bent his bow to shoot at some of the head Deer. But in the mean time three or four of the poor Rascals were caught, that is to say, Anthony Pearson, Henry Filmer, and John Marbeck, and sent to Windfor by the Sheriffs men, the Saturday before Saint James day, and laid fast in the Town Jayl; and Teltwood (who had kept his bed) brought out of his House upon Crutches, and laid with them; But as for Benet (which should have been the fifth man) his chance was to be sick of the Pestilence, and having a great fore upon him, he was left behind in the Bishop of Londons Jayl, whereby he escaped the fire. Now these men being brought to Windfor, there was a Sessions specially procured to be holden the Thursday following, which was Saint Annes day. Against the which Sessions (by the Counsell of Doctor London and Simons) were all the farmers belonging to the Colledge of Windfor, warned to appear, because they could not pick out Papists enough in the Town to go upon the Jury. The Judges that day were these:

- Doctor Capon, Bishop of Salisbury.
- Sir William Elfez, Knight.
- Sir Thomas Bridges, Knight.
- Sir Humphrey Foster, Knight.
- M. Franken, Dean of Windfor.
- And Facbel of Reding.

The Judges.

When these had taken their places, and the Prisoners brought forth before them, then Robert Ockam, occupying for that day the Clerk of the Peace his room; called Anthony Pearson, according to the manner of the Court, and read his Indictment, which was this:

First, That he should preach two years before in a place called Wingfield, and there should say, That like as Christ was hanged between two thieves, even so when the Priest is at Mass, and hath consecrated and lifted him up over his head, there he hangeth between two thieves, except he preach the Word of God truly, as he hath taken upon him to do.

Also that he said to the people in the Pulpit, Ye shall not eat the Body of Christ, as it did hang upon the Crofs; gnawing if with your teeth, that the blood run about your lips; but you shall eat him this day as ye eat him to morrow, the next day, and every day; for it refresheth not the Body but the Soul.

Also, after that he had Preached and commended the Scripture, calling it the Word of God, he said as followeth; This is the Word, this is the Bread, this is the Body of Christ.

Also he said, that Christ sitting with his Disciples, took Bread, and blessed, and brake it, and gave it to his Disciples, saying, Take and eat, this is my Body. What is this to us, but to take the Scripture of God, and to break it to the people?

To this Anthony answered and said, I will be tryed by God and his holy Word, and by the true Church of Christ, whether this be Heresie or no, whereof ye have indicted me this day. So long as I Preached the Bishop of Rome and his filthy traditions, I was never troubled; but since I have taken upon me to preach Christ and his Gospel, ye have always fought my life. But it maketh no matter, for when you have taken your pleasure of my Body, I trust it shall not lye in your powers to hurt my Soul. Thou callest us thieves, quoth the Bishop. I say, quoth Anthony, ye are not only thieves, but murderers; except ye preach and teach the Word of God purely and sincerely to the people, which ye do not, nor ever did, but have allured them to all Idolatry, Superstition, and Hypocritise, for your own lucre and glories sake; through

Then fpake Simons his Accufer, ftanding within the Barr, faying; It is pity this fellow had not been burnt long ago, as he deferved. Teftwood's In-

Teftwood an-

ment.

Then was Teftwood called, and his Inditement read, which was that he fhould fay in the time that the Prieft was lifting up the Sacrament; What wilt thou lift up fo high? what yet higher? take heed, let him not fall. To this Teftwood answered, faying, it was but a thing maliciously forged of his enemies to bring him to his death. Yes (quoth the Bifhop) thou haft been feeny, that when the Prieft fhould lift up the Sacrament over his head, then wouldft thou look down upon thy Book or fome other way, becaufe thou wouldft not abide to look upon the bleffed Sacrament. I befeech you my Lord, quoth Teftwood, whereon did he look that marked me fo well? Mary, quoth Bucklayer the Kings Attorney, he could not be better occupied, than to mark fuch Hereticks that fo defpifed the bleffed Sacrament.

Henry Filmer.

Filmers Indicement.

Then Filmer was called, and his Inditement read; that he fhould fay that the Sacrament of the Altar is nothing elfe but a fimilitude and a ceremony; and alfo if God be in the Sacrament of the Altar, I have eaten twenty Gods in my days.

Here you muft underftand, that thefe words were gathered of certain communication which fhould be between Filmer, and his Brother. The tale went thus.

This Henry Filmer coming upon a Sunday from Cleaver his Parifh Church, in the company of one or two of his neighbours, chanced in the way to meet his Brother (which was a very poor labouring man) and asked him whither he went. To the Church, faid he. And what to do, quoth Filmer? To do, quoth he as other men do. Nay, quoth Filmer, you go to hear Mafs, and to fee your God. What if I do fo, quoth he? If that be God (fhould Filmer fay) I have eaten twenty Gods in my days. Turn again, fool, and go home with me, and I will read thee a Chapter out of the Bible, that fhall be better than all that thou fhalt fee or hear there.

D. London

Brother.

This Tale was no fooner brought to Doctor London (by William Simons, Filmers utter enemy) but he fent for the poor man home to his houfe, where he cherifhed him with meat and money, telling him he fhould never lack fo long as he lived; that the filly poor man, thinking to have had a daily friend of Doctor London, was content to do and fay whatsoever he and Simons would have him fay or do againft his own Brother. And when Doctor London had thus won, the poor man, he retained him as one of his houfhould men, until the Court day was come, and then fent him up to witnefs this forefaid Tale againft his Brother. Which tale Filmer denied utterly, faying, That Doctor London, for a little meat and drink fake, had fet him on and made him fay what his pleafure was: wherefore my Lord (quoth Filmer to the Bifhop) I befeech your Lordfhip weigh the matter indifferently, forasmuch as there is no man in all this Town, that can or will teftify with him, that ever he heard any fuch talk between him and me; and if he can bring forth any that will teftify the fame with him, I refufe not to dye. But fay what he could it would not prevail.

Filmer call away by his own brother.

Then Filmer faying no remedy but that his Brothers accufement fhould take place, he faid, Ah Brother, what caufe haft thou to fhev me this unkindnefs? I have always been a natural Brother unto thee and thine, and he ped you all, to my power, from time to time as thou thy felf knowelt; and is this a Brotherly part, thus to reward me now for thy kindnefs? God forgive it thee my Brother, and give thee Grace to repent. Then Filmer looking over his fhoulder, defired fome good body to let him fee the Book of Statutes. His Wife being at the end of the Hall, and hearing her Husband call for the Book of Statutes, ran down to the Keeper, and brought up the Book, and gat it conveyed to her Husband.

The Bifhop, fceing the book in his hand, ftart him up from the Bench in a great fume, demanding who had given the Prifoner that book, commanded it to be taken from him, and to make fearch who had brought it, fwearing by the Faith of his Body, he fhould go to Prifon. Some faid it was his Wife, fome faid the Keeper; like enough (my Lord) quoth Simons, for he is one of the fame fort, and as worthy to be here as the beft, if he were rightly ferved. But whofever it was, the truth would not be known and fo the Bifhop fate him down again.

Then faid Filmer, O my Lord, I am this day judged by a Law, and why fhould I not fee the Law that I am judged by? The Law is, I fhould have two lawful witnefs, and here is but one, which would not do as he doth, but that he is forced thereunto by the fuggestion of mine enemies. Nay, quoth Bucklayer the Kings Attorney, thine Herefies fo hainous, and abhorreth thine own Brother fo much, that it forceth him to witnefs againft thee, which is more than two other witnefs.

Thus (as you fee) was Filmer brought unjuftly to his death by the malice of Simons and Doctor London, who had incited that wretched caufif his Brother, to be their minifter to work his confufion. But God, Example of Go de juft Punifhment upon a Popifh accufer accusing his own Brother, And fo were thefe words of Solomon fulfilled, A falfe witnefs fhall not remain unpunifhed.

John Marbeck.

Then was Marbeck called, and his Inditement read, which was that he fhould fay; that the holy Mafs, when the Prieft doth confecrate the Body of our Lord, is polluted, deformed, finfull, and open robbery of the Glory of God, from the which a Chriftian heart ought both to abhor and flee. And the elevation of the Sacrament is the fimilitude of fetting up of Images, of the Calves in the Temple builded by Jeroboam; and that it is more abomination than the Sacrifices done by the Jews in Jeroboams Temple to thofe Calves. And that certain and fure it is, that Chrift himfelf is made in the Mafs mans laughing-ftock.

The Indite-ment of Marbeck.

To this he answered and faid, That thefe words whereof they had indicted him were not his, but the words of a learned man called John Calvaine, drawn out of a certain Epiftle which the faid Calvaine had made, which Epiftle he had but only written out, and that long before the fix Articles came forth; fo that now he was difcharged of that offence by the Kings General Pardon, defiring that he might enjoy the benefit thereof.

Then was the Jury called, which were all Farmers belonging to the Colledge of Windfor, whereof few or none had ever feen thofe men before, upon whofe life and death they went. Wherefore the Prifoners (counting the Farmers as partial) defired to have the Townfmen, or fuch as did know them, and had feen their daily converfations, in the place of the Farmers, or elfe to be equally joyned with them, but that would not befor the matter was otherwife forefeen and determined.

Now when the Jury had taken their Oath and all, Bucklayer the Kings Attorney began to fpeak; and firft he alleged many reasons againft Anthony Pearfon, to prove him an Heretic. Which when Anthony would have difproved, the Bifhop faid; Let him alone Sir, he fpeaketh for the King; and fo went Bucklayer forth with his matter, making every mans caufe as hainous to the hearers as he could devife. And when he had done, and faid what he would, then Sir Hampfrey Joffey fpake, and to the Queft in the favour of Marbeck on this wife.

Matters,

Marbeck, quoth he, you see there is no man here that accuseth or layeth any thing to the charge of this poor man Marbeck, saving he hath writ certain things of other mens sayings, with his own hand, whereof he is discharged by the Kings general Pardon; therefore ye ought to have a Conscience therein. Then started up Rachel at the lower end of the Bench, and said, What can we tell whether they were written before the Pardon or after? They may as well be written since as afore, for any thing that we know. These words of Rachel (as every man said) were the cause of Marbecks casting that day.

Then went the Jury up to the Chamber over the place where the Judges sat, and in the mean time went all the Knights and Gentlemen abroad, saving the Bishop, Sir William Essex, and Rachel, which three fate still upon the Bench till all was done. And when the Jury had been together above in the Chamber about the space of a quarter of an hour, up goeth Simons (of his own brain) unto them, and tarried there a pretty while, and came down again. After that came one of the Jury down to the Bishop, and talked with him and the other twain a good while: Whereby many conjectured that the Jury could not agree of Marbeck. But whether it was so or no, it was not long after his going up again, ere that they came down to give their Verdict: and being required according to the form of the Law to say their minds, one called Elide, dwelling beside Abington in a Lordship belonging to the Colledge of Windsor, speaking as the Mouth of the rest, said they were all Guilty.

Then the Judges beholding the Prisoners a good while (some with watery eyes) made curtesie who should give Judgment. Rachel requiring the Bishop to do it, he said He might not. The other also being required, said They would not. Then said Rachel, It must be done, one must do it, and if no man will, then will I. And so Rachel, being lowest of all the Bench, gave Judgment. Then Marbeck, being the last upon whom Sentence was given, cried unto the Bishop, saying, Ah my Lord, you told me otherwise when I was before you and the other two Bishops. You said then, that I was in better case than any of my Fellows, and is your saying come to this? Ah, my Lord, you have deceived me. Then the Bishop, casting up his hand, said, He could not do with all.

Now the Prisoners being condemned and had away, prepared themselves to dye on the morrow, comforting one another in the Death and Passion of their Master Christ, who had led the way before them, trusting that the same Lord, which had made them worthy to suffer so far for his sake, would not now withdraw his strength from them, but give them stedfast Faith and Power to overcome those fiery Torments, and of his free mercy and goodness (without their deserts) for his promise sake, receive their Souls. Thus lay they all the night long till very dead sleep took them, calling to God for his aid and strength, and praying for their Persecutors, which of blind zeal and ignorance had done they wist not what, that God of his merciful goodness would forgive them, and turn their hearts to the love and knowledge of his blessed and holy Word: yes, such heavenly talk was amongst them that night, that the hearers watching the Prison without, whereof the Sheriff himself was one, with divers Gentlemen more, were constrained to shed out plenty of tears, as they themselves confessed.

On the next morrow, which was Friday, as the Prisoners were all preparing themselves to go to suffer, word was brought them that they should not dye that day. The cause was this, The Bishop of Sarum, and they among them had sent a Letter by one of the Sheriffs Gentlemen, called Mr. Fraff, to the Bishop of Winchester (the Court being then at Oking) in the favour of Marbeck. At the sight of which Letter the Bishop straightway went to the King, and obtained his Pardon.

Which being granted, he caused a Warrant to be made out of hand for the Sheriffs discharge, delivering the same to the Messenger, who with speed returned with great joy (for the love he bare to the party) bringing good news to the Town, of Marbecks Pardon; whereat many rejoiced. Of this Pardon were divers conjectures made. Some said, It was by the fute of the good Sheriff Sir William Barrington, and Sir Humphrey Foster, with other Gentlemen more that favoured Marbeck, to the Bishop of Sarum and the other Commissioners, that the Letter was sent.

Some said again, That it came of the Bishop of Sarum and Rachels first motion, being pricked in Conscience for that they had so slenderly cast him away. Other thought again that it was a Policy purposed afore, by the Bishop of Winchester, of Sarum, and of Dr. London, because they should seem to be merciful. Which conjecture rose upon this occasion: There was one Sadock dwelling in the Town which was great with Dr. London and Simons: and he should say four days before the Sessions began, that the Prisoners should be all cast and condemned, but Marbeck should have his Pardon.

Other there were that thought the foresaid Bishops, with Dr. London, had done it for this purpose; that he now, having his life, would rather utter such men as they would have him to do, than to come in like danger again. Which conjecture rose upon this; Simons meeting with Marbecks Wife, said thus unto her; *Your Husband may thank God and good Friends: my Lord of Winchester is a good Lord to him, which hath got his Pardon. But shall I tell you, quoth he? his Pardon will be to none effect, except he tell the truth of things to my Lord, and other of the Council, when he shall be demanded; for unto that purpose only is he reserved. Alas Sir, quoth she, what can be tell? Well woman, quoth Simons, I tell thee plain, if he do not so, never look to have thy Husband out of Prison; and so departed from her.*

The like meaning did Mr. Arch make to Marbeck himself on the Saturday in the morning, that the men should be burnt, when he came to confest them. I have nothing, quoth he, to say unto you, Marbeck, at this time, but hereafter you must be content to do as shall be enjoyned you; meaning he should be forced to do some unlawful thing, or else to lye in perpetual Prison. And this was most likely to have been attempted, if they had proceeded in their purpose; whose intent was to have gone through the whole Realm, in like sort as they had begun at Windsor, as the Bishop of Sarum confessed openly, and said, That he trusted ere Christmas-day following to visit and cleanse a good part thereof. But most commonly God fendeth a shrewd Cow short horns, or else many a thousand in England had starved.

The Saturday in the morning that the Prisoners should go to Execution, came in to the Prison two of the Canons of the Colledge, the one called Dr. Blithe, and the other Mr. Arch, which two were sent to be their Confessors: Mr. Arch asked them if they would be confest; and they said, Yea. Then he demanded if they would receive the Sacrament: Yea, said they, with all our hearts. I am glad, quoth Arch, to hear you say so; but the Law is, quoth he, that it may not be ministered to any that are condemned of Heresie. But it is enough for you that ye desire it. And so he had them up to the Hall to hear their Confessions, because the Prison was full of people. Dr. Blithe took Anthony Pearson to him to confest, and Mr. Arch the other two. But howsoever the matter went between the Doctor and Anthony, he tarried not long with him, but came down again, saying, He would no more of his Doctrine. Do you call him Dr. Blithe, quoth Anthony? He may be called Dr. Blind for his learning, as far as I see. And soon after the other two came down also. Then Anthony seeing much people in the Prison, began to say the Lords Prayer, whereof he made a marvellous godly declaration, wherein he continued till the Officers came to fetch them away, and so made an end. And taking their leave of Marbeck (their Prison-fellow) they praised God for his deliverance, wishing to him the increase of godliness and virtue, and last of all besought him heartily to help them with his Prayer unto God, to make them strong in their Afflictions, and so kissing him one after another, they departed.

Now as the Prisoners passed through the people in the Prison Streets, they desired all the faithful people to pray for them, and to stand fast in the Truth of the Gospel, and death. not to be moved at their Afflictions, for it was the happiest thing that ever came to them. And ever as Doctor Blithe and Arch (who rode on each side the Prisoners) would persuade them to turn to their Mother holy Church; Away, would Anthony cry, away with your Romish Doctrine and all your trimperies, for we will no more of it. When Marbeck reserved to utter others.

A Letter sent by certain of the Commissioners to George Marbeck.

Marbeck pardon obtained.

Divers conjectures made. Some why others, was pardoned.

Filmer was come to his Brothers door, he stayed and called for his Brother, but he could not be seen, for Dr. London had kept him out of fight the same day, for the nonce.

And when he had called for him three or four times, and saw he came not, he said, and will he not come? Then God forgive him and make him a good man. And so going forth they came to the place of Execution, where Anthony Pearson with a cheerful countenance embraced the post in his arms, and kissing it, said, Now welcome mine own sweet Wife; for this day shall thou and I be married together in the love and peace of God.

And being all three bound to the post, a certain young man of Filmer's acquaintance brought him a pot of drink, asking if he would drink. Yea, quoth Filmer, I thank you. And now my Brother, quoth he, I shall desire you in the Name of the living Lord to stand fast in the truth of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, which you have received; and so taking the pot at his hand asked his Brother Anthony, if he would drink. Yea Brother Filmer, quoth he, I pledge you in the Lord.

And when he had drunk, he gave the pot to Ant. and Ant. likewise gave it to Testwood. Of which drinking their Adversaries made a jesting stock, reporting abroad that they were all drunk, and wist not what they said; when as they were none otherwise drunk than as the Apostles were, when the people said they were full of new Wine, as their deeds declared; for when Anthony and Testwood had both drunken, and given the pot from them, Filmer rejoicing in the Lord, said, Be merry, my Brethren, and lift up your hands unto God, for after this sharp breakfast, I trust we shall have a good dinner in the Kingdom of Christ our Lord and Redeemer. At the which words Testwood lifting up his Hands and Eyes to Heaven, desired the Lord above to receive his Spirit. And Anthony Pearson, pulling the straw unto him, laid a good deal thereof upon the top of his head, saying, This is Gods Hat; now am I dressed like a true Soldier of Christ, by whose merits only I trust this day to enter into his joy. And so yielded up their Souls to the Father of Heaven, in the Faith of his dear Son Jesus Christ, with such humility and steadfastness, that many which saw their patient suffering, confessed that they could have found in their hearts (at that present) to have died with them.

How all their Conspiracies were known

YE have heard before of one Robert Bennet, how he was at the first apprehended with the other four persons afore said, and committed to the Bishop of London Prison, and about the time he should have gone to Windsor, he fell sick of the Pestilence, by means whereof he remained still in Prison.

This Bennet and Symons (ye shall understand) were the greatest familiars and company keepers that were in all Windsor, and never lightly swerved the one from the other, saving in matters of Religion, wherein they could never agree. For Bennet the one Lawyer was an earnest Gospel'er, and Symons the other Lawyer a cankered Papist, but in all other Worldly matters they cleaved together like burrs.

This Bennet had spoken, certain words against their little round God, for the which he was as far in as the best, and had suffered death with the other if he had gone to Windsor when they went. And now that the matter was all done and finished, it was determined by the Bishop of Salisbury, that Robert Ockam, on the Monday after the men were burnt, should go to the Bishop of Winchester, with the whole process done at the Sessions the Thursday before.

Then Symons, at Bennets Wives request, procured the Bishop of Salisbury his favourable Letter to the Bishop of Winchester, for Bennets deliverance. Which Letter Bennets Wife (forasmuch as her own man was not at home which should have gone with the Letter) desired Robert Ockam to deliver to the Bishop, and to bring her word again; who said he would. So forth went Ockam toward the Bishop of Winchester, with his budget full of writings, to declare and open all things unto him that were done at Windsor Sessions. But all their wicked intents, as God would have it, were soon cut off, and their doings disclosed. For one of the Queens men (Named Fulk) which had lien at the Windsor all the time of the business, and had got knowledge what a number were privily indicted, and of Ockams going to the Bishop of Winchester, gat to the Court before Ockam, and told Sir Thomas Cardine and other of the Privy Chamber, how all the matter stood. Whereupon Ockam was laid, for and had by the back as soon as he came to Ockam, and so kept from the Bishop.

On the next morrow very early, Bennets Wife sent her man to the Court after Ockam, to see how he sped with her Husbands Letter. And when he came there, he found Sir Thomas Cardine walking with Ockam up and down the green before the Court gate. Whereat he marvelled to see Ockam with him so early, mistrusting the matter; whereupon he kept himself out of sight till they had broken off their communication.

And as soon as he saw Master Cardine gone (leaving Ockam behind) he went to Ockam and asked him if he had delivered his Masters Letter to the Bishop. No, said Ockam, the King removeth this day to Gilford, and I must go thither, and will deliver it there. Marry, quoth he, and I will go with you, to see what answer you shall have, and to carry word to my Mistress, and so they rode to Gilford together: where Bennets man (being better acquainted in the Town than Ockam was) got a lodging for them both in a Knights house of his.

That done, he asked Ockam, if he would go and deliver his Mistress Letter to the Bishop. Nay, said Ockam, you shall go and deliver it your self, and took him the Letter. And as they were going in the Street together, and coming by the Earl of Bedford's lodging (then Lord Privy Seal) Ockam was pulled in by the sleeve, and no more seen of Bennets man, till he saw him in the Marybushy. Then went Bennets man to the Bishops lodging, and delivered his Letter. And when the Bishop had read the contents thereof, he called for the man that brought it. Come sirrah, quoth he, you can tell me more by mouth than the Letter specifies, and had him into a little Garden. Now, quoth the Bishop, what say you to me? Forsooth my Lord, quoth he, I have nothing to say unto your Lordship, for I did not bring the Letter to the Town. No, quoth the Bishop, where is he that brought it? Forsooth my Lord, quoth he, I left him busie at his lodging. Then he will come, quoth the Bishop, bid him be with me betimes in the morning. I will, quoth he, do your Lordships commandment, and so he departed home to his lodging. And when his Kinsfolks saw him come in, Alas Cousin, quoth they, we are all undone. Why so, quoth he, what is the matter? O, said they, here hath been since you went, Master Pagitt the Kings Secretary, with Sir Thomas Cardine of the Privy Chamber, and searched all our house for one that should come to the Town with Ockam; therefore make thift for your self as soon as you can. Is that all the matter, quoth he? then content your selves, for I will never see one foot, hap what hap will. As they were thus reasoning together, in came the fore said searchers again; and when Master Cardine saw Bennets man, he knew him very well, and said, Was it thou that came to the Town with Ockam? Yea Sir, quoth he. Now who the Devil (quoth Master Cardine) brought thee in company with that false knave? Then he told them his business, and the cause of his coming: which being known, they were satisfied, and so departed. The next day had Bennets man a discharge for his Master (procured by certain of the Privy Chamber) and so went home.

Now was Ockam all this while at my Lord Privy Seals, where he was kept secret, till certain of the Privy Council had perused all his writings; among the which they found certain of the Privy Chamber indicted, with other the Kings Officers, with their Wives; that is to say, Sir Thomas Cardine, Sir Philip Hobby, with both their Ladies, Master Edmund Harriman, Master Thomas Walden, with Sarveball and his Wife. All these they had indicted by the force of the six Articles, as aiders, helpers, and maintainers of Anthony Pearson. And beside them, they had indicted of Heretic (some for one thing, and some for another) a great number more of the Kings true and faithful Subjects. Whereof the Kings Majesty being certified, his grace of his special goodness ness (without the suit of any man) gave to the foresaid Gentlemen of his Privy Chamber, and other his Servants with their Wives, his gracious Pardon. And as God would have the matter further known unto his Majesty, as he rode one day a hunting in Gilford-park, and saw the Sheriff with Sir Hamfrey Foster sitting on their horse-backs together, he called them unto him, and asked of them, how his Laws were executed at Windfor. Then they beseeching his Grace of Pardon, told him plainly that in all their lives they never fate on matter under his Graces Authority, that went so much against their Consciences, as the death of these men did, and up and told his Grace so pitiful a Tale of the casting away of these poor men, that the King turning his Horse head to depart from them, said, Alas poor innocents.

After this the King withdrew his favour from the Bishop of Winchester, and being more and more informed of the Conspiracy of Doctor London and Simons, he commanded certain of his Councel to search out the ground thereof.

Whereupon Doctor London and Simons were apprehended and brought before the Councel, and examined upon their Oath of Allegiance: And for denying their malicious and traitorous purpose, which was manifestly proved to their faces, they were both perjured, and in fine adjudged, as perjured persons, to wear Papers in Windfor; and Ockam to stand upon the Pillory in the Town of Newbery where he was born.

The judgment of all these three was to ride about Windfor, Reading, and Newbery, with Papers on their heads, and their faces turned to the Horse tails, and so to stand upon the Pillory in every of these Towns, for false accusation of the forenamed Martyrs, and for Perjury.

And thus much touching the persecution of these good Saints of Windfor, according to the Copy of their own Acts, received and written by John Marbeck, who is yet alive both a present witness, and also was then a yet of the said doings, and can testify the Truth thereof.

An Answer to the cavilling Adversaries soucking John Marbeck.

Wherefore against these crooked Cavillers, which make so much ado against my former Book, because in a certain place I changed to say that Bennet and Filmer had their Pardon (when indeed it was Bennet and Marbeck) be it therefore known, protested, denounced, and notified to all and singular such Carpers, Wranglers, Exclamers, Depravers, with the whole Brood of all such whisperers, railers, quarrel-pickers, corner-creepers, fault-finders, and spider-catchers, or by what name else soever they are to be tituled, that here I openly say and affirm, profess, hold, maintain; and write the same as I said and wrote before in the latter castigations of my Book: that is, That John Marbeck was with the other condemned, but not burned; cast by the Law, but by Pardon saved: appointed with the rest to die, and yet not dead, but liveth, God be praised, and yet to this present singeth merrily, and plaith on the Organs, not as a dead man amongst Foxes Martyrs (as it hath pleased some in the Court to encounter against me) but as one witness and testified truly in the Book Foxes Martyrs to be alive. And therefore such manner of Persons, if the disposition of their nature be such that they must needs find faults, then let them find them where they are, and where those faults by their finding may be corrected. But whereas they be corrected already and found to their hands, and also amended before, let then these Legend-liers look on their own Legends, and there cry out of lies, where they may find enow and cease their biting there where they have no just cause to bark.

And admit that I had not foreseen and corrected this escape before, touching the matter of John Marbeck, but that that place still had remained in the Book as it was, that is, that the said John Marbeck, which is yet alive, had then died and suffered with the other three, the same time at Windfor: yet what gentle or courteous Reader could have therein any just matter to triumph and insult against me, seeing the judicial Acts, the Records and Registers, yea and the Bishops Certificate, and also the Wit of execution remaining yet on Record, sent to the King, did lead me so to say and think? For what man writing Histories, who cannot be in all places to see all things but following his Records, and Registers, wherein he seeth the said Marbeck to be judged and condemned with the rest, would otherwise write or think, but that he also was Executed and burned in the same Company.

But now I correct and reform the same again, and first of all other, I find the fault, and yet I am found fault withal. I correct my self, and yet I am corrected of others. I warn the reader of the Truth, and yet am a lyar. The Book it self sheweth the escape, and biddeth in stead of four, to read three burned, and yet is the Book made a Legend of lies.

Briefly, where I prevent all occasion of cavilling, to the uttermost of my diligence, yet cannot I have that Law which all other Books have, that is, to recognize and reform mine own Errata.

Wherefore to conclude, these men whosoever they are, if they will be satisfied, I have said enough; if they will not, whatsoever I can say, it will not serve, and so I leave them: I would I could better satisfy them. God himself amend them.

The Persecution in Calice, with the Martyrdom of George Buckler, otherwise called Adam Damlip and others.

At what time John Marbeck was in the Marshalsey, which was about the year of our Lord, 1544, there was in the said Prison with him one George Buckler, named otherwise Adam Damlip, who having continued in the said Prison three or four years, at the last, by the commandment of Winchester, was had to Calice by John Mafie, the Keeper of the Marshalsey, and there hanged, drawn, and quartered for Treason pretended, which was a little before the Condemnation of the Windfor men aforesaid, as is by the Letters of the said John Marbeck to me signified.

Touching which Story of Adam Damlip, so far as it includeth matter of much trouble and Persecution that happened in Calice, to digest therefore and comprise the whole narration thereof in order, first I will enter (the Lord willing) the Story of Damlip, and so proceed in order to such as by the said occasion were afflicted and persecuted in the Town of Calice.

Dr. Repse Bishop of Norwich.	past a great Papist and Chaplain to Fisher Bishop of Rochester, and after the death of the Bishop his Master had travelled through France, Dutchland, and Italy, and as he went conferred with Learned men concerning matters of controversie in Religion, and so proceeding in his Journey to Rome, whereas he thought to have found all godliness and sincere Religion, in the end, he found there, (as he confessed) such blasphemy of God, contempt of Christs true Religion, looseness of Life, and abundance of all abominations and filthiness, that it abhorred his Heart and Conscience any longer there to remain; although he was greatly requested by Cardinal Poole, there to continue, and to read three Lectures in the week in his House, for the which he offered him great entertainment, which he re- fused, and so returning homeward, having a piece of Money given him of the Cardinal at his departure, to the value of a French Crown towards his charges, came to Calice, as is aforesaid. Who as he was there waiting without the Gate for passage into England, and being there perceived by certain Calice men, namely William Stevens and Thomas Lancaster, through conference of talk, to be a Learned man and also well affected; and moreover how that he being of late a zealous Papist, was now returned to a more perfect knowledge of true Religion, was by them heartily intreated to stay at Calice a certain space, and to read there a day or two, to the intent he might do some good there, after his painful travel, unto the People. To this request Adam gladly consented, so as he might be licensed by such as were in Authority so to do.	Sir Ralph Ellerker Knight.	him to be only so good unto him, as to appoint him some quiet and honest place in the Town where he might not be disturbed or molested, but have op- portunity to give himself to his Book, and he would daily once in the forenoon, and again by one a Clock in the after- noon, by the grace of God, preach a- mong them according unto that Talent that God had lent him. At which an- swer the Lord Deputy greatly rejoiced, and thereupon sent for the foresaid William Stevens, whom he earnestly required to receive and lodge the said Damlip in his house, promising what- soever he should demand, to see it paid with the most; and moreover would send every meal from his own melf a dish of the best unto them; and indeed so did, albeit the said Damlip refused that offer, shewing his Lordship that thin diet was most convenient for stu- dents. Yet could not that restrain him, but that every meal he sent it.
Harvey, Commisary in Calice.	Lady Ho- nor, Wife to L. Lisle Deputy of Calice.	Sir John Gage.	once every day at seven of the Clock, preached very godly, learnedly, and plainly, the Truth of the blessed Sacrament of Christs Body and Blood, mightily inveigh- ing against all Papistry, and confuting the same, but especially those two most pernicious Errors or Heresies trifling Transubstantiation, and the pestilent Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Romish Mass, by true conference of the Scriptures, and applying of the ancient Doctors, ear- nestly therewith oftentimes exhorting the People to return from their Popery, declaring how Popish he him- self had been, and how by the detestable wickedness that he did see universally in Rome, he was returned so far homeward, and now became an enemy, through Gods grace, to all Papistry, shewing therewith that if gain or ambition could have moved him to the contrary, he might have been entertained of Cardinal Poole (as you have heard before,) but for very Conscience sake joynd with true knowledge, grounded on Gods most holy Word, he now utterly abhorred all Papistry, and willed them most earnestly to do the same.
Adam Dam- lip requested by Cardinal Poole to tarry at Rome.	This French Crown was dearly bought, for by the same he was preached of Treason W. Stevens T. Lancaster.		And thus he continued a while reading in the Chapter- house of the white Friars; but the place being not big enough, he was desired to read in the Pulpit, and so proceeding in his Lectures (wherein he declared how the world was deceived by the Roman Bishops, which had set forth the damnable Doctrine of Transubstantiation, and the Real presence in the Sacrament, as is aforesaid) he came at length to speak against the Pageant or Picture set forth of the Resurrection which was in St. Nicholas Church, declaring the same to be but meer Idolatry, and an Illusion of the French-men before Calice was English.
	Sir Thomas Palmer, Knight.		Upon which Sermon or Lecture there came a Com- mission from the King to the Lord Deputy, Master Green- field, Sir John Butler Commisary, the Kings Mason and Smith, with others, that they should search whether there were (as was put in writing and under Bull and Par- don) three Hosts lying upon a Marble Stone—besprinkled with Blood; and if they found it not so, that immedi- ately it should be plucked down, and so it was. For in searching thereof, as they brake up a Stone in a Corner of the Tomb, they, instead of three Hosts, found the souldered, in the Cross of Marble lying under the Se- pulchre, three plain white Counters, which they had painted like unto Hosts, and a bone that is in the tip of a Three painted sheeps Tail. All which trumpety Damlip shewed unto the People the next day following, which was, Sunday, out three Hosts of the Pulpit, and after that they were sent by the Lord Deputy to the King.

Transubstantiation, and of the Propitiatory Sacrifice of the Mass; the said Prier outwardly seemed to give place, ceasing openly to inveigh, and secretly practised to peach him by Letters sent unto the Clergy here in England: so that, within eight or ten days after, the said Damlip was sent for to appear before the Bishop of Canterbury, with whom was assistant Steven Gardiner, Bp. of Winchester, Dr. Sampson, Bishop of Chichester, and divers others, before whom he most constantly affirmed and defended the Doctrine which he had taught, in such sort answering, confuting, and solving the Objections, as his Adversaries, yea even among the other, the learned, godly and blessed Martyr Crammer, then yet but a Lutherane, marvelled at it, and said plainly, that the Scriptures knew not such term of Transubstantiation. Then began the other Bishops to threaten him, shortly to confute him with their accustomed Argument, I mean Fire and Fagot, if he would still stand to the defence of that he had spoken. Whereunto he constantly answered, that he would the next day deliver unto them fully so much in writing as he had said, whereunto also he would stand, and so was dismissed.

The next day at the hour appointed to appear, when they looked surely to have apprehended him, in the mean season he had secret intimation from the Bishop of Canterbury, that if he did any more personally appear, he should be committed unto Ward, not like to escape cruel death. Whereupon he playing indeed then somewhat old Adams part, for such is man, left in his own hands) had him commended unto them, and sent them four sheets of Paper learnedly written in the Latin Tongue, containing his Faith with his Arguments, conferences of the Scriptures, and allegations of the Doctors, by a Messenger or Friend of his. Which done, he, having a little money given him in his purse by his Friends, stepped aside, and went into the West-Country, and there kept all the time, while great trouble kindled against Gods People in Calice upon the same; as ye shall hear, the Lord permitting.

After his departure, the Kings Majesty was advertised, that there was great diffention and diversity of Pernicious Opinions in his said Town of Calice, greatly tending to the danger of the same. Whereupon, during yet the days of the Lord Cromwel, were sent over Doctor Champion, Doctor of Divinity, and Mr. Garret, who after was burned, two godly and learned men, to preach and instruct the People, and to confute all Pernicious Errors, who in effect preached and maintained the same true Doctrine which Adam Damlip had before set forth, and by reason thereof they left the Town at their departure very quiet, and greatly purged of the slander that had run on it.

After the departure of the said Champion and Garret, one Sir William Smith Curate of our Ladies Parish in Calice (a man very zealous, though but meanly learned) did begin to preach, and earnestly to inveigh against Papistry and wilful ignorance, exhorting men obediently to receive the word, and no longer to condemn the same, lest Gods heavy plagues and wrath should fall upon them, which always followeth the contempt of his holy word. Which Sir William Smith, for that sometime he would be very fervent and zealous, sharply inveighing against the despisers of the Word, was moved by some of the Council there, who would seem to favour Gods Word that he should not be so earnest against them that yet could not away with the same, willing him to bear with such, for by bearing with them they might hap to be won.

Well, well, said the same Smith, (openly in the Pulpit one day as he preached) some say I am too earnest, and will me to bear with such as continue open Enemies against Christs holy Gospel, and refuse, say forbid that one should read the Bible or holy Scripture within their house; but let all such take heed, for before God, I fear that God for their contemning of his word will not long bear with them, but make them in such Case as some of them shall not have a Head left them upon their shoulders to bear up their Cap withal; which also after came to pass.

This Smith continued in the diligent bestowing of his Talent there, till shortly after the Devil got such hold in the hearts of a number of Gods Enemies, that he with divers other godly men were called over into England, and charged with erroneous Opinions worthy of great punishment, as hereafter more at large shall appear.

First the Lord Lisle the Kings Deputy there, whom we shewed to be the maintainer of Damlip (albeit he were himself of a most gentle nature, and of a right noble Blood, the base Son of that Noble Prince K. Edw.) being fiercely set on and incessantly enticed by the wicked Lady Honor his Wife, who was an utter Enemy to Gods honor, and in Idolatry, Hypocrisie, and Pride incomparably evil, she being daily and hourly thereunto incited and provoked by Sir Thomas Palmer Knight, and John Rockwood Esquire, two Enemies to Gods Word, beginning now to flourish at Calice: these I say, with certain other of the Council of the said town of Calice, to the number of 7. more belides themselves, seeking occasion or rather a quarrel where no just cause was given, began to write very heinous Letters and grievous complaints unto the Lords of the privy Council, against divers of the Town of Calice, affirming that they were horribly infected with Heresies and Pernicious Opinions: As first the foresaid Adam Damlip, who, though he were for a time escaped their hands, yet stuck still in their remembrance from time to time, until at last the innocent man was cruelly put to death as a Traitor, as hereafter shall appear.

Also besides this Damlip, they complained of Thomas Brook, R. Hare likewise of Sir J. Butler, then Commissary, Sir W. Smith, J. Cooke, alias Coppen de Hane, J. Barber, and other, and the names of all them sent over. Of the which Persons, first the said T. Brook, and Ralph Hare, Coppen de Hane and James Barber, were apprehended and sent over, and committed to Prison in Westminster Gate, and then commanded to appear before the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishop of Chichester, and ten other appointed by the Kings Majesties Commission for the Examination of them: and their accusers were sent over with Letters from the Council there unto his Privy Council here, in the furtherance of their malicious sutes against those honest men, with certain special Letters directed unto the Lord Fitzwilliams then Earl of Southampton, great Admiral of England, to the Lord Sande, Lord Chamberlain of the Household, likewise also to Sir William Kingstone Knight, Controller of the Household, and to Doctor Sampson then Bp. of Chichester, and other tending all to one effect, that is to say, the utter destruction of these godly men, if God, after his wonted manner, had not mightily preserved them, and as it were overshadowed them with the wings of his mercy.

That the same may the better appear, you shall understand, that first Ralph Hare, a man rude and so unlearned that he could scarce read, yet through Gods grace was very Zealous, and therewith lead so godly and temperate a life, as not one of his Enemies could accuse or blame the same his sober life and conversation. This Ralph Hare was charged to be one that had spoken against auricular Confession, against holy Bread and holy Water: yea, and beside that, he was one which would not lightly swear an Oath, nor use almost any manner of pastime, nor good fellowship, as they term it, but was always in a corner by himself, looking on his Book. This poor simple man being charged by the Commissioners that he was a naughty man and erroneous, and that he could not be otherwise, coming out of a Town so infected with pernicious Errors and Sects, as that was, was willed by them to take good heed to himself, lest through obstinacy he turned his erroneous Opinions into plain Heresie: for an Error defended is Heresie.

My good Lords, said the poor man, I take God to record, I would not willingly maintain any Error, or Heresie. Wherefore I beseech you let my Accusers come face to face before me. For if they charge me with that which I have spoken, I will never deny it. Moreover, if it be Truth, I will stand unto it; and otherwise, if it be an Error, I will with all my heart utterly forsake it, I mean if it be against Gods holy Word for the Lord is my witness, I seek and daily pray to God, that I may know the Truth, and flee from all Errors, and I trust the Lord will save me and preserve me from them.

were of the Town all. Then inferred he, that he was sure Pool could as well remember some of their names which then were present, as freely to keep in mind (for so by Oath upon a Book he had affirmed) every word of the whole matter which he objected; but that the matter was utterly untrue. Whereupon the said Brook desired their Honours to consider the slenderness of his Tale.

To be short, he with the rest of his fellows, to wit, Ralf Hare, Coppen, and James the Barber, were for that time dismissed.

The trouble and examination of Sir William Smith and John Butler Commisary. The accusation of John Butler.

Answer, digest the blood and roots of the Scurme.

During the time while these four were thus in examination at London, the other two, to wit, Sir William Smith preacher, and John Butler, by commandment were apprehended in Calice, and bound by Surety not to pass the Gates of the Town of Calice. In the which Town, the said John Butler Commisary was accused by Richard Thorpe and John Ford Souldiers of Calice, saying, That he should say, that if the Sacrament of the Altar be Flesh, Blood, and Bone, then there is good Aquavitae at John Spicers. Upon which accusation the said Thorpe and Ford brought for records before the Council of Calice, Marrawis, Haynes, John Luckes, Henry Haffson and Henry Troff, all of the Parish of Oye beside Calice. Whereupon shortly after, the said John Butler and Sir William Smith were sent for, and by one Swallow a Pursivant, which fetch up the other aforesaid, brought into England, unto the House of the said Swallow dwelling by St. James, where the Kings Majesty lay at that time, and the next day being Thursday after dinner, Butler and Smith were brought to the Star Chamber before the Privy Council, where both Sedition and Heresie was objected against them. And after much talk it was said unto them by the Lord Cromwell, that they should make their Purgation by the Law: and from thence by the fore said Swallow they were sent to the Fleet.

The next day being Friday after dinner, Butler and Smith were sent for to come to Bath place, where they were brought into the Chappel, there sitting Doctor Clarke, Bishop of Bath, Doctor Sampson, then Bishop of Chichester, Doctor Repsh, the Bishop of Norwich, who was a Monk, being fast asleep. Then was objected unto Butler with great reverence the opprobrious words spoken again the blessed Sacrament (rehearsing as is aforesaid) the Articles. Butler required to have them in writing, and so he would make answer in writing. The which they would not grant him; and upon that answer he stood. Then choler gathered in the Bishop of Chichester. The story were too long to write, yet part ye shall understand.

Chichester found great fault that Butler made not low curtesie, being stubborn and arrogant, as he said, and in fine, found fault with his shirt. Then turning him about he called to his Brother Banefier being present (that time dwelling in Paternoster-Row) to make answer for the shirt. He said, I can make answer for the shirt. No good answer, said Chichester. Forsooth, said he, the shirt is mine, I lent it him, because he brought none with him, for he was not permitted to have any Servant. A good answer, said the Bishop of Bath. Then Butler made low curtesie, and said, The shirt is answered. Then Chichester said, Thou mockest us. But he said no. And thus much concerning that time.

The Story of William Smith.

The trouble and examination of Sir William Smith Curate.

Then after Butler was Sir William Smith, Curate of our Lady Parish in Calice, called before them, and charged in a manner with the same heinous errors and pernicious opinions that were objected against the said Ralf Hare; and thereto was added, that he had spoken and preached against our blessed Lady, against praying to Saints, against doing of good works, and many other such like things; and therewithal one Richard Long, a Man at Arms at Calice, proved against the said Sir Smith, and the said Brooke, by an Oath taken upon a Book, that the said Smith and Brooke did eat Flesh together in Lent in the said Brookes Houfe. For a Millers Boy, said he came into Brookes Kitchen, and saw halfe a Lamb lie rolling at the fire. Whereas the truth is, that the said Sir William Smith, during all the Lent, came never once within the said Brookes Houfe. And it is as true also, that the said Richard Long, upon a displeasure taken with his Wife, went shortly after out of his own Houfe; to the Jury end of the Haven at Calice, where deliberately he drowned himself, not one Boy, but many Men, Women, Girls and Boys seeing him miserably taken up again stark dead; all which lamented his pitiful ruine. A terrible example unto all such as are ready to forswear themselves on a Book upon malice, or whatsoever other cause it be, a thing in these days over rife every where, and almost no where regarded as it ought to be.

The Trouble of John Butler.

There was also called before them Sir John Butler, then Commisary at Calice, whom they would have burdened with the maintenance or (at the least wife) sustenance of the fore said Adam Dampl, which preached so long time there, and was not by him punished. Who for his defence answered, that the Lord Deputy and the whole Council there so highly entertained, and so friendly used the said Dampl, and with their own presence and high commendations outwardly so allowed and commended his Doctrine, that it lay not in him to do otherwise than he did; and therefore humbly besought their Lordships and other the Commissioners to be good unto him. At whose Hands, after long attendance given, he was discharged, and so returned home again, being also dismissed of his Commisarihip.

The trouble of John Butler Commisary.

The Recantation of certain Calice Men.

Now to declare what order was taken with these fore said Calice Men, it was appointed that Sir William Smith, Ralf Hare, James Cocke, and James Barber, should be sent to Calice, there to abjure and to do Penance. Where Sir William Smith was enjoined to make the Sermon, Ralf Hare, James Cocke, and James Barber standing with Fagots upon their Shoulders. The Sermon was made in the Market of Calice, Which being done, they went with their Fagots about the market place, the Drum and Fife going before them, and then returning to the Commissioners with the Testimonial of the same, they departed. Albeit in this Recantation, the said William Smith Curate of our Ladies Church handled his Sermon after that sort, as in effect he denied nothing at all that he had before preached or taught, yet it satisfied somewhat his Adversaries malicious Hearts, in that it bare the name of a Recantation, according to the Commissioners order, appointing him thus openly to preach, and so to depart the Town and Marches.

As touching James Barber aforesaid, so much as his dwelling was not at Calice, but four miles off from the Town, it was therefore enjoined him to bear his Fagot, not at Calice, but on the Saturday next following to stand in the Market there, where he dwelled, with his Fagot upon his Shoulder, and the said Sir William Smith likewise there preached as before.

And thus much concerning the first Commission sent over to Calice to enquire upon the Hereticks there.

The recantation and presence of Sir William Smith, Ralf Hare, James Cocke, and James Barber of Calice.

James Barber

Another Commission sent over to Calice.

After all these things done and past, the grudging minds of the Adversaries yet were not satisfied, but still suggested new complaints to the Kings eares against the Town of Calice, making the King believe, that through new opinions the Town was so divided, that it was in great danger of the Adversary to be overcome.

Whereupon shortly after, the week before Easter next following, other new Commissioners were sent over by the King to Calice, to wit, the Earle of Suffex Lord great Chamberlain, the Lord Saint John, Sir John Gage Knight, John Baker Knight, Master Layton Clerk of the Closet, and Doctor Curwin, with special instructions besides signed by the Kings Majestys own Hand: for his highness had been incensed once again from the Council of Calice, that the Town was in peril through dissension and diversity of opinions. Upon their arrival, Master Doctor Curwin preached a notable Sermon, exhorting all men to charity, having nothing in his mouth but charity, charity. But as it seemed afterward, such a burning charity was in him and the rest of the Commissioners, that had not God pitied the innocency of mens causes, there had an hundred been burnt or hanged shortly after.

But it hapned far otherwise, for of the number of those Accusers, four were by those Commissioners sent over into England, to wit, Clement Philper, Servant to the Lord Lisle, Sir Edmund Curate of our Ladies Church, W. Houchet a Post-master, Peter Bequet Of the which four, Houchet and Bequet were sent to their places again; the other two were drawn, hanged and quartered at London. But contrary, of all them that were accused, there was not one that lost one hair of his head.

Example of Gods punishment upon false Accusers.

After the Sermon was done, on the Morrow, to wit, on Sher Thursday, all the Commissioners solemnly received the Sacrament: and at Afternoon the Council were with the Commissioners; and after their consultation, Tipped-Staffs warned above the number of fourscore, so perverse Persons, as the like was not in the Town or Marches, to appear on the Morrow at eight of the Clock before the Council at the Staple-Inne: who at their appearance were commanded upon their Allegiance to present all such Hereticks, Schismatics, and Seditious Persons, as they did know, and in no wise to doubt or dread to do so, for they should have great advantage thereby, yea, they should either have their livings or their goods; and besides that, they should have great thanks at the Kings Majesties hand, and his honourable Council, and what friendship they of the Kings Council there could shew them. All that Good-Friday, even till ten of the Clock at Night, those wicked and malicious persons occupied their time in answering to sundry and divers questions.

Great persecution at Calice.

These things were not so secretly done, but they were betrayed and came to honest mens knowledge. Whereupon such fear and distrust assailed all men, that Neighbour distrusted Neighbour, the Master the Servant, the Servant the Master, the Husband the Wife, the Wife the Husband, and almost every one the other, that lamentable it was to see how mourningly Men and Women went in the Streets, hanging down their heads, shewing evident tokens of the anguish of their hearts.

The second Trouble of Thomas Brook.

UPON Easter Monday, one Hugh Cuncell an honest man, Servant to the said Brook, was convented before them, and by the space of fourteen days not suffered to return to his Masters House, but kept in custody, and many times examined upon Articles and Interrogatories, in hope to have found worthy matter, either of Heresie or Treason against the said Brook, and the same day that Brook was committed to Ward, the said Hugh Cuncell was discharged.

The Wednesday in the Easter Week, sundry Quests were charged by their Oaths to make Inquisition for all manner of Heresies, erroneous Opinions and Seditions: as a Quest of Aldermen, another of Men at Arms, and another of Constables and Vintners, another of common Souldiers, and another of Commoners.

23 Calice Men imprisoned for their Faith.

And shortly after their Presentments, on Good-Friday there were convented before the Commissioners, and straight were sent to close Prison, Anthony Pickering Gentleman, Henry Turner Gentleman, Sir George Darby Priest, John Shepheard, William Pellam, William Keverdale, Jo. Whitwood, Jo. Boore, Robert Clodder, Coppen de Hane, and Matthew de Hound. Upon whom ran sundry bruises: some said they should be hanged, some said burnt, some said hanged, drawn and quartered, some said nailed to the Pillory: so that pitiful it was to see the lamentation that their Wives, their Children, Servants and Friends made secretly where they durst, for that they found every where words of discomfort, and no where of comfort, but still Inquisition was made.

The second Trouble of William Stevens.

False Crimes forged against W. Stevens.

THE forefaid William Stevens, after his return from London above-mentioned, besides many other Articles laid to him for Religion to the number of forty or well-nigh, was by the Lord Deputy charged that he had flaid the forefaid Adam Damisp, hired him to preach, and gave him meat, drink and lodging, coming from the arrant Traitor Cardinal Pool, and suborned by him, and that he had received mony of him, to the intent he should preach in Calice false and erroneous Doctrine, whereby the Town being divided and at contention within it self might easily be overcome and won by the Frenchmen. Whereunto the said Stevens answered, that whatsoever he had done unto the said Adam Damisp, he had done it at the earnest request and commandment of the said Lord Deputy. Whereupon, if it had been Treason indeed, he must have been more faulty.

Then the said William Stevens was again the second time by the said Commissioners sent over into England, and clapt in the Tower, and afterward, to wit, immediately after the said Commissioners repair unto the Kings Highness, the said L. Deputy was sent for over, and likewise put into the Tower, where he continued a long time. And when the Kings Majesty minded to have been gracious unto him, and to have let him come forth, God took him out of this World, whose Body relict in the Tower, and his Soul with God, I trust, in Heaven, for he died very repentant. But the wicked Lady his Wife, immediately upon his apprehension, fell distracted of mind, and so continued many years after. God for his mercy, if she yet live, give her his Grace to repent.

W. Stevens committed to the Tower.

L. Lisle Deputy of Calice committed to the Tower.

Example of Gods punishment upon his Persecutors.

The second Monday after Easter, the forefaid Brook was convented before the Commissioners, and committed to close Prison in the Mayors Gaol. Then the Council of Calice, doubting lest there should be any Sedition or Heresie proved against him, did call one George Bradway before them, who occupied the Controllers Office in the Custom-House. This man was kept in close Prison, so as neither his Wife, then great with Child, nor any other his Friends might repair unto him. Where, after that he had oftentimes been born in hand, that there were divers concealments come to light that were made by Brook in the Office of Custom, and that the said Bradway should be grievously punished if he would acknowledge none of them, nor burden the said Brook with some kind of concealment: the poor simple man, hoping thereby to get release of his imprisonment, accused the said Brook, that he had for a long time concealed four Groats every day for his Clerks wages, and to that Accusation they caused the simple man to set his own hand before witnesses.

Whereupon, after a day or two, the said Bradway, grieved in his Conscience for the same his most untrue Accusation, did with a Knife enterprize to cut his own throat: but God of his mercy so directed his wicked purpose, that the back of his Knife was towards his Wefand. Whereby though the wound were broad, yet he escaped with life. And as he gave a groan with the sudden pain that he felt, the Gaoler came up and bereft him of the Knife. But through the guiltness of the false Accusation, and shame of the World, the man lost his wits, who then flaring and dismayed was dismissed out of Prison, and a long time after went in pitious case so dismayed about the Street, to the great impoverishing of him, his poor Wife and Family.

Gods mercy in punishing.

This kind of handling of the said Brook made all his Friends, but especially his Wife, to be greatly afraid of the malice of his Enemies: the rather also, for that all his Goods and Lands were seized, and his Wife thrust into the meanest place of all his house, with her Children and Family, the Keys of all the Doors and Chests also taken from her. Who for that she was rigorously intreated at Sir Edw. Kingley's hand, Controller of the Town (an Office of no small charge, though he knew not a B. from a Battle-dore, nor ever a letter of the Book) saying unto her, that if she liked not the Room, he would thrust her quite out of the doors: Well Sir, said she, well, the Kings Slaughter-house had wrong when you were made a Gentleman; and with all speed she wrought a Letter to the Lord Cromwel, therein discouraging how hardly and sore those poor men were handled, that were committed to Ward and close Prison, and that all men feared (what through the malice of the Papistical Enemies, and the great rigor and ignorant zeal of those that were in Authority) they should shortly for their Faith and Consciences, being true men, and such as reverently feared God, be put to death, but chiefly her Husband who was yet more extremely handled than any other: So that unless his Honour vouchsafed to be a means to the Kings Majesty, that they with their Causes might be sent over into England, they were but dead men.

Letters sent to the Lord Cromwel from Calice.

Where-

The Lord
Cromwell Letter to the Councillors at Calice.

Whereupon the said Lord Cromwell wrote speedily his Letters unto the Commissioners, declaring, that the Kings Majesties pleasure and commandment was, that the errant Traitor and Heretick Brooke, with a dozen or twenty Complices, should with their Accusers be immediately sent oyers, that here in England they might receive their judgment, and there at Calice, to the great terror of like offenders hereafter, suffer according to their demerits.

Now by the time that the said Commissioners had received these Letters, they had made out precepts for eight or nine score honest men more to be cast in Prison. But these Letters so appalled them, that they stayed, and afterward sent no more to ward. But making then as diligent Inquisition as was possible, to have found some worthy matter against those before named, whereby there might have been some colour both of the Councils grievous complaints, and of the Commissioners rigorous dealing; when no such thing could fall out, because they would be assured that they should not go unpunished, they first banished them the Town and Marches of Calice with a Trumpet blown, under pain of death, for an hundred years and a day (if that one day had been left out, all had been marred) and then sent them back to Prison, slaying them there upon hope that the L. Cromwell should come into Captivity sooner than he did. But at last, to wit on May day, they sent the thirteen Prisoners through the Market, the said Brook going before with Irons on his Legs, as the chief Captain, the rest following him two and two without Irons, unto shipboard, and then were they all coupled in Irons, two and two together. Where because they were loath to go under the Hatches, Sir John Gage with a Staff smote some of them cruelly. Whereupon Amb. Pickering said unto him, Sir, I beseech you yet be as good to us as ye would be to your Horses or Dogs, let us have a little air that we be not smothered. Yet that request could not be obtained, but the Hatches were put down close, and they guarded and kept with a great Company of men; and so sailing forward, by Gods merciful providence, were within four and twenty hours at Anchor before the Tower of London.

And when the Lord Cromwell understood they were come, he commanded their Irons to be smit off at the Tower Wharf, and the Prisoners to be brought unto him.

When he law them, he smiled upon them, steadfastly beholding each of them, and then said, Sirs, you must take pains for a time, and go your way to the Fleet, and submit your selves Prisoners there, and shortly you shall know more. So indeed they did; and that evening he sent them word they should be of good cheer, for if God sent him life, they should shortly go home with as much honesty as they came with shame.

Whilst these thirteen persecuted men lay in the Fleet, and William Stevens in the Tower, to wit, the nineteenth day of July, Anno 1541. the fore-said Lord Cromwell, for Treason laid against him, was at Tower-Hill beheaded, as is before specified in his Story, who made there a very Christian end. Then had the poor Calice men great cause to fear, if they had not altogether depended on the merciful providence of their heavenly Father, whose blessed will they knew directed all things. But ye in the midst of their deep troubles and miseries so comforted them, that even as their dangers and troubles increased, so likewise did their consolation and joy in him; so far forth as Matthew de Houard, one of these thirteen, who was in trouble only for that he heard Copen de Hall read a Chapter of the New Testament, and was as deep in punishment, and in banishment from his Wife, Children, and Country, as the rest, got in short time such instruction, that having therewith a Soul and Conscience fraught full of godly Zeal unto Gods glory, and the true Doctrine of Christ, within a few months after his deliverance out of the Fleet, for inveigling constantly against the wicked honouring of Images, and praying to Saints departed, he was cruelly, in a most constant Faith and Patience, burned in Flanders.

Now therefore when all hope in man was past, the right honourable Lord Audley, Lord Chancellor of England, without further examination, discharged first the said thirteen that were in the Fleet, and at length, two years after, he delivered William Stevens also by the Kings own motion, out of the Tower, slaying at the discharging of those thirteen; Sirs, pray for the Kings Majesty, his pleasure is that you shall all be presently discharged. And though your Livings betaken from you, yet dispair not, God will not see you lack. But for Gods sake, Sirs, beware how you deal with Popish Priests; for, so God save my Soul, some of them be Knaves all. Sirs, said he, I am commanded by the Council to tell you, that you are discharged by virtue of the Kings general Pardon, but that Pardon excepteth and forbiddeth all Sacramentaries, and the most part, or all of you are called Sacramentaries: therefore I cannot see how that Pardon doth you any pleasure. But pray for the Kings Highness, for his Graces pleasure is that I should dismiss you, and so I do, and pity you all. Farewel Sirs.

So giving God most hearty thanks for his mighty and merciful delivering of them, they departed dismissed as you have heard, being indeed in very poor estate; but not in so miserable estate as all those eight Councilors of Calice were within one year and a half after. For whereas the other three Councilors which seemed more favourable unto them (to wit, the Lord Gray, Sir George Carew, and Sir Richard Greenfield) which purged the Town of those slanders that untruly were raised upon it, were therefore for a time in their Printes high displeasure; within that year they were all three in greater favour with his Majesty than ever they were before, and that not without the reward of twenty pounds by year to him and to his heirs, who had least. The other eight Councilors, unjustly charging them and the Town of Sedition and Heresie, (that is to say, the Lord Lisle, the Lord Sands, Sir John Wallop, Sir Edward Knies, Robert Fowler Esquire, Vice-Treasurer, Sir Thomas Palmer Knight, called long Palmer, William Simpson, Esquire, Under-marshal, and John Rockwood) were either greatly out of their Princes favour, and in the Tower, or else were Prisoners, or else by very desperate deaths, in outward appearance, taken out of this world. For tediousness I will rehearse but only the horrible end of the said Rockwood, the chief stirrer up of all the afflictions afore spoken of: who even to his last breath, staring and raging, cried, he was utterly damned. And being willed to ask God mercy, who was ready to forgive all that asked mercy of him, he brayed and cried out, All too late, for I have fought maliciously the deaths of a number of the honest men in the Town; and though I so thought them in my heart, yet I did that lay in me to bring them to an evil death: all too late therefore, all too late. Which same words he answered to one, that at the departure of the thirteen in Irons towards England, said; Sir, I never saw men of such honesty so sharply corrected, and taking it so patiently and joyfully. Rockwood then fetching a frisk or two, scoffingly answered, All too late. The Under-Marshal suddenly fell down in the Council Chamber, and never spake word after, nor shewed any token of repentance. The Plagues of the other also, as I am credibly informed, were little better.

The second Apprehension and Martyrdom of Adam Damlip.

Concerning Adam Damlip, otherwise called George Bucker, ye heard before declared, how he being converted before the Bishops at Lambeth, and afterward secretly admonished, and having money given him by his Friends to avoid, and not to appear again before the Bishops; after he had sent his Allegations in writing unto them, departed into the West-Country and there continued teaching a School a certain space, about a year or two. After that, the good man was again apprehended by the miserable inquisition of the six Articles, and brought up to London, where he was by Steven Gardiner commanded into the Marshalsey, and there lay the space of other two years or thereabout.

During the imprisonment of this George in the Marshalsey, John Marbeck (as partly ye heard before) also was committed unto the same Prison, which was the morrow after Palm-Sunday. The manner of that time so required, that at Easter every Person must needs come to confession. Whereupon Marbeck, with the rest of the the Prisoners there, was enforced to come upon Easter-day to Sir George aforesaid, to be confessed, who was then Confessor to the whole House. By this occasion John Marbeck, which had never seen him before, entering into conference with him, perceived what he was, what he had been, what troubles he sustained, how long he had lain there in Prison, by whom and wherefore, who declared moreover his mind to Marbeck, to the effect as followeth: And now because, said he, I think they have forgotten me, I am fully minded to make my humble suit to the Bishop of Winchester, in an Epistle, declaring therein mine obedience, humble submission, and earnest desire to come to Examination. I know the worst: I can but lose my life present, which I had rather do, than here to remain, and not to be suffered to use my Talent to Gods glory. Wherefore (God willing) I will surely put it in proof.

Adam Damlip well beloved among the Prisoners, specially of the Keeper, Master of the Marshalsey.

This Damlip for honest and godly behaviour was beloved of all the whole House, but especially of the Keeper himself, whose Name was Massy, whom he always called Master, and being suffered to go at liberty within the House whither he would, he did much good among the common and rascal sort of Prisoners, in rebuking Vice and Sin, and kept them in such good order and awe, that the Keeper thought himself to have a great Treasure of him. And no less also Marbeck himself confesseth, to have found great comfort by him. For notwithstanding the straight Precept given by the Bishop of Winchester, that no man should come to him, nor he to speak with any man; yet the said Adam many times would find the means to come and comfort him.

Ad. Damlip writeth to the Bishop of Winchester.

Now when he had made and drawn out his Epistle, he delivered the same to his Master the Keeper, upon Saturday in the Morning, which was about the second Week before Whitsunday following, desiring him to deliver it at the Court to the Bishop of Winchester. The Keeper said, he would, and so did. The Bishop, what quick speed he made for his dispatch I know not, but thus it fell out as ye shall hear.

The Keeper came home at night very late, and when the Prisoners (which had tarried Supper for his coming) saw him so sad and heavy, they deemed something to be amiss. At last the Keeper casting up his eyes upon Sir George, said, O George, I can tell thee tidings. What is that Master, quoth he? Upon Monday next thou and I must go to Calice. To Calice Master? What to do? I know not, quoth the Keeper, and pulled out of his Purse a piece of Wax with a little label of Parchment hanging out thereat, which seemed to be a Precept. And when Sir George saw it, he said, Well, well, Master, now I know what the matter is. What, quoth the Keeper? truly Master I shall die in Calice. Nay, quoth the Keeper, I trust it to be not so. Yes yes, Master, it is most true, and I praise God for his goodness therein. And so the Keeper and they went together to Supper, with heavy cheer for Sir George, as they there called him. Who notwithstanding was merry himself, and did eat his Meat as well as ever he did in all his life: inasmuch that some of the Board said unto him, that they marvelled how he could eat his Meat so well, knowing he was to near his death. Ah Masters, quoth he, do you think that I have been Gods Prisoner so long in the Marshalsey, and have not yet learned to die? Yes, yes, and I doubt not but God will strengthen me therein. Ex Literis Joham. Marbecki.

And so upon Monday early in the Morning before day, the Keeper with three other of the Knight Marshals Servants, setting out of London, conveyed the said Adam Damlip to Calice upon the Ascension Even, and there committed him to the Mayors Prison. Upon which day John Butler the Commissary aforesaid, and Sir Daniel his Curate of St. Peters were also committed to the same Prison, and commandment given no man to speak with Butler.

Upon Saturday next was the day of Execution for Damlip. The cause which first they laid to his charge, was for Heresie. But because by an Act of Parliament all such offences, done before a certain day, were pardoned (through which Act he could not be burdened with any thing that he had preached or taught before) yet for the receiving of the foresaid French Crown of Cardinal Pool (as you heard before) he was condemned of Treason, and in Calice cruelly put to death, being drawn, hanged and quartered.

The day before his Execution came unto him one Mr. Mote, then Parson of our Lady Church in Calice, saying, Your four Quarters shall be hanged at four parts of the Town. And where shall my Head be, said Damlip? Upon the Lantern-Gate, said Mote. Then Damlip answered, Then shall I not need to provide for my burial. At his death, Sir R. Ellerker Knight, then Knight Marshal there, would not suffer the innocent and godly man to declare either his Faith, or the Cause he died for, but said to the Executioner, Dispatch the Knave, have done. For Sir W. Mote, appointed there to preach declared declared to the People, how he had been a fower of seditious Doctrine; and albeit he was for that pardoned by the General Pardon, yet he was condemned for being a Traitor against the King. To the which when Adam Damip would have replied and purged himself, the said Sir R. Ellerker would not suffer him to speak a word, but commanded him to be had away: And so most meekly, patiently, and joyfully, the blessed and innocent Martyr took his death, Sir R. Ellerker saying, that he would not away before he saw the Traitors heart out. But shortly after, the said Sir Ralph Ellerker, in askmish or road between the French men and us at Bulleine, was among other slain. Whose only death sufficed not his Enemies, but after they had stripped him stark naked, they cut off his Privy Members, and cut the heart out of his Body, and so left him a terrible example to all bloody and merciless men. For no cause was known why they shewed such indignation against the said Sir Ralph Ellerker, more than against the rest, but that it is written, Faciens Justitias Domus & judicia omnibus injuria pressis.

As touching John Butler and Sir Daniel his Curate, imprisoned (as ye heard) the same day with Damip, upon Sunday next following they were committed to John Masly afore said, Keeper of the Marshalsey, and his Company, and brought to the Marshalsey, where he and his Curate continued nine months and more. At last, being fore layed out by Sir George Gage, Sir John Baker, and Sir Thomas Arundel Knights, but especially by Stephen Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, for the retaining of Adam Damip, yet by Friends soliciting the Kings Highness for him (namely Sir Leonard Malsgrave, and his Brother Baumfer, who were bound for his appearance in a thousand pounds,) he at length by great labour and long time was discharged, and at last by licence permitted to return to Calce again: Ex scriptis testimonio Calceatium.

Furthermore, as touching William Stevens above mentioned, who remained all this while Prisoner in the Tower, the same was also condemned with Adam Damip of Treason, which was for Note and Crime of Popery, in lodging Adam Damip, which came from Cardinal Pool the Traitor, in his House, at the Lord Deputies commandment. Notwithstanding the King afterward understanding more of the said William Stevens, how innocent he was from that Crime, being known to all men to be an earnest and zealous Protestant, gave him his Pardon, and sent him home again to Calce, and so likewise all the other thirteen above mentioned.

The Story of a poor Labouring-man in Calce.

BY the credible information and writing of the said Calce men, which were then in trouble, it is reported of a certain poor labouring man of Calce, that after the preaching of Adam Damip, being in a certain Company, he said that he would never believe that a Priest could make the Lords Body at his pleasure. Whereupon he was then accused, and also condemned by one Harvey Commissary there. Which Harvey in time of his Judgment inveighing against him with opprobrious words, said that he was an Heretick, and should die a vile death. The poor man (whose name yet I have not certainly learned) answering for himself again, said that he was no Heretick, but was in the Faith of Christ. And whereas thou saiest (said he) that I shall die a vile death, thou thy self shalt die a vile death, and that shortly; and so it came to pass, for within half a year after, the said Harvey was hanged, drawn, and quartered for Treason in the said Town of Calce.

Another History of one Dod a Scottish-man, burned in Calce.

AFTER the burning of this poor man, there was also another certain Scholar, counted to be a Scottish-man, named Dod, who coming out of Germany, was taken with certain German Books about him, and being examined thereupon, and standing constantly to the Truth that he had learned, was therefore condemned to death, and there burned in the said Town of Calce, within the space of a year or thereabout after the other godly Martyr above mentioned.

And forasmuch as I am presently in hand with matters of Calce, I cannot pass from thence without the memory of another certain honest man of the same To wnship, named Burton, alias Crosbow-maker, although the time of this Story is a little more ancient in years; which Story is this.

William Crosbow-maker, a Souldier of Calce, and the Kings Servant, being a man (as some natures be) some-what pleasantly disposed, used when he met with Priests, to demand of them certain merry questions of pastime; as these: Whether if a man were suddenly taken, and wanted another thing, he might not without offence occupy one of the Popes Pardons in stead of a broken Papper.

Another Question was, Whether in the world might better be wanting, Dogs or Priests. And if it were answered that Dogs might rather be spared; to that he would reply again and infer, that if there were no Dogs we could make no more, but if there lacked ignorant Priests, we might soon and too soon make too many of them.

It happened in the time of Doctor Darby, Parson of our Ladies Church in Calce, being Commissary there for Archbishop Warham, there came a black Frier to Calce with the Popes pardons, who for four pence would deliver a Soul out of Purgatory. The Frier was full of Romish virtues, for what money came for pardons by day, he bought no Land with it at night. This foresaid William Burton alias Crosbow-maker, coming to the pardoner, and pretending that he would deliver his Father and Friends Souls, asked if the holy Father the Pope could deliver Souls out of Purgatory? The Frier said, there is no doubt of that. Why then, quoth Burton, doth not he of Charity deliver all the Souls thereof? Of which words he was accused to the Commissary: who at his appearing before the said Commissary, confessed to have asked such questions. The Commissary being angry thereat, said, Doubtest thou thereof thou Heretick? There was standing by a Black Frier, named Capel, an English man, who said to the Commissary, There be ten thousand of these Hereticks between Graveling and Trere.

Burton answered, Master Frier, This Answer of all men you may keep silence: for your Coat hath been twice cut off from the Faith; the first time your Order was enjoyed to have your black Coat shorter than your white, and for the second time your Order must go to the furthest part of their Church, and there sing in praise of Anthem of our Lady. The Commissary chafed at these words, calling Burton Heretick, with many other opprobrious words. Then said Burton to the Commissary; If your Holy Father the Pope may deliver Souls out of Purgatory, and will not of Charity deliver them, then I would to God the King would make me Pope, and I would surely deliver all out without money. At these words the Commissary raged, and reviled Burton exceedingly causing him to bear a Billet, and procured his wages (which was six pence a day) to be taken from him. Then went Burton to the Kings Majesty, declaring all the whole matter to his Grace: Who sent him to Calce again, and gave him after that eight pence a day.

A notable example, wherein may appear as well the despite of Doctor London and other Papists against the Gospellers, as also the Fidelity of a Maïron towards her Husband.

FORasmuch as mention was made a little before of Doctor London, we will somewhat more add of him, because the matter seemeth neither impertinent nor unfruitful, to the intent it may more evidently appear, what Truth and trust it to be looked for of this cruel kind of Papists. This Doctor London was Warden of the New Colledge in Oxford, where it happened that certain Plate was stolen, and conveyed and brought up to London, and sold to a Gold-Smith named William Callaway. This Callaway was a man of good and honest name and reputation among his Neighbours, but especially earnest and zealous towards the Gospel, and a great maintainer thereof. He had oftentimes before bought much Plate of the same man without any peril or danger, wherefore he doubted the less of his Fidelity.

The cruel malice of Dr London against the Gospel.

Ex Ed Hall's W. Callaway Gold-Smith of London.

At

This Principal was a Chaplain of the said Colledge.

At the last the principal of the Theft being taken, and the Goldsmith also that was the Buyer being known; Dr. London, when he understood him to be a favourer of the Gospel (whereof he was an extream Adversary) began straightways to be in a rage, and to swear great and deep Oaths, that he would spare neither labour nor cost, but would bring the Goldsmith to the Gallows, although it should cost him five hundred pounds. To be short, this good Goldsmith was arraigned as Accessary, and an Action of Felony brought against him. He contrariwise alledged, That they ought not to proceed against him, the Principal being alive. Dr. London on the contrary part affirmed that the Principal was hanged; which was most false, for he was one of the same Colledge, and was alive, and but lately set at liberty. To be brief, he being found guilty, the Judge asked him what he could alledge why he should not die? He required to have the privilege of his Book, according to the ancient custom and manner. But here it was objected against him that he was Bigamus, and therefore he might not have his Book by the Law; notwithstanding that he never had two Wives, but because his Wife had two Husband, it was imputed to him for Bigamia.

Colledge's claimeth the privilege of his Book. Bigamus, that is, a man that hath had two Wives.

A singular example of a faithful Wife toward her husband.

True love between Man and Wife.

Thus this good Goldsmith being secluded from all hope of life, by the crafty spite of his malignant Adversaries; his Wife, being a Woman of proved honesty and good fame, came in before the Judges, and perceiving her former Marriage to be hurtful unto her Husband, to save her Husband's life, she took an Oath before the Judges that she was not Bigama, and that she was never married to more men than to the said Goldsmith; and although she had Children by her other Husband, and continued divers years with him, yet she swore that she was never married unto him. Thus this Woman by defaming of her self, to her great praise and singular example of love, delivered her innocent Husband, thinking it better for her to live with ignominy and reproach, than for her Husband to die, lest esteeming the loss of her good name, than of his life. Ex Ed. Hallio.

As touching the quality of this Fact or Perjury, I intermeddle not here to discuss, but leave it at large to the judgment of Lawyers to define upon. Truth it is, that Perjury neither in man nor woman is to be commended, neither ought it to be defended. But yet the true heart and faithful love between this Man and his Wife, counterpoising again as much or more on the other side, the more rare and strange I see it in many Couples nowadays, the more I think it worthy, not only to be praised, but also for Examples sake to be notified. But in the mean time, what shall we say to these Priests and Adversaries, who in such sort violently do press, and force the poor Sheep of Christ with peril of their Conscience unto such Perjury, and that in such cases, where no such truth is sought, but innocency oppressed, true Religion persecuted, and only their spite and wrath against Gods Word wreaked.

Lost Priest of Chelsey, Giovanni Gardiner, Traytors against the Kings Supremacy.

During the time of these six Articles aforesaid, which brought many good men unto death; yet so it hapned by another contrary Act set forth before for the Kings Supremacy (as ye have heard) that the contrary Sect also of the Papists was not all in quiet. For besides the death of More, and the Bishop of Rochester, and the other Charter-House Monks, Friars and Priests above specified, about this year also was condemned and executed by the same Law two other, of whom one was a Priest of Chelsey, named Lark, which was put to death at London for defending the Bishop of Rome's Supremacy, above the Kings Authority: The other was Germaine Gardiner (near Kinsman to Steven Gardiner, and yet more near to his secret counsel, as it is supposed) who likewise in practising for the Pope against the Kings Jurisdiction, was taken with the manner, and so brought unto the Gibbet.

Upon the detection of that Germaine Gardiner, being Secretary to Gardiner Bishop of Winchester his Kinsman, it seemed to some, and so was also insinuated unto the King not to be unlike; but that the said Germaine neither would nor durst ever attempt any such matter of Popery, without some setting on, or consent of the Bishop, he being so near unto him, and to all secrets as he was. Whereby the King began somewhat more to smell and misdoubt the doings of the Bishop; but yet he so covertly and cleanly conveyed his matters, playing under the Board, after his wonted fetches, in such sort as (I cannot tell how) still he kept in with the King, to the great iniquitation of the publick State of the Realm, and especially of Christs Church.

In declaring the dreadful Law before set forth of the six Articles, which was, An. 1540. ye heard what Penalty was appointed for the breach of the same, in like case as in Treason and Felony, so that no remedy of any Recantation would serve. This severity was a little mitigated by another Parliament, holden afterward, An. 1544. by the which Parliament it was decreed, that such Offenders, which were convicted in the said Articles, for the first time should be admitted to recant and renounce their Opinions. And if the party refused to recant in such form as should be laid unto him by his Ordinary, or after his Recantation if he effrons offended again, then for the second time he should be admitted to abjure and bear a Fagot. Which if he denied to do, or else being abjured if he the third time offended, then he to sustain punishment according to the Law, &c. Although the strictness and rigor of the former act was thus somewhat tempered, as ye see, and reformed by this present Parliament, yet notwithstanding the venom and poison of the Errors and mischief of those Articles remained still behind not removed, but rather confirmed by this Parliament aforesaid. By the which Parliament moreover many things were provided for the advancement of Popery, under the colour of Religion; so that all manner of Books of the old and new Testament, bearing the name of William Tyndal, or any other having Prologues, or containing any Matters, Annotations, Preambles, Words or Sentences contrary to the Six Articles, were debared. In like manner all Songs, Plays and Interludes, with all other Books in English, containing matter of Religion, tending any way against the said Articles were abolished.

In the which Parliament furthermore it was provided, that the Text of the New Testament or of the Bible, being prohibited to all Women, Artificers, Prentices, Journey-men, Serving-men, Yeomen, Husbandmen and Labourers; yet was permitted notwithstanding to Noblemen, and Gentlemen and Gentlewomen to read and peruse, to their edifying, so that they did it quietly without arguing, discussing or expounding upon the Scripture.

Over and besides, whereas before the Offender or Defendant might not be suffered to bring in any Witnesses to purge and try himself: In this Parliament it was permitted to the party detected, or complained on, to try his Cause by Witnesses, as many, or more in number, as the other which deposed against him, &c.

Other qualifications of the Act of the Six Articles.

After this Parliament moreover followed another Parliament the year following, Anno 1545. where in other qualifications more special of the Six Articles were provided; that whereas before the cruel Statute of the Six Articles was so straight, that if any of the Kings Subjects had been complained of by any manner of person, as well being his Enemy as otherwise, he should be indicted presently upon the same, without any further examination or knowledge given to the party so accused, and so thereupon attached, committed, and in fine condemned; it was therefore by this Parliament provided, that all such Presentments and Indictments should not be brought before the Commissioners, otherwise than by the Oaths of Twelve men or more, of honesty and credit, without corruption or malice accordingly.

Item, That no such Indictments or Presentments should be taken, but within one year after the offences committed, or else the said Indictments to stand void in the law.

Item, That no person accused upon any such offence against the Six Articles, should be attached, or committed to Ward before he were thereof indicted, unless by special warrants from the King.

Item, By the Authority of the said Parliament it was considered and enacted, that if any Preacher or Reader, for any word spoken, supposed to be against the Six Articles, should should be accused, not within the space of forty days of the said his reading or preaching, then the party accused to be acquitted.

Item, That the Justices or Inquirers of such presentments should have full power to alter and reform all pannels of inquiry, returned before them, in like manner as the Justices of Peace may do in their Sessions upon any other Inquiries.

Item, That the party so accused or indicted, upon his trial, may have all manner of challenges (peremptory only excepted) as other persons arraigned for felony may have by the Laws of this Realm.

Statute 1545
K. Hen. 8.

By the qualifications and moderations of the six Articles it may appear that the King began somewhat to grow out of favour with St. Gardiner, and to deservy his doings, whereby he was the more forward to incline somewhat in furthering the desolate cause of Religion, as may appear both by the premises, and also by other provisions and determinations of the foresaid Parliament to appoint two and thirty persons, to wit, sixteen of the Clergy, and sixteen of the Temporality, to peruse, oversee, and examine the Canons, Constitutions and Ordinances of the Canon Law, as well Provincial as Synodal, and so, according to their discretions, to set and establish an order of the Ecclesiastical Laws, such as should be thought by the King and them convenient to be received and used within this Realm. Which Statute as it is most needful for the Government of the Church of England so would God it had been brought to perfection.

John Asher
recanteth.

A 1545

In this year, touching matters of History, we read no great thing worthy of Memory, but only of two Persons John Asher, and John Haywood. Of which two, we read first John Asher to be indicted by the Kings Writ for certain words against the Sacrament, which words in the Indictment are specified to be these; That he would not believe in the thing which the Knaave Priest made, neither in that which Longe Wife selleth; but only in God that is in Heaven. And when it was told him that God through his word could make it Fleish and Blood, he answered; to he might, if he would, turn it into a Chickens leg, meaning the Sacrament of the Altar.

The recantation of John Haywood

The same year also followed the Recantation of John Haywood; who although he was tached for Treason, for denying the Kings Supremacy, yet using the clemency of the King, upon his better reformation and amendment, made an open and Solemn Recantation in the face of all the people, abandoning and renouncing the Popes usurped supremacy, and confessing of the King to be chief suprem Head and Governour of this Church of England, all forein Authority and Jurisdiction being excluded. The tenour and effect of whose Recantation here followeth.

The Recantation of John Haywood.

I Am come hither at this time (good people) willing, and of mine own desirous will, to shew, and declare unto you briefly; First of all the great and inestimable clemency and mercifulness of our most sovereign and redoubted Prince the Kings Majesty, the which his highness hath most graciously used towards me a wretch, most justly and worthily condemned to dye for my manifold and outrageous offences, heynously and traitorously committed against his Majesty and his Laws. For whereas his Majesties Supremacy hath so often been opened unto me both by writing and speaking (if I had Grace, either to open mine eyes to see it, or mine ears to hear it) to be surely and certainly grounded, and established upon the very true Word of God: yet for lack of Grace I have most wilfully and obstinately suffered my self to fall to such blindness, that I have not only thought that the Bishop of Rome hath been and ought to be taken the chief and Supreme Head of the Universal Church of Christ here in earth, but also, like no true Subject, concealed and favoured such as I have known or thought to be of that opinion. For the which most detestable Treasons and untruths, I here most humbly and with all my heart first of all ask of the Kings Majesty forgiveness, and secondarily of the world, beseeching all these that either now do, or hereafter shall hear of these my great transgressions, to take this mine example for an instruction for them to call for grace, that they thereby be saved from falling at any time into such miserable blindness and folly.

Moreover, here afore God and you (good Christian people) I do utterly and with all my heart recant and revoke all mine aforeaid erroneous and traitorous opinions. And (as my Conscience now doth force) I protest that even with my heart I firmly think and undoubtedly believe, that the Bishop of Rome neither now hath, nor at any time hath had, or can have by any Law of God or Man, any more Authority, without the precinct of his own Countrey about him, than any other Bishop hath within his Diocesi. Whereby I assuredly take the abolishing of the pretended and usurped Power or Authority of the Bishop of Rome out of this Realm, to be done justly and truly by the Law of God. And also I take our Sovereign Lord the Kings Highness to be Supreme Head, immediately next under Christ, of the Church of England and Ireland, and all other his Graces Dominions, both of the Spirituality and Temporality. And I confess not only that his Majesty is so by the Law of God; but also his Progenitors, Kings of this Realm hath been, and his Highness Heirs and Successors Kings of this Realm shall so be.

Thus have I shewed you my mind as well as I can, but neither so well as I would, nor so fully as I should, namely concerning the multitude of mercy which my most gracious Prince hath shewed toward me, not only for saving my Body after worthy condemnation to death, as is aforeaid, but also for saving my Soul from perishing, if my Body had perished before the receiving of such wholesome Counsel, as I had at his Highness most charitable assignment. And of this Confession declared unto you (I say as far forth as I can) I heartily pray you all to bear me record, and most entirely pray Almighty God for the long and most prosperous estate of our Sovereign Lord the Kings Majesty in all his affairs and proceedings.

By me John Haywood.

Memorandum, quod supra scripta Assertio five Recantatio fuit facta & publice emissae per prenomminatum Johannem Haywood die dominica, Sexto vix. die Julii, Anno millesimo quingentesimo quadragesimo quarto, apud Crucem Paulinam, tempore Concionis ibidem.

In this year of our Lord God 1545, as there was no other thing done in England worthy to be noted, so years the order of story here requireth by the course of years, next to infer the discourse of the troubles and persecutions which happened in Scotland, against Master George Wisehart and divers other good Men of the same Countrey, about the same year of our Lord, 1545, and somewhat before. But because now we are come to the latter end almost of King Henry's Reign, we will make an end (the Lord willing) with a few other English stories pertaining to that time; and that finished, we will set upon those matters of Scotland, joining them all together. The tractation whereof thou shalt see (good Reader) in the latter end and closing up of this Kings Reign.

Kerby, and Roger Clarke of Suffolk, Martyrs.

Coming now to the year of our Lord 1546. first passing over the Priest, whose name was Saxey, which was hanged in the Porters Lodge of Steven Gardiner Bishop of Whinchester; and that, as it is supposed, not without the consent of the said Bishop and the secret conspiracy of that bloody generation; to pass over also one Henry with his Servant burned at Colchester; I will now proceed to the story of Kerby and Roger Clarke of Mendelsham, who were apprehended at Ipswich, An. 1546. the Saturday before Gang Monday, and brought before the Lord Wentworth with other Commissioners appointed there to sit upon their examinations; judgments, and causes. The night before they were arraigned, a Bill was set upon the Town House Door (by whom it was unknown) and brought the next day unto the Lord

Lord Wentworth; who answered, That it was good Counsel. Which Bill in the Latter end shall appear.

In the mean time Kerby and Rogers being in the Gaols-House, named John Bird, an honest and a good Man (who had checks divers times at the Barr, that he was more meet to be kept, than to be a Keeper) came in Master Robert Wingfield, Son and Heir of Humphrey Wingfield Knight: with Master Bruest of Wenslesham; who then having Conference with Kerby; being then in a several Chamber separate from the other) Master Wingfield said to Kerby, Remember the fire is hot, take heed of thine enterprise, that thou take no more upon thee than thou shalt be able to perform. The terror is great, the pain will be extreme, and life is sweet. Better it were betime to stick to mercy, while there is hope of life, than rashly to begin, and then to shrink; with such like words of persuasion. To whom he answered again, Ah, Master Wingfield, be at my burning and you shall say, there standeth a Christian Soldier in the fire; for I know that fire and water, sword, and all other things are in the Hands of God, and he will suffer no more to be laid upon us than he will give strength to bear. Ah Kerby, said Master Wingfield, if thou be at that point, I will bid thee farewell; for I promise thee I am not so strong that I am able to burn. And so both the Gentlemen saying that they would pray for them, shook Hands with them, and so departed.

Now first touching the behaviour of Kerby and Roger when they came to the Judgment-seat, the Lord Wentworth with all the rest of the Justices there ready, the Commissary also, by virtue of the Statute ex Officio, sitting next to the Lord Wentworth, but one between; Kerby and Roger lifted up their Eyes and Hands to Heaven with great devotion in all mens eyes, making their prayers secretly to God for a space of time, whilst they might say the Lords prayer five or six times.

That done, their Articles were declared unto them with all Circumstances of the Law: and then it was demanded and required of them, Whether they believed, that after the words spoken by a Priest (as Christ spake them to his Apostles) there were not the very Body and Blood of Christ, Flesh, Blood, and Bone, as he was born of the Virgin Mary, and no Bread after.

Unto the which words they answered and said, No, they did not so believe; but that they did believe the Sacrament which Christ Jesus did institute at his last Supper, on Maunday Thursday at night to his Disciples, was only to put all Men in Remembrance of his Precious Death and Blood shedding for the Remission of Sins, and that there was neither Flesh nor Blood to be eaten with the teeth, but Bread and Wine, and yet more than Bread and Wine, for that it is Consecrated to an Holy use. Then with much persuasions, both with fair means and threats beside (if it would have served) were these two poor men hardly layed to; but most at the Hands of Pfister an inferior Justice, not being learned in such knowledge. But these two continued both faithful and constant, chusing rather to die than to live, and so continued unto the end.

Then Sentence was given upon them both, Kerby to be burned in the said Town on the next Saturday, and Roger to be burned at Bury the Gang Monday after. Kerby, when his judgment was given by the Lord Wentworth, with most humble Reverence holding up his hands and bowing himself devoutly, said, Praised be Almighty God, and so stood still without any more words.

Then did the Lord Wentworth talke secretly, putting his hand behind another Justice that sat between them. The said Roger perceiving that, said with a loud voice, speak out my Lord, and if you have any thing contrary to your Conscience, ask God mercy, and we for our parts do forgive you; and speak not in secret, for ye shall come before a judge, and then make answer openly, even before him that shall judge all men; with other like words.

The Lord Wentworth somewhat blushing, and changing his countenance, through remorse as it was thought, said, I did speak dothing of you, nor have I done any thing unto you, but as the Law is. Then was Kerby and Roger sent forth; Kerby to Prison there, and Roger to Saint Edmunds Bury. The one of the two burling out with a loud voice/ Roger it is supposed, thus spake with a vehemency, Fight, said he, for your God, for he hath not long to continue.

The next day, which was Saturday, about ten of the clock, Kerby was brought to the Market place, where the Stake was ready, Wood, Broom, and Straw, and did off his cloths unto his shirt, having a night cap upon his head, and so was fastened to the Stake with Irons, there being in the Gallery the Lord Wentworth, with the most part of all the Justices of those Quarters, where they might see his execution, how every thing should be done, and also might hear what Kerby did say; and a great number of people, about two thousand by estimation. There was also standing in the Gallery by the Lord Wentworth, Doctor Rugham, which was before a Monk of Bury; and Sexton of the House, having on a Surple and a Stole about his neck. Then silence was proclaimed, and the Doctor began to disfile himself, as not meet to declare the Holy Scriptures being unprovided because the time was so short, but that he hoped in Gods Assistance it should come well to pass.

All this while Kerby was trimming with Irons and Pagots, Broom, and Straw, as one that should be married with new garments, nothing changing cheer nor countenance, but with a most meek Spirit glorified God; which was wonderful to behold. Then Mr. Doctor at last entered into the fixt chapter of St. John. Who in handling that matter so oft as he alleged the Scriptures, and applied them rightly, Kerby told the people that he said true, and bad the people believe him. But when he did otherwise, he told him again, You say not true, believe him not good people. Whereupon, as the voice of the people was, they judged Doctor Rugham a false Prophet. So when Mr. Doctor had ended his collation, he said unto Kerby, Thou good Man, dost not thou believe that the blessed Sacrament of the Altar is the very Flesh and Blood of Christ, and no Bread, even as he was born of the Virgin Mary; Kerby answering boldly, said, I do not so believe. How dost thou believe? said the Doctor. Kerby said, I do believe that in the Sacrament that Jesus Christ instituted at his last supper on Maunday Thursday to his Disciples (which ought of us likewise to be done) is his death and passion and his bloodshedding for the Redemption of the world, to be remembered, and (as I said before) yet Bread, and more than Bread, for that it is consecrated to a holy use. Then was Master Doctor in his dumps, and spake not one word more to Kerby after.

Then said the underheriff to Kerby, hast thou any thing more to say? Yea Sir, said he, if you will give me leave. Say on, said the Sheriff.

Then Kerby, taking his night cap from his head, put it under his Arms as though it should have done him service again: but remembering himself, he cast it from him, and lifting up his Hands, he said the Hymn, Te Deum, and the belief, with other prayers in the English Tongue. The Lord Wentworth, whilst Kerby was thus doing, did shroud himself behind one of the Posts of the Gallery, and wept, and so did many other. Then said Kerby, I have done: you may execute your office good Mr. Sheriff. Then fire was fet to the wood, and with a loud voice he called unto God, knocking on his Breast, and holding up his Hands so long as his remembrance would serve, and so ended his life, the people giving shouts, and praising God with great admiration of his constancy, being so simple and unlettered.

On the Gang Monday, An. 1546. about ten of the clock, Roger Clarke of Mendelsham was brought out of Prison, and went on foot to the Gate, called Southgate, in Bury, and by the way the Profection met with them, but he went on, and would not bow, cap, nor knee, but with most vehement words rebuked that Idolatry and Superstition, the Officers being much offended. And without the Gate, where was the place of execution, the Stake being ready, and the wood lying by, he came and knelled down, and said Magnificat in the English Tongue, making as it were a Paraphrase unto the same, wherein he declared how that the blessed Virgin Mary, who might as well rejoice in pureness, as any other, yet humbled her self to our Saviour. And what sayest thou John Baptist, said he, the greatest of all Mens Children?

John 5: Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sins of the World. And thus with a loud voice he cried unto the People, while he was in fastening unto the Stake, and then the fire was set to him, where he suffered pains unmercifully; for the Wood was green, and would not burn, so that he was choaked with smoke: and moreover, being fet in a Pitch-barrel, with some Pitch sticking still by the sides, he was therewith fore pained, till he had got his feet out of the Barrel. And at length one standing by took a Faggot-stick, and striking at the Ring of Iron about his neck, so pashed him, and strook him belike upon the Head, that he shrunk down on the one side into the fire, and so was dissolved.

In the beginning of this story of Kerby and Roger, mention was made of a certain Bill put upon the Townshouse Door, and brought to the next day to the Lord Wentworth, the words of which Bill were these.

The Bill set upon the Town-house Door in Ipswich.

The words of the Bill set upon the Town-house Door.

JUSTE iudicare filii hominum; yet when ye shall judge, minister your Justice with Mercy.
A fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the Living God: he learned therefore in true knowledge, ye that judge the Earth, lest the Lord be angry with you.

The blood of the righteous shall be required at your hands. What though the evil hangd before Moses face; yet at Christs death it fell down.

The Stones will speak, if these should hold their peace; therefore harden not your hearts against the Verity.

For fearfully shall the Lord appear in the day of Vengeance to the troubled in Conscience. No excuse shall there be of ignorance, but every Fat shall stand on his own bottom. Therefore have remorse in your Conscience; fear him that may kill both Body and Soul.

Beware of innocent Blood-shedding, take heed of Justice ignorantly misbred; work discretely as the Scripture doth command; look to it, that you make not the Truth to be forsaken.

We beseech God to save our King, King Henry the Eighth that he be not led into Temptation. So be it.

This year also it was ordained and decreed, and solemnly given out in Proclamation by the King's Name and Authority, and his Council, that the English Proce-sion should be used throughout all England, according as it was set forth by his said Council, and none other, to be used throughout the whole Realm.

About the latter end of this year 1545, in the month of November, after that the King had subdued the Scots, and afterward, joyning together with the Emperour, had invaded France, and had got from them the Town of Bullain, he summoned his High Court of Parliament. In the which was granted unto him, besides other Subsidies of Money, all Colledges, Chanceries, free Chappels, Hospitals, Fraternities, Brotherhoods, Guilds and Perpetuities of stipendary Priests, to be disposed at his will and pleasure. Whereupon in the Month of December following, the King after his wonted manner, came into the Parliament-House to give his Royal assent to such Acts as were there passed: where after an eloquent Oration made to him by the Speaker, he answering again unto the same, not by the Lord Chancellor (as the manner was) but by himself, uttered this Oration word for word, as it is reported and left in story.

In the Contents of which Oration, first eloquently and lovingly he declared his grateful heart to his loving Subjects for their Grants and Subventions; offered unto him. In the second part, with no less vehemency he exhorted them to concord, peace and unity. Whereunto if he had also joynd the third part, that is, as in words he exhorted to unity, so he had begun indeed first himself to take away the occasion of division, disobedience and disturbance from his Subjects, that is, had removed the Stumbling-block of the Six Articles out of the Peoples way, which set Brother against Brother, Neighbour against Neighbour, the Superiour against the Subject, and the Wolves to devour the poor Flock of Christ: then he had not only spoken, but also done like a worthy Prince. But of this more shall be said in the sequel hereof, God willing.

The Kings Oration in the Parliament-House.

Although my Chancellor for the time being hath before this time used very eloquently and substantially to make answer to such Orations as have been set forth in this High Court of Parliaments; yet is he not so able to open and set forth my mind and meaning; and the secrets of my heart, in so plain and ample manner, as I my self am and can do. Wherefore I taking upon me to answer your eloquent Oration, Master Speaker, say,

The King's Oration made in the Parliament House.

That

That where you in the Name of our well-beloved Commons have both praised and extolled me for the notable qualities that you have conceived to be in me, I most heartily thank you all, that you put me in remembrance of my duty, which is, to endeavour my self to obtain and get such excellent qualities, and necessary virtues, as a Prince or Governour should or ought to have; of which gifts I recognize my self both bare and barren.

But for such small qualities as God hath endued me withal, I render to his goodness my most humble thanks, intending with all my wit and diligence to get and acquire to me such Notable virtues and Princely qualities, as you have alleaded to be incorporate in my person.

The Kings
Thanks to his Commons.

These Thanks for your loving admonition and good counsel first remembered, I oftsoons thank you again, because that you considering our great charges (not for our pleasure but for your defence, not for our gain but to our great cost) which we have lately sustained, as well in defence against our and your Enemies, as for the conquest of that Forrest, which was to this Realm most displeasing and noysome, and shall be by Gods Grace hereafter to our Nation most profitable and pleasant, have freely of your own mind granted to us a certain Subsidy here in an Act specified, which verily we take in good part, regarding more your kindness than the profit thereof; as be that setteth more by your loving hearts, than by your substance. Besides this heavy kindness, I cannot a little rejoice, when I consider the perfect trust and sure confidence which you have put in me, as men having undoubted hope, and unfeigned belief in my good doing and just proceedings, for that you, without my desire or request, have committed to mine order and disposition all Chanceries, Collages, Hospitals, and other places specified in a certain Act, firmly trusting that I will order them to the glory of God, and the profit of our Commonwealth. Surely if I, contrary to your expectations, should suffer the Ministers of the Church to decay, or Learning, which is so great a Jewel, to be diminished; or poor and miserable People to be unbelieved; you might say that I, being put in so special a trust as I am in this case, were no trusty Friend to you, nor charitable Man to mine even Christian, neither a lover of the Publick wealth, nor yet one that feared God, to whom account must be rendered of all our doings. Doubt not I pray you but your expectation shall be served more gently and goodly than you will wish or desire, as hereafter you shall plainly perceive.

The Kings
Promises for the well behaviour of Chanceries and Colleges.

Now since I find such kindness on your part toward me, I cannot chafe but love and favour you, affirming that no Prince in the World more favourably his Subjects than I do you, nor any Subjects or Commons more love and obey their Sovereign Lord, than I perceive you do me, for whose defence my Treasure shall not be hidden, nor if necessity require, shall my Person be unadventured. Yet although I with you, and you with me, be in this perfect love and concord, this friendly amity cannot continue, except you my Lords Temporal and you my Lords Spiritual, and you my loving Subjects, study and take pains to amend one thing, which is surely amiss and far out of order, to the which I most heartily require you; which is, that Charity and Concord is not among you, but Discord and Dissension beareth rule in every place. St. Paul saith to the Corinthians, in the 13th Chapter, Charity is gentle, Charity is not envious, Charity is not proud, and so forth in the said Chapter. Behold then what love and charity is amongst you, when the one calleth the other Heretick, and Anabaptist; and he calleth him again Papist, Hypocrite, and Pharisee. Be these tokens of Charity amongst you? Are these the signs of Fraternal Love between you? No, no, I assure you that this lack of Charity amongst your selves will be the hindrance and asswaging of the fervent Love between us, as I said before, except this wound be salved and clearly made whole. I must needs judge the fault and occasion of this Discord to be partly by the negligence of you the Fathers and Preachers of the Spirituality. For if I know a man which liveth in Adultery, I must judge him a lecherous and carnal person. If I see a man boast and brag himself, I cannot but deem him a proud man. I see and bear daily, that you of the Clergy preach one against another, teach one contrary to another, inveigh one against another, without charity or discretion. Some be too stiff in their old Mumpimus, other be too buisie and curious in their new Sumpimus.

And wherein else conflict all this variance, but only because God's Word hath not his free course, but they which sit forth are condemned and therefore burned?

This can touch none but only the Papists, who will needs be both Accusers, and also Judges in their own Opinions and Causes; How are they permitted to hear Gods Word when none is permitted to contradict it? To read it under degree of a Gentleman, or a S. Hierome with the Scriptures not only to be read of all men, but also to be sung of Women at their Rocks, of 'Vivandals' the Plow, and of Weavers at their Looms; Acc'd Godly living through the Gospel to increase the well compare time with time, we shall find the Books at the old Warsnes Quests of Whores and Wicked Livers, thus presented to one now, besides Priests and the common Street.

Although (as I say) the Spiritual men be in some fault, that Charity is not kept amongst you, yet you of the Temporality be not clean and unpurged of malice and envy; for you rail on Bishops, speak slanderously of Priests, and rebuke and taunt Preachers, both contrary to good order and Christian Fraternity. If you know surely that a Bishop or Preacher erreth or teacheth perverse Doctrine, come and declare it to some of our Council, or to Us, to whom is committed by God, the Authority to reform and order such Causes and Behaviours, and be not Judges of your selves of your own phantastical Opinions, and coin Expositions, for in such high Causes ye may lightly err. And although you be permitted to read Holy Scripture, and to have the Word of God in your Member Tongues, you must understand, that it is licensed you so to do, only to inform your own Conscience, and to instruct your Children and Family, and not to dispute and make Scripture a railing and a taunting Stock against Priests and Preachers, as many light Persons do. I am very sorry to know and to hear how unreverently that most precious Jewel the Word of God is disputed, rimed, sung, and jangled in every Ale-house and Tavern, contrary to the true meaning and Doctrine of the same. And yet I am even as much sorry that the Readers of the same follow it in doing so faintly and coldly. For of this I am sure, that Charity was never so faint amongst you, and virtuous and godly Living was never less used, nor was God himself amongst Christians ever less revered, honoured, or to the God served. Therefore (as I said before) be in charity one with another like Brother and Brother: Love, dread, and fear God (to the which I, as your Supreme Head and Sovereign Lord, exhort and require you); and then I doubt not but that Love and League that I spoke of in the beginning, shall never be dissolved nor broken between Us. And as touching the Laws which be now made and concluded, I exhort you the Makers to be as diligent in putting them in execution, as you were in making and furthering the same, or else your labour shall be in vain, and your Commonwealth nothing relieved.

Notes upon the foresaid Exhortation.

Princes which exhort to Concord and Charity do well; but Princes which seek out the causes of discord, and reform the same, do much better. The Papist and Protestant, Heretick and Pharisee, the old Mumpimus and the new Sumpimus, be terms of variance and dissension, and be, I grant, Symptomata of a sore wound in the Commonwealth: but he that will amend this wound, must first begin to search out the causes, and to purge the occasion thereof; otherwise, to cure the Sore outwardly, which inwardly doth fester and rankle still, it is but vain.

The root and ground of all this grievance riseth here of the Prelates and Clergy of Rome, seeking as it seemeth altogether after riches, pomp and honour of this World; who (to maintain the same under pretence of Religion) do in very deed subvert Religion: under that title of the Church, they bring into the Church manifold Errors and Absurdities intolerable, who pretending to be Fathers of the Church, if they transgressed but in manners and lightness of Life, or negligence of Government, they might be born withal for Peace and Concords sake, and here modesty, civility, quietness, unity, and charity,

The Kings
Oration ex-

the same.

Charity might have place amongst modest natures. But now they obscure the glory of the Son of God, which in no cause ought to be suffered; they extinguish the light and grace of the Gospel; they clog men's Consciences; they set up Idolatry, and maintain Idols: they bring in false invocation, and restrain lawful Matrimony, whereby growth filthy pollution, Adultery, and Whoredom in the Church unspeakable; they corrupt the Sacraments; they wrest the Scripture to worldly purposes; they kill and persecute God's People. Briefly, their Doctrine is damnable, their Laws be impious, their doings are detestable. And yet after all this, the crept craftily into the hearts of Princes, under the Title of the Church, and colour of concord; making King and Princes believe that all be Hereticks and Schismatics, which will not be subject to their ordinary Power. Now Almighty God, who is a jealous God, and not suffering the glory of his Son to be defaced, nor his Truth to be trodden under foot, stirreth up again the hearts of his People to understand his Truth, and to defend his cause. Whereupon of those two parts, as two mighty flints thus smiting together, cometh out the sparkle of this division, which by no wife can be quenched, but that one part multiplies, yield and give over. There is no neutrality nor mediation of peace, nor exhortation to agreement, that will serve between these two contrary Doctrines, but either the Popes errors must give place to Gods Word, or else the verity of God must give place unto them.

Wherefore as the good intent, and plausible Oration of the King in this behalf, was not to be discommended in exhorting his Subjects to Charity, so had he much more deferred commendation, if he had fought the right way to work Charity, and to help innocency amongst his Subjects, by taking away the Impious Law of the Six Articles, the Mother of all division and manslaughter. For what is this to the purpose, to exhort in words never so much to Charity, and indeed to give a Knife to the murderers hand to run upon his naked Brother, which never in Conscience can leave his cause, nor yet hath power to defend himself? as by experience here followeth to be seen, what Charity ensued after this exhortation of the King to Charity, by the racking and burning of good Anne Askew, with three other poor Subjects of the King, within half a year after; whereof shortly you shall hear more declared.

When these Chaurties and Colledges thus by Act of Parliament were given into the Kings hands as above remembered: which was about the month of December, Anno 1545. the next Lent following, Doctor Creme preaching in the Mercers Chappell, among other reasons and persuasions to rouse the People from the vain Opinion of Purgatory, inferred this, grounding upon the said Act of Parliament: That if Trentals and Chaurtry Masses could avail the Souls in Purgatory, then did the Parliament not well in giving away Monasteries, Colledges, and Chaunteries, which served principally to that purpose. But if the Parliament did well (as no man could deny) in dissolving them, and bestowing the same upon the King, then is it a plain case, that such Chaunteries and private Masses do nothing to confer and relieve them in Purgatory. This Dilemma of Dr. Creme, no doubt, was insoluble. But notwithstanding, the charitable Prelates, for all the Kings late exhortation unto Charity, were so charitable unto him, that on Essex next they brought him Ceram Nobis, where they so handled him, that they made him to recant. And if he had not, they would have dissolved him and his Argument in burning fire, so burning hot was their Charity, according as they burned Anne Askew and her fellows in the month of July the year following. Whose Tragical Story and cruel handling now consequently, the Lord willings, you shall hear.

The first examination of Mrs. Anne Askew, before the Inquisitors, Anno, 1545.

To satisfy your expectation, good People (said she) this was my first examination in the year of our Lord, 1545; and in the month of March.

First Christopher Dare examined me at Sadlers-Hall, being one of the Quest, and asked, If I did not believe that the Sacrament hanging over the Altar was the very Body of Christ really. Then I demanded this question of him; Wherefore was Saint Stephen stoned to death? and he said, He could not tell. Then I answered, That no more would I assail his vain Question.

Secondly, he said, that there was a Woman, which did testify that I should read, how God was not in Temples made with hands. Then I shewed him the seventh and seventeenth Chapters of the Acts of the Apostles, what Stephen and Paul had said therein. Whereupon he asked me how I took those Sentences? I answered, I would not throw pearls amongst Swine, for Acorns were good enough.

Thirdly, he asked me, wherefore I said, I had rather read five lines in the Bible, than to hear five Masses in the Temple: I confessed that I said no less: not for the dislike of either the Epistle or the Gospel, but because the one did greatly edify me, and the other nothing at all. As Saint Paul doth witness in the 14. Chapter of his first Epistle to the Corinthians, whereas he saith, If the Tramper groweth an uncertain found, who will prepare himself to the Battel? 1 Cor. 14

Fourthly, he layed unto my charge, that I should say, if an ill Priest ministered, it was the Devil and not God.

My answer was, that I never spake any such thing. But this was my saying, That whosoever he were that ministered unto me, his ill conditions could not hurt my Faith, but in Spirit I received nevertheless the Body and Blood of Christ.

Fifthly, he asked me what I said concerning Confession: I answered him my meaning, which was as Saint James saith, that every man ought to knowlege his faults to other, and the one pray for the other.

Sixthly, he asked me what I said to the Kings Book? I answered him that I could say nothing to it, because I never saw it.

Seventhly, he asked me if I had the Spirit of God in me: I answered, I had not: I was but a Reprobate or cast-away. Then he said he had sent for a Priest to examin me, which was here at hand.

The Priest asked me what I said to the Sacrament of the Altar, and required much to know my meaning therein. But I desired him again to hold me excused concerning that matter: none other answer would I make him, because I perceived him to be a Papist.

Eightly, he asked me, if I did not think, that private Masses did help the Souls departed: I said, It was great Idolatry to believe more in them, than in the death which Christ died for us.

Then they had methence unto my Lord Mayor, and he examined me, as they had before, and I answered him directly in all things as I answered the Quest before. Besides this, my Lord Mayor laid one thing to my charge, which was never spoken of me, but of them; and that was, whether a mouse eating the Host, received God or no? This Question did I never ask, but indeed they asked it of me, whereunto I made them no answer but smiled.

Then the Bishops Chancellor rebuked me, and said that I was much to blame for uttering the Scriptures. For S. Paul he said forbade Women to speak or to talk of the Word of God. I answered him that I knew Pauls meaning as well as he, which is in the 1 Corinth. 14. that a Woman ought not to speak in the Congregation by the way of teaching: And then I asked him how many Women he had seen go into the Pulpit and preach? he said he never saw any. Then I said, he ought to find no fault in poor Women, except they had offended the Law.

Then the Lord Mayor commanded me to ward, I asked him if Sureties would not serve me; and he made me short answer, that he would take none. Then was I had to the Counter; and there remained eleven days, no Friend admitted to speak with me. But in the mean time there was a Priest sent unto me; which said that he was commanded of the Bishop to examin me, and to give me good counsel, which he did not. But first he asked me for what cause I was put in the Counter, and I told him the could not tell. Then he said, it was great pity that I should be there without cause, and concluded that he was very sorry for me.

Secondly he said, it was told him that I should deny the Sacrament of the Altar. And I answered again, That that I have said I have said.

Thirdly he asked me, If I were content to be thriven. I told him, so that I might have one of these three, that is to say, Dr. Crome, Sir Guiliam, or Huntington, I was contented, because I knew them to be men of wisdom. As for you, or any other, I will not dispraise, because I know you not. Then said he, I would not have you think but that I, or any other that shall be brought you, shall be as honest as they: for if we were not, you may be sure the King would not suffer us to preach. Sacrament, or no.

Fourthly he asked, If the Host should fall, and a Beast did eat it, whether the Beast did receive God or no? I answered, Seeing that you have taken the pains to ask the question, I desire you also to answer it your self: for I will not do it, because I perceive you come to tempt me. And he said it was against the order of Schools, that he which asked the Question should answer it. I told him I was but a Woman, and knew not the course of Schools.

Fifthly he asked me, If I intended to receive the Sacrament at Easter, or no? I answered, that else I were no Christian Woman; and thereat I did rejoyce that the time was so near at hand. And then he departed thence with many fair words.

The 23. day of March, my Cousin Britain, came into the Counter unto me, and asked me whether I might be put to Bail, or no? Then went he immediately unto my Lord Mayor, desiring him to be so good unto me, that I might be bailed. My Lord answered him, and said that he would be glad to do the best that in him lay. Howbeit he could not bail me, without the consent of a Spiritual Officer; requiring him to go and speak with the Chancellor of London. For he said, like as he could not commit me to Prison without the consent of a Spiritual Officer, no more could he bail me without the consent of the same.

So upon that he went to the Chancellor, requiring of him as he did before of my Lord Mayor. He answered him that the matter was so hainous, that he durst not of himself do it, without my Lord of London were made privy therunto. But he said he would speak unto my Lord in it, and bade him repair unto him the next Morrow, and he should well know my Lords pleasure. And upon the Morrow after, he came thither, and spake both with the Chancellor and with the Bishop of London. The Bishop declared unto him that he was very well contented that I should come forth to communication, and appointed me to appear before him the next day after, at three of the Clock at Afternoon. Moreover he said unto him, that he would there should be at the Examination such Learned men, as I was affectioned to, that they might see, and also make report that I was handled with no rigor. He answered him, that he knew no man that I had more affection to, than to other. Then said the Bishop, Yes, as I understand, she is affectioned to Dr. Crome, Sir Guiliam Whitehead, and Huntington, that they might hear the matter, for he did know them to be learned and of a godly Judgment. Also he required my Cousin Britain, that he should earnestly persuade me to utter even the very bottom of my heart; and beware by his fidelity, that no man should take any advantage of my words, neither yet would he lay ought to my charge for any thing that I should there speak; but if I said any manner of thing amiss, he with other more would be glad to reform me therein, with most godly counsel.

On the Morrow after, the Bishop of London sent for me at one of the Clock, his hour being appointed at three; and as I came before him, he said he was very sorry for my trouble, and desired to know my Opinions in such matters as were laid against me. He required me also in any wile, boldly to utter the secrets of my heart, bidding me not to fear in any point, for whatsoever I did say in his Houe, no man should hurt me for it. I answered, forso much as your Lordship appointed three of the Clock, and my Friends will not come till that hour, I desire you to pardon me of giving answer till they come. Then said he, that he thought it meet to send for those four men which were aforementioned and appointed. Then I desired him not to put them to pain, for it should not need, because the two Gentlemen which were my Friends, were able enough to testify what I should say. Anon after he went into his Gallery with Mr. Spilman, and willed him in any wile that he should exhort me to utter all that I thought. In the mean while he commanded his Archdeacon to commune with me, who said unto me, Mistress, wherefore are you accused and thus troubled here before the Bishop? To whom I answered again and said; Sir, ask, I pray you, my Accusers, for I know not as yet. Then took he my Book out of my hand, and said, Such Books as this have brought you to the trouble that you are in. Beware, said he, beware, for he that made this Book, and was the Author thereof, was an Hereticke I warrant you, and burned in Smithfield. And then I asked him if he were certain and sure that it was true that he had spoken. And he said, he knew well the Book was of John Friths making. Then I asked him if he were not ashamed to judge of the Book before he saw it within, or yet knew the truth thereof. I said also, that such unadvised hasty judgment is a token apparent of a very slender wit. Then I opened the Book and shewed it him. He said he thought it had been another, for he could find no fault therein. Then I desired him no more to be so unadvisedly rash and swift in Judgment, till he thoroughly knew the truth, and so he departed from me. Immediately after came my Cousin Britain in, with divers others, as Mr. Hall of Grays-Inne, and such other like. Then my Lord of London persuaded my Cousin Britain, as he had done oft before, which was, That I should utter the bottom of my heart in any wile. My Lord said after that unto me, that he would I should credit the counsel of such as were my Friends and Well-willers in this behalf, which was, that I should utter all things that burdened my Conscience; for he ensured me, that I should not need to stand in doubt to say any thing. For like as he promised them (he said) he promised me, and would perform it; which was, that neither he, nor any man for him, should take me at advantage of any word that I should speak, and therefore he bade me say my mind without fear. I answered him, that I had naught to say, for my Conscience (I thanked God) was burdened with nothing.

Then brought he forth this unfavoury similitude; that if a man had a wound; no wile Chirurgeon would minister help unto it before he had seen it uncovered. In like case, said he, can I give you no good counsel, unless I know wherewith your Conscience is burdened. I answered, That my Conscience was clear in all things, and to lay a Plaster unto the whole skin, it might appear much folly.

Then you drive me (said he) to lay to your charge your own report, which is this; You did say, He that doth receive the Sacrament by the hands of an ill Priest, or a Sinner, receiveth the Devil, and not God. To that I answered, that I never spake such words. But, as I said before, both to the Quest and to my Lord Mayor, so say I now again, that the wickedness of the Priest should not hurt me, but in spirit and faith I received no less than the Body and Blood of Christ. Then said the Bishop unto me, what saying is this in Spirit? I will not take you at the advantage. Then I answered, My Lord, without faith and spirit, I cannot receive him worthily.

Then he said unto me, that I should say that the Sacrament remaining in the Pix, was but Bread. I answered, that I never said so, but indeed the Quest asked me such a question, whereunto I would not answer, I said, till such a time as they had afforded me this question of mine, Wherefore Stephen was stoned to death? They said they knew not. Then said I again, no more would I tell them what it was.

Then said my Lord unto me, that I had alleaged a certain Text of the Scripture, a answered that I alleaged none other but St. Pauls own saying to the Athenians, in the eighteenth Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, That God dwelleth not in Temples made with hands.

Then said my Lord unto me, that I had alleaged a certain Text of the Scripture, a answered that I alleaged none other but St. Pauls own saying to the Athenians, in the eighteenth Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, That God dwelleth not in Temples made with hands.

Then

Then asked he me what my Faith and Belief was in that matter? I answered him, I believe as the Scripture doth teach me.

The 4. Article.

Then enquired he of me, what if the Scripture doth say, that it is the Body of Christ? I believe, said I, as the Scripture doth teach me. Then asked he again, what if the Scripture doth say that it is not the Body of Christ? My answer was still, I believe as the Scripture informeth me. And upon this Argument he tarried a great while, to have driven me to make him an answer to his mind. Howbeit, I would not, but concluded this with him, that I believe therein and in all other things, as Christ and his Apostles did leave them.

Anne Askew charged with few words.

Then he asked me why I had so few words? And I answered, God hath given me the gift of knowledge, but not of utterance: and Solomon saith, That a Woman of few words is the gift of God, Prov. 19.

The 5. Article.

Fifthly, my Lord laid unto my charge, that I should say that the Mass was superstitious, wicked, and no better than Idolatry. I answered him, no, I said not so. Howbeit I say the Quest did ask me whether private Mass did relieve Souls departed or no? Unto whom then I answered, O Lord, what Idolatry is this, that we should believe in private Masses than in the healthful death of the dear Son of God? Then said my Lord again, what an answer is that? Though it be but mean, said I, yet is it good enough for the question.

Then I told my Lord, that there was a Priest which did hear what I said there before my Lord Mayor and them. With that the Chancellor answered, which was the same Priest? So she spake it in very deed, said he, before my Lord Mayor and me.

Dr. Standish his demand.

Then were there certain Priests, as Dr. Standish and other, which tempted me much to know my mind. And I answered them always thus; that I said to my Lord of London, I have said. Then Dr. Standish desired my Lord to bid me say my mind concerning the same Text of St. Pauls learnings, that I being a Woman should interpret the Scriptures, specially where so many wise learned men were.

Then my Lord of London said, he was informed that one should ask me if I would receive the Sacrament at Easter, and I made a mock of it.

Anne Askew could not have her Accuser.

Then I desired that mine Accuser might come forth, which my Lord would not. But he said again unto me, I sent one to give you good counsel, and at the first word you called him Papist. That I denied not, for I perceived he was no less, yet made I him none answer unto it.

The Priests all London against Anne Askew.

Then he rebuked me, and said that I should report, that there were bent against me threescore Priests at Lincoln. Indeed, quoth I, I said so. For my Friends told me, if I did come to Lincoln, the Priests would assault me and put me to great trouble, as thereof they had made their boast: and when I heard it, I went thither indeed, not being afraid, because I knew my matter to be good. Moreover I remained there nine days, to see what would be said unto me. And as I was in the Minister reading upon the Bible, they resorted unto me by two and two, by five and by six, minding to have spoken unto me, yet went they their ways again without words speaking.

Then my Lord asked if there were not one that did speak unto me. I told him yes, that there was one of them at the last which did speak to me indeed. And my Lord then asked me what he said? And I told him his words were of small effect, so that I did not now remember them. Then said my Lord, there are many that read and know the Scripture, and yet follow it not, nor live thereunto: I said again, my Lord, I would wish that all men knew my conversation and living in all points; for I am sure my self this hour that there are none able to prove any dishonesty by me. If you know that any can do it, I pray you bring them forth. Then my Lord went away, and said he would entitle somewhat of my meaning, and so he wrote a great circumstance. But what it was, I have not in my memory: for he would not suffer me to have the Copy thereof. Only do I remember this small portion of it.

Anne Askew standeth upon her honesty.

Be it known, said he, of all men, that I Anne Askew do confess this to be my Faith and Belief, notwithstanding many Reports made afore to the contrary. I believe that they which are bawled at the hands of a Priest, whether his conversation be good or not, do receive the Body and Blood of Christ in substance really. Also I do believe, that after the Consecration, whether it be received or reserved, it is no less than the very Body and Blood of Christ in substance. Finally, I do believe in this and in all other Sacraments of holy Church in all points, according to the old Catholic Faith of the same. In witness whereof, I the said Anne have subscribed my Name.

There was somewhat more in it, which because I had not the Copy, I cannot now remember. Then he read it to me, and asked me if I did agree to it. And I said again, I believe so much thereof, as the holy Scripture doth agree unto: wherefore I desire you, that you will add that therunto. Then he answered, that I should not teach him what he should write. With that he went forth into his great Chamber and read the same Bill before the Audience, which invigiled and willed me to sit to my hand, saying also, that I had favour shewed me. Then said the Bishop, I might thank other, and not my self for the favour that I found at his hand: for he considered, he said, that I had good Friends, and also that I came of a worshipful Stock.

Then answered one Christopher, a Servant unto Mr. Denny: Rather ought you, my Lord, to have done it in such case for Gods sake than for mans. Then my Lord sat down, and took me the Writing to set thereto my hand, and I wrote after this manner: I Anne Askew do believe all manner of things contained in the Faith of the Catholic Church.

And forasmuch as mention here is made of the Writing of Boner, which this goodly Woman said before she had not in memory, therefore I thought in this place to infer the same, both with the whole circumstance of Boner, and with the Title therunto prefixed by the Register, and also with her own Subscription: to the intent the Reader seeing the same Subscription, neither to agree with the time of the Title above prefixed, nor with the Subscription after the Writing annexed, might the better understand thereby what credit is to be given hereafter to such Bishops, and to such Registers. The tenour of Boners Writing proceedeth thus.

The true Copy of the Confession and Belief of Anne Askew, otherwise called Anne Kyme, made before the Bishop of London the twentieth day of March, in the year of our Lord God, after the computation of the Church of England, 1545. and subscribed with her own hand in the presence of the said Bishop and other, whose Names hereafter are recited, set forth and published at this present, to the intent the World may see what credence is to be given unto the same Woman, who in so short a time hath so damnably altered and changed her Opinion and Belief, and therefore rightly in open Court arraigned and condemned. The words of the Registers.

Ex Regis.

Be it known to all faithful People, that as touching the blessed Sacrament of the Altar, I do firmly and undoubtedly believe, that after the words of Consecration be spoken by the Priest, according to the common usage of this Church of England, there is present really the Body and Blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, whether the Minister which doth consecrate be a good man or a bad man; and that also whensoever the said Sacrament is received, whether the Receiver be a good man or a bad man, he doth receive it really and corporally. And moreover, I do believe, that whether the said Sacrament be then received of the Minister, or else reserved to be put into the Pix, or to be brought to any person that is impotent or sick, yet there is the very Body and Blood of our said Saviour: so that whether the Minister or the Receiver be good or bad, yet, whether the Sacrament be received or reserved, always there is the blessed Body of Christ really.

And this thing, with all other things touching the Sacrament and other Sacraments of the Church, and all things else touching the Christian Belief, which are taught and declared in the Kings Majesty's Book, lately set forth for the erudition of the Christian People, I Anne Askew, otherwise called A. Kyme, do truly and perfectly believe, and so here presently confess and acknowledge.

And here I do promise, that henceforth I shall never say nor do any thing against the premises, or against any of them. In witness whereof, I the said Anne have subscribed my Name unto these presents.

Then and his Register reproved with an untruth.

Here maist thou note, gentle Reader, in this Confession, both in the Bishop and his Register, a double sleight of false conveyance. For although the Confession purport the words of the Bishops writing, whereunto I did set her hand, yet by the title prefixed before, maist thou see that both she was arraigned and condemned before this was Registered, and also that she is falsely reported to have put to her Hand, which indeed by this her own Book appeareth not so to be but after this manner and condition; I Anne Askew do believe all manner of things contained in the Faith of the Catholick Church, and not otherwise. It followeth more in the story.

Then Bishop of London in a chafe against Anne Askew.

Then because I did add unto it the Catholick Church, he flang into his Chamber in a great fury. With that, my Cousin Britain followed, desiring him for Gods sake to be a good Lord unto me. He answered, that I was a Woman, and that he was nothing deceived in me. Then my Cousin Britain desired him to take me as a Woman, and not to set my weak Womens wit to his Lordships great wisdom.

Dr. Weston.

Then went in unto him Dr. Weston, and said, That the cause why I did write there the Catholick Church, was, that I understood not the Church written afore. So with much ado they perswaded my Lord to come out again, and to take my Name, with the Names of my Sureties, which were my Cousin Britain and Master Spilman of Grays-Inne.

Anne Askew brought to the Guild-Hall.

This being done, we thought that I should have been put to bail immediately, according to the order of the Law. Howbeit he would not suffer it, but committed me from thence to Prison again until the next Morrow, and then he willed me to appear in the Guild-Hall, and so I did. Notwithstanding they would not put me to bail there neither, but read the Bishops Writing unto me, as before, and so commanded me again to Prison. Then were my Sureties appointed to come before them on the next Morrow in Pauls Church, which did so indeed. Notwithstanding, they would once again have broken off with them, because they would not be bound also for another Woman at their pleasure, whom they knew not, nor yet what matter was laid unto her charge. Notwithstanding at the last, after much ado and reasoning to and fro, they took a Bond of them of Recognizance for my forth coming: and thus I was at the last delivered.

The latter Apprehension and Examination of the worthy Martyr of God Mrs. Anne Askew, Anno 1546.

Anne Askew, Martyr.

Anno 1546.

I Do perceive (dear Friend in the Lord) that thou art not yet perswaded thoroughly in the Truth, concerning the Lords Supper, because Christ said unto his Apostles, Take, eat, this is my Body which is given for you.

In giving forth the Bread as an outward sign or token to be received with the mouth, he minded them in perfect belief to receive that Body of his which should die for the People, and to think the death thereof to be the only health and salvation of their Souls. The Bread and the Wine were left us for a Sacramental Communion, or a mutual participation of the ineffable benefits of his most precious death and bloodshedding, and that we should in the end thereof be thankful together for that most necessary grace of our Redemption. For in the closing up thereof he said thus, This do ye in remembrance of me. Yea, so oft as ye shall eat it or drink it, Luke 11. and 1 Cor. 11. Else should we have been forgetful of that we ought to have in daily remembrance, and also have been altogether unthankful for it; therefore it is meet that in our Prayers we call unto God to graft in our Foreheads the true meaning of the Holy Ghost concerning this Communion. For St. Paul saith, The Letter killeth; the Spirit is it only that giveth life, 2 Cor. 3. Mark well the sixth Chapter of John, where all is applied unto Faith: note also the fourth Chapter of St. Pauls second Epistle to the Corinthians; and in the end thereof ye shall find, that the things which are seen are temporal, but they that are not seen are everlasting. Yea, look in the third Chapter to the Hebrews, and ye shall find that Christ as a Son (and no Servant) ruleth over his House, whose House are we, and not the dead Temple, if we hold fast the confidence and rejoicing of that hope to the end. Wherefore, as said the Holy Ghost, To day if ye shall hear his voice harden not your hearts, &c. Psal. 95.

The sum of my Examination before the Kings Council at Greenwich.

Our Request as concerning my Prison-fellows I am not able to satisfy, because I heard not their Examinations. But the effect of mine was this. I being before the Council, was asked of Mr. Kyme. I answered, that my Lord Chancellor knew already my mind in that matter. They with that answer were not contented, but said it was the Kings pleasure that I should open the matter unto them. I answered them plainly, I would not so do; but if it were the Kings pleasure to hear me, I would shew him the truth. Then they said it was not meet for the King to be troubled with me. I answered, that Solomon was reckoned the wisest King that ever lived, yet misliked he not to hear two poor common Women, much more his Grace a simple Woman and his faithful Subject. So in conclusion, I made them none other answer in that matter. Then my Lord Chancellor asked of me my Opinion in the Sacrament. My Answer was this, I believe that so oft as I in a Christian Congregation do receive the Bread in remembrance of Christs death, and with thanksgiving, according to his holy Institution, I receive therewith the fruits also of his most glorious Passion. The Bishop of Winchester bade me make a direct answer: I said I would not sing a new Song of the Lord in a strange Land. Then the Bishop said I spake in Parables. I answered, it was best for him, for if I shew the open truth (quoth I) ye will not accept it. Then he said I was a Parrot. I told him again, I was ready to suffer all things at his hands, not only his rebukes, but all that should follow besides, yea, and all that gladly.

Concerning that which they here demanded of as touching Mr. Kyme, read in the nature of John Bale writing upon this place.

This Lord Chancellor of mine was Wylsh.

Parables best for Winchester, Wylsh, beguileth to fool.

Then had I divers rebukes of the Council, because I would not express my mind in all things as they would have me. But they were not in the mean time unanswered for all that, which now to rehearse were too much, for I was with them there about five hours. Then the Clerk of the Council conveyed me from thence to my Lady Garnish.

The next day I was brought again before the Council. Then would they needs know of me what I said to the Sacrament. I answered, That I already had said what I could say. Then after divers words they bade me go by. Then came my Lord Lisle, my Lord of Essex, and the Bishop of Winchester, requiring me earnestly that I should confess the Sacrament to be flesh, blood, and bone. Then said I to my Lord Perre and my Lord Lisle, that that it was a great shame for them to Counsel contrary to their knowledge. Whereunto in few words they did say, that they would gladly all things were well.

Then the Bishop said he would speak with me familiarly. I said, So did Judas, when he unfriendly betrayed Christ. Then desired the Bishop to speak with me alone. But that I refused. He asked me why; I said, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every matter should stand, after Christs and Pauls Doctrin. Matth. 18. 2 Cor. 13.

Then my Lord Chancellor began to examin me again of the Sacrament. Then I asked him how long he would halt on both sides. Then would he needs know where I found that. I said in the Scripture, 3. Reg. 18. Then he went his way. Then the Bishop said I should be burnt. I answered, That I had searched all the Scriptures, yet could I never find that either Christ or his Apostles put any creature to death. Well, well said I, God will laugh your threatnings to scorn, Psal. 2. Then was I commanded to stand aside. Then came to me Doctor Cox, and Dr. Robinson. In conclusion, we could not agree.

Then they made me a Bill of the Sacrament, willing me to set my hand therunto, but I would not. Then on the Sunday I was fore sick, thinking no less than to die. Therefore I desired to speak with Master Latimer, but it would not be. Then was I sent to Newgate in my extremity of sickness; for in all my life afore I was never in such pain. Thus the Lord strengthen us in the Truth. Pray, pray, pray.

The Confession of me Anne Askew, for the time I was in Newgate, concerning my Belief.

I Find in the Scripture (said she) that Christ took the Bread and gave it to his Disciples, saying, Take, eat, this is my Body which shall be broken for you, meaning in Substance, his own very Body, the Bread being there of an only sign or Sacrament. For after like manner of speaking, he said he would break down the Temple, and in three days build it up again, signifying his own Body by the Temple, as Saint John declareth it, John. 2. and not the stony Temple it self. So that the Bread is but a remembrance of his death, or a Sacrament of thanksgiving for it, whereby we are knit unto him by a Communion of Christian love, although there be many that cannot perceive the true meaning thereof, for the Veil that Moses put over his face before the Children of Israel, that they should not see the clearness thereof, Exod. 24. and 2. Corinth. 3. I perceive the same Veil remaineth to this day. But when God shall take it away, then shall these blind men see. For it is plainly expressed in the History of Bell in the Bible, that God dwelleth in nothing material. O King (saith Daniel) be not deceived, for God will be in nothing that is made with hands of men, Dan. 14. Oh, what stiff-necked People are these, that will always reject the Holy Ghost? But as their Fathers have done, so do they, because they have stony hearts.

Written by me Anne Askew, nor feareth his might, and as merry as one that is bound

Truth is laid in Prison, Luke 21. The law is turned to wormwood, Amos 6. And there can no right judgment go forth, Isa. 59.

Ob forgive us all our sins, and receive us graciously, As for the works of our hands, we will no more call upon them. For it is thou Lord that art our God. Thou shewest ever mercy unto the fatherless.

Oh if they would do this (saith the Lord) I should heal their sores, yea wishal my heart would I love thee.

O Ephraim, what have I to do with Idols any more? who is wise, shall understand this: And he that is rightly instructed will regard it, for the ways of the Lord are righteous. Such as are godly will walk in them, and as for the wicked, they will stumble at them, Hof. 14.

Solomon (saith St. Stephen) builded an House for the God of Jacob. Howbeit, the bighest of all dwelleth not in Temples made with hands, as saith the Prophet, Heaven is my Seat, and Earth is my footstool. What house will ye build for me, saith the Lord? or what place is it that I shall rest in? Have not my hands made all things? Acts 7.

Woman believe me, (saith Christ to the Samaritane) Acts 7. the time is at hand, that ye shall neither in this Mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem worship the Father. Ye worship ye wot not what, but we know what we worship. For salvation cometh of the Jews: But the hour cometh, and is now, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and verity, John. 4.

Labour not (saith Christ) for the meat that perisheth, but for that that endureth unto life everlasting, which the Son of Man shall give you: for him hath God the Father Sealed. John 6.

The sum of the Condemnation of me Anne Askew at the Guild-Hall

They said to me there, That I was an Heretic, and condemned by the Law, if I would stand in mine Opinion. I answered, That I was no Heretic, neither yet deserved I any death by the Law of God. But as concerning the Faith which I uttered and wrote to the Council, I would not (I said) deny it, because I knew it true. Then would they needs know if I would deny the Sacrament to be Christs Body and Blood I said, yea. For the same Son of God that was born of the Virgin Mary is now glorious in Heaven, and will come again from thence at the latter day like as he went up. Acts 1. And as for that ye call your God, it is a piece of Bread. For a more proof thereof, mark it when you lift, let it but lie in the Box three months, and it will be mouldy and so turn to nothing that is good. Whereupon I am persuaded that it cannot be God.

After that, they willed me to have a Priest. And then I failed. Then they asked me if it were not good; I said, I would confess my faults unto God, for I was sure that he would hear me with favour. And so we were condemned with a Quest.

My belief which I wrote to the Council was this, That the Sacramental Bread was left us to be received with thanksgiving, in remembrance of Christs death, the only remedy of our Souls recovery; and that thereby we also receive the whole benefits and fruits of his most glorious Passion. Then would they needs know whether the Bread in the Box were God or no: I said, God is a Spirit, and will be worshipped in Spirit and Truth. John 4. Then they demanded, Will you plainly deny Christ to be in the Sacrament? I answered, that I believe faithfully the eternal Son of God not to dwell there; in witness whereof I recited again the History of Bell, and the nineteenth Chapter of Daniels, the seventh and seventeenth of the Acts, and the four and twentieth of Matthew: concluding thus; I neither with death, nor yet fear his might, God have the praise thereof with thanks.

My Letter sent to the Lord Chancellor.

The Lord God, by whom all creatures have their being, blest you with the light of his knowledge. Amen.

My duty to your Lordship remembreth, &c. It might please you to accept this my bold suite, as the sure of one which upon due consideration is moved to the same, and hopeth to obtain. My request to your Lordship is only that it may please the same to be a mean for me to the Kings Majesty, that his Grace may be certified of these few lines which I have written concerning my belief, which when it shall be truly conferred with the hard judgment given me for the same, I think his Grace shall well perceive me to be weighed in an uneven pair of Balances. But I remit my matter and cause to Almighty God, which rightly judgeth all secrets. And thus I commend your Lordship to the governance of him, and fellowship of all Saints, Amen.

By your Handmaid, Anne Askew.

My Faith briefly written to the Kings Grace.

The belief of Anne Askew
touching the Sacrament written to the King.

I Anne Askew, of good Memory, although God hath given me the Bread of Adversity, and the Water of trouble, yet not so much as my Sins have deserved, desire this to be known unto your Grace, That forasmuch as I am by the Law condemned for an evil Doer; here I take Heaven and Earth to Record, that I shall die in my Innocency. And according to that I have said first, and will say last, I utterly abhor and detest all Heresies. And as concerning the Supper of the Lord, I believe so much as Christ hath said therein, which he confirmed with his most blessed Blood. I believe so much as he willed me to follow, and believe so much as the Catholick Church of him doth teach. For I will not forsake the Commandment of his Holy Lips. But look what God hath charged me with his Mouth, that have I put up in my heart. And thus briefly I end for lack of learning.

Anne Askew.

The effect of my Examination and handling since my departure from Newgate.

The cruel handling and racking of Anne Askew after her condemnation.

ON Tuesday I was sent from Newgate to the sign of the Crown, where Master Rich, and the Bishop of London, with all their power and flattering words went about to persuade me from God; but I did not esteem their glazing pretences.

Then came there to me Nicolas Shaxton, and Counsellor me to recant as he had done. I said to him, That it had been good for him never to have been born; with many other like words.

Then Mr. Rich sent me to the Tower, where I remained till three of clock.

This Counsellor was Sir John Mordaunt.
Anne Askew
urged to accuse others.

Then came Rich and one of the Council, charging me upon my Obedience to shew unto them if I knew any Man or Woman of my Sect. My answer was that I knew none. Then they asked me of my Lady of Suffolk, my Lady of Suffex, my Lady of Hertford, my Lady Denny, and my Lady Fitzwilliams. To whom I answered, if I should pronounce any thing against them, that I were not able to prove it. Then said they unto me, That the King was informed that I could name, if I would, a great number of my Sect. I answered, That the King was as well deceived in that behalf, as he was deceived with by them in other matters.

Then commanded they me to shew how I was maintained in the Counter, and who willed me to stick to my opinion. I said that there was no creature therein did strengthen me. And as for the help that I had in the Counter, it was by the means of my maid. For as she went abroad in the streets, she made moan to the Prentices, and they by her did send me money; but who they were I never knew.

Anne Askew
refuseth to accuse any.

Then they said that there were divers Gentlewomen that gave me money. I said I knew not their names. Then they said that there were divers Ladies that had sent me money. I answered, That there was a Man in a blew coat which delivered me ten shillings, and said that my Lady of Hertford sent it me; and another in a violet coat gave me eight shillings, and said my Lady Denny sent it me. Whether it were true or no I cannot tell. For I am not sure who sent it me, but as the maid did say. Then they said there were of the Council that did maintain me. And I said, No.

Rue racking
Anne Askew.

Then they did put me on the Rack, because I confessed no Ladies or Gentlewomen to be of my opinion, and thereon they kept me a long time, and because I lay still and did not cry, my Lord Chancellor and Master Rich took pains to Rack me with their own Hands till I was nigh dead.

Then the Lieutenant caused me to be loosed from the Rack. Incontinently I swooned, and then they recovered me again. After that I sate two long hours reasoning with my Lord Chancellor upon the bare floor. Where he with many flattering words persuaded me to leave my opinion. But my Lord God, I thank his everlasting goodness, gave me grace to persevere, and will do, I hope, to the very end.

her faith.

Then was I brought to an House, and laid in a bed with as weary and painful bones as ever had patient Job. I thank my Lord God therefore. Then my Lord Chancellor sent me word if I would leave my opinion, I should want nothing; if I would not, I should forthwith to Newgate, and so be burned. I sent him again word, that I would rather dye than break my Faith.

Thus the Lord open the eyes of their blind hearts, that the truth may take place. Farewell dear Friend, and pray, pray, pray.

The order of the racking
of Anne Askew.

Touching the order of her racking in the Tower thus it was; first she was led down into a Dungeon, where Sir, Anth. Knevet the Lieutenant commanded his Gaoler to pinch her with the Rack. Which being done so much as he thought sufficient, he went about to take her down, supposing that he had done enough. But Whistley the Chancellor, not contented that she was loosed so soon, confessing nothing, commanded the Lieutenant to strain her one the Rack again. Which because he denied to do, tending the weakness of the Woman, he was threatened therefore grievously of the said Whistley, saying, That he would signify his Disobedience unto the King: and so consequently upon the same, he and Master Rich throw- ing off their gowns, would needs play the Tormentors themselves; first asking her if she were with Child. To whom the answering again, said, Ye shall not need to spare for that, but do your will upon me; and so quietly and patiently praying unto the Lord, she abode their tyranny, till her bones and joynts were almost plucked asunder, in such sort as she was carried away in a chair. When the racking was past, Whistley and his Fellow took their horse toward the Court.

The Lord
Whistley and Mr. Rich to play the Tormentors.

In the mean time, while they were making their way by land, the good Lieutenant efforts taking Boar sped him to the Court in all haste to speak with the King before the other, and so did. Who there making his humble sute to the King, desired his pardon, and shewed him the whole matter as it stood, and of the racking of Mistress Askew, and he was threatened by the Lord Chancellor, because at his commandment, not knowing his highness pleasure, he refused to rack her; which he for compassion could not find in his heart to do, and therefore humbly desired his highness Pardon. Which when the King had understood, he seemed not very well to like of their so extreme handling of the Woman, and also granted to the Lieutenant his Pardon, willing him to return and see to his charge.

The Lieutenant was pardoned of the King.

Great expectation was in the mean season among the Wardens and Officers of the Tower, waiting for his return. Whom when they saw come so cheerfully, declaring unto them how he had sped with the King, they were not a little joyous, and gave thanks to God therefore.

Anne Askew's answer unto John Lancel's Letter.

O Friend, most dearly beloved in God, I marvel not a little what should move you to judge in me so slender a Faith as to fear death, which is the end of all misery. In the Lord I desire you not to believe of me such weakness. For I doubt it not, but God will perform his work in me, like as he hath begun. I understand the Council is not a little displeased, that it should be reported abroad that I was racked in the Tower. They say now, That what they did there was but to fear me; whereby I perceive they are ashamed of their uncomely doings, and fear much lest the Kings Majesty should have information thereof, wherefore they would no man to noise it. Well, their cruelty God forgive them.

The purgation or answer of Anne Askew, against the false surmises of her Recantation.

I Have read the Process which is reported of them that know not the truth, to be my Recantation. But, as the Lord liveth, I never meant thing less than to recant. Notwithstanding this I confess, that in my first troubles I was examined of the Bishop of London about the the Sacrament. Yet had they no grant of my Mouth but this, That I believed therein as the Word of God did bind me to believe. More had they never of me. Then he made a copy, which is now in print, and required me to set thereunto my Hand But I refused it. Then my two Sureries did will me in no wife to stick thereat, for it was no great matters, they said.

Then with much ado, at the last I wrote thus; I Anne Askew do believe this, if Gods Word do agree to the same, and the true Catholick Church. Then the Bilhop being in great displeasure with me, because I made doubts in my writing, commanded me to Prison, where I was a while, but afterwards by the means of Friends I came out again. Here is the truth of that matter. And as concerning the thing that ye covet most to know, resort to the sixth of John, and be ruled always thereby. Thus fare ye well.
